

ENGLAND

from Chaucer to Johnson

Phil

The Norton Anthology
of English Literature
FOURTH EDITION

VOLUME 1

VOLUME 1

THE MIDDLE AGES • Donaldson

THE SIXTEENTH CENTURY • Smith

THE SEVENTEENTH CENTURY • Adams

THE RESTORATION AND THE EIGHTEENTH CENTURY •
Monk / Lipking

VOLUME 2

THE ROMANTIC PERIOD • Abrams

THE VICTORIAN AGE • Ford

THE TWENTIETH CENTURY • Daiches

The Norton Anthology of English Literature

FOURTH EDITION

M. H. Abrams, General Editor

E. Talbot Donaldson

Hallett Smith

Robert M. Adams

Samuel Holt Monk

Lawrence Lipking

George H. Ford

David Daiches

VOLUME 1

W • W • NORTON & COMPANY • NEW YORK • LONDON

END PAPER MAP BY A. KARL/H. GEORGE

W. W. Norton & Company, Inc. 500 Fifth Avenue, New York, N.Y. 10110

Copyright © 1979, 1974, 1968, 1962 by W. W. Norton & Company, Inc.
All rights reserved. Published simultaneously in Canada by George J. McLeod
Limited, Toronto. Printed in the United States of America.

BOOK DESIGN BY JOHN WOODLOCK

The page that follows constitutes an extension of the copyright page.

Library of Congress Cataloging in Publication Data

Abrams, Meyer Howard, ed.

The Norton anthology of English literature.

Bibliography: p.

Includes index.

1. English literature. I. Title.

PR1109.Az 1979

820'.8

78-27117

9 0

ISBN 0-393-95039-5 CL

ISBN 0-393-95048-4 PBK

Beowulf, A New Prose Translation by E. Talbot Donaldson. Reprinted with the permission of W. W. Norton & Company, Inc. and Longmans Green Ltd. Copyright © 1966 by W. W. Norton & Company, Inc.

From The New English Bible. © The Delegates of the Oxford University Press and The Syndics of the Cambridge University Press 1961, 1970. Reprinted by permission.

James Boswell: From Boswell on the Grand Tour: Germany and Switzerland, 1764, edited by Frederick A. Pottle. Copyright © 1928, 1953 by Yale University. Reprinted by permission of McGraw-Hill Book Company, Inc. and William Heinemann Ltd.

Geoffrey Chaucer: From Chaucer's Poetry: An Anthology for the Modern Reader, Selected and Edited by E. T. Donaldson. Copyright © 1958 by The Ronald Press Company, New York. Reprinted by permission of John Wiley Sons.

Thomas Gray: Manuscript of "Elegy Written in a Country Churchyard" transcribed by permission of The Provost and the Fellows of Eton College.

Samuel Johnson: Manuscript of The Vanity of Human Wishes transcribed by permission of the Hyde Collection, Somerville, New Jersey.

John Milton: Manuscripts of Lycidas transcribed by permission of The Master and Fellows of Trinity College, Cambridge.

Lady Mary Wortley Montagu: From Essays and Poems by Lady Mary Wortley Montagu, edited by Robert Halsband and Isobel Grundy; © Isobel Grundy 1977. Reprinted by permission of Oxford University Press.

Sir Thomas More: Selection reprinted from Utopia, by Sir Thomas More, A Norton Critical Edition, Translated and Edited by Robert M. Adams, with the permission of W. W. Norton & Company, Inc. Copyright © 1975 by W. W. Norton & Company, Inc.

Pearl, A New Verse Translation by Marie Borroff. Reprinted with the permission of W. W. Norton & Company, Inc. Copyright © 1977 by W. W. Norton & Company, Inc.

Samuel Pepys: From The Diary of Samuel Pepys, transcribed and edited by Robert Latham and William Matthews. Originally published by the University of California Press; reprinted by permission of The Regents of the University of California and Bell & Hyman, Ltd.

Alexander Pope: Manuscripts of The Essay on Man transcribed by permission of The Houghton Library and The Pierpont Morgan Library.

Sir Gawain and the Green Knight, A New Verse Translation by Marie Borroff. Reprinted by permission of W. W. Norton & Company, Inc. Copyright © 1967 by W. W. Norton & Company, Inc.

Sir Philip Sidney: From The Poems of Sir Philip Sidney, edited by William A. Ringler Jr.; © Oxford University Press 1962. Reprinted by permission of Oxford University Press.

Christopher Smart: "My Cat Jeoffry" from Jubilate Agno, reprinted by permission of Granada Publishing Ltd.

Thomas Traherne: From Thomas Traherne's Centuries, Poems, and Thanksgivings, edited by H. M. Margoliouth; © Oxford University Press 1958. Reprinted by permission of Oxford University Press.

Contents

PREFACE TO THE FOURTH EDITION	xxix
ACKNOWLEDGMENTS	xxxix

The Middle Ages (to 1485) 1

Medieval English	13
Old and Middle English Prosody	18

OLD ENGLISH POETRY 20

/ CÆDMON'S HYMN	20
/ THE DREAM OF THE ROOD	21
/ BEOWULF	24
/ THE WANDERER	83
/ THE BATTLE OF MALDON	86

GEOFFREY CHAUCER (ca. 1343-1400) 93

THE CANTERBURY TALES 98

The General Prologue	100
----------------------	-----

The Miller's Tale	122
-------------------	-----

The Introduction	122
------------------	-----

The Tale	124
----------	-----

The Wife of Bath's Prologue and Tale	139
--------------------------------------	-----

The Prologue	139
--------------	-----

The Tale	160
----------	-----

The Franklin's Tale	169
---------------------	-----

The Introduction	169
------------------	-----

The Prologue	170
--------------	-----

The Tale	170
----------	-----

The Pardoner's Prologue and Tale	191
----------------------------------	-----

The Introduction	191
------------------	-----

The Prologue	193
--------------	-----

The Tale	196
----------	-----

The Epilogue	206
--------------	-----

The Nun's Priest's Tale	207
-------------------------	-----

x • Contents

The Parson's Tale	222
The Introduction	222
Chaucer's Retraction	224
LYRICS AND OCCASIONAL VERSE	225
To Rosamond	225
To His Scribe Adam	226
Complaint to His Purse	226
Merciless Beauty	227
Gentilesse	228
Truth	229
✓ SIR ORFEO (ca. 1300)	230
✓ SIR GAWAIN AND THE GREEN KNIGHT (ca. 1375-1400)	244
PEARL (ca. 1375-1400)	299
PIERS PLOWMAN (ca. 1372-1389)	329
The Prologue	331
[The Field of Folk]	331
Passus V	334
[The Confession of Envy]	334
[The Confession of Gluttony]	335
MIDDLE ENGLISH LYRICS	337
Fowls in the Frith	339
Alison	339
My Lief Is Faren in Londe	340
Western Wind	340
I Have a Young Sister	340
A Bitter Lullaby	341
The Cuckoo Song	342
Tell Me, Wight in the Broom	342
I Am of Ireland	342
Sunset on Calvary	343
I Sing of a Maiden	343
Adam Lay Bound	343
The Corpus Christi Carol	344
✓ THE SECOND SHEPHERDS' PLAY (ca. 1425)	344
✓ EVERYMAN (after 1485)	366
✓ POPULAR BALLADS	388
Lord Randall	390
Edward	391

Barbara Allan	38
The Wife of Usher's Well	393
The Three Ravens	394
Bonny George Campbell	395
Sir Patrick Spens	396
The Bonny Earl of Murray	397
Thomas Rhymer	398
Robin Hood and the Three Squires	400
St. Steven and King Herod	402

SIR THOMAS MALORY (ca. 1405-1471)	404
Morte Darthur	406
[The Death of Arthur]	406
WILLIAM CAXTON (ca. 1422-1491)	412
Preface to Morte Darthur	413

The Sixteenth Century (1485-1603) 417

✓ SIR THOMAS MORE (1478-1535)	436
Utopia	437
Book I	437
[More Meets a Returned Traveler]	437
Book II	442
The Geography of Utopia	442
Their Gold and Silver	444
Marriage Customs	447
Religions	448
[Conclusion]	452

✓ JOHN SKELTON (ca. 1460-1529)	456
Colin Clout	457
Upon a Dead Man's Head	458
Mannerly Margery Milk and Ale	459
Lullay, Lullay, Like a Child	460
To Mistress Margaret Hussey	461

SIR THOMAS WYATT THE ELDER (1503-1542)	462
The Long Love That in My Thought Doth Harbor	464
Farewell, Love	464
My Galley	465
Madam, Withouten Many Words	465
Whoso List to Hunt	466
My Lute, Awake!	466
They Flee from Me	467

The Lover Showeth How He Is Forsaken of Such as He Sometime Enjoyed	468
Divers Doth Use	468
Tangled I Was in Love's Snare	469
In Spain	470
Mine Own John Pains	470
HENRY HOWARD, EARL OF SURREY (1517-1547)	473
Love, That Doth Reign and Live Within My Thought	474
The Soote Season	474
Alas! So All Things Now Do Hold Their Peace	475
Give Place, Ye Lovers, Here Before	475
My Friend, the Things That Do Attain	476
Epitaph on Sir Thomas Wyatt	476
Prisoned in Windsor, He Recounteth His Pleasure There Passed	478
SIR PHILIP SIDNEY (1554-1586)	479
Ye Goatherd Gods	482
Thou Blind Man's Mark	484
Leave Me, O Love	484
The Nightingale	485
Astrophel and Stella	485
1 ("Loving in truth, and fain in verse my love to show")	485
5 ("It is most true that eyes are formed to serve")	486
6 ("Some lovers speak, when they their Muses entertain")	486
15 ("You that do search for every purling spring")	487
18 ("With what sharp checks I in myself am shent")	487
21 ("Your words, my friend, right healthful caustics, blame")	487
31 ("With how sad steps, Oh Moon, thou climb'st the skies!")	488
39 ("Come sleep! Oh sleep, the certain knot of peace")	488
41 ("Having this day my horse, my hand, my lance")	488
45 ("Stella oft sees the very face of woe")	489
64 ("No more, my dear, no more these counsels try")	489
71 ("Who will in fairest book of Nature know")	489
74 ("I never drank of Aganippe well")	490
Fourth Song	490
An Apology for Poetry	492
EDMUND SPENSER (1552-1599)	507
The Shepherdes Calender	510
October	510
The Faerie Queene	515

A Letter of the Authors	518
Book I	521
Book II, Canto VII. [The Cave of Mammon]	658
Book II, Canto XII. [The Bower of Bliss]	673
Book VII. Two Cantos of Mutabilitie	683
Amoretti	709
Sonnet 1 ("Happy ye leaves when as those lilly hands")	709
Sonnet 15 ("Ye tradefull merchants, that with weary toyle")	710
Sonnet 34 ("Lyke as a ship that through the ocean wyde")	710
Sonnet 37 ("What guyle is this, that those her golden tresses")	710
Sonnet 54 ("Of this worlds theatre in which we stay")	711
Sonnet 64 ("Comming to kisse her lyps (such grace I found")	711
Sonnet 68 ("Most glorious Lord of lyfe, that on this day")	711
Sonnet 70 ("Fresh spring the herald of loves mighty king")	712
Sonnet 74 ("Most happy letters fram'd by skillful trade")	712
Sonnet 75 ("One day I wrote her name upon the strand")	712
Sonnet 79 ("Men call you fayre, and you doe credit it")	713
Epithalamion	713
CHRISTOPHER MARLOWE (1564-1593)	723
Hero and Leander	725
The Passionate Shepherd to His Love	744
The Tragical History of the Life and Death of Dr. Faustus	745
WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE (1564-1616)	795
SONGS FROM THE PLAYS	798
When Daisies Pied	798
Tell Me Where Is Fancy Bred	799
Sigh No More, Ladies	799
Under the Greenwood Tree	799
Blow, Blow, Thou Winter Wind	800
Oh Mistress Mine	800
Take, Oh, Take Those Lips Away	801
Fear No More the Heat o' the Sun	801
When Daffodils Begin to Peer	801
Full Fathom Five	802
Where the Bee Sucks, There Suck I	802

SONNETS	802
3 ("Look in thy glass, and tell the face thou viewest")	802
12 ("When I do count the clock that tells the time")	803
15 ("When I consider every thing that grows")	803
18 ("Shall I compare thee to a summer's day?")	804
29 ("When, in disgrace with fortune and men's eyes")	804
30 ("When to the sessions of sweet silent thought")	804
55 ("Not marble, nor the gilded monuments")	805
60 ("Like the waves make towards the pebbled shore")	805
71 ("No longer mourn for me when I am dead")	806
73 ("That time of year thou mayst in me behold")	806
74 ("But be contented; when that fell arrest")	806
87 ("Farewell: thou art too dear for my possessing")	807
94 ("They that have power to hurt and will do none")	807
97 ("How like a winter hath my absence been")	807
98 ("From you have I been absent in the spring")	808
106 ("When in the chronicle of wasted time")	808
107 ("Not mine own fears, nor the prophetic soul")	808
116 ("Let me not to the marriage of true minds")	809
124 ("If my dear love were but the child of state")	809
128 ("How oft when thou, my music, music play'st")	810
129 ("Th' expense of spirit in a waste of shame")	810
130 ("My mistress' eyes are nothing like the sun")	811
135 ("Whoever hath her wish, thou hast thy Will")	811
138 ("When my love swears that she is made of truth")	811
144 ("Two loves I have of comfort and despair")	812
146 ("Poor soul, the center of my sinful earth")	812
147 ("My love is as a fever, longing still")	813
The Phoenix and the Turtle	813
The First Part of King Henry the Fourth	815
The Tragedy of King Lear	886
THOMAS NASHE (1567-1601)	971
Spring, the Sweet Spring	972
A Litany in Time of Plague	972
Pierce Penniless, His Supplication to the Devil	973
An Invective against Enemies of Poetry	973
The Defense of Plays	976
SIXTEENTH-CENTURY LYRICS	980
SIR WALTER RALEGH (1552-1618)	982
The Nymph's Reply to the Shepherd	982
[On the Life of Man]	983
[Sir Walter Raleigh to His Son]	983
Walsingham	984

The Lie	985
Farewell, False Love	987
The Author's Epitaph, Made by Himself	988
ROBERT SOUTHWELL (1561-1595)	988
The Burning Babe	988
SAMUEL DANIEL (1562-1619)	989
Delia	989
33 ("When men shall find thy flower, thy glory pass")	989
34 ("When winter snows upon thy golden hairs")	989
45 ("Care-charmer Sleep, son of the sable Night")	990
46 ("Let others sing of knights and paladins")	990
MICHAEL DRAYTON (1563-1631)	990
Idea	991
6 ("How many paltry, foolish, painted things")	991
37 ("Dear, why should you command me to my rest")	991
50 ("As in some countries far removed from hence")	991
61 ("Since there's no help, come let us kiss and part")	992
THOMAS CAMPION (1567-1620)	992
My Sweetest Lesbia	992
When to Her Lute Corinna Sings	993
When Thou Must Home to Shades of Underground	993
Rose-cheeked Laura	994
What If a Day	994
Never Love Unless You Can	995
There Is a Garden in Her Face	995
Think'st Thou to Seduce Me Then	996
Fain Would I Wed	996
ANONYMOUS LYRICS	997
Back and Side Go Bare, Go Bare	997
In Praise of a Contented Mind	998
Though Amaryllis Dance in Green	999
[The Queen's Champion Retires]	1000
The Shepherds' Consort	1001
Come Away, Come, Sweet Love!	1001
Thule, the Period of Cosmography	1002
Madrigal ("My love in her attire doth show her wit")	1002
Weep You No More, Sad Fountains	1003
The Silver Swan	1003
PROSE OF THE SIXTEENTH CENTURY	1004
TRANSLATING THE BIBLE (Isaiah liii.3-6)	1008
The Great Bible	1008

xvi • Contents

The Coverdale Bible	1009
The Geneva Bible	1009
The King James Bible	1009
The New English Bible	1010
JOHN FOXE (1516-1587)	1010
Acts and Monuments	1011
The Behavior of Dr. Ridley and Master Latimer, at the Time of Their Death	1011
SIR THOMAS HOBY (1530-1566)	1016
The Courtier	1017
Book I. [Grace]	1017
Book IV. [Love]	1019
RICHARD HOOKER (1554-1600)	1032
Of the Laws of Ecclesiastical Polity	1033
The Preface. [On Moderation in Controversy]	1033
Book I, Chapter 3. [The Law of Nature]	1037
Book I, Chapter 8. [On Common Sense]	1038
Book I, Chapter 9. [Nature, Righteousness, and Sin]	1039
Book I, Chapter 10. [The Foundations of Society]	1040
Book I, Chapter 12. [The Need for Law]	1042
THOMAS HARIOT (1560-1621)	1043
A Brief and True Report of the Newfound Land of Virginia	1043
The Seventeenth Century (1603-1660)	1049
JOHN DONNE (1572-1631)	1059
The Good-Morrow	1062
Song ("Go and catch a falling star")	1063
The Undertaking	1063
The Indifferent	1064
The Canonization	1065
A Nocturnal upon St. Lucy's Day, Being the Shortest Day	1066
Love's Alchemy	1068
The Flea	1068
A Valediction: Forbidding Mourning	1069
The Ecstasy	1070
Lovers' Infiniteness	1072
The Sun Rising	1073
Air and Angels	1074
Break of Day	1075
A Valediction: Of Weeping	1075

The Funeral	1076
The Relic	1077
An Anatomy of the World	1078
Elegy XI. The Bracelet	1090
Elegy XIX. Going to Bed	1093
Satire III, Religion	1095
Good Friday, 1613. Riding Westward	1098
Holy Sonnets	1099
1 ("Thou hast made me, and shall Thy work decay?")	1099
5 ("I am a little world made cunningly")	1100
7 ("At the round earth's imagined corners, blow")	1100
9 ("If poisonous minerals, and if that tree")	1101
10 ("Death, be not proud, though some have called thee")	1101
14 ("Batter my heart, three-personed God")	1101
18 ("Show me, dear Christ, Thy spouse so bright and clear")	1102
A Hymn to Christ, at the Author's Last Going into Germany	1102
Hymn to God My God, in My Sickness	1103
A Hymn to God the Father	1104
Devotions upon Emergent Occasions	1105
Meditation IV	1105
Meditation XIV	1106
Meditation XVII	1108
Sermon LXVI	1109
[On the Weight of Eternal Glory]	1109
BEN JONSON (1572-1637)	1112
Volpone	1114
To Penshurst	1210
Inviting a Friend to Supper	1213
An Ode ("High-spirited friend")	1214
To Lucy, Countess of Bedford, with Mr. Donne's Satires	1215
Slow, Slow, Fresh Fount	1215
Queen and Huntress	1216
Song: To Celia	1216
In the Person of Woman-kind	1217
On My First Daughter	1217
On My First Son	1217
Epitaph on Elizabeth, L.H.	1218
To the Memory of My Beloved Master William Shakespeare	1218
To John Donne	1220
To the Immortal Memory and Friendship of That Noble Pair, Sir Lucius Cary and Sir H. Morison	1221

xviii • Contents

Ode to Himself	1224
Pleasure Reconciled to Virtue	1226
JOHN WEBSTER (1580?-1625)	1236
The Duchess of Malfi	1237
ROBERT HERRICK (1591-1634)	1315
The Argument of His Book	1316
His Prayer to Ben Jonson	1317
To the Water Nymphs Drinking at the Fountain	1317
The Lily in a Crystal	1317
To Blossoms	1319
To the Virgins, to Make Much of Time	1319
Corinna's Going A-Maying	1320
Delight in Disorder	1322
Upon Julia's Clothes	1322
Upon Prue, His Maid	1322
Upon His Spaniel Tracy	1323
Dreams	1323
To Lar	1323
His Return to London	1323
GEORGE HERBERT (1593-1633)	1324
Virtue	1325
Man	1325
The Pilgrimage	1327
Easter Wings	1328
The Altar	1329
The Flower	1329
The Forerunners	1330
Redemption	1332
Love Unknown	1332
Time	1334
Death	1335
The Collar	1335
The Pulley	1336
Discipline	1337
Jordan (I)	1338
Jordan (II)	1338
Denial	1339
Aaron	1340
Love (III)	1340
RICHARD CRASHAW (ca. 1613-1649)	1341
The Flaming Heart	1343
To the Countess of Denbigh	1346

On Our Crucified Lord, Naked and Bloody	1348
To the Infant Martyrs	1348
I Am the Door	1349
Luke 11	1349
Upon the Infant Martyrs	1349
Luke 7	1349
On the Wounds of Our Crucified Lord	1349
 HENRY VAUGHAN (1621-1695)	 1350
The Retreat	1351
Regeneration	1352
Corruption	1354
The World	1355
They Are All Gone into the World of Light!	1356
Man	1357
Silence and Stealth of Days!	1358
Unprofitableness	1359
 ANDREW MARVELL (1621-1678)	 1360
To His Coy Mistress	1361
The Garden	1362
The Mower, Against Gardens	1364
Damon the Mower	1365
The Mower to the Glowworms	1367
The Mower's Song	1368
The Picture of Little T. C. in a Prospect of Flowers	1368
The Coronet	1370
A Dialogue Between the Soul and Body	1370
The Definition of Love	1371
Bermudas	1372
An Horatian Ode	1374
 JOHN MILTON (1608-1674)	 1377
On Shakespeare	1379
L'Allegro	1380
Il Penseroso	1384
Lycidas	1389
How Soon Hath Time	1395
On the New Forcers of Conscience Under the Long Parliament	1396
On the Late Massacre in Piedmont	1397
When I Consider How My Light Is Spent	1397
Methought I Saw My Late Espoused Saint	1398
To My Friend, Mr. Henry Lawes, on His Airs	1398
Areopagitica	1399

Paradise Lost	1409
Book I	1411
Book II	1432
Book III	1457
Book IV	1476
[Satan's Entry into Paradise]	1476
Book V	1487
[The Full and Ordered Universe]	1487
[Book VI. Summary]	1490
Book VII	1491
[The Invocation]	1491
[Book VIII. Summary]	1492
Book IX	1492
Book X	1521
[Consequences of the Fall]	1521
[Book XI. Summary]	1535
Book XII	1535
[The Departure from Eden]	1536
Samson Agonistes	1540
 SEVENTEENTH-CENTURY LYRICS	1584
FRANCIS BEAUMONT (1584-1616) and JOHN FLETCHER (1579-1625)	1585
Songs from The Faithful Shepherdess	1586
Sing His Praises That Doth Keep	1586
Shepherds All and Maidens Fair	1586
Do Not Fear to Put Thy Feet	1587
See the Day Begins to Break	1587
Songs from Valentinian	1587
Care-Charming Sleep	1587
Hear, Ye Ladies That Despise	1588
Lovers, Rejoice!	1588
Songs from The Masque of the Inner Temple and Gray's Inn	1589
Shake Off Your Heavy Trance	1589
Ye Should Stay Longer If We Durst	1589
Peace and Silence Be the Guide	1589
The Passionate Man's Song	1590
 THOMAS CAREW (ca. 1594-1640)
An Elegy upon the Death of the Dean of Paul's, Dr. John Donne	1590
Disdain Returned	1591
A Song ("Ask me no more where Jove bestows")	1593
To Ben Jonson	1594
A Rapture	1595

EDMUND WALLER (1606-1687)	1600
The Story of Phoebus and Daphne Applied	1601
Song ("Go, lovely rose!")	1602
On a Girdle	1602
Of English Verse	1603
Of the Last Verses in the Book	1604
SIR JOHN SUCKLING (1609-1642)	1604
Song ("Why so pale and wan, fond lover?")	1605
Loving and Beloved	1605
Out upon It!	1606
RICHARD LOVELACE (1618-1657)	1606
To Althea, from Prison	1607
To Lucasta, Going to the Wars	1608
The Grasshopper	1608
The Snail	1609
THOMAS TRAHERNE (1637-1674)	1611
Wonder	1612
On News	1613
On Leaping over the Moon	1615
ABRAHAM COWLEY (1618-1667)	1616
To Mr. Hobbes	1617
To the Royal Society	1620
PROSE OF THE SEVENTEENTH CENTURY	1625
FRANCIS BACON (1561-1626)	1626
ESSAYS	1628
Of Truth	1628
Of Marriage and Single Life	1629
Of Studies	1631
Of Negotiating	1632
Of Masques and Triumphs	1633
Novum Organum	1635
[The Idols]	1635
The New Atlantis	1641
[Solomon's House]	1641
ROBERT BURTON (1577-1640)	1650
The Anatomy of Melancholy	1651
Exercise Rectified	1651

THOMAS HOBBES (1588-1679)	1655
Leviathan	1655
Part I, Chapter 13. Of the Natural Condition of Man- kind as Concerning Their Felicity and Misery	1655
Part I, Chapter 14. Of the First and Second Natural Laws	1659
Part I, Chapter 15. Of Other Laws of Nature	1660
IZAACK WALTON (1593-1683)	1663
The Life of Dr. John Donne	1664
[Donne Takes Holy Orders]	1664
[Donne on His Deathbed]	1667
SIR THOMAS BROWNE (1605-1682)	1672
Religio Medici	1674
Hydriotaphia, Urn-Burial	1683
Chapter V	1683
JOHN LOCKE (1632-1704)	1690
An Essay Concerning Human Understanding	1691
The Epistle to the Reader	1691
SAMUEL PEPYS (1633-1703)	1697
The Diary	1698
THOMAS SPRAT (1635-1713)	1702
The History of the Royal Society	1703
[On the Language of the Members]	1703
[Wit Less to Be Prized than Sound Sense]	1706
SIR ISAAC NEWTON (1642-1727)	1710
A Letter of Mr. Isaac Newton, Professor of the Mathe- matics in the University of Cambridge, Containing His New Theory about Light and Colors	1711

The Restoration and the Eighteenth Century (1660-1798)

JOHN DRYDEN (1631-1700)	1744
Annus Mirabilis	1747
[London Reborn]	1747
Song from Marriage à la Mode	1749
Absalom and Achitophel: A Poem	1749
Mac Flecknoe	1774
To the Memory of Mr. Oldham	1781

To the Pious Memory of the Accomplished Young Lady
Mrs. Anne Killigrew	1782
A Song for St. Cecilia's Day	1788
Epigram on Milton	1790
Alexander's Feast	1790
The Secular Masque	1795
CRITICISM	1798
An Essay of Dramatic Poesy	1799
[Two Sorts of Bad Poetry]	1799
[The Wit of the Ancients: The Universal]	1800
[Shakespeare and Ben Jonson Compared]	1802
The Author's Apology for Heroic Poetry and Heroic License	1804
["Boldness" of Figures and Tropes Defended:
The Appeal to "Nature"]	1804
[Wit as "Propriety"]	1805
A Discourse Concerning the Original and Progress of Satire	1806
[The Art of Satire]	1806
The Preface to Fables Ancient and Modern	1807
[In Praise of Chaucer]	1807
JOHN BUNYAN (1628-1688)	1808
Grace Abounding to the Chief of Sinners	1810
The Pilgrim's Progress	1815
[Christian Sets out for the Celestial City]	1815
[The Slough of Despond]	1818
[Vanity Fair]	1819
[The River of Death and the Celestial City]	1822
WILLIAM CONGREVE (1670-1729)	1825
Love for Love	1827
DANIEL DEFOE (ca. 1660-1731)	1899
A True Revelation of the Apparition of One Mrs. Veal	1901
POETRY: AUGUSTAN MODES	1909
SAMUEL BUTLER (1612-1680)	1909
Hudibras	1910
Part I, Canto I	1910
JOHN WILMOT, SECOND EARL OF ROCHESTER
(1647-1680)	1916
The Disabled Debauchee	1917
ANNE FINCH, COUNTESS OF WINCHILSEA
(1661-1720)	1918
On Myself	1919
A Nocturnal Reverie	1919

MATTHEW PRIOR (1664-1721)	1921
An Epitaph	1922
JOHN GAY (1685-1732)	1923
The Birth of the Squire. An Eclogue	1924
LADY MARY WORTLEY MONTAGU (1689-1762)	1927
The Lover: A Ballad	1928
Epistle from Mrs. Yonge to Her Husband	1929
JONATHAN SWIFT (1667-1745)	1932
A Description of a City Shower	1934
Stella's Birthday, 1721	1936
Verses on the Death of Dr. Swift	1938
A Tale of a Tub	1949
A Digression Concerning the Original, the Use, and Improvement of Madness in a Commonwealth	1949
An Argument Against the Abolishing of Christianity in England	1960
Gulliver's Travels	1970
A Letter from Captain Gulliver to His Cousin Sympson	1972
The Publisher to the Reader	1975
Part I. A Voyage to Lilliput	1976
Part II. A Voyage to Brobdingnag	2023
Part III. A Voyage to Laputa, Balnibarbi, Glubbdubdrib, Luggnagg, and Japan	2073
[The Flying Island of Laputa]	2073
[The Struldbruggs]	2083
Part IV. A Voyage to the Country of the Houyhnhnms	2089
A Modest Proposal	2144
JOSEPH ADDISON (1672-1717) and SIR RICHARD STEELE (1672-1729)	2151
THE PERIODICAL ESSAY: MANNERS	2154
Steele: [The Gentleman; The Pretty Fellow] (Tatler 21)	2154
Steele: [Dueling] (Tatler 25)	2156
Addison: [The Trial of the Petticoat] (Tatler 116)	2158
Steele: [The Spectator's Club] (Spectator 2)	2161
Addison: [The Royal Exchange] (Spectator 69)	2165
Addison: [Sir Roger at Church] (Spectator 112)	2168
Addison: [Sir Roger at the Assizes] (Spectator 122)	2170
THE PERIODICAL ESSAY: IDEAS	2173
Addison: [The Aims of the Spectator] (Spectator 10)	2173
Addison: [Wit: True, False, Mixed] (Spectator 62)	2176
Addison: [Paradise Lost: General Critical Remarks] (Spectator 267)	2181

Addison: [On the Scale of Being] (Spectator 519)	2185
ALEXANDER POPE (1688-1744)	2188
An Essay on Criticism	2194
Part I	2194
Part II	2199
Part III	2207
The Rape of the Lock	2211
Ode on Solitude	2231
Epistle to Miss Blount	2232
Eloisa to Abelard	2232
An Essay on Man	2242
Epistle I. Of the Nature and State of Man, with Respect to the Universe	2243
Epistle II. Of the Nature and State of Man with Respect to Himself as an Individual	2250
The Universal Prayer	2250
Epistle II. To a Lady	2252
Epistle to Dr. Arbuthnot	2259
The Dunciad	2270
Book the Fourth	2270
[The Educator]	2272
[The Carnation and the Butterfly]	2273
[The Triumph of Dulness]	2275
SAMUEL JOHNSON (1709-1784)	2277
The Vanity of Human Wishes	2281
Prologue Spoken by Mr. Garrick	2290
On the Death of Dr. Robert Levet	2291
A Short Song of Congratulation	2292
Translation of Horace, Odes , Book IV. vii	2293
Rambler No. 5. [On Spring]	2294
Rambler No. 203. [Futurity]	2297
Idler No. 31. [On Idleness]	2300
Idler No. 58. [Expectations of Pleasure]	2302
The History of Rasselas, Prince of Abyssinia	2304
[A Brief to Free a Slave]	2330
Rambler No. 4. [On Fiction]	2332
Rambler No. 60. [Biography]	2336
A Dictionary of the English Language	2339
Preface	2340
[Some Definitions: A Small Anthology]	2345
The Preface to Shakespeare	2347
[Shakespeare's Excellence. General Nature]	2347
[Shakespeare's Faults. The Three Dramatic Unities]	2351
[Henry IV]	2358
[King Lear]	2359

LIVES OF THE POETS	2361
Cowley	2361
[Metaphysical Wit]	2361
Milton	2363
[Lycidas]	2363
[L'Allegro. Il Penseroso]	2365
[Paradise Lost]	2366
Pope	2372
[Pope's Intellectual Character. Pope and Dryden Compared]	2372
JAMES BOSWELL (1740-1795)	2376
Boswell on the Grand Tour	2379
[Boswell Interviews Voltaire]	2379
The Life of Samuel Johnson, LL.D.	2381
[Plan of the Life]	2381
[Johnson's Early Years. Marriage and London]
[1709-52]	2383
[The Letter to Chesterfield] [1754-62]	2391
[A Memorable Year: Boswell Meets Johnson] [1763]	2393
[Goldsmith. Sundry Opinions. Johnson Meets His King]
[1763-67]	2396
[Fear of Death] [1769]	2401
[Ossian. "Talking for Victory"] [1775-76]	2402
[Dinner with Wilkes] [1776]	2404
[Dread of Solitude] [1777]	2410
["A Bottom of Good Sense." Bet Flint. "Clear Your Mind of Cant"] [1781-83]	2411
[Johnson Prepares for Death] [1783-84]	2412
[Johnson Faces Death] [1784]	2414
EDMUND BURKE (1729-1797)	2417
Speech on Conciliation with the Colonies	2419
THE POETRY OF SENSIBILITY	2434
JAMES THOMSON (1700-1748)	2434
The Seasons	2435
Autumn. [Evening and Night]	2435
An Ode on Aeolus's Harp	2437
THOMAS GRAY (1716-1771)	2438
Ode on a Distant Prospect of Eton College	2439
Ode on the Death of a Favorite Cat	2442
Hymn to Adversity	2443
Elegy Written in a Country Churchyard	2444

WILLIAM COLLINS (1721-1759)	2447
Ode Written in the Beginning of the Year 1746	2448
Ode on the Poetical Character	2449
Ode to Evening	2451
Ode on the Death of Mr. Thomson	2452
CHRISTOPHER SMART (1722-1771)	2454
Jubilate Agno	2455
[My Cat Jeoffry]	2455
A Song to David	2457
OLIVER GOLDSMITH (ca. 1730-1774)	2471
The Deserted Village	2472
GEORGE CRABBE (1754-1832)	2481
The Village	2482
Book I	2482
The Borough	2490
Letter XXII, The Poor of the Borough: Peter Grimes	2490
WILLIAM COWPER (1731-1800)	2498
The Task	2499
Book I	2499
[A Landscape Described: Rural Sounds]	2499
[Crazy Kate. Gypsies]	2500
Book III	2502
[The Stricken Deer]	2502
Book IV	2502
[The Winter Evening: A Brown Study]	2502
The Castaway	2505
POEMS IN PROCESS	2507
John Milton	2508
Lycidas	2508
Alexander Pope	2510
The Rape of the Lock	2510
An Essay on Man	2511
Samuel Johnson	2512
The Vanity of Human Wishes	2513
Thomas Gray	2514
Elegy Written in a Country Churchyard	2514
SELECTED BIBLIOGRAPHIES	2519
Suggested General Readings	2519
The Middle Ages	2521

xxviii • Contents

The Sixteenth Century	2525
The Seventeenth Century	2528
The Restoration and the Eighteenth Century	2536
POETIC FORMS AND LITERARY TERMINOLOGY	2545
ILLUSTRATIONS
A London Playhouse of Shakespeare's Time	2561
The Universe According to Ptolemy	2562
INDEX	2565

will recognize, are selections which had been dropped from the first or second editions but are reintroduced by widespread demand. An overview here of the more important changes may help the teacher to appraise the teaching opportunities that this new edition provides.

Medieval selections now include the complete Pearl (in a new translation by Marie Borroff); a retranslation of Piers Plowman, with two passages on the Deadly Sins replacing "The Harrowing of Hell"; and new translations of three Old English poems. Among the added materials in the 16th century is the text of Hero and Leander as, according to the scholar, Louis L. Martz, it was originally written in a complete form, by Christopher Marlowe, with Chapman's unwarranted division into "Sestiads" deleted. The Mutabilitie Cantos of Spenser's Faerie Queene are now printed in their entirety, thereby providing a possible alternative to assigning the complete Book I, which is retained in this edition. The sections of More's Utopia are presented in Robert M. Adams's cogent new translation. There are new prose selections from Thomas Nashe's Pierce Penniless and from Hoby's influential translation of Castiglione's The Courtier. There are also additions to the lyrics by various poets and, in response to insistent demands, a number of changes in our representation of Shakespeare's sonnets. In a major innovation, Ben Jonson's Volpone has been added to the four Elizabethan and Jacobean plays in the previous edition, thereby creating a mini-anthology of the golden age of English dramatic literature. Other new items in the 17th century are Donne's complete Anatomy of the World; a number of songs from the plays of Beaumont and Fletcher; poems by Donne, Jonson, various Cavalier lyrics, Traherne, and Cowley; five poems by Herbert (attesting to the great current interest in that craftsman in verse); as well as a number of poems by Andrew Marvell (several on a single, related subject). The writings in prose now include Bacon's essay on Masques and Triumphs, and, to demonstrate the development of a prose adapted to practical and scientific exposition, selections from Sprat's History of the Royal Society and Isaac Newton's letter to the Society announcing his "New Theory about Light and Colors." The selections from Paradise Lost (already including four complete Books) have also been augmented so as to clarify the evolving relations between Adam and Eve, by Book V, lines 377-505 (before the Fall) and the concluding section of Book X (after the Fall).

In accord with many recommendations, Congreve's The Way of The World has been replaced by his more simply and coherently plotted Love for Love. Two poems by Lady Wortley Montagu, hitherto known mainly through footnotes to the writings of Alexander Pope, show her to have been a trenchant exponent of what women are, as against what male poets suppose them to be. There is an added poem by Jonathan Swift (Stella's Birthday, 1721), and Pope's Essay on Criticism is now printed in its entirety. Additional essays are included from the Tatler and the Spectator, while Dr. Johnson's writings have been supplemented by his Brief to Free a Slave and by materials from his great achievement, A Dictionary of the English Language—important sections of the Preface, as well as some of the more notable definitions. The selections from Thomson's Seasons and Cowper's Task have been improved. We have also added the "Peter Grimes" story from Crabbe's The Borough, as well as new odes by Thomson, Gray, and Collins.

To the Romantic section have been added two writers: Mary Wollstonecraft (the central sections from her pioneering treatise, A Vindication of the Rights of Woman, together with selections from her Letters Written in Sweden) and Mary Shelley (her remarkable Introduction to Frankenstein and a Gothic tale of the supernatural, Transformation). Two additional long works are Byron's complete Manfred and Shelley's urbane dialogue with Byron in his poem Julian and Maddalo. In response to numerous suggestions, we have added Burns's poem of homely realism, To a Louse, as well as several early Romantic poems written in the deliberately simple style—two more of Blake's Songs of Innocence and another of Wordsworth's lyrical ballads, Simon Lee, in the version of 1798. We have also included three short items by Blake on natural religion and deism, added a third letter, and replaced the excerpts from Jerusalem by a complete and more readily intelligible instance of Blake's prophetic mode, America: A Prophecy. Wordsworth's Prelude is still represented (though in newly edited texts) by its first and last versions of 1799 (complete) and 1850; but the latter has been supplemented by some 300 lines, so as to reveal the complex internal design of that poem. Two new poems by Wordsworth exemplify moments of vision: The Two April Mornings and Nutting. The selections from Coleridge include an added section of Biographia Literaria on "rustic" language, and two excerpts from The Statesman's Manual on "Symbol and Allegory" and the "Satanic Hero." Shelley's Prometheus Unbound has been supplemented by a passage on Prometheus's temptation by the Furies (Act I); Byron's Childe Harold has been expanded; and in his Don Juan, while Canto XVI (infrequently assigned) has been deleted, other Cantos have been supplemented: Canto II, for example, now includes Byron's description of cannibalism at sea. In the writings by Lamb, Hazlitt, and De Quincey, furthermore, some essays have been replaced by others which, on the testimony of instructors, will be of greater use and interest to students.

The most conspicuous addition in the Victorian period is a complete play, Oscar Wilde's The Importance of Being Earnest, but there are numerous other innovations. Among the prose writings, we now have selections from Carlyle's French Revolution, an added passage from Ruskin's Modern Painters, and Pater's The Child in the House, which serves as a revealing introduction to that writer's characteristic concerns and literary artistry. St. Agnes' Eve has been added to Tennyson's poems; in response to persistent demand, there are also five new passages from Maud, and six additional sections from In Memoriam (6, 8, 12, 29, 105, 113) which clarify the structure, and bring the total selections to more than two-thirds of the entire poem. Other poets whose works are more fully represented are Elizabeth Barrett Browning, George Meredith (six additional sonnets from Modern Love), Dante and Christina Rossetti, and William Morris. W. S. Gilbert has been added to the group now entitled "Light Verse." In a major reorganization, the section on "The Nineties" has been transferred from "The Twentieth Century" to the end of the Victorian section (where it belongs); it is strengthened not only by adding to the poems of Wilde and Dowson, but also by representing more fully the "heartly" writers of that decade—Rudyard Kipling and a new writer, William Ernest Henley.

The writers in "The Twentieth Century," like those in "The Victorian Age," have been reordered so as to make them more readily locatable. Conrad's long (and, to most students, too familiar) Heart of Darkness has been replaced by two short stories and a passage of critical comment on fiction; similarly, D.H. Lawrence's The Fox has been replaced by a new story, The Princess, a selection from the travel book Mornings in Mexico, and several often-demanded poems. As befits a major writer, the representation of Virginia Woolf has been signally increased; to The Mark on the Wall we add the title sketch from the one volume of short fiction she herself published, Monday or Tuesday, as well as An Unwritten Novel and several pieces of social and literary criticism, including an excerpt from A Room of One's Own. For the earlier selections from Yeats's autobiographic writings, we have substituted others which are more central to his life and work, and have replaced Joyce's short story, Clay, by his more lucid Counterparts. In line with a strong current interest, there is a substantial new section of "Poetry of World War I" which, in addition to poets in the previous edition (Brooke, Edward Thomas, Owen, Jones), now includes Siegfried Sassoon, Ivor Gurney, and Isaac Rosenberg. Other writers of verse and prose added in the present edition are Edith Sitwell, Katherine Mansfield, F. R. Leavis (a complete essay), Stevie Smith, and George Orwell. Shaw's Major Barbara has been replaced by the more teachable (and in its vigorous feminism, a very topical) play, Mrs. Warren's Profession. Samuel Beckett is now represented by a most characteristic short story, The End; and we have added to our long array of dramas Harold Pinter's very "modern" play,

The Dumb Waiter. The selections from Robert Graves and Hugh MacDiarmid have been altered. Finally, the passage of time and an emerging critical consensus have provided greater assurance in the choice of writers and writings for "Poetry after Mid-Century." The reconstituted section now includes two new poets, Molly Holden and Elaine Feinstein, as well as more recent selections by Donald Davie, Philip Larkin, Thom Gunn, Ted Hughes, Jon Silkin, Geoffrey Hill, and Seamus Heaney.

It should be noted that the number and variety of the works included in the anthology make possible not only a chronological approach to major writers, but also generic or topical ways of organizing a course, or parts of a course. English poetry, in all its species and magnitudes, is of course represented fully, and now supplemented by the diversely useful sections on "Poems in Process." The broad spectrum of plays, augmented by four new titles, constitutes an overview of English drama in its various modes, starting with The Second Shepherds' Play and Everyman, ranging through Marlowe, Shakespeare (a history play and a tragedy), Jonson, Webster, two masques (Jonson's Pleasure Reconciled to Virtue and Dryden's Secular Masque), a Restoration comedy of manners, two Romantic closet dramas (Manfred, complete, and Prometheus Unbound), Wilde's great farce, and Shaw's satiric social drama, and ending with a contemporary play by Harold Pinter. It is also possible to study the evolution of shorter forms of prose fiction, from Pilgrim's Progress through the narrative papers in the Tatler and Spectator, Defoe's Mrs. Veal, Swift's Gulliver's Travels, Johnson's Rasselas, and a great variety of short stories, including a Gothic tale by Mary Shelley and the diverse stories by Conrad, Forster, Woolf, Joyce, Mansfield, Beckett, and Lessing.

The third edition of the anthology undertook to redress the neglect of women in traditional literary study; the present edition has enlarged the representation of these authors, as well as of writings that deal with women in western culture. Literature centrally concerned with the social and sexual roles of women may be studied in a range from "the marriage group" in the Canterbury Tales, through many intervening works (e.g., Paradise Lost, The Rape of the Lock, Rasselas); to a number of poems and stories in our own age. Social and literary criticism specifically addressed to the situation of women is represented by selections from two classic works, Mary Wollstonecraft's A Vindication of the Rights of Woman and J. S. Mill's The Subjection of Women; by documents by George Eliot, Florence Nightingale, and other Victorians in the new section "The Woman Question," and by selections from Virginia Woolf. And the earlier list of women poets and writers of fiction has been enlarged by the inclusion of Lady Mary Wortley Montagu, Mary Shelley, Molly Holden, and Elaine Feinstein.

Many other topics can be profitably studied from materials in the present anthology, including such matters of current interest as (1) the imaginative response of writers to the changing aspects of war, from Beowulf and The Battle of Maldon, to the many poems in "Poetry of World War I"; (2) the visionary mode in literature, as exemplified by Spenser's Mutabilitie Cantos, several 17th-century visionary poets, Christopher Smart, William Blake, a number of Romantic and Victorian representations, in verse and prose, of visions and dreams, and the poems and autobiographic writings of Yeats; (3) the persistent but ever-altering form of spiritual autobiography, crisis, and the quest for identity, as represented in Bunyan's Grace Abounding, Wordsworth's Prelude, De Quincey's Confessions, Carlyle's Sartor Resartus, Mill's Autobiography, Pater's Child in the House, Tennyson's In Memoriam, Joyce's Portrait of the Artist, and Eliot's Little Gidding.

The organization of the contents in each period of English literature has been simplified by putting in chronological order the authors, whether they wrote in verse or prose, as well as the titles written by each author; there are a few exceptions to this principle, most of them instances when it has seemed helpful to group short, related items under such headings as "Sixteenth-Century Lyrics," Victorian "Light Verse," or "Poetry of World War I."

In accord with our policy to adopt improved texts as they become available, we now print Jonathan Wordsworth's revised versions of The Prelude of 1799 and 1850 (from Wordsworth's Prelude, 1799, 1805, 1850: A Norton Critical Edition, edited by Wordsworth, M. H. Abrams, and Stephen Gill, 1979); Jack Stillinger's new edition of Keats's Poems (Harvard University Press, 1978); the poems of Gerard Manley Hopkins as edited by W. H. Gardner and N. H. MacKenzie (Oxford University Press, 4th edition, 1970); and the stories from Joyce's Dubliners in the definitive edition by Robert Scholes (1968). To make texts as accessible as possible to student readers, we have normalized spelling and capitalization (and, very sparingly, punctuation) according to modern American usage. There are two kinds of exceptions to this procedure. (1) We have left unaltered texts in which modernization would change semantic, phonological, or metric qualities, or would affect distinctive features of the original publications. Thus the verse of Spenser, Burns, Hopkins, MacDiarmid, and David Jones, as well as the prose of Dorothy Wordsworth's Journals and of the writings of Carlyle, Joyce, and Shaw have been reproduced exactly. Only minor changes required for ready intelligibility (mainly in punctuation) have been made in the poems etched by William Blake. The works of Chaucer and other writers in Middle English that are not too difficult for the novice have also been left in the original language; each word, however, is consistently spelled in that variant of its scribal forms which is closest to modern English. (2) We have also left unaltered certain texts for which we use specially edited versions (identified in a headnote or footnote): Wollstonecraft's Vindication and Letters from Sweden, the two versions of Wordsworth's Prelude, all the verse and prose of Shelley and Keats, and the selections from Mary Shelley.

Each editor has reconsidered and rewritten (in some instances, radically) his introductory essays and headnotes and has revised his footnotes, both to take advantage of recent scholarship and in a continuing effort to make them as informative and clear as possible. In selected instances editorial headnotes or footnotes briefly indicate interpretations of a difficult work or passage. The reason for this procedure is a practical one. The anthology includes some of the most complex and difficult writings in the language, and the normal procedure is to assign some texts which there is not time to discuss adequately—or sometimes, to discuss at all—in the classroom. We therefore undertake to give an essential modicum of guidance to the student, but to present it in such a way as to open out possibilities for independent judgment and to provide, not definitive readings, but points of departure for dialogue in the classroom.

We continue other editorial procedures which have proved their usefulness in earlier editions. The historical and biographical introductions, although succinct, are informative enough to eliminate the need for supplementary books on the lives of authors and on the literary, social, and cultural history of England. In most introductions we identify at the beginning a few dates which are important for orienting the student. After each work we cite (when known) the date of composition on the left and the date of first publication on the right; in some instances the latter is followed by the date of a revised reprinting. Texts which include a large proportion of unfamiliar words are glossed in the margin, so that readers may assimilate the translation without interrupting the flow of their reading. In the limited instances when part of a work has been omitted, that fact is indicated by the word From before the title, and the place of the omission in the text is indicated by three asterisks.

The selected bibliographical guides at the end of each volume are designed to encourage students to read further on their own, and also to serve as points of departure in assigned essays. In this edition all the bibliographies have been brought up to date, and the authors and subgroups within each period have been put in alphabetic order. In both volumes a brief glossary of terms is provided under the title "Poetic Forms and Literary Terminology."

We have also added, in Volume 1, illustrations of two subjects in which graphic representations are of special value: a drawing of the universe according to Ptolemy, and exterior and interior views of a London playhouse of Shakespeare's time (drawn especially for us by C. Walter Hodges, author of The Globe Restored).

To the hundreds of teachers throughout the United States and Canada who have helped us to design and improve these volumes, the editors express their deep gratitude; we cannot name every one of them here, but all will recognize the changes that they have suggested. A separate list of "Acknowledgments" names advisors who provided detailed critiques of the anthology as a whole or of particular periods, or were especially helpful in the preparation of texts and editorial matter. We wish to mention here the assistance of Jennifer Sutherland, Valerie Eads, John W. N. Francis, and of Diane O'Connor, Marjorie Flock, Nelda Freeman, Marian Johnson, Tam Putnam, Josepha Gutelius, Roy Tedoff, Hugh O'Neill, and James Mairs of Norton's production department; we also owe thanks to Norman McAfee; to Julie Aidelberg of Cornell University; to Susan Metzger of the Harvard University Press; to Barbara Zimmerman; and to Barbara and Paul Bodin. Our greatest debt is to George P. Brockway and John Benedict of W. W. Norton and Company, Inc., who have helped mitigate the chronic dilemmas in the continuing process of representing, justly, accurately, and in accord with changing interests and advancing knowledge, the immense scope of English literature within a single book.

M. H. ABRAMS

Acknowledgments

Among our many critics, advisors, and friends, the following were of especial help in providing critiques of particular periods or of the anthology as a whole, or assisted in preparing texts and editorial matter: Barry B. Adams (Cornell University); Paul Alpers (University of California, Berkeley); Judith H. Anderson (Indiana University); Colin B. Atkinson; Paula Backscheider (University of Rochester); Sheridan Baker (University of Michigan); Jerome Beaty (Emory University); Miriam J. Benkovitz (Skidmore College); Marie Borroff (Yale University); A. T. J. Cairns (University of Calgary); Jenni Calder (Edinburgh University); Angus Calder (The Open University); Tom J. Collins (University of Arizona); Rebecca Crump (Louisiana State University); Stuart Curran (University of Washington); Beth Darlington (Vassar College); Roman R. Dubinski (University of Waterloo); Dwight Eddins (University of Alabama); Scott Elledge (Cornell University); Hubert M. English, Jr. (University of Michigan); John P. Farrell (University of Texas at Austin); Barbara Charlesworth Gelpi (Stanford University); Marilyn Gaul (Temple University); Stephen Gill (Lincoln College, Oxford); Homer B. Goldberg (State University of New York at Stony Brook); Nancy M. Goslee (University of Tennessee); Donald J. Gray (Indiana University); David V. Harrington (Gustavus Adolphus College); Carolyn G. Heilbrun (Columbia University); Richard Helgerson (University of California, Santa Barbara); Robert D. Hume (Cornell University); J. Paul Hunter (Emory University); Joel Hurstfield (University of London); Robert Kiely (Harvard University); Ruth P. M. Lehmann (University of Texas at Austin); William T. Liston (Ball State University); James R. McAdams (Pennsylvania State University); N. H. MacKenzie (Queen's University); Hugh Maclean (State University of New York at Albany); Leslie H. Martin (University of Notre Dame); Dorothy Mermin (Cornell University); Helene Moglen (State University of New York College at Purchase); David Novarr (Cornell University); Robert O'Clair (Manhattanville College); William Park (Sarah Lawrence College); Reeve Parker (Cornell University); Carol H. Poston (University of Illinois at Chicago Circle); Jon A. Quitslund (George Washington University; Don-

xl · Acknowledgments

ald H. Reiman (The Carl H. Pforzheimer Library); M. L. Rosenthal (New York University); H. Grant Sampson (Queen's University); Ronald A. Sharp (Kenyon College); David Shore (University of Ottawa); Sally K. Slocum (University of Akron); Jon Stallworthy (Cornell University); Jack Stillinger (University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign); E. E. Stokes, Jr. (Texas A&M University); Roger G. Swearingen (University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill); Nina L. Thiess (Santa Monica College); Charles H. Vivian (Bentley College); Jonathan Wordsworth (Exeter College, Oxford).

The Norton Anthology
of English Literature
FOURTH EDITION

VOLUME 1

The Middle Ages

(to 1485)

- | | |
|------------|--|
| ca. 450: | Anglo-Saxon Conquest. |
| 597: | St. Augustine arrives in Kent; beginning of Anglo-Saxon conversion to Christianity. |
| 871-899: | Reign of King Alfred. |
| 1066: | Norman Conquest. |
| ca. 1200: | Beginnings of Middle English literature. |
| 1360-1400: | The summit of Middle English literature: Geoffrey Chaucer; Piers Plowman ; Sir Gawain and the Green Knight . |
| 1485: | William Caxton's printing of Sir Thomas Malory's Morte Darthur , one of the first books printed in England. |

The medieval period in English literature extends for more than 800 years, from Cædmon's Hymn at the end of the 7th century to Everyman at the end of the 15th. Historians used to divide this period into two parts, calling the earlier centuries the Dark Ages in order to distinguish their quality from that of the later centuries, when European culture attained one of the summits of its history. Though this distinction is misleading—for the Dark Ages were only relatively dark—it is nevertheless true that the English Middle Ages embraced two quite different periods of literary history, the Old English (or Anglo-Saxon) and the Middle English, sharply divided from each other by the Norman duke William's conquest of the island in 1066. Both English culture and the English language changed radically in the years following this event, and English literature was given a new spirit.

Because it is impossible to read the Old English language without a great deal of study, Old English texts printed in this book are given in translation. Middle English texts such as Chaucer's, written in a dialect which is the ancestor of Modern Standard English, appear in the original, but have been spelled in a way that it is hoped will aid the reader. Middle English texts written in the more difficult regional dialects are given in translation. Analyses of the sounds and grammar of Middle English, and of Old and Middle English prosody, appear at the end of this introduction.

THE ANGLO-SAXONS AND THE HEROIC IDEAL

The Anglo-Saxon invasion of the island of Britain which began in the first half of the 5th century was a phase of a great folk migration that had started some centuries earlier and was to continue for several more—the movement of the Germanic tribes from the northeast of Europe into the areas of the Roman Empire to the west, south, and southeast. The so-called Anglo-Saxon invaders of Britain actually consisted of three tribes, the Angles, the Saxons, and the Jutes. Although each was independent, through their common Germanic heritage these tribes were closely allied with one another and with the many other tribes that already had or would in the future overrun much of the old Roman Empire. They shared the same pre-historic ancestors: even in historical times their individual tongues amounted to little other than variant dialects of a common language, while the customs of one tribe differed little from those of another.

In its earliest period Germanic society had been organized by families: the head of the family was the chief of his close kinsmen, and the family formed an independent political entity. With the passing of time, the unit of society tended to grow larger as a number of families united under a single superior chieftain or “king,” to use the word derived from the Old Germanic name for chief. But the unit grew to be very large only rarely, when some particularly successful king attracted others to him in order to perform some specific exploit; and such larger unions rarely endured long after the completion of the venture for which they had been formed. The normal order of society was made up of a number of small bands, which, while they did not always live at peace with one another, still shared a sense of community and kinship, especially in the face of a common enemy such as the people whose lands they were invading; but when they had conquered, their natural political divisiveness reasserted itself. Thus long after the Anglo-Saxons had become settled in Britain, the island was still broken up into a bewildering number of kingdoms, some of them very short-lived, and a coherent union of all Englishmen was not achieved until after the Norman conquest.

The same general organization of many kings coexisting within a common culture had been characteristic of that other migratory people, the Greeks (or, more accurately, Achaeans), who centuries earlier had overrun the region of the eastern Mediterranean. And both to the Achaeans and to the Germanic peoples the ideal of kingly behavior was enormously important—indeed, it was perhaps the chief spiritual force behind the civilizations they both developed, the creative power that, in their earliest periods, shaped their history and their literature. It is generally called the heroic ideal; and put most simply, the heroic ideal was excellence. The hero-king strove to do better than anyone else the things that an essentially migratory life demanded: to sail a ship through a storm, to swim a river or a bay, to tame a horse, to choose a campsite and set firm defenses, in times of peace even to plow a field or build a hall, but always and above all, to fight. Skill and courage were the primary qualities of a king who should successfully lead his people in battle and sustain them during peace.

In its oldest form, the ideal was appropriate only to kings, but because society was so closely knit, all the more important male members of the tribe tended to imitate it. (Germanic society was wholly dominated by males: women are rarely mentioned in the surviving records of it, and only if they are the wives or daughters of kings.) In general, of course, the heroic ideal of conduct was aristocratic, restricted to the king and his immediate retainers, though without that quality of unreality and remoteness from daily life that we associate with later medieval aristocracy. The king was the active leader of a small number of fellow warriors who, as members of his household, beheld all that he did. A successful king won from his retainers complete loyalty. It was their duty to defend him in battle, to give up their own lives while defending or avenging his. In return the king gave his retainers gifts from the spoil that had been accumulated in warfare. Royal generosity was one of the most important aspects of heroic behavior, for it symbolized the excellence of the king's rule, implying on the one hand that the retainers deserved what they were given because of their loyalty to him, and, on the other, showing that he himself was worthy of such loyalty. The heroic ideal had a very practical bearing on the life of the people whom the king ruled.

While the heroic ideal would win practical success for a king, it had also another, perhaps more important end—enduring fame. In cultures whose religion, unlike Christianity, offers no promise of an afterlife, a name that will live on after one's death serves as the closest substitute for immortality. From this arises the heroic paradox, still latent in our own civilization, that by dying gloriously one may achieve immortality. The poet who could sing the story of his heroic life was, of course, the agent upon whom the hero depended for his fame, and a good poet—or bard, to use the customary term for the poet of heroic life—was a valued member of a primitive court. Alexander is said to have expressed envy of Achilles because he had had a Homer to celebrate his deeds. The poetic form which primitive bards evolved for their heroic narratives is called "epic"; it is characterized by a solemn dignity of tone and elevation of style. Their poems were not written down, but recited aloud from memory, and hence most of them have been lost: in Greek there have survived Homer's two epics, the Iliad and the Odyssey, while from Germanic culture the chief survivor is the Old English Beowulf. But enough has been preserved to show the enduring popularity of heroic stories throughout the migratory phase of the two peoples, who never tired of hearing the deeds of their folk heroes. Thus the immortality that the old heroes had sought was achieved through poetry, and poetry in turn gave inspiration to later men in leading their own lives.

CHRISTIANITY AND OLD ENGLISH CULTURE

Whatever literary materials the Anglo-Saxons brought with them when they came to Britain existed only in their memories, for the making of written records was something they learned only when they were converted to Christianity. The Celtic inhabitants whose land they were seizing were Christians, as had been the Romans whose forces had occupied the island since the 1st century and whose withdrawal at the beginning of the 5th had opened the way to the Anglo-Saxons; but for 150 years after the beginning of the invasion Christianity was maintained only in the remoter regions where the Anglo-Saxons failed to penetrate. In the year 597, however, St. Augustine was sent by Pope Gregory as a missionary to King Ethelbert of Kent, one of the most southerly of the kingdoms into which England was divided, and about the same time missionaries from Ireland began to preach

Christianity in the north. Within 75 years the island was once more predominantly Christian. Ethelbert himself was one of the first Englishmen to be converted, and it is indicative of the relationship between Christianity and writing that the first written specimen of the Old English (Anglo-Saxon) language is a code of laws promulgated by the first English Christian king.

In the centuries that followed up till the Norman Conquest England produced a large number of distinguished, highly literate churchmen. One of the earliest of these was Bede, whose Ecclesiastical History of the English People, written in Latin, was completed in 731; this remains our most important source of knowledge about the Anglo-Saxon period. In the next generation Alcuin, a man of wide culture, became the friend and advisor of the Frankish Emperor Charlemagne, whom he assisted in making the Frankish court a great center of learning: thus by the year 800 English culture had developed so richly that it overflowed its insular boundaries. But the greatest impetus on English culture came from a man who was not of the clergy: Alfred, king of the West Saxons from 871 to 899, who for a time united all the kingdoms of southern England and beat off those new Germanic invaders, the Vikings. This most active king was an enthusiastic patron of literature. He himself translated various works from Latin, the most important of which was Boethius' Consolation of Philosophy, the early 6th-century Roman work whose heroic stoicism has proved continually congenial to the English temperament. Apparently under Alfred's direction Bede's History was also translated into Old English, and the Anglo-Saxon Chronicle was begun: this year-by-year record of important events in England was maintained until the middle of the 12th century. Furthermore, the preservation of many of the surviving earlier English works, including Beowulf, is due to the fact that copies of them were made in the West Saxon dialect because, in large part, of the impetus Alfred gave to literary studies. Though the political stability that Alfred achieved was not long-lived, the culture he nourished so lovingly was maintained at a high level until the very end of the Old English period.

OLD ENGLISH POETRY

The genius for heroic poetry the Anglo-Saxons brought with them when they came to Britain, as they probably also brought with them the alliterative form (see the section on "Old and Middle English Prosody") in which all the Old English poetry that has survived was composed. Since they wrote nothing down until they had become Christianized, and since in many respects Christian ideals and heroic ideals are antipathetic, it is natural that very little poetry has survived that is surely pre-Christian in composition. But much of Beowulf, the greatest of Germanic epics, is evidently pre-Christian, even though the author of the particular form of the poem that has come down to us was a Christian who refers to events of the Old (but not of the New) Testament. Several other short pieces or fragments also seem to reflect the pagan period without Christian coloring. Yet the vast bulk of Old English poetry is specifically Christian, devoted to religious subjects. Interestingly enough, however, it is almost all in the heroic mode: while the Anglo-Saxons adapted themselves readily to the ideals of Christianity, they did not do so without adapting Christianity to their own heroic ideal. In order to make the alien world of the Bible intelligible to their hearers, Old English poets (almost all of whom are nameless) infused it with many of the values that they had inherited from their own history. Thus Moses and St. Andrew, Christ and God the Father share the attributes of a Beowulf, are represented as heroes who performed famous deeds. In the Dream of the Rood, the Cross speaks of Christ as "the young hero, . . . strong and stouthearted," whose crucifixion is less a passion than an heroic action. In Cædmon's Hymn the creation of heaven and earth is seen as a mighty deed, an "establishment of wonders" not altogether unlike Hrothgar's building of the hall Heorot in Beowulf. The sad consciousness of the transience of all earthly good combined with the compulsion to go on striving—so characteristic of the heroic spirit—appears most poignantly in two Christian laments, the Wanderer and the Seafarer. That the heroic ideal held its value down to the end of the Old English period is shown by the Battle of Maldon, in which the defeat of English defenders by a band of marauding Vikings is described in the highest tradition of Germanic heroism. Against doom, there is only courage.

The world of Old English poetry is a dark one, and to a modern reader it may also seem a narrow one with narrow laws that exclude all but sardonic laughter. Men in the mead-hall are said to be cheerful, but even there they think of struggle in war, of possible triumph but more possible failure. Romantic love—one of the principal topics of later literature—appears hardly at all. Men seem seldom to relax: clothed in their armor, they are always preparing to test their courage against fate. (They are, indeed, so habitually seen as warriors that in the earlier poetry the words for "man" and "warrior" are often interchangeable.) Depressing as this world may seem, it is recreated in Old English poetry with extraordinary intensity, with high spiritual excitement. This excitement is achieved in part by the frequent use of ironic understatement. Actions and things are spoken of as less than they really are because, apparently, the speaker wishes to suggest that they are more—or perhaps other—than they are. "They cared not for battle," says the author of the Battle of Maldon about those cowardly Englishmen who fled the fight. Even the "kenning," that highly formalized compound metaphor common to Old Germanic poetry, often seems to suggest potentials ironically—"whale's road" or "swan's path" for a sea so perilous for men lacking the physical equipment of whales and swans. The dignity the Anglo-Saxons assigned to poetry—which was the repository of the ancient traditions by which they lived—apparently prevented the humor latent in ironic understatement from reaching any expression more overt than a grim smile. Yet despite its somberness, Old English poetry goes about its business of depicting harsh reality with an extraordinary subtlety and intensity.

THE NORMAN CONQUEST AND ITS EFFECTS.

In the year 1066 England was once more invaded and conquered by a Germanic people, though one whose culture was widely different from the Anglo-Saxons. The Normans—the name is actually a form of "Norsemen"—were the descendants of Scandinavian adventurers who at the beginning of the 10th century had seized a wide part of northern France. A highly adaptable nation, they had adopted the language of the land they had settled in and had set up a powerful state; while its ruler was technically a duke subject to the king of France, Normandy was actually an independent political entity. The invasion of England was led by the energetic Duke William. The English were divided and irresolute; at the decisive Battle of Hastings they were defeated by the Normans and their leader Harold was killed. Thereafter William's forces overran much of England, and the Norman duke became its king and insured the succession to his descendants. But, kings of England though they were, he and his followers were not as much interested in the country he had won (though they were constantly fighting the Welsh, the Scots, and their own barons for control of parts or the whole of it) as they were in their continental possessions. The first seven English kings were mostly absentee rulers—and their presence within the kingdom was seldom less troublesome for it than their absence from it. It was not, indeed, until the 13th century, with the reign of Henry III (1216–72) that England became the principal concern of its kings. And it was not until the very end of the Middle Ages that English monarchs finally gave up trying to make good their continental claims and became, perforce, purely English.

The immediate effect of the Norman Conquest upon English literature was to remove it from the care of the aristocracy—the spiritual if not actual descendants of the Anglo-Saxon kings and their retainers—and to deprive it of that cohesive spirit that it had previously possessed. The great aristocratic households, which were the centers of pre-Conquest cultural activity, were broken up or parceled out to the Conqueror's Norman barons, and the English aristocracy was either displaced or forced into service with the invaders. For a considerable time, even the English language seems to have fallen into disuse as a vehicle for written literature, for very little survives of English between the Conquest and the year 1200. Initially, men of education who continued to produce literary works wrote either in Latin or in Anglo-Norman, the dialect of French that was spoken by the new rulers of England. But since the practical Normans were less preoccupied with culture than the English, the literature in Anglo-Norman was not very distinguished and was not very long-enduring, hardly surviving the reign of Edward I (1272–1307). Latin, which had always been and continued to be the language of the international church, produced a fairly rich literature in England during this period—especially in the 12th century. But throughout the Middle Ages, Latin literature remained essentially conservative and remote, not much dealing with the subjects that are of importance in the development of vernacular literature. Thus for more than a century the twin snobberies—social on the part of Anglo-Norman, intellectual on the part of Latin—probably pre-empted the energies of educated men who might at an earlier or a later time have written in English.

But even if the educated were writing literature in other languages, the uneducated were undoubtedly continuing to compose—if not to write—in English. When written English literature begins to reappear at the end of the 12th century, the larger part of it carries the stamp of popular or at least semi-popular origin; indeed, considered in its bulk, Middle English literature is a popular literature. Its origin in the orders of society below the top provides its most striking contrast with Old English literature: most of the latter seems to be uttered by a single aristocratic voice, grave, decorous, responsible, speaking in terms of high communal aspirations. Middle English literature, on the other hand, is uttered by a medley of different voices, dealing with a wide range of topics in a great diversity of styles and tones and genres. Originality of thought, to be sure, is a rare feature of this literature, for no matter how diverse the voices may be, they often seem to be saying precisely the same things as each other. Yet Middle English literature has virtues not found in Old English. Because its writers addressed themselves to a popular audience, they achieved a greater immediacy, a greater recognizability; a modern reader experiences little difficulty in understanding the world they are talking about. The change is perhaps most obvious in the narrative of adventure, where the idealized hero of Old English yields place to the more sympathetic if less admirable man who not only fights and fights again, but also laughs and cries, plays games, and, above all, falls in and out of love—the non-aristocratic man was the readier to supplant the epic hero because a mature Christianity places as much value on a plain man's soul as it does on an epic hero's. In dealing with this new kind of hero the writer's imaginative perspective was broadened as much, perhaps, as his ability to see deeply was decreased. And the perspective now included women, who became, finally, recognized as half of the human race. True, they appear ordinarily as stereotypes, whether in romance and love lyric or in anti-feminist satire—that enormous body of literature that had its foundation in the monastic culture that dominated so much of European thought in the Middle Ages. But woman's place in society was, in any case, recognized in literature, and this recognition undoubtedly reflects a changing attitude in history itself. There are no arch-feminists in literature before Chaucer's Wife of Bath, but she could never have been invented, even by a Chaucer, unless she had had recognizable forebears, with independent minds and incomes, in Bath and elsewhere before Chaucer's time.

While the portrayal of life in Middle English literature is often shallow, it is nevertheless a life in which we find much that evokes our sympathy. Sometimes, when it is portrayed as lively and gay, colorful, full of surprise, its attractiveness earns our active appreciation, and even when some austere moralist reduces human experience to mere wretchedness we may experience amid the overlying gloom the sudden charm of poignancy. Lack of profound vision does not prevent an accurate presentation of the details of life from being pleasing and sometimes moving. And humor—the chief virtue of Middle English literature—is apt to flash anywhere, even in the most solemn and foreboding of moralizations.

The lack of originality in Middle English literature is partly due to the attempt by many writers, both religious and secular, to make their works reflect the unchanging principles of medieval Christian doctrine. Until almost the end of the 14th century Christian teaching was primarily concerned with the issue of personal salvation, putting more emphasis on the moral and spiritual responsibilities of the individual than it did on his ethical or social responsibilities. Medieval religious idealism characteristically looked to the world to come for the only answer to men's troubles and considered the reformation of this world neither possible nor especially desirable. So constant is the attitude that life in this world is only a waiting period before we enter something better (or worse) that the modern reader is apt to get the impression that the Middle Ages was a period of intellectual and social stasis, a period in which time was standing still. And the fact is that not only in specifically moral and doctrinal literature, whose premises are timeless, but also in ephemeral literature designed merely to provide entertainment one senses this unchangingness: a romance written at the beginning of the 13th century differs little from one written in the 15th (with which it shares its plot), and at the very end of the period Malory is still peopling with his knights a never-never land of chivalry that had its origin in 12th-century France.

It is clear enough that between 1066 and 1485 England underwent large political and social changes—in the developments in feudalism, the gradual evolution of Parliament, the growth of cities and of the middle class along with the increase in foreign trade, and in many other similar phenomena. But apparently the changes occurred too slowly to produce much intellectual awareness of them on the part of writers. The great exception—to this and to all other generalizations—is Chaucer, whose pages are informed, especially in his handling of the bourgeois, by an excited sense of the novelty of social life in his own times. Langland's Piers Plowman also possesses something of this quality—though without Chaucer's tone of approval. But in an age where most people were born in the same village where their grandparents had been born and lived virtually the same lives, doing the same work with the same tools, enjoying the same sports and the same festivals, large slow-moving change is probably bound to be imperceptible to all but the most acute observers—imperceptible and, if perceived, disapproved.

But if in a broad historical sense change was imperceptible, in the daily lives of medieval men it was all too visible. Indeed, the inevitability of change—for the worse, even in the lives of people already apparently wholly wretched—is one of the most insistently repetitive themes of Middle English literature. Nor is this theme to be thought of merely as another expression of the world-hating doctrine. Rather, the theme and the world-hating doctrine itself are both results of the violence of life in the Middle Ages, a violence not matched again in western history until our own times. Famine, war, pestilence, and death—these are the riders who passed through the streets of medieval cities and villages by night and by day. The fact that eight of the eighteen kings who ruled England between 1066 and 1485 died deaths of violence or deaths resulting from violent activity is characteristic of the times. Men hardly less august were also constantly meeting death in battles, or by murder, or by accident, or, not infrequently, on the scaffold before a fascinated populace. The chroniclers who record these events say little of the lower orders of society, but constant warfare against enemies at home and abroad, the depredations of the powerful in supplying themselves from the fruits of the toil of the poor, the fearful severity of the laws combined with the failure to enforce them against the strong, and, especially after the middle of the 14th century, recurrent pestilence compounded by famine—all these explain why change for the worse seems to have been the unchanging expectation of medieval people. And, even in the temporary absence of these events, the coldness and darkness of an English winter for people living in badly insulated dwellings with only minimal heat and light might well seem to make life a bleak perpetual twilight.

In view of the violence prevalent during most of the period, it is perhaps extraordinary that so much literature was produced. But even in the worst of times things are not always and everywhere at their worst; spring does come, and some people get through life almost untouched by disasters that seem historically to be omnipresent. And the fact is that, except in its most ruthlessly world-hating forms, Middle English literature is often permeated by a curious normality, and is, indeed, less preoccupied with its age's violence than we are with ours, probably because people then never conceived of a time when violence was not a fact of life. Despite being constantly warned to expect change for the worse, people in the Middle Ages seem, in their daily lives, to have pursued the same pleasures that we pursue today—pursued them with rather more relish because they were rarer: this is clear from the accounts both of those who approved of the pursuit and of those who did not. As the general atmosphere of violence suggests, medieval society was in some ways more primitive than our own—or more frankly primitive—and may thus seem to us more childlike. People took tremendous pleasure in color, in dress, in ritual, in parades, in spectacles, in elaborate food and drink (when they could get them), in all those aspects of life that children especially love, and most adults do not scorn. Like children, medieval people were subject to emotional extremes—they wept more quickly than we do, went more quickly from weeping to laughter and back again, were headstrong and hasty, quick to sin zestily and to repent heartily and then to sin and repent again. Yet it is a mistake to overemphasize this childishness: their life was physically more limited than ours, without our comforts, our mobility, our communications; it was even more precarious, more uncertain; but as it is reflected in the best writers, they lived their life very richly and perhaps with greater awareness and greater savor than we do ours.

MIDDLE ENGLISH LITERATURE

It has been said earlier that from the century and a half after the Conquest very little English literature has survived; and it is probable that in that period very little was written. But that literature was still being composed, if not written down, during the period is suggested by the first considerable Middle English poem to have come down to us: this is Layamon's Brut, written about 1205 in an alliterative prosody that is clearly directly descended from the Old English poetic measure, though the subtleties of the older measure have disappeared. Apparently, at least for oral purposes, alliterative poetry never ceased to be composed, as is further suggested by its reappearance later in written form in the so-called "alliterative revival" of the 14th century, which culminated in Piers Plowman and Sir Gawayn and the Green Knight. Layamon's Brut is also interesting because it contains the first treatment in English of the Arthurian legend, the story that was to catch the imagination of so many English writers of later times. Layamon's source was a Norman work by the poet Wace, which was in turn based on the Englishman Geoffrey of Monmouth's Latin History of the Kings of Britain. According to the old tradition, England had been founded by one Brutus who was a descendant of the Trojan Aeneas, the founder of Rome, and after whom Britain was named (hence the title Brut). Of Brutus' descendants the most distinguished was Arthur, who according to the legend freed Britain from the Roman yoke and successfully defended it from the Anglo-Saxon invaders. It is a double curiosity about the Arthurian legend that not only did the British (Celtic) Arthur become in later centuries the great legendary hero of Englishmen—whose ancestors he was presumably successful in beating off the island—but also that the Arthurian legend itself reached its fullest development in France, whither it may have been brought by Celts crossing the channel to Brittany—some of them perhaps fleeing from the Anglo-Saxons. In any case, after Geoffrey and Layamon, England produced no original writers on Arthur—as opposed to translators from the French—until the poet of Gawain (whom some critics suspect of translating) and Malory—also a translator, but on so grand a scale as to rank as truly original.

Both Layamon and the poet of Beowulf dealt with legendary materials which they thought of as history. Layamon's treatment, however, is different from (and far less impressive than) the epic mode of Beowulf: it moves toward the genre, so characteristic of the later Middle Ages, known as "romance." The romance has certain typical features: it generally concerns knights and involves a large amount of fighting as well as a number of miscellaneous adventures; it makes liberal use of the improbable, often of the supernatural; it is often—though not always—involved with romantic love; characterization is standardized, so that heroes, heroines, and wicked stewards could easily move from one romance to another without causing any disturbance in the narrative; the plots generally consist of a great number of events, and the same event is apt to occur several times within the same romance; and the style is apt to be easy and colloquial—not infrequently loose and repetitious.

Although it was enormously popular in medieval England—it makes up a large fraction of the total of preserved Middle English literature—Middle English romance is apt to disappoint the modern reader. Unfortunately, very few accomplished poets—the Gawain-poet and Chaucer are two of the principal exceptions—turned their hand to romance; it was apparently left largely to minstrels and other uncultivated versifiers addressing a semi-literate audience, often in dog-trot verse full of windy clichés. The great age of medieval romance had been the 12th and early 13th centuries, and its chief breeding ground had been aristocratic society in France, where such poets as Chrétien de Troyes spun their marvelously sophisticated tales. The Middle English purveyors of romance, functioning before non-aristocratic audiences in the second half of the 13th and in the 14th century, introduced the French romances into English (the majority of the surviving English romances are either proved or suspected adaptations from the French). The result of the lag in time and change in audience is artistically unfortunate, though often unintentionally amusing. Aristocratic ideals of behavior of a different era and an alien society were replaced by patterns of behavior that could be easily comprehended by bourgeois and lower-class Englishmen. Heroes who have all the accouterments of the most chivalrous of knights are apt to behave in the crudest fashion, whether they are fighting, eating, or making love: they act as a petty bourgeois might if suddenly given an opportunity to enjoy the high scale of living of chivalric aristocracy with no education in how such a life should be conducted. Nevertheless, it is often agreeable to watch the blunt Englishman who replaced the aristocratic hero react with practical common sense to the extravagant situations in which the poem has placed him. And there is one very charming exception to the rule that translation brings deterioration: Sir Orfeo, apparently based on a lost French poem recasting the classical legend of Orpheus and Eurydice, transmits much of that delicacy and magic which the reader who first approaches medieval romance expects to find in it.

By far the larger proportion of surviving Middle English literature is religious, though it is not necessarily true that an equal proportion of the literature actually composed in Middle English was religious. The church had a virtual monopoly on literacy during much of the Middle Ages, for the average person who had learned to read and write probably had done so because he had signified his intention (not always fulfilled) of becoming a cleric—that is, an ecclesiast, performing one of the many functions of the church: otherwise, he would probably not have received any but the most elementary kind of education. Furthermore, the church not only had this direct claim upon the services of the majority of literate men but also was itself a large producer of books in the physical sense (books were actually hand-written manuscripts) as well as a maintainer (especially in monasteries) of libraries. Therefore it is quite natural that religious literature should bulk large. But the literature that has been lost probably contained a very large number of secular items. Professional storytellers such as minstrels committed to memory tales that they had heard others recite or had composed themselves and did not trouble to write down—if, indeed, they could write. Their stories depended for survival on some literate hearer who thought them worth recording—and perhaps few clerics would take the trouble. And even secular literature that had been recorded might sometimes be lost because of the low esteem in which it was held by austere churchmen who would enforce St. Paul's precept that everything that is written ought to express specific Christian doctrine: when library shelves became crowded, it was probably the secular works that were removed to make room for books more beneficial to the spirit.

Unfortunately, good doctrine is not necessarily good literature, and the larger part of Middle English religious writing is literature at all only in the broadest sense of that word: sermons, homilies, saints' lives, penitential tracts, manuals for priests, mystical writings, lyric poems, moral allegories, stories of miracles—all the possible genres of religious writing are represented profusely, though not, in quality, richly. An occasional individual work distinguishes itself strikingly from the surrounding drabness—for instance, the very early Ancrene Riwle, or "Rule for Anchoresses" (female religious recluses), or a late lyric like I Sing of a Maiden. But the brilliant exceptions are few and far between: few minds were able to sustain originality amid the oppressive conventionality of doctrine and response to doctrine. And few educated people before the time of Chaucer seem to have had the temerity to venture into the secular. We are fortunate that the work of one such person, the author of the early Owl and the Nightingale, has survived, for this humorous debate between birds is the most original and Chaucer-like poem before Chaucer himself.

During the last quarter of the 14th century Middle English literature flowered suddenly and inexplicably in three great poets, writing at almost the same time and giving supreme artistic expression to almost all the characteristic genres of Middle English. The author of Sir Gawain and the Green Knight not only produced the best romance of the entire period, but also wrote some of its best religious poetry; his Biblical narrative in alliterative verse, Patience, the story of Jonah, is rivaled only by certain Old English poems. In the Pearl he combined elegy with theology to produce the most moving religious poem—and the most finely wrought poem—of the

* Paul never said that. He was taken out of context & misinterpreted.

English later Middle Ages. William Langland's achievement in Piers Plowman is important both in literature and in history, since he faced squarely the great religious and social issues of his day—and these became the great issues of the following century and a half: imitations of Piers Plowman which borrow both Piers himself and Langland's anti-ecclesiastical satire played an important part in bringing on the reformation of the church which Langland prophesied but would have deplored. Needless to say, no imitator approaches Langland in the extraordinary originality of his weaving together of all sorts of genres of religious literature, from the most menacing sermon to the most dazzling lyric. Geoffrey Chaucer's achievement was greatest of all. The new perspective which English literature after the Conquest had attained had revealed broader horizons, but they were too broad and too clouded with distractions to enable the average writer to bring everything into clear focus. It takes a powerfully disciplined mind to comprehend infinite variety in a single artistic vision. Such a mind was Chaucer's. While he was entirely rooted in the soil of the Middle Ages and tried his hand at a large number of medieval genres, his art is so fully realized as to carry him out of the Middle Ages and make him one of the two or three greatest poets in English.

This sudden florescence in the Gawain-poet, Langland, and Chaucer may have been partly due to patronage of literature by the well-to-do. Chaucer was a "court" poet who seems to have been encouraged not only by John of Gaunt but perhaps also by Gaunt's father, Edward III (died 1377), as well as by his nephew Richard II (deposed 1399), and, in the last year of the poet's life, by Gaunt's son, Henry IV. The Gawain-poet probably wrote for a provincial aristocratic court, remote from London but no less interested in literary art. Even William Langland seems to have enjoyed patronage, but from what source it is hard to be sure; it is probable that at one time or another he was sheltered by monasteries, and it is not unlikely that he ended his life in one. In any case English literature is fortunate that these three great contemporary poets all found encouragement from one source or another.

But patronage does not assure great poetry. Chaucer's friend, the poet John Gower, also enjoyed royal patronage, but he has not proved much of a threat to Chaucer's reputation. He seems a far more typically medieval writer than Chaucer: he wrote three works which, linguistically at least, summarized the English Middle Ages: one in Latin, one in Norman French, and one, Confessio Amantis ("The Lover's Confession"), in English. Were it not for its proximity to Chaucer, this last would probably be rated somewhat higher than it has been, for it is a work of considerable skill and interest. And it is certainly infinitely superior to anything produced by the English poets of the next century, some of whom enjoyed patronage but all of whom seem, after Chaucer, to represent regression into the worst vices of medieval literature. The most Chaucerian of Chaucer's followers are, indeed, Scotsmen, and the best of them, Robert Henryson and William Dunbar, who often reflect Chaucer's satirical spirit and his liveliness, belong not to the medieval period but to the Renaissance.

Yet if the 15th century in England lacks great names (Thomas Malory alone enjoys a high reputation as a literary artist), it is nevertheless a period in which popular literature flourished. Some of the best lyrics, religious and secular, date from this time; and this was also the century in which many of the ballads were composed. It was also the period of much activity in drama. The mystery plays, which had probably become established in the previous century, continued to be performed widely, and the cycles of these religious dramas that have been preserved from York, Chester, and Wakefield date from the 15th century. The same century saw the development of the morality play, culminating in Everyman. The authors of the plays, ballads, and lyrics of the century are nameless; aside from the plays, manuscripts of which were kept only by the towns in which the performances were given, these anonymous works were probably transmitted orally and only haphazardly written down. Fortunately for the future history of English literature, Malory's Morte Darthur, written during its author's long sojourn in prison, did not have to depend on the chance survival of a manuscript; it was printed in 1485 by William Caxton, who had introduced printing by movable type to England less than ten years earlier. Malory's is the last great medieval work of literature. Using mostly French sources, Malory put together a history of King Arthur and his knights which, while wholly fictional, has received much the same honor from later Englishmen that earlier Englishmen accorded Beowulf.

MEDIEVAL ENGLISH

The medieval works in this book were composed in two different states of our language: Old English, the language which took shape among the Germanic settlers of England and preserved its integrity until the Norman Conquest radically altered English civilization; and Middle English, the earliest records of which date from the early 12th century and which gave way to Modern English shortly after the introduction of printing at the end of the 15th century. Old English is a very heavily inflected language (that is, the words change form to indicate changes in usage, such as person, number, tense, case, mood, etc. Most languages have some inflection—for example, the personal pronouns in Modern English have different forms when used as objects—but a "heavily inflected" language is one in which almost all classes of words undergo elaborate patterns of change). Its vocabulary is almost entirely Germanic. In Middle English, the inflectional system was weakened; and a large number of words were introduced into it from France, so that many of the older native words disappeared. Because of the difficulty of Old English, all selections from it in this book have been given in translation. In order that the reader may see an example of the language, Cædmon's Hymn has been printed in the original, together with an interlinear translation. The present discussion, then, is concerned only with Middle English.

The chief difficulty with Middle English for the modern reader is caused not by its inflections so much as by its spelling, which may be described as a rough-and-ready phonetic system, and by the fact that it is not a single standardized language, but consists of a number of regional dialects each with its own peculiarities of sound and its own systems for representing sounds in writing. The Midland dialect—the dialect of London and of Chaucer, and the ancestor of our own standard speech—differs greatly from the dialect spoken in the west of England (the original dialect of Piers Plowman), and from that of the northwest (Sir Gawain and the Green Knight), and from that of the north (The Second Shepherds' Play), and these dialects differ from one another. In this book, the long texts composed in the more difficult dialects have been translated or modernized; and those which, like Chaucer, Everyman, the lyrics, and the ballads, appear in the original, have been respelled in a way that it is hoped will aid the reader. The remarks which follow apply chiefly to Chaucer's Midland English, though certain non-Midland dialectal variations are noted if they occur in some of the other selections.

I. THE SOUNDS OF MIDDLE ENGLISH: GENERAL RULES

The following general analysis of the sounds of Middle English will enable the reader who has not time for detailed study to read Middle English aloud so as to preserve some of its most essential characteristics, without, however, giving heed to many important details. Section II, Detailed Analysis, is designed for the reader who wishes to go more deeply into the pronunciation of Middle English.

Middle English differs from Modern English in three principal respects:

1. the pronunciation of the long vowels a, e, i (or y), o, and u (spelled ou, ow);
2. the fact that Middle English final e is often sounded;
3. the fact that all Middle English consonants are sounded.

1. Long Vowels

Middle English vowels are long when they are doubled (aa, ee, oo) or when they are terminal (he, to, holy); a, e, and o are long when followed by a single consonant plus a vowel (name, mete, note). Middle English vowels are short when they are followed by two consonants.

Long a is sounded like the a in Modern English "father": maken, maad.

Long e may be sounded like the a in Modern English "name" (ignoring the distinction between the close and open vowel): be, sweete.

Long i (or y) is sounded like the i in Modern English "machine": lif, whit; myn, holy.

Long o may be sounded like the o in Modern English "note" (again ignoring the distinction between the close and open vowel): do, soone.

Long u (spelled ou, ow) is sounded like the oo in Modern English "goose": hous, flowr.

Note that in general Middle English long vowels are pronounced like long vowels in modern languages other than English. Short vowels and diphthongs, however, may be pronounced as in Modern English.

2. Final e

In Middle English syllabic verse, final e is sounded like the a in "sofa" to provide a needed unstressed syllable: Another Nonnē with hire haddē she. But (cf. hire in the example) final e is suppressed when not needed for the meter. It is commonly silent before words beginning with a vowel or h.

3. Consonants

Middle English consonants are pronounced separately in all combinations—gnat: g-nat; knave: k-nave; write: w-rite; folk: fol-k. In a simplified system of pronunciation the combination gh as in night or thought may be treated as if it were silent.

II. THE SOUNDS OF MIDDLE ENGLISH: DETAILED ANALYSIS

1. Simple Vowels

Sound	Pronunciation	Example
long a (spelled a , aa)	a in "father"	maken, maad short a	o in "hot"	cappe long e close (spelled e , ee)	a in "name"	be, sweete long e open (spelled e , ee)	e in "there"	mete, heeth short e	e in "set"	setten
final e	a in "sofa"	large
long i (spelled i , y)	i in "machine"	lif, myn short i	i in "wit"	wit long o close (spelled o , oo)	o in "note"	do, soone long o open (spelled o , oo)	oa in "broad"	go, goon short o	o in "oft"	pot long u when spelled ou , ow	oo in "goose"	hous, flowr long u when spelled u	u in "pure"	vertu
short u (spelled u , o)	u in "full"	ful, love

Doubled vowels and terminal vowels are always long, while single vowels before two consonants other than th, ch are always short. The vowels a, e, and o are long before a single consonant followed by a vowel: nāmē, sēkē (sick), hōly. In general, words that have descended into Modern English reflect their original Middle English quantity: liven (to live), but lif (life).

The close and open sounds of long e and long o may often be identified by the Modern English spellings of the words in which they appear. Original long close e is generally represented in Modern English by ee: "sweet," "knee," "teeth," "see" have close e in Middle English, but so does "be"; original long open e is generally represented in Modern English by ea: "meat," "heath," "sea," "great," "breath" have open e in Middle English. Similarly, original long close o is now generally represented by oo: "soon," "food," "good," but also "do," "to"; original long open o is represented either by oa or by o: "coat," "boat," "moan," but also "go," "bone," "foe," "home." Notice that original close o is now almost always pronounced like the oo in "goose," but that original open o is almost never so pronounced; thus it is often possible to identify the Middle English vowels through Modern English sounds.

The nonphonetic Middle English spelling of o for short u has been preserved in a number of Modern English words ("love," "son," "come"), but in others u has been restored: "sun" (sonne), "run" (ronne).

For the treatment of final e, see above, General Rules, section 2.

2. Diphthongs

Sound	Pronunciation	Example
ai , ay , ei , ay	between ai in "aisle" and ay in "day"	saide, day, veine, preye
au , aw	ou in "out"	chaunge, bawdy
eu , ew	ew in "few"	newe

oi, oy ou, ow oy in "joy"

ou in "thought"

joye, point thought, lowe

Note that in words with ou, ow which in Modern English are sounded with the ou of "about," the combination indicates not the diphthong but the simple vowel long u (see above, Simple Vowels).

3. Consonants

In general, all consonants except h were always sounded in Middle English, including consonants that have become silent in Modern English, such as the g in gnaw, the k in knight, the l in folk, and the w in write. In noninitial gn, however, the g was silent as in Modern English "sign." Initial h was silent in short common English words and in words borrowed from French, and may have been almost silent in all words. The combination gh as in night or thought was sounded like the ch of German ich or nach. Note that Middle English gg represents both the hard sound of "dagger" and the soft sound of "bridge."

III. PARTS OF SPEECH AND GRAMMAR

1. Nouns

The plural and possessive of nouns end in es, formed by adding s or es to the singular: knight, knichtes; roote, rootes; a final consonant is frequently doubled before es: bed, beddes. A common irregular plural is yēn, from yē, eye.

2. Pronouns

The chief differences from Modern English are as follows:

Modern English	Middle English
I	I , ich (ik is a northern form)
you (singular)	thou (subjective); thee (objective)
her	hir(e) , her(e) its	his
you (plural)	ye (subjective); you (objective)
their	hir
them	hem

In formal speech, the second person plural is often used for the singular. The possessive adjectives my, thy take n before a word beginning with a vowel or h: thyn yē, myn host.

3. Adjectives

Adjectives ending in a consonant add final e when they stand before the noun they modify and after another modifying word such as the, this, that, or nouns or pronouns in the possessive: a good hors, but the (this, my, the kinges) goode hors. They also generally add e when standing before and modifying a plural noun, a noun in the vocative, or any proper noun: goode men, oh goode man, faire Venus.

Adjectives are compared by adding er(e) for the comparative, est(e) for the superlative. Sometimes the stem vowel is shortened or altered in the process: sweete, swettere, swetest; long, lenger, lengest.

4. Adverbs

Adverbs are formed from adjectives by adding e, ly, or liche; the adjective fair thus yields faire, fairly, fairliche.

5. Verbs

Middle English verbs, like Modern English verbs, are either "weak" or "strong." Weak verbs form their preterites and past participles with a t or d suffix and preserve the same stem vowel throughout their systems, though it is sometimes shortened in the preterite and past participle: love, loved; bend, bent; hear, heard; meet, met. Strong verbs do not use the t or d suffix, but vary their stem vowel in the preterite and past participle: take, took, taken; begin, began, begun; find, found, found.

The inflectional endings are the same for Middle English strong verbs and weak verbs except in the preterite singular and the imperative singular. In the following paradigms, the weak verbs loven (to love) and heeren (to hear), and the strong verbs taken (to take) and ginnen (to begin) serve as models.

	Present Indicative	Preterite Indicative
I	love , heere take , ginne	loved(e) , herde took , gan thou	lovest , heerest takest , ginnest	lovedest , herdest tooke , gonne
he, she, it	loveth , heereth taketh , ginneth	loved(e) , herde took , gan
we, ye, they	love(n) (th), heere(n) (th) take(n) (th), ginne(n) (th)	loved(e) (en), herde(n) tooke(n) , gonne(n)

The present plural ending eth is southern, while the e(n) ending is Midland and characteristic of Chaucer. In the north, s may appear as the ending of all persons of the present. In the weak preterite, when the ending e gave a verb three or more syllables, it was frequently dropped. Note that in certain strong verbs like ginnen there are two distinct stem vowels in the preterite: even in Chaucer's time, however, one of these had begun to replace the other, and Chaucer occasionally writes gan for all persons of the preterite.

	Present Subjunctive	Preterite Subjunctive
Singular	love , heere take , ginne	lovede , herde tooke , gonne
Plural	love(n) , heere(n) take(n) , ginne(n)	lovede(n) , herde(n) tooke(n) , gonne(n)

In verbs like ginnen, which have two stem vowels in the indicative preterite, it is the vowel of the plural and of the second person singular that is used for the preterite subjunctive.

The imperative singular of most weak verbs is e: (thou) love, but of some weak verbs and all strong verbs, the imperative singular is without termination: (thou) heer, taak, gin. The imperative plural of all verbs is either e or eth: (ye) love(th), heere(th), take(th), ginne(th).

The infinitive of verbs is e or en: love(n), heere(n), take(n), ginne(n).

The past participle of weak verbs is the same as the preterite without inflectional ending: loved, herd. In strong verbs the ending is either e or en: take(n), gonne(n). The prefix y often appears on past participles: yloved, yherd, ytake(n).

OLD AND MIDDLE ENGLISH PROSODY

All the poetry of Old English is in the same verse form. The verse unit is the single line, since rhyme was not used to link one line to another, except very occasionally in late Old English. The organizing device of the line is alliteration, the beginning of several words with the same sound ("Foemen fled"). The Old English alliterative line contains four principal stresses, and is divided into two half-lines of two stresses each by a strong medial caesura, or pause. These two half-lines are linked to each other by the alliteration: at least one of the two stressed words in the first half-line, and often both of them, begin with the same sound as the first stressed word of the second half-line (the second stressed word is generally non-alliterative). The fourth line of Beowulf is an example:

Oft Scyld Scefing sceaþena þreatum.

For further examples, see Cædmon's Hymn, printed below. It will be noticed that any vowel alliterates with any other vowel. In addition to the alliteration, the length of the unstressed syllables and their number and pattern is governed by a highly complex set of rules. When sung or intoned—as it was—to the rhythmic strumming of a harp, Old English poetry must have been wonderfully impressive in the dignified, highly formalized way which aptly fits both its subject matter and tone.

The majority of Middle English verse is either in alternately stressed rhyming verse, adapted from French after the Conquest, or in alliterative verse that is descended from Old English. The latter preserves the caesura of Old English and in its purest form the same alliterative system, the two stressed words of the first half-line (or at least one of them) alliterating with the first stressed word in the second half-line. But most of the alliterative poets allowed themselves a number of deviations from the norm. All four stressed words may alliterate, as in the first line of Piers Plowman:

In a summer season when soft was the sun.

Or the line may contain five, six, or even more stressed words, of which all or only the basic minimum may alliterate:

A fair field full of folk found I therebetween.

There is no rule determining the number of unstressed syllables, and at times some poets are apt to ignore alliteration entirely. As in Old English, any vowel may alliterate with any other vowel; furthermore, since initial h was silent or lightly pronounced in Middle English, words beginning with h are treated as though they began with the following vowel.

There are two general types of stressed verse with rhyme. In the more common, stressed and unstressed syllables alternate regularly: x X x X x X; or, with two unstressed syllables intervening: x x X x x X x x X; or a combination of the two: x x X x X x x X (of the reverse patterns, only X x X x X x is common in English). There is also a line which can only be defined as containing a predetermined number of stressed syllables but an irregular number and pattern of unstressed syllables. Much Middle English verse has to be read without expectation of regularity: some of this was evidently composed in the irregular meter, but some was probably originally composed according to a strict metrical system which has been obliterated by scribes careless of fine points. One receives the impression that many of the lyrics—as well as the Second Shepherd's Play—were at least composed with regular syllabic alternation. In the ballads, on the other hand, and in the play Everyman, only the number of stresses is predetermined (and perhaps not even this in Everyman), but not the number or placement of unstressed syllables.

In pre-Chaucerian verse the number of stresses, whether regularly or irregularly alternated, was most often four, though sometimes the number was three, and rose in some poems to seven. Rhyme in Middle English as in Modern English may be either between adjacent or alternate lines, or may occur in more complex patterns. The Canterbury Tales are in rhymed couplets, the line containing five stresses with regular alternation—technically known as iambic pentameter, the standard English poetic line, perhaps introduced into English by Chaucer. In reading Chaucer and much pre-Chaucerian verse one must remember that the final e, which is silent in Modern English, was pronounced at any time in order to provide a needed unstressed syllable. Evidence seems to indicate that it was also pronounced at the end of the line, even though it thus produced a line with eleven syllables. Although he was a very regular metricist, Chaucer used various conventional devices which are apt to make the reader stumble until he understands them. Final e is often not pronounced before a word beginning with a vowel or h, and may be suppressed whenever metrically convenient. The same medial and terminal syllables that are slurred in Modern English are apt to be suppressed in Chaucer's English: Canter-b'ry for Canterbury; ev'r (perhaps e'er) for ever. The plural in es may either be syllabic or reduced to s as in Modern English. Despite these seeming irregularities, Chaucer's verse is not difficult to read if one constantly bears in mind the basic pattern of the iambic pentameter line.

Old English Poetry

CÆDMON'S HYMN

Cædmon's Hymn is one of the oldest of preserved English poems, having been written between 658 and 680. Bede, the great cleric of Old English times, tells the story of its composition in his Ecclesiastical History of the English People (completed in 731). Cædmon, a Northumbrian layman, had all his life felt himself incompetent in the art of verse, and when, according to the custom that was used at feasts, the harp was passed around the table so that each guest might entertain the others with a song, Cædmon always found a pretext to take himself from the table before the harp reached him. One night when he had thus avoided singing, he fell asleep in the stable where he had gone to tend the animals. He dreamed that someone came to him and said, "Cædmon, sing me something," and when Cædmon excused himself, the other insisted that he sing, directing him to celebrate the beginning of created things. Cædmon at once sang the Hymn. On waking, he remembered his verses; and thereafter, Bede tells us, he was able to express any given sacred topic in excellent poetry after only a few hours of work. He became a monk and devoted his life to the composition of Christian verse, but none of the religious poetry in Old English that has been preserved may surely be ascribed to him except his first short work.

The poem is given here in a West Saxon form with a literal interlinear translation. In Old English spelling, æ (as in Cædmon's name and line 3) is a vowel symbol that has not survived; it represented both a short a sound and a long open e sound. þ (line 2) and ð both represented the sound th. The large space in the middle of the line indicates the caesura.

Cædmon's Hymn

Nu sculon herigea
Now we must praise

Meotodes meahte the Creator's might

weorc Wuldor-Fæder
the work of the Glory-Father, heofonrices Weard heaven-kingdom's Guardian, and his modgepanc

and his mind-plans,

swa he wundra gehwæs
when he of wonders of every one,

ece Drihten
eternal Lord.

or onstealde
the beginning established.¹

He ærest sceop
He first created

ielda² bearnum for men's sons

heofon to hrofe heaven as a roof, halig Scyppend holy Creator;

ða middangeard
then middle-earth

moncynnes Weard mankind's Guardian.

ece Drihten
eternal Lord,

æfter teode afterwards made—

frum foldan for men earth,

Frea aelmihtig
Master almighty.

1. I.e., "established the beginning of every one of wonders." eorþan, "earth," for ælda (West Saxon ielda), "men's."

2. The later manuscript copies read

THE DREAM OF THE ROOD

The Dream of the Rood (i.e., of the Cross) is the finest of a rather large number of religious poems in Old English. Neither its author nor its date of composition is known. It appears in a late 10th-century manuscript located in Vercelli in northern Italy, a manuscript made up of Old English religious poems and sermons. The poet Cynewulf, about whom nothing is surely known except that he wrote four Old English homiletic poems (two of them found in the Vercelli manuscript), has sometimes been credited with the Dream, but on no very convincing evidence. The poem may antedate its manuscript by almost three centuries, for some passages from the Rood's speech were carved, with some variations, in runes on a stone cross early in the 8th century: this is the famous Ruthwell Cross, which is preserved near Dumfries in southern Scotland. The precise relation of the poem to this cross is, however, uncertain.

The homiletic tone of the Dreamer's meditation may seem anticlimactic after the intensity, so terse and exciting, of the Rood's address to him, but the former is nevertheless an admirable frame for the latter. The experience of the Cross—its humiliation at the hands of those who changed it from tree to instrument of punishment for criminals, its humility when the young hero Christ mounts upon it, and its pride as the restored "tree of glory"—has a suggestive relevance to the condition of the sad, lonely, sin-stained Dreamer. In the Cross's experience, hope has replaced torment; when, at the end of the poem, the Dreamer describes Christ's triumphant progress from hell to heaven, the verse recaptures some of the excitement of the Cross's address, reflecting the Dreamer's response to the hope that has been brought him.

The Dream of the Rood¹

Listen, I will speak of the best of dreams, of what I dreamed at midnight when men and their voices were at rest. It seemed to me that I saw a most rare tree reach high aloft, wound in light, brightest of beams. All that beacon² was covered with gold; gems stood fair where it met the ground, five were above about the crosspiece. Many hosts of angels gazed on it, fair in the form created for them. This was surely no felon's gallows, but holy spirits beheld it there, men upon earth, and all this glorious creation. Wonderful was the triumph-tree, and I stained with sins, wounded with wrongdoings. I saw the tree of glory shine splendidly, adorned with garments, decked with gold: jewels had worthily covered the Lord's tree. Yet through that gold I might perceive ancient agony of wretches, for now it began to bleed on the right side.³ I was all afflicted with sorrows, I was afraid for that fair sight. I saw that bright beacon change in clothing and color: now it was wet with moisture, drenched with flowing of blood, now adorned with treasure. Yet I, lying there a long while troubled, beheld the Saviour's tree until I heard it give voice: the best of trees began to speak words.

"It was long ago—I remember it still—that I was hewn down at the wood's edge, taken from my stump. Strong foes seized me there, hewed me to the shape they wished to see, commanded me to lift their criminals. Men carried me on their shoulders, then set me on a hill; foes enough fastened me there. Then I saw the Lord of mankind hasten with stout heart, for he would climb upon me. I dared not bow or break against God's word when I saw earth's surface tremble. I might have felled all foes, but I stood fast. Then the young Hero stripped himself—that was God Almighty—strong and stouthearted. He climbed on the high gallows, bold in the sight of many, when he would free mankind. I trembled when the Warrior embraced me, yet I dared not bow to earth, fall to the ground's surface; but I must stand fast. I was raised up, a cross; I lifted up the Mighty King, Lord of the Heavens: I dared not bend. They pierced me with dark nails: the wounds are seen on me, open gashes of hatred. Nor did I dare harm any of them. They mocked us both together. I was all wet with blood, drenched from the side of that Man after he had sent forth his spirit. I had endured many bitter happenings on that hill. I saw the God of Hosts cruelly racked. The shades of night had covered the Ruler's body with their mists, the

1. This new prose translation, by the present editor, has been based in general on the edition of the poem by John C. Pope, Seven Old English Poems (1966).

2. The Old English word beacen means also "token" or "sign" and "battle standard."

3. The wound Christ received on the Cross was supposed to have been on the right side.

bright splendor. Shadow came forth, dark beneath the clouds. All creation wept, bewailed the King's fall; Christ was on Cross.

"Yet from afar some came hastening to the Lord.⁴ All that I beheld. I was sore afflicted with griefs, yet I bowed to the men's hands, meekly, eagerly. Then they took Almighty God, lifted him up from his heavy torment. The warriors left me standing, covered with blood. I was all wounded with arrows. They laid him down weary of limb, stood at the body's head, looked there upon Heaven's Lord; and he rested there a while, tired after the great struggle. Then warriors began to build him an earth-house in the sight of his slayer,⁵ carved it out of bright stone; they set there the Wielder of Triumphs. Then they began to sing him a song of sorrow, desolate in the evening. Then they wished to turn back, weary, from the great Prince; he remained with small company.⁶ Yet we⁷ stood in our places a good while, weeping. The voice of the warriors departed. The body grew cold, fair house of the spirit. Then some began to fell us to earth—that was a fearful fate! Some buried us in a deep pit. Yet thanes⁸ of the Lord, friends, learned of me there. . . . decked me in gold and silver.⁹

"Now you might understand, my beloved man, that I had endured the work of evildoers, grievous sorrows. Now the time has come that men far and wide upon earth honor me—and all this glorious creation—and pray to this beacon. On me God's Son suffered a while; therefore I tower now glorious under the heavens, and I may heal every one of those who hold me in awe. Of old I became the hardest of torments, most loathed of men, before I opened the right road of life to those who have voices. Behold, the Lord of Glory honored me over all the trees of the wood, the Ruler of Heaven, just as also he honored his mother Mary, Almighty God for all men's sake, over all woman's kind.

"Now I command you, my beloved man, that you tell men of this vision. Disclose with your words that it is of the tree of glory on which Almighty God suffered for mankind's many sins and the deeds Adam did of old. He tasted death there; yet the Lord arose again to help mankind in his great might. Then he climbed to the heavens. He will come again hither on this earth to seek mankind on Doomsday, the Lord himself, Almighty God, and his angels with him, for then he will judge, he who has power to judge, each one just as in this brief life he has deserved. Nor may any one be unafraid of the word the Ruler will speak. Before his host he will ask

4. According to John xix. 38–39, it was Joseph of Arimathea and Nicodemus who received Christ's body from the Cross.

5. I.e., the Cross.

6. I.e., alone (an understatement).

7. I.e., Christ's Cross and those on which the two thieves were crucified.

8. Members of the king's body of warriors.

9. A number of lines describing the finding of the Cross have apparently been lost here.

where the man is who in the name of the Lord would taste bitter death as he did on the Cross. But then they will be afraid, and will think of little to begin to say to Christ. There need none be afraid who bears on his breast the best of tokens, but through the Cross shall the kingdom be sought by each soul on this earthly journey that thinks to dwell with the Lord."

Then I prayed to the tree, blithe-hearted, confident, there where I was alone with small company. My heart's thoughts were urged on the way hence. I endured many times of longing. Now is there hope of life for me, that I am permitted to seek the tree of triumph, more often than other men honor it well, alone. For it my heart's desire is great, and my hope of protection is directed to the Cross. I do not possess many powerful friends on earth, but they have gone hence from the delights of the world, sought for themselves the King of Glory. They live now in the heavens with the High Father, dwell in glory. And every day I look forward to when the Lord's Cross that I beheld here on earth will fetch me from this short life and bring me then where joy is great, delight in the heavens, where the Lord's folk are seated at the feast, where bliss is eternal. And then may it place me where thenceforth I may dwell in glory, fully enjoy bliss with the saints. May the Lord be my friend, who once here on earth suffered on the gallows-tree for man's sins: he freed us and granted us life, a heavenly home. Hope was renewed, with joys and with bliss, to those who endured fire.¹ The Son was victorious in that foray, mighty and successful. Then he came with his multitude, a host of spirits, into God's kingdom, the Almighty Ruler; and the angels and all the saints who dwelt then in glory rejoiced when their Ruler, Almighty God, came where his home was.

1. This and the following sentences refer to the Harrowing (i.e., pillaging) of Hell: after His death upon the Cross, Christ descended into hell, from which He released the souls of certain of the patriarchs and prophets, conducting them triumphantly to heaven.

in the apocrypha only!

BEOWULF

Beowulf, the oldest of the great long poems written in English, was probably composed more than twelve hundred years ago, in the first half of the eighth century. Its author may have been a native of what was then West Mercia; the West Midlands of England today, though the late tenth-century manuscript, which alone preserves the poem, originated in the south in the kingdom of the West Saxons. In 1731, before any modern transcription of the text had been made, the manuscript was seriously damaged in the fire that destroyed the building in London which housed the extraordinary collection of medieval English manuscripts made by Sir Robert Bruce Cotton (1571-1631). As a result of the fire and of subsequent deterioration of the manuscript, a number of lines and words have been lost from the poem, but even if the manuscript had not been damaged, the poem would still have been difficult, because the poetic Old English (or Anglo-Saxon) in which it was written is itself hard, the style is allusive, the ideas often seem remote and strange to modern perceptions, and because the text was inevitably corrupted during the many transcriptions which must have intervened in the two and a half centuries between the poem's composition and the copying of the extant manuscript. Yet despite its difficulty, the somber grandeur of Beowulf is still capable of stirring the hearts of readers, and because of its excellence as well as its antiquity, the poem merits the high position that it is generally assigned in the study of English poetry.

While the poem itself is English in language and origin, it deals not with native Englishmen, but with their Germanic forebears, especially with two south Scandinavian tribes, the Danes and the Geats, who lived on the Danish island of Zealand and in southern Sweden, respectively. Thus, the historical period it concerns—insofar as it may be said to refer to history at all—is some two centuries before the poem was written; that is, it concerns a time following the initial invasion of England by Germanic tribes in 449, but before the Anglo-Saxon migration was completed, and perhaps before the arrival of the ancestors of the audience to whom the poem was sung: this audience may have considered itself to be of the same Geatish stock as the hero, Beowulf. The one datable fact of history mentioned in the poem is a raid on the Franks made by Hygelac, the king of the Geats at the time Beowulf was a young man, and this raid occurred in the year 520. Yet despite their antiquity, the poet's materials must have been very much alive to his audience, for the elliptical way in which he alludes to events not directly concerned with his plot demands of the listener a wide knowledge of traditional Germanic history. This knowledge was probably kept alive by other heroic poetry, of which little has been preserved in English, though much must once have existed. As it stands, Beowulf is not only unique as an example of the Old English epic, but is also the greatest of the surviving epics composed by the Germanic peoples.

It is generally agreed that the poet who put the old materials into their present form was a Christian, and that his poem reflects a Christian tradition: the conversion of the Germanic settlers in England had largely been completed during the century preceding the one in which the poet wrote. But there is little general agreement as to how clearly Beowulf reflects a Christian tradition or, conversely, the actual nature of the Christian tradition that it is held to reflect. Many specifically Christian references occur, especially to the Old Testament: God is said to be the Creator of all things and His will seems recognized (sporadically if not systematically) as being identical with Fate (wyrd); Grendel is described as a descendant of Cain, and the sword that Beowulf finds in Grendel's mother's lair has engraved on it the story of the race of giants and their destruction by flood; the dead await God's judgment, and Hell and the Devil are ready to receive the souls of Grendel and his mother, while believers will find the Father's embrace; Hrothgar's speech of advice to Beowulf (section XXV) seems to reflect patristic doctrine in its emphasis on conscience and the Devil's lying in wait for the unwary. Yet there is no reference to the New Testament—to Christ and His Sacrifice which are the real bases of Christianity in any intelligible sense of the term. Furthermore, readers may well feel that the poem achieves rather little of its emotional power through invocation of Christian values or of values that are consonant with Christian doctrine as we know it. Perhaps the sense of tragic waste which pervades the Finnsburg episode (section XVI) springs from a Christian perception of the insane futility of the primitive Germanic thirst for vengeance; and the facts that Beowulf's chief adversaries are not men but monsters and that before his death he is able to boast that as king of the Geats he did not seek wars with neighboring tribes may reflect a Christian's appreciation for peace among men. But while admitting such values, the poet also invokes many others of a very different order, values that seem to belong to an ancient, pagan, warrior society of the kind described by the Roman historian Tacitus at the end of the first century. It should be noted that even Hrothgar's speech about conscience is directed more toward making Beowulf a good Germanic leader of men than a good Christian. One must, indeed, draw the conclusion from the poem itself that while Christian is a correct term for the religion of the poet and of his audience, it was a Christianity that had not yet by any means succeeded in obliterating an older pagan tradition, which still called forth powerful responses from men's hearts, despite the fact that many aspects of this tradition must be abhorrent to a sophisticated Christian. In this connection it is well to recall that the missionaries from Rome who initiated the conversion of the English proceeded in a conciliatory manner, not so much uprooting paganism in order to plant Christianity as planting Christianity in the faith that it would ultimately choke out the weeds of paganism. And the English clung long to some of their ancient traditions: for instance, the legal principle of the payment of wergild (defined below) remained in force until the Norman Conquest, four centuries after the conversion of the English.

In the warrior society whose values the poem constantly invokes, the most important of human relationships was that which existed between the warrior—the thane—and his lord, a relationship based less on subordination of one man's will to another's than on mutual trust and respect. When a warrior vowed loyalty to his lord, he became not so much his servant as his voluntary companion, one who would take pride in defending him and fighting in his wars. In return, the lord was expected to take affectionate care of his thanes and to reward them richly for their valor: a good king, one like Hrothgar or Beowulf, is referred to by such poetic epithets as "protector of warriors" and "dispenser of treasure" or "ring-giver," and the failure of bad kings is ascribed to their ill-temper and avarice, both of which alienate them from their retainers. The material benefit of this arrangement between lord and thane is obvious, yet under a good king the relationship seems to have had a significance more spiritual than material. Thus the treasure that an ideal Germanic king seizes from his enemies and rewards his retainers with is regarded as something more than mere wealth that will serve the well-being of its possessor; rather, it is a kind of visible proof that all parties are realizing themselves to the full in a spiritual sense—that the men of this band are congenially and successfully united with one another. The symbolic importance of treasure is illustrated by the poet's remark that the gift Beowulf gave the Danish coast-guard brought the latter honor among his companions, and even more by the fact that although Beowulf dies while obtaining a great treasure for his people, such objects as are removed from the dragon's hoard are actually buried with him as a fitting sign of his ultimate achievement.

The relationship between kinsmen was also of deep significance to this society and provides another emotional value for Old English heroic poetry. If one of his kinsmen had been slain, a man had the special duty of either killing the slayer or exacting from him the payment of wergild ("man-price"): each rank of society was evaluated at a definite price, which had to be paid to the dead man's kinsmen by the killer who wished to avoid their vengeance—even if the killing had been accidental. Again, the money itself had less significance as wealth than as a proof that the kinsmen had done what was right. Relatives who failed either to exact wergild or to take vengeance could never be happy, having found no practical way of satisfying their grief for their kinsmen's death. "It is better for a man to avenge his friend than much mourn," Beowulf says to the old Hrothgar, who is bewailing Aeschere's killing by Grendel's mother. And one of the most poignant passages in the poem describes the sorrow of King Hrethel after one of his sons had accidentally killed another: by the code of kinship Hrethel was forbidden to kill or to exact compensation from a kinsman, yet by the same code he was required to do one or the other in order to avenge the dead. Caught in this curious dilemma, Hrethel became so disconsolate that he could no longer face life.

It is evident that the need to take vengeance would create never-ending feuds, which the practice of marrying royal princesses to the kings or princes of hostile tribes did little to mitigate, though the purpose of such marriages was to replace hostility by alliance. Hrothgar wishes to make peace with the Heatho-Bards by marrying his daughter to their king, Ingeld, whose father was killed by the Danes; but as Beowulf predicts, sooner or later the Heatho-Bards' desire for vengeance on the Danes will erupt, and there will be more bloodshed. And the Danish princess Hildeburh, married to Finn of the Jutes, will see her son and her brother both killed while fighting on opposite sides in a battle at her own home, and ultimately will see her husband killed by the Danes in revenge for her brother's death. Beowulf himself is, for a Germanic hero, curiously free of involvement in feuds of this sort, though he does boast that he avenged the death of his king, Heardred, on his slayer Onela. Yet the potentiality—or inevitability—of sudden attack, sudden change, swift death is omnipresent in Beowulf: men seem to be caught in a vast web of reprisals and counterreprisals from which there is little hope of escape. This is the aspect of the poem which is apt to make the most powerful impression on the reader—its strong sense of doom.

Beowulf himself is chiefly concerned not with tribal feuds but with fatal evil both less and more complex. Grendel and the dragon are threats to the security of the lands they infest just as human enemies would be, but they are not part of the social order and presumably have no one to avenge their deaths (that Grendel's mother appeared as an avenger seems to have been a surprise both to Beowulf and to the Danes). On the other hand, because they are outside the normal order of things, they require of their conqueror something greater than normal warfare requires. In each case, it is the clear duty of the king and his companions to put down the evil. But the Danish Hrothgar is old and his companions unenterprising, and excellent though Hrothgar has been in the kingship, he nevertheless lacks the quality that later impels the old Beowulf to fight the dragon that threatens his people. The poem makes no criticism of Hrothgar for this lack; he merely seems not to be the kind of man—one might almost say he was not fated—to develop his human potential to the fullest extent that Fate would permit: that is Beowulf's role. In undertaking to slay Grendel, and later Grendel's mother, Beowulf is testing his relationship with unknowable destiny. At any time, as he is fully aware, his luck may abandon him and he may be killed, as, indeed, he is in the otherwise successful encounter with the dragon. But whether he lives or dies, he will have done all that any man could do to develop his character heroically. It is this consciousness of testing Fate that probably explains the boasting that modern readers of heroic poetry often find offensive. When he boasts, Beowulf is not only demonstrating that he has chosen the heroic way of life, but is also choosing it, for when he invokes his former courage as pledge of his future courage, his boast becomes a vow; the hero has put himself in a position from which he cannot withdraw.

Courage is the instrument by which the hero realizes himself. "Fate often saves an undoomed man when his courage is good," says Beowulf in his account of his swimming match: that is, if Fate has not entirely doomed a man in advance, courage is the quality that can perhaps influence Fate against its natural tendency to doom him now. It is this complex statement (in which it is hard to read the will of God for Fate) that Beowulf's life explores: he will use his great strength in the most courageous way by going alone, even unarmed, against monsters. Doom, of course, ultimately claims him, but not until he has fulfilled to its limits the pagan ideal of a heroic life. And despite the desire he often shows to Christianize pagan virtues, the Christian poet remains true to the older tradition when, at the end of his poem, he leaves us with the impression that Beowulf's chief reward is pagan immortality: the memory in the minds of later men of a hero's heroic actions. The poem itself is, indeed, a noble expression of that immortality.

TRIBES AND GENEALOGIES

I. The Danes (Bright-, Half-, Ring-, Spear-, North-, East-, South-, West-Danes; Scyldings, Honor-, Victor-, War-Scyldings; Ing's friends).

II. The Geats (Sea-, War-, Weather-Geats)

† The daughter of Hygelac who was given to Eofor may have been born to him by a former wife, older than Hygd.

III. The Swedes.

IV. Miscellaneous.

A. The Half-Danes (also called Scyldings) involved in the fight at Finnsburg may represent a different tribe from the Danes of paragraph I, above. Their king Hoc had a son, Hnaef, who succeeded him, and a daughter Hildeburh, who married Finn, king of the Jutes.

B. The Jutes or Frisians are represented as enemies of the Danes in the fight at Finnsburg and as allies of the Franks or Hugas at the time Hygelac the Geat made the attack in which he lost his life and from which Beowulf swam home. Also allied with the Franks at this time were the Hetware.

C. The Heatho-Bards (i.e., "Battle-Bards") are represented as inveterate enemies of the Danes. Their king Froda had been killed in an attack on the Danes, and Hrothgar's attempt to make peace with them by marrying his daughter Freawaru to Froda's son Ingeld failed when the latter attacked Heorot. The attack was repulsed, though Heorot was burned.

Beowulf¹*[Prologue: The Earlier History of the Danes]*

Yes, we have heard of the glory of the Spear-Danes' kings in the old days—how the princes of that people did brave deeds.

Often Scyld Scefing² took mead-benches away from enemy bands, from many tribes, terrified their nobles—after the time that he was first found helpless.³ He lived to find comfort for that, became great under the skies, prospered in honors until every one of those who lived about him, across the whale-road, had to obey him, pay him tribute. That was a good king.

Afterwards a son was born to him, a young boy in his house, whom God sent to comfort the people: He had seen the sore need they had suffered during the long time they lacked a king. Therefore the Lord of Life, the Ruler of Heaven, gave him honor in the world: Beow⁴ was famous, the glory of the son of

1. The translation into modern English, by the editor (1966), is based on F. Klaeber's third edition of the poem (1950); in general, the emendations suggested by J. C. Pope, The Rhythm of Beowulf, second edition (1966), have been adopted. The division into sections headed by roman numerals is that of the manuscript, which makes, however, no provision for Section XXX.

2. The meaning is probably "son of Scef," although Scyld's origins are mysterious.

3. As is made clear shortly below, Scyld arrived in Denmark as a child alone in a ship loaded with treasures.

4. Although the manuscript reads "Beowulf," most scholars now agree that it should read "Beow." Beow was the grandfather of the Danish king Hrothgar.

Scyld spread widely in the Northlands. In this way a young man ought by his good deeds, by giving splendid gifts while still in his father's house, to make sure that later in life beloved companions will stand by him, that people will serve him when war comes. Through deeds that bring praise, a man shall prosper in every country.

Then at the fated time Scyld the courageous went away into the protection of the Lord. His dear companions carried him down to the sea-currents, just as he himself had bidden them do when, as protector of the Scyldings,⁵ he had ruled them with his words—long had the beloved prince governed the land. There in the harbor stood the ring-prowed ship, ice-covered and ready to sail, a prince's vessel. Then they laid down the ruler they had loved, the ring-giver, in the hollow of the ship, the glorious man beside the mast. There was brought great store of treasure, wealth from lands far away. I have not heard of a ship more splendidly furnished with war-weapons and battle-dress, swords and mail-shirts. On his breast lay a great many treasures that should voyage with him far out into the sea's possession. They provided him with no lesser gifts, treasure of the people, than those had done who at his beginning first sent him forth on the waves, a child alone. Then also they set a golden standard high over his head, let the water take him, gave him to the sea. Sad was their spirit, mournful their mind. Men cannot truthfully say who received that cargo, neither counsellors in the hall nor warriors under the skies.

(I) Then in the cities was Beow of the Scyldings beloved king of the people, long famous among nations (his father had gone elsewhere, the king from his land), until later great Healfdene was born to him. As long as he lived, old and fierce in battle, he upheld the glorious Scyldings. To him all told were four children born into the world, to the leader of the armies: Heorogar and Hrothgar and the good Halga. I have heard tell that [. . . was Onjela's queen,⁶ beloved bed-companion of the Battle-Scyfling.

[Beowulf and Grendel]

[THE HALL HEOROT IS ATTACKED BY GRENDL]

Then Hrothgar was given success in warfare, glory in battle, so that his retainers gladly obeyed him and their company grew into a great band of warriors. It came to his mind that he would command men to construct a hall, a mead-building large[r]

5. I.e., the Danes ("descendants of Scyld").

6. The text is faulty, so that the name of Healfdene's daughter has been lost; her husband Onela was a Swedish (Scyfling) king.

than the children of men had ever heard of, and therein he would give to young and old all that God had given him, except for common land and men's bodies.⁷ Then I have heard that the work was laid upon many nations, wide through this middle-earth, that they should adorn the folk-hall. In time it came to pass—quickly, as men count it—that it was finished, the largest of hall-dwellings. He gave it the name of Heorot,⁸ he who ruled wide with his words. He did not forget his promise: at the feast he gave out rings, treasure. The hall stood tall, high and wide-gabled: it would wait for the fierce flames of vengeful fire;⁹ the time was not yet at hand for sword-hate between son-in-law and father-in-law to awaken after murderous rage.

Then the fierce spirit¹ painfully endured hardship for a time, he who dwelt in the darkness, for every day he heard loud mirth in the hall; there was the sound of the harp, the clear song of the scop.² There he spoke who could relate the beginning of men far back in time, said that the Almighty made earth, a bright field fair in the water that surrounds it, set up in triumph the lights of the sun and the moon to lighten land-dwellers, and adorned the surfaces of the earth with branches and leaves, created also life for each of the kinds that move and breathe.—Thus these warriors lived in joy, blessed, until one began to do evil deeds, a hellish enemy. The grim spirit was called Grendel, known as a rover of the borders, one who held the moors, fen and fastness. Unhappy creature, he lived for a time in the home of the monsters' race, after God had condemned them as kin of Cain. The Eternal Lord avenged the murder in which he slew Abel. Cain had no pleasure in that feud, but He banished him far from mankind, the Ruler, for that misdeed. From him sprang all bad breeds, trolls and elves and monsters—likewise the giants who for a long time strove with God: He paid them their reward for that.

(II.) Then, after night came, Grendel went to survey the tall house—how, after their beer-drinking, the Ring-Danes had disposed themselves in it. Then he found therein a band of nobles asleep after the feast: they felt no sorrow, no misery of men. The creature of evil, grim and fierce, was quickly ready, savage and cruel, and seized from their rest thirty thanes. From there he turned to go back to his home, proud of his plunder, sought his dwelling with that store of slaughter.

7. Or "men's lives." Apparently slaves, along with public land, were not in the king's power to give away.

8. I.e., "Hart."

9. The destruction by fire of Heorot occurred at a later time than that of the poem's action, probably during the otherwise unsuccessful attack of the Heatho-Bard Ingeld on his father-in-law Hrothgar, mentioned in the next clause.

1. I.e., Grendel.

2. The "scop" was the Anglo-Saxon minstrel, who recited poetic stories to the accompaniment of a harp.

Then in the first light of dawning day Grendel's war-strength was revealed to men: then after the feast weeping arose, great cry in the morning. The famous king, hero of old days, sat joyless; the mighty one suffered, felt sorrow for his thanes, when they saw the track of the foe, of the cursed spirit: that hardship was too strong, too loathsome and long-lasting. Nor was there a longer interval, but after one night Grendel again did greater slaughter—and had no remorse for it—vengeful acts and wicked: he was too intent on them. Thereafter it was easy to find the man who sought rest for himself elsewhere, farther away, a bed among the outlying buildings—after it was made clear to him, told by clear proof, the hatred of him who now controlled the hall.³ Whoever escaped the foe held himself afterwards farther off and more safely. Thus Grendel held sway and fought against right, one against all, until the best of houses stood empty. It was a long time, the length of twelve winters, that the lord of the Scyldings suffered grief, all woes, great sorrows. Therefore, sadly in songs, it became well-known to the children of men that Grendel had fought a long time with Hrothgar, for many half-years maintained mortal spite, feud, and enmity—constant war. He wanted no peace with any of the men of the Danish host, would not withdraw his deadly rancor, or pay compensation: no counselor there had any reason to expect splendid repayment at the hands of the slayer.⁴ For the monster was relentless, the dark death-shadow, against warriors old and young, lay in wait and ambushed them. In the perpetual darkness he held to the misty moors: men do not know where hell-demons direct their footsteps.

Thus many crimes the enemy of mankind committed, the terrible walker-alone, cruel injuries one after another. In the dark nights he dwelt in Heorot, the richly adorned hall. He might not approach the throne, [receive] treasure, because of the Lord; He had no love for him.⁵

This was great misery to the lord of the Scyldings, a breaking of spirit. Many a noble sat often in council, sought a plan, what would be best for strong-hearted men to do against the awful attacks. At times they vowed sacrifices at heathen temples, with their words prayed that the soul-slayer⁶ would give help for the distress of the people. Such was their custom, the hope of heathens;

3. I.e., Grendel.

4. According to old Germanic law, a slayer could achieve peace with his victim's kinsmen only by paying them wergild, i.e., compensation for the life of the slain man.

5. Behind this obscure passage seems to lie the idea that Grendel, unlike Hrothgar's thanes, could not approach the throne to receive gifts from the king, having been condemned by God as an outlaw.

6. I.e., the Devil. Despite this assertion that the Danes were heathen, their king, Hrothgar, speaks consistently as a Christian.

in their spirits they thought of Hell, they knew not the Ruler, the Judge of Deeds, they recognized not the Lord God, nor indeed did they know how to praise the Protector of Heaven, the glorious King. Woe is him who in terrible trouble must thrust his soul into the fire's embrace, hope for no comfort, not expect change. Well is the man who after his death-day may seek the Lord and find peace in the embrace of the Father.

[THE COMING OF BEOWULF TO HEOROT]

(III.) So in the cares of his times the son of Healfdene constantly brooded, nor might the wise warrior set aside his woe. Too harsh, hateful and long-lasting was the hardship that had come upon the people, distress dire and inexorable, worst of night-horrors.

A thane of Hygelac,⁷ a good man among the Geats, heard in his homeland of Grendel's deeds: of mankind he was the strongest of might in the time of this life, noble and great. He bade that a good ship be made ready for him, said he would seek the war-king over the swan's road, the famous prince, since he had need of men. Very little did wise men blame him for that adventure, though he was dear to them; they urged the brave one on, examined the omens. From the folk of the Geats the good man had chosen warriors of the bravest that he could find; one of fifteen he led the way, the warrior sought the wooden ship, the sea-skilled one the land's edge. The time had come: the ship was on the waves, the boat under the cliff. The warriors eagerly climbed on the prow—the sea-currents eddied, sea against sand; men bore bright weapons into the ship's bosom, splendid armor. Men pushed the well-braced ship from shore, warriors on a well-wished voyage. Then over the sea-waves, blown by the wind, the foam-necked boat traveled, most like a bird, until at good time on the second day the curved prow had come to where the seafarers could see land, the sea-cliffs shine, towering hills, great headlands. Then was the sea crossed, the journey at end. Then quickly the men of the Geats climbed upon the shore, moored the wooden ship; mail-shirts rattled, dress for battle. They thanked God that the wave-way had been easy for them.

Then from the wall the Scyldings' guard who should watch over the sea-cliffs saw bright shields borne over the gangway, armor ready for battle; strong desire stirred him in mind to learn what the men were. He went riding on his horse to the shore, thane of Hrothgar, forcefully brandished a great spear in his hands, with formal words questioned them:

7. I.e., Beowulf the Geat, whose king was Hygelac.

"What are you, bearers of armor, dressed in mail-coats, who thus have come bringing a tall ship over the sea-road, over the water to this place? Lo, for a long time I have been guard of the coast, held watch by the sea so that no foe with a force of ships might work harm on the Danes' land: never have shield-bearers more openly undertaken to come ashore here; nor did you know for sure of a word of leave from our warriors, consent from my kinsmen. I have never seen a mightier warrior on earth than is one of you, a man in battle-dress. That is no retainer made to seem good by his weapons—unless his appearance belies him, his unequalled form. Now I must learn your lineage before you go any farther from here, spies on the Danes' land. Now you far-dwellers, sea-voyagers, hear what I think: you must straightway say where you have come from."

(IV.) To him replied the leader, the chief of the band unlocked his word-hoard: "We are men of the Geatish nation and Hygelac's hearth-companions. My father was well-known among the tribes, a noble leader named Ecgtheow. He lived many winters before he went on his way, an old man, from men's dwellings. Every wise man wide over the earth readily remembers him. Through friendly heart we have come to seek your lord, the son of Healfdene, protector of the people. Be good to us and tell us what to do: we have a great errand to the famous one, the king of the Danes. And I too do not think that anything ought to be kept secret: you know whether it is so, as we have indeed heard, that among the Scyldings I know not what foe, what dark doer of hateful deeds in the black nights, shows in terrible manner strange malice, injury and slaughter. In openness of heart I may teach Hrothgar remedy for that, how he, wise and good, shall overpower the foe—if change is ever to come to him, relief from evil's distress—and how his surging cares may be made to cool. Or else ever after he will suffer tribulations, constraint, while the best of houses remains there on its high place."

The guard spoke from where he sat on his horse, brave officer: "A sharp-witted shield-warrior who thinks well must be able to judge each of the two things, words and works. I understand this: that here is a troop friendly to the Scyldings' king. Go forward, bearing weapons and war-gear. I will show you the way; I shall also bid my fellow-thanes honorably to hold your boat against all enemies, your new-tarred ship on the sand, until again over the sea-streams it bears its beloved men to the Geatish shore, the wooden vessel with curved prow. May it be granted by fate that one who behaves so bravely pass whole through the battle-storm."

Then they set off. The boat lay fixed, rested on the rope, the deep-bosomed ship, fast at anchor. Boar-images⁸ shone over cheek-guards gold-adorned, gleaming and fire-hardened—the war-minded boar held guard over fierce men. The warriors hastened, marched together until they might see the timbered hall, stately and shining with gold; for earth-dwellers under the skies that was the most famous of buildings in which the mighty one waited—its light gleamed over many lands. The battle-brave guide pointed out to them the shining house of the brave ones so that they might go straight to it. Warrior-like he turned his horse, then spoke words: “It is time for me to go back. The All-Wielding Father in His grace keep you safe in your undertakings. I shall go back to the sea to keep watch against hostile hosts.”

(V.) The road was stone-paved, the path showed the way to the men in ranks. War-corselet shone, hard and hand-wrought, bright iron rings sang on their armor when they first came walking to the hall in their grim gear. Sea-weary they set down their broad shields, marvelously strong protections, against the wall of the building. Then they sat down on the bench—mail-shirts, warrior’s clothing, rang out. Spears stood together, seamen’s weapons, ash steel-gray at the top. The armed band was worthy of its weapons.

Then a proud-spirited man⁹ asked the warriors there about their lineage: “Where do you bring those gold-covered shields from, gray mail-shirts and visored helmets, this multitude of battle-shafts? I am Hrothgar’s herald and officer. I have not seen strangers—so many men—more bold. I think that it is for daring—not for refuge, but for greatness of heart—that you have sought Hrothgar.” The man known for his courage replied to him; the proud man of the Geats, hardy under helmet, spoke words in return: “We are Hygelac’s table-companions. Beowulf is my name. I will tell my errand to Healfdene’s son, the great prince your lord, if, good as he is, he will grant that we might address him.” Wulfgar spoke—he was a man of the Wendels, his bold spirit known to many, his valor and wisdom: “I will ask the lord of the Danes about this, the Scyldings’ king, the ring-giver, just as you request—will ask the glorious ruler about your voyage, and will quickly make known to you the answer the good man thinks best to give me.”

He returned at once to where Hrothgar sat, old and hoary, with his company of earls. The man known for his valor went forward till he stood squarely before the Danes’ king: he knew the custom of tried retainers. Wulfgar spoke to his lord and

8. Carved images of boars (sometimes represented as clothed like human warriors) were placed on helmets in the belief that they would protect the wearer in battle.

9. Identified below as Wulfgar.

friend: "Here have journeyed men of the Geats, come far over the sea's expanse. The warriors call their chief Beowulf. They ask that they, my prince, might exchange words with you. Do not refuse them your answer, gracious Hrothgar. From their war-gear they seem worthy of earls' esteem. Strong indeed is the chief who has led the warriors here."

(VI.) Hrothgar spoke, protector of the Scyldings: "I knew him when he was a boy. His father was called Ecgtheow: Hrethel of the Geats¹ gave him his only daughter for his home. Now has his hardy offspring come here, sought a fast friend. Then, too, seafarers who took gifts there to please the Geats used to say that he has in his handgrip the strength of thirty men, a man famous in battle. Holy God of His grace has sent him to us West-Danes, as I hope, against the terror of Grendel. I shall offer the good man treasures for his daring. Now make haste, bid them come in together to see my company of kinsmen. In your speech say to them also that they are welcome to the Danish people."

Then Wulfgar went to the hall's door, gave the message from within: "The lord of the East-Danes, my victorious prince, has bidden me say to you that he knows your noble ancestry, and that you brave-hearted men are welcome to him over the sea-swells. Now you may come in your war-dress, under your battle helmets, to see Hrothgar. Let your war-shields, your wooden spears, await here the outcome of the talk."

Then the mighty one rose, many a warrior about him, a company of strong thanes. Some waited there, kept watch over the weapons as the brave one bade them. Together they hastened, as the warrior directed them, under Heorot's roof. The war-leader, hardy under helmet, advanced till he stood on the hearth. Beowulf spoke, his mail-shirt glistened, armor-net woven by the blacksmith's skill: "Hail, Hrothgar! I am kinsman andthane of Hygelac. In my youth I have set about many brave deeds. The affair of Grendel was made known to me on my native soil: sea-travelers say that this hall, best of buildings, stands empty and useless to all warriors after the evening-light becomes hidden beneath the cover of the sky. Therefore my people, the best wise earls, advised me thus, lord Hrothgar, that I should seek you because they know what my strength can accomplish. They themselves looked on when, bloody from my foes, I came from the fight where I had bound five, destroyed a family of giants, and at night in the waves slain water-monsters, suffered great pain, avenged an affliction of the Weather-Geats on those who had asked for trouble—ground enemies to bits. And now alone I shall settle affairs with Grendel, the monster, the demon. Therefore, lord of the Bright-Danes, protector of the

1. Hrethel was the father of Hygelac and Beowulf's grandfather and guardian.

Scyldings, I will make a request of you, refuge of warriors, fair friend of nations, that you refuse me not, now that I have come so far, that alone with my company of earls, this band of hardy men, I may cleanse Heorot. I have also heard say that the monster in his recklessness cares not for weapons. Therefore, so that my liege lord Hygelac may be glad of me in his heart, I scorn to bear sword or broad shield, yellow wood, to the battle, but with my grasp I shall grapple with the enemy and fight for life, foe against foe. The one whom death takes can trust the Lord's judgment. I think that if he may accomplish it, unafraid he will feed on the folk of the Geats in the war-hall as he has often done on the flower of men. You will not need to hide my head² if death takes me, for he will have me blood-smeared; he will bear away my bloody flesh meaning to savor it, he will eat ruthlessly, the walker alone, will stain his retreat in the moor; no longer will you need trouble yourself to take care of my body. If battle takes me, send to Hygelac the best of war-clothes that protects my breast, finest of mail-shirts. It is a legacy of Hrethel, the work of Weland.³ Fate always goes as it must."

(VII.) Hrothgar spoke, protector of the Scyldings: "For deeds done, my friend Beowulf, and for past favors you have sought us. A fight of your father's brought on the greatest of feuds. With his own hands he became the slayer of Heatholaf among the Wylfings. After that the country of the Weather-Geats might not keep him, for fear of war. From there he sought the folk of the South-Danes, the Honor-Scyldings, over the sea-swell. At that time I was first ruling the Danish people and, still in my youth, held the wide kingdom, hoard-city of heroes. Heorogar had died then, gone from life, my older brother, son of Healfdene—he was better than I. Afterwards I paid blood-money to end the feud; over the sea's back I sent to the Wylfings old treasures; he⁴ swore oaths to me.

"It is a sorrow to me in spirit to say to any man what Grendel has brought me with his hatred—humiliation in Heorot, terrible violence. My hall-troop, warrior-band, has shrunk; fate has swept them away into Grendel's horror. (God may easily put an end to the wild ravager's deeds!) Full often over the ale-cups warriors made bold with beer have boasted that they would await with grim swords Grendel's attack in the beer-hall. Then in the morning this mead-hall was a hall shining with blood, when the day lightened, all the bench-floor blood-wet, a gore-hall. I had fewer faithful men, beloved retainers, for death had destroyed them. Now sit down to the feast and unbind your thoughts, your famous victories, as heart inclines."

2. I.e., "bury my body."

3. The blacksmith of the Norse gods.

4. Ecgtheow, whose feud with the Wylfings Hrothgar had settled.

[THE FEAST AT HEOROT]

Then was a bench cleared in the beer-hall for the men of the Geats all together. Then the stout-hearted ones went to sit down, proud in their might. A thane did his work who bore in his hands an embellished ale-cup, poured the bright drink. At times a scop sang, clear-voiced in Heorot. There was joy of brave men, no little company of Danes and Weather-Geats.

(VIII.) Unferth spoke, son of Ecglaf, who sat at the feet of the king of the Scyldings, unbound words of contention—to him was Beowulf's undertaking, the brave seafarer, a great vexation, for he would not allow that any other man of middle-earth should ever achieve more glory under the heavens than himself: "Are you that Beowulf who contended with Breca, competed in swimming on the broad sea, where for pride you explored the water, and for foolish boast ventured your lives in the deep? Nor might any man, friend nor enemy, keep you from the perilous venture of swimming in the sea. There you embraced the sea-streams with your arms, measured the sea-ways, flung forward your hands, glided over the ocean; the sea boiled with waves, with winter's swell. Seven nights you toiled in the water's power. He overcame you at swimming, had more strength. Then in the morning the sea bore him up among the Heathoraemas; from there he sought his own home, dear to his people, the land of the Brondings, the fair stronghold, where he had folk, castle, and treasures. All his boast against you the son of Beanstan carried out in deed. Therefore I expect the worse results for you—though you have prevailed everywhere in battles, in grim war—if you dare wait near Grendel a night-long space."

Beowulf spoke, the son of Ecgtheow: "Well, my friend. Unferth, drunk with beer you have spoken a great many things about Breca—told about his adventures. I maintain the truth that I had more strength in the sea, hardship on the waves, than any other man. Like boys we agreed together and boasted—we were both in our first youth—that we would risk our lives in the salt sea, and that we did even so. We had naked swords, strong in our hands, when we went swimming; we thought to guard ourselves against whale-fishes. He could not swim at all far from me in the flood-waves, be quicker in the water, nor would I move away from him. Thus we were together on the sea for the time of five nights until the flood drove us apart, the swelling sea, coldest of weathers, darkening night, and the north wind battle-grim turned against us: rough were the waves. The anger of the sea-fishes was roused. Then my body-mail, hard and hand-linked, gave me help against my foes; the woven war-garment, gold-adorned, covered my breast. A fierce cruel attacker dragged me to the bottom, held me grim in his grasp, but it was granted me to reach the monster with my sword-point, my battle-blade. The war-stroke destroyed the mighty sea-beast—through my hand.

(IX.) "Thus often loathsome assailants pressed me hard. I served them with my good sword, as the right was. They had no joy at all of the feast, the malice-workers, that they should eat me, sit around a banquet near the sea-bottom. But in the morning, sword-wounded they lay on the shore, left behind by the waves, put to sleep by the blade, so that thereafter they would never hinder the passage of sea-voyagers over the deep water. Light came from the east, bright signal of God, the sea became still so that I might see the headlands, the windy walls of the sea. Fate often saves an undoomed man when his courage is good. In any case it befell me that I slew with my sword nine sea-monsters. I have not heard tell of a harder fight by night under heaven's arch, nor of a man more hard-pressed in the sea-streams. Yet I came out of the enemies' grasp alive, weary of my adventure. Then the sea bore me onto the lands of the Finns, the flood with its current, the surging waters.

"I have not heard say of you any such hard matching of might, such sword-terror. Breca never yet in the games of war—neither he nor you—achieved so bold a deed with bright swords (I do not much boast of it), though you became your brothers' slayer, your close kin; for that you will suffer punishment in hell, even though your wit is keen. I tell you truly, son of Ecglaf, that Grendel, awful monster, would never have performed so many terrible deeds against your chief, humiliation in Heorot, if your spirit, your heart, were so fierce in fight as you claim. But he has noticed that he need not much fear the hostility, not much dread the terrible sword-storm of your people, the Victory-Scyldings. He exacts forced levy, shows mercy to none of the Danish people; but he is glad, kills, carves for feasting, expects no fight from the Spear-Danes. But I shall show him soon now the strength and courage of the Geats, their warfare. Afterwards he will walk who may, glad to the mead, when the morning light of another day, the bright-clothed sun, shines from the south on the children of men."

Then was the giver of treasure in gladness, gray-haired and battle-brave. The lord of the Bright-Danes could count on help. The folk's guardian had heard from Beowulf a fast-resolved thought.

There was laughter of warriors, voices rang pleasant, words were cheerful. Wealhtheow came forth, Hrothgar's queen, mindful of customs, gold-adorned, greeted the men in the hall; and the noble woman offered the cup first to the keeper of the land of the East-Danes, bade him be glad at the beer-drinking, beloved of the people. In joy he partook of feast and hall-cup, king famous for victories. Then the woman of the Helmings went about to each one of the retainers, young and old, offered them the costly cup, until the time came that she brought the mead-bowl to Beowulf, the ring-adorned queen, mature of mind. Sure of speech she greeted the man of the Geats, thanked God that her wish was fulfilled, that she might trust in some man for help against deadly deeds. He took the cup, the warrior fierce in battle, from Wealhtheow, and then spoke, one ready for fight—Beowulf spoke, the son of Ecgtheow: "I resolved, when I set out on the sea, sat down in the sea-boat with my band of men, that I should altogether fulfill the will of your people or else fall in slaughter, fast in the foe's grasp. I shall achieve a deed of manly courage or else have lived to see in this mead-hall my ending day." These words were well-pleasing to the woman, the boast of the Geat. Gold-adorned, the noble folk-queen went to sit by her lord.

Then there were again as at first strong words spoken in the hall, the people in gladness, the sound of a victorious folk, until, in a little while, the son of Healfdene wished to seek his evening rest. He knew of the battle in the high hall that had been plotted by the monster, plotted from the time that they might see the light of the sun until the night, growing dark over all things, the shadowy shapes of darkness, should come gliding, black under the clouds. The company all arose. Then they saluted each other, Hrothgar and Beowulf, and Hrothgar wished him good luck, control of the wine-hall, and spoke these words: "Never before, since I could raise hand and shield, have I entrusted to any man the great hall of the Danes, except now to you. Hold now and guard the best of houses: remember your fame, show your great courage, keep watch against the fierce foe. You will not lack what you wish if you survive that deed of valor."

[THE FIGHT WITH GRENDEL]

(X.) Then Hrothgar went out of the hall with his company of warriors, the protector of the Scyldings. The war-chief would seek the bed of Wealhtheow the queen. The King of Glory—as men had learned—had appointed a hall-guard against Grendel; he had a special mission to the prince of the Danes: he kept watch against monsters.

And the man of the Geats had sure trust in his great might, the favor of the Ruler. Then he took off his shirt of armor, the helmet from his head, handed his embellished sword, best of irons, to an attendant, bade him keep guard over his war-gear. Then the good warrior spoke some boast-words before he went to his bed, Beowulf of the Geats: "I claim myself no poorer in war-strength, war works, than Grendel claims himself. Therefore I will not put him to sleep with a sword, so take away his life, though surely I might. He knows no good tools with which he might strike against me, cut my shield in pieces, though he is strong in fight. But we shall forgo the sword in the night—if he dare seek war without weapon—and then may wise God, Holy Lord, assign glory on whichever hand seems good to Him."

The battle-brave one laid himself down, the pillow received the earl's head, and about him many a brave seaman lay down to hall-rest. None of them thought that he would ever again seek from there his dear home, people or town where he had been brought up; for they knew that bloody death had carried off far too many men in the wine-hall, folk of the Danes. But the Lord granted to weave for them good fortune in war, for the folk of the Weather-Geats, comfort and help that they should quite overcome their foe through the might of one man, through his sole strength: the truth has been made known that mighty God has always ruled mankind.

There came gliding in the black night the walker in darkness. The warriors slept who should hold the horned house—all but one. It was known to men that when the Ruler did not wish it the hostile creature might not drag them away beneath the shadows. But he, lying awake for the fierce foe, with heart swollen in anger awaited the outcome of the fight.

(XI.) Then from the moor under the mist-hills Grendel came walking, wearing God's anger. The foul ravager thought to catch some one of mankind there in the high hall. Under the clouds he moved until he could see most clearly the wine-hall, treasure-house of men, shining with gold. That was not the first time that he had sought Hrothgar's home. Never before or since in his life-days did he find harder luck, hardier hall-thanes. The creature deprived of joy came walking to the hall. Quickly the door gave way, fastened with fire-forged bands, when he touched it with his hands. Driven by evil desire, swollen with rage, he tore it open, the hall's mouth. After that the foe at once stepped onto the shining floor, advanced angrily. From his eyes came a light not fair, most like a flame. He saw many men in the hall, a band of kinsmen all asleep together, a company of war-men. Then his heart laughed: dreadful monster, he thought that before the day came he would divide the life from the body of every one of them, for there had come to him a hope of full-feasting. It was not his fate that when that night was over he should feast on more of mankind.

The kinsman of Hygelac, mighty man, watched how the evil-

doer would make his quick onslaught. Nor did the monster mean to delay it, but, starting his work, he suddenly seized a sleeping man, tore at him ravenously, bit into his bone-locks, drank the blood from his veins, swallowed huge morsels; quickly he had eaten all of the lifeless one, feet and hands. He stepped closer, then felt with his arm for the brave-hearted man on the bed, reached out towards him, the foe with his hand; at once in fierce response Beowulf seized it and sat up, leaning on his own arm. Straightway the fosterer of crimes knew that he had not encountered on middle-earth, anywhere in this world, a harder hand-grip from another man. In mind he became frightened, in his spirit: not for that might he escape the sooner. His heart was eager to get away, he would flee to his hiding-place, seek his rabble of devils. What he met there was not such as he had ever before met in the days of his life. Then the kinsman of Hygelac, the good man, thought of his evening's speech, stood upright and laid firm hold on him: his fingers cracked. The giant was pulling away, the earl stepped forward. The notorious one thought to move farther away, wherever he could, and flee his way from there to his fen-retreat; he knew his fingers' power to be in a hateful grip. That was a painful journey that the loathsome despoiler had made to Heorot. The retainers' hall rang with the noise—terrible drink⁵ for all the Danes, the house-dwellers, every brave man, the earls. Both were enraged, fury-filled, the two who meant to control the hall. The building resounded. Then was it much wonder that the wine-hall withstood them joined in fierce fight, that it did not fall to the ground, the fair earth-dwelling; but it was so firmly made fast with iron bands, both inside and outside, joined by skillful smith-craft. There started from the floor—as I have heard say—many a mead-bench, gold-adorned, when the furious ones fought. No wise men of the Scyldings ever before thought that any men in any manner might break it down, splendid with bright horns, have skill to destroy it, unless flame should embrace it, swallow it in fire. Noise rose up, sound strange enough. Horrible fear came upon the North-Danes, upon every one of those who heard the weeping from the wall, God's enemy sing his terrible song, song without triumph—the hell-slave bewail his pain. There held him fast he who of men was strongest of might in the days of this life.

(XII.) Not for anything would the protector of warriors let the murderous guest go off alive: he did not consider his life-days of use to any of the nations. There more than enough of Beowulf's earls drew swords, old heirlooms, wished to protect the life of their dear lord, famous prince, however they might. They did not know when they entered the fight, hardy-spirited warriors, and when they thought to hew him on every side, to seek his soul, that not any of the best of irons on earth, no war-sword, would touch the evil-doer: for with a charm he had made victory-weapons useless, every sword-edge. His departure to death from the time of this life was to be wretched; and the alien spirit was to travel far off into the power of fiends. Then he who before had brought trouble of heart to mankind, committed many crimes—he was at war with God—found that his body would do him no good, for the great-hearted kinsman of Hygelac had him by the hand. Each was hateful to the other alive. The awful monster had lived to feel pain in his body, a huge wound in his shoulder was exposed, his sinews sprang apart, his bone-locks broke. Glory in battle was given to Beowulf. Grendel must flee from there, mortally sick, seek his joyless home in the fenslopes. He knew the more surely that his life's end had come, the full number of his days. For all the Danes was their wish fulfilled after the bloody fight. Thus he who had lately come from far off, wise and stout-hearted, had purged Heorot, saved Hrothgar's house from affliction. He rejoiced in his night's work, a deed to make famous his courage. The man of the Geats had fulfilled his boast to the East-Danes; so too he had remedied all the grief, the malice-caused sorrow that they had endured before, and had had to suffer from harsh necessity, no small distress. That was clearly proved when the battle-brave man set the hand up under the curved roof—the arm and the shoulder: there all together was Grendel's grasp.

5. The metaphor reflects the idea that the chief purpose of a hall such as Heorot was as a place for men to feast in.

[CELEBRATION AT HEOROT]

(XIII.) Then in the morning, as I have heard, there was many a warrior about the gift-hall. Folk-chiefs came from far and near over the wide-stretching ways to look on the wonder, the footprints of the foe. Nor did his going from life seem sad to any of the men who saw the tracks of the one without glory—how, weary-hearted, overcome with injuries, he moved on his way from there to the mere⁶ of the water-monsters with life-failing footsteps, death-doomed and in flight. There the water was boiling with blood, the horrid surge of waves swirling, all mixed with hot gore, sword-blood. Doomed to die he had hidden, then, bereft of joys, had laid down his life in his fen-refuge, his heathen soul: there hell took him.

From there old retainers—and many a young man, too—turned back in their glad journey to ride from the mere, high-spirited on horseback, warriors on steeds. There was Beowulf's fame spoken of; many a man said—and not only once—that, south nor north, between the seas, over the wide earth, no other man under the sky's expanse was better of those who bear shields, more worthy of ruling. Yet they found no fault with their own dear lord, gracious Hrothgar, for he was a good king. At times battle-famed men let their brown horses gallop, let them race where the paths seemed fair, known for their excellence. At times a thane of the king, a man skilled at telling adventures, songs stored in his memory, who could recall many of the stories of the old days, wrought a new tale in well-joined words; this man undertook with his art to recite in turn Beowulf's exploit, and skillfully to tell an apt tale, to lend words to it.

6. Lake.

He spoke everything that he had heard tell of Sigemund's valorous deeds, many a strange thing, the strife of Waels's son,⁷ his far journeys, feuds and crimes, of which the children of men knew nothing—except for Fitela with him, to whom he would tell everything, the uncle to his nephew, for they were always friends in need in every fight. Many were the tribes of giants that they had laid low with their swords. For Sigemund there sprang up after his death-day no little glory—after he, hardy in war, had killed the dragon, keeper of the treasure-hoard: under the hoary stone the prince's son had ventured alone, a daring deed, nor was Fitela with him. Yet it turned out well for him, so that his sword went through the gleaming worm and stood fixed in the wall, splendid weapon: the dragon lay dead of the murdering stroke. Through his courage the great warrior had brought it about that he might at his own wish enjoy the ring-hoard. He loaded the sea-boat, bore into the ship's bosom the bright treasure, offspring of Waels. The hot dragon melted.

He was adventurer most famous, far and wide through the nations, for deeds of courage—he had prospered from that before, the protector of warriors—after the war-making of Heremod had come to an end, his strength and his courage.⁸ Among the Jutes Heremod came into the power of his enemies, was betrayed, quickly dispatched. Surging sorrows had oppressed him too long: he had become a great care to his people, to all his princes; for many a wise man in former times had bewailed the journey of the fierce-hearted one—people who had counted on him as a relief from affliction—that that king's son should prosper, take the rank of his father, keep guard over the folk, the treasure and stronghold, the kindgom of heroes, the home of the Scyldings. The kinsman of Hygelac became dearer to his friends, to all man-

7. Waels was Sigemund's father.

8. Heremod was an unsuccessful king of the Danes, one who began brilliantly but became cruel and avaricious, ultimately having to take refuge among the Jutes, who put him to death. His reputation was thus overshadowed by that of Sigemund.

kind: crime took possession of Heremod.

Sometimes racing their horses they passed over the sand-covered ways. By then the morning light was far advanced, hastening on. Many a stout-hearted warrior went to the high hall to see the strange wonder. The king himself walked forth from the women's apartment, the guardian of the ring-hoards, secure in his fame, known for his excellence, with much company; and his queen with him passed over the path to the mead-hall with a troop of attendant women.

(XIV.) Hrothgar spoke—he had gone to the hall, taken his stand on the steps, looked at the high roof shining with gold, and at Grendel's hand: "For this sight may thanks be made quickly to the Almighty: I endured much from the foe, many griefs from Grendel: God may always work wonder upon wonder, the Guardian of Heaven. It was not long ago that I did not expect ever to live to see relief from any of my woes—when the best of houses stood shining with blood, stained with slaughter, a far-reaching woe for each of my counselors, for every one, since none thought he could ever defend the people's stronghold from its enemies, from demons and evil spirits. Now through the Lord's might a warrior has accomplished the deed that all of us with our skill could not perform. Yes, she may say, whatever woman brought forth this son among mankind—if she still lives—that the God of Old was kind to her in her child-bearing. Now, Beowulf, best of men, in my heart I will love you as a son: keep well this new kinship. To you will there be no lack of the good things of the world that I have in my possession. Full often I have made reward for less, done honor with gifts to a lesser warrior, weaker in fighting. With your deeds you yourself have made sure that your glory will be ever alive. May the Almighty reward you with good—as just now he has done."

Beowulf spoke, the son of Ecgtheow: "With much good will we have achieved this work of courage, that fight, have ventured boldly against the strength of the unknown one. I should have wished rather that you might have seen him, your enemy brought low among your furnishings. I thought quickly to bind him on his deathbed with hard grasp, so that because of my hand-grip he should lie struggling for life—unless his body should escape. I could not stop his going, since the Lord did not wish it, nor did I hold him firmly enough for that, my life-enemy: he was too strong, the foe in his going. Yet to save his life he has left his hand behind to show that he was here—his arm and shoulder; nor by that has the wretched creature bought any comfort; none the longer will the loathsome ravager live, hard-pressed by his crimes, for a wound has clutched him hard in its strong grip, in deadly bonds. There, like a man outlawed for guilt, he shall await the great judgment, how the bright Lord will decree for him."

Then was the warrior more silent in boasting speech of war-like deeds, the son of Ecglaf,⁹ after the nobles had looked at the hand, now high on the roof through the strength of a man, the foe's fingers. The end of each one, each of the nail-places, was most like steel; the hand-spurs of the heathen warrior were monstrous spikes. Everyone said that no hard thing would hurt him, no iron good from old times would harm the bloody battle-hand of the monster.

(XV.) Then was it ordered that Heorot be within quickly adorned by hands. Many there were, both men and women, who made ready the wine-hall, the guest-building. The hangings on the walls shone with gold, many a wondrous sight for each man who looks on such things. That bright building was much damaged, though made fast within by iron bonds, and its door-hinges sprung; the roof alone came through unharmed when the monster, outlawed for his crimes, turned in flight, in despair of his life. That is not easy to flee from—let him try it who will—but driven by need one must seek the place prepared for earth-dwellers, soul-bearers, the sons of men, the place where, after its feasting, one's body will sleep fast in its death-bed.

Then had the proper time come that Healfdene's son should go to the hall; the king himself would share in the feast. I have never heard that a people in a larger company bore themselves better about their treasure-giver. Men who were known for courage sat at the benches, rejoiced in the feast. Their kinsmen, stout-hearted Hrothgar and Hrothulf, partook fairly of many a mead-cup in the high hall. Heorot within was filled with friends: the Scylding-people had not then known treason's web.¹

Then the son of Healfdene gave Beowulf a golden standard to reward his victory—a decorated battle-banner—a helmet and mail-shirt: many saw the glorious, costly sword borne before the warrior. Beowulf drank of the cup in the mead-hall. He had no need to be ashamed before fighting men of those rich gifts. I have not heard of many men who gave four precious, gold-adorned things to another on the ale-bench in a more friendly way. The rim around the helmet's crown had a head-protection, wound of wire, so that no battle-hard sharp sword might badly hurt him when the shield-warrior should go against his foe. Then the people's protector commanded eight horses with golden bridles to be led into the hall, within the walls. The saddle of one of them stood shining with hand-ornaments, adorned with jewels: that had been

9. I.e., Unferth, who had taunted Beowulf the night before.

1. A reference to the later history of the Danes, when, after Hrothgar's death, his nephew Hrothulf apparently drove his son and successor Hrethric from the throne.

the war-seat of the high king when the son of Healfdene would join sword-play: never did the warfare of the wide-known one fail when men died in battle. And then the prince of Ing's friends² yielded possession of both, horses and weapons, to Beowulf: he bade him use them well. So generously the famous prince, guardian of the hoard, repaid the warrior's battle-deeds with horses and treasure that no man will ever find fault with them—not he that will speak truth according to what is right.

(XVI.) Then further the lord gave treasure to each of the men on the mead-bench who had made the sea-voyage with Beowulf, gave heirlooms; and he commanded that gold be paid for the one whom in his malice Grendel had killed—as he would have killed more if wise God and the man's courage had not forestalled that fate. The Lord guided all the race of men then, as he does now. Yet is discernment evrywhere best, forethought of mind. Many a thing dear and loath he shall live to see who here in the days of trouble long makes use of the world.

There was song and music together before Healfdene's battle-leader, the wooden harp touched, tale oft told, when Hrothgar's scop should speak hall-pastime among the mead-benches . . . [of] Finn's retainers when the sudden disaster fell upon them. . . .³

The hero of the Half-Danes, Hnaef of the Scyldings, was fated to fall on Frisian battlefield. And no need had Hildeburh⁴ to praise the good faith of the Jutes: blameless she was deprived of her dear ones at the shield-play, of son and brother; wounded by spears they fell to their fate. That was a mournful woman. Not without cause did Hoc's daughter lament the decree of destiny when morning came and she might see, under the sky, the slaughter of kinsmen—where before she had the greatest of world's joy. The fight took away all Finn's thanes except for only a few, so that he could in no way continue the battle on the field against Hengest, nor protect the survivors by fighting against the prince's thane. But they offered them peace-terms,⁵ that they should clear

2. Ing was a legendary Danish king, and his "friends" are the Danes.

3. The lines introducing the scop's song seem faulty. The story itself is recounted in a highly allusive way, and many of its details are obscure, though some help is offered by an independent version of the story given in a fragmentary Old English lay called The Fight at Finnsburg.

4. Hildeburh, daughter of the former Danish king Hoc and sister of the ruling Danish king Hnaef, was married to Finn, king of the Jutes (Frisians). Hnaef with a party of Danes made what was presumably a friendly visit to Hildeburh and Finn at their home Finnsburg, but during a feast a quarrel broke out between the Jutes and the Danes (since the scop's sympathies are with the Danes, he ascribes the cause to the bad faith of the Jutes), and in the ensuing fight Hnaef and his nephew, the son of Finn and Hildeburh, were killed, along with many other Danes and Jutes.

5. It is not clear who proposed the peace terms, but in view of the teller's Danish sympathies, it was probably the Jutes that sought the uneasy truce from Hengest, who became the Danes' leader after Hnaef's death. The truce imposed upon Hengest and the Danes the intolerable condition of having to dwell in peace with the Jutish king who was responsible for the death of their own king.

another building for them, hall and high seat, that they might have control of half of it with the sons of the Jutes; and at givings of treasure the son of Folcwalda⁶ should honor the Danes each day, should give Hengest's company rings, such gold-plated treasure as that with which he would cheer the Frisians' kin in the high hall. Then on both sides they confirmed the fast peace-compact. Finn declared to Hengest, with oaths deep-sworn, unfeigned, that he would hold those who were left from the battle in honor in accordance with the judgment of his counselors, so that by words or by works no man should break the treaty nor because of malice should ever mention that, princeless, the Danes followed the slayer of their own ring-giver, since necessity forced them. If with rash speech any of the Frisians should insist upon calling to mind the cause of murderous hate, then the sword's edge should settle it.

The funeral pyre was made ready and gold brought up from the hoard. The best of the warriors of the War-Scyldings⁷ was ready on the pyre. At the fire it was easy to see many a blood-stained battle-shirt, boar-image all golden—iron-hard swine—many a noble destroyed by wounds: more than one had died in battle. Then Hildeburh bade give her own son to the flames on Hnaef's pyre, burn his blood vessels, put him in the fire at the shoulder of his uncle. The woman mourned, sang her lament. The warrior took his place.⁸ The greatest of death-fires wound to the skies, roared before the barrow. Heads melted as blood sprang out—wounds opened wide, hate-bites of the body. Fire swallowed them—greediest of spirits—all of those whom war had taken away from both peoples: their strength had departed.

(XVII.) Then warriors went to seek their dwellings, bereft of friends, to behold Friesland, their homes and high city.⁹ Yet Hengest stayed on with Finn for a winter darkened with the thought of slaughter, all desolate. He thought of his land, though he might not drive his ring-prowed ship over the water—the sea boiled with storms, strove with the wind, winter locked the waves in ice-bonds—until another year came to men's dwellings, just as it does still, glorious bright weather always watching for its time. Then winter was gone, earth's lap fair, the exile was eager to go, the guest from the dwelling: [yet] more he thought of revenge for his wrongs than of the sea-journey—if he might bring about a fight where he could take account of the sons of the Jutes with his iron. So he made no refusal of the world's

6. I.e., Finn.

7. I.e., Hnaef.

8. The line is obscure, but it perhaps means that the body of Hildeburh's son was placed on the pyre.

9. This seems to refer to the few survivors on the Jutish side.

custom when the son of Hunlaf¹ placed on his lap Battle-Bright, best of swords: its edges were known to the Jutes. Thus also to war-minded Finn in his turn cruel sword-evil came in his own home, after Guthlaf and Oslaf complained of the grim attack, the injury after the sea-journey, assigned blame for their lot of woes: breast might not contain the restless heart. Then was the hall reddened from foes' bodies, and thus Finn slain, the king in his company, and the queen taken. The warriors of the Scyldings bore to ship all the hall-furnishings of the land's king, whatever of necklaces, skillfully wrought treasures, they might find at Finn's home. They brought the noble woman on the sea-journey to the Danes, led her to her people.

The lay was sung to the end, the song of the scop. Joy mounted again, bench-noise brightened, cup-bearers poured wine from wonderful vessels. Then Wealhtheow came forth to walk under gold crown to where the good men sat, nephew and uncle: their friendship was then still unbroken, each true to the other.² There too Unferth the spokesman sat at the feet of the prince of the Scyldings: each of them trusted his spirit, that he had much courage, though he was not honorable to his kinsmen at sword-play. Then the woman of the Scyldings spoke:

"Take this cup my noble lord, giver of treasure. Be glad, gold-friend of warriors, and speak to the Geats with mild words, as a man ought to do. Be gracious to the Geats, mindful of gifts [which]³ you now have from near and far. They have told me that you would have the warrior for your son. Heorot is purged, the bright ring-hall. Enjoy while you may many rewards, and leave to your kinsmen folk and kingdom when you must go forth to look on the Ruler's decree. I know my gracious Hrothulf, that he will hold the young warriors in honor if you, friend of the Scyldings, leave the world before him. I think he will repay our sons with good if he remembers all the favors we did to his pleasure and honor when he was a child."

Then she turned to the bench where her sons were, Hrethric and Hrothmund, and the sons of the warriors, young men together. There sat the good man Beowulf of the Geats beside the two brothers.

(XVIII.) The cup was borne to him and welcome offered

1. The text is open to various interpretations. The one adopted here assumes that the Dane Hunlaf, brother of Guthlaf and Oslaf, had been killed in the fight, and that ultimately Hunlaf's son demanded vengeance by the symbolic act of placing his father's sword in Hengest's lap, while at the same time Guthlaf and Oslaf reminded Hengest of the Jutes' treachery. It is not clear whether the subsequent fight in which Finn was killed was waged by the Danish survivors alone, or whether the party first went back to Denmark and then returned to Finnsburg with reinforcements.

2. See section XV, note 1, above.

3. The text seems corrupt.

in friendly words to him, and twisted gold courteously bestowed on him, two arm-ornaments, a mail-shirt and rings, the largest of necklaces of those that I have heard spoken of on earth. I have heard of no better hoard-treasure under the heavens since Hama carried away to his bright city the necklace of the Brosings,⁴ chain and rich setting: he fled the treacherous hatred of Eormenric, got eternal favor. This ring Hygelac of the Geats,⁵ grandson of Swerting, had on his last venture, when beneath his battle-banner he defended his treasure, protected the spoils of war: fate took him when for pride he sought trouble, feud with the Frisians. Over the cup of the waves the mighty prince wore that treasure, precious stone. He fell beneath his shield; the body of the king came into the grasp of the Franks, his breast-armor and the neck-ring together. Lesser warriors plundered the fallen after the war-harvest: people of the Geats held the place of corpses.

The hall was filled with noise. Wealhtheow spoke, before the company she said to him: "Wear this ring, beloved Beowulf, young man, with good luck, and make use of this mail-shirt from the people's treasure, and prosper well; make yourself known with your might, and be kind of counsel to these boys: I shall remember to reward you for that. You have brought it about that, far and near, for a long time all men shall praise you, as wide as the sea surrounds the shores, home of the winds. While you live, prince, be prosperous. I wish you well of your treasure. Much favored one, be kind of deeds to my son. Here is each earl true to other, mild of heart, loyal to his lord; the thanes are at one, the people obedient, the retainers cheered with drink do as I bid."

Then she walked to her seat. There was the best of feasts, men drank wine. They did not know the fate, the grim decree made long before, as it came to pass to many of the earls after evening had come and Hrothgar had gone to his chambers, the noble one to his rest. A great number of men remained in the hall, just as they had often done before. They cleared the benches from the floor. It was spread over with beds and pillows. One of the beer-drinkers, ripe and fated to die, lay down to his hall-rest. They set at their heads their battle-shields, bright wood; there on the bench it was easy to see above each man his helmet that towered in battle, his ringed mail-shirt, his great spear-wood. It was their custom to be always ready for war whether at home or in the

4. The Brosings' (Brosings') necklace had been worn by the goddess Freya. Nothing more is known of this story of Hama, who seems to have stolen the necklace from the famous Gothic king Eormenric.

5. Beowulf is later said to have presented the necklace to Hygelac's queen, Hygd, though here Hygelac is said to have been wearing it on his ill-fated expedition against the Franks and Frisians, into whose hands it fell at his death.

field, in any case at any time that need should befall their liege lord: that was a good nation.

[GRENDDEL'S MOTHER'S ATTACK]

(XIX.) Then they sank to sleep. One paid sorely for his evening rest, just as had often befallen them when Grendel guarded the gold-hall, wrought wrong until the end came, death after misdeeds. It came to be seen, wide-known to men, that after the bitter battle an avenger still lived for an evil space: Grendel's mother, woman, monster-wife, was mindful of her misery, she who had to dwell in the terrible water, the cold currents, after Cain became sword-slayer of his only brother, his own father's son. Then Cain went as an outlaw to flee the cheerful life of men, marked for his murder, held to the wasteland. From him sprang many a devil sent by fate. Grendel was one of them, hateful outcast who at Heorot found a waking man waiting his warfare. There the monster had laid hold upon him, but he was mindful of the great strength, the large gift God had given him, and relied on the Almighty for favor, comfort and help. By that he overcame the foe, subdued the hell-spirit. Then he went off wretched, bereft of joy, to seek his dying-place, enemy of mankind. And his mother, still greedy and gallows-grim, would go on a sorrowful venture, avenge her son's death.

Then she came to Heorot where the Ring-Danes slept throughout the hall. Then change came quickly to the earls there, when Grendel's mother made her way in. The attack was the less terrible by just so much as is the strength of women, the war-terror of a wife, less than an armed man's when a hard blade, forge-hammered, a sword shining with blood, good of its edges, cuts the stout boar on a helmet opposite. Then in the hall was hard-edged sword raised from the seat, many a broad shield lifted firmly in hand: none thought of helmet, of wide mail-shirt, when the terror seized him. She was in haste, would be gone out from there, protect her life after she was discovered. Swiftly she had taken fast hold on one of the nobles, then she went to the fen. He was one of the men between the seas most beloved of Hrothgar in the rank of retainer, a noble shield-warrior whom she destroyed at his rest, a man of great repute. Beowulf was not there, for earlier, after the treasure-giving, another lodging had been appointed for the renowned Geat. Outcry arose in Heorot: she had taken, in its gore, the famed hand. Care was renewed, come again on the dwelling. That was not a good bargain, that on both sides they had to pay with the lives of friends.

Then was the old king, the hoary warrior, of bitter mind when he learned that his chief thane was lifeless, his dearest man dead. Quickly Beowulf was fetched to the bed-chamber, man happy in victory. At daybreak together with his earls he went, the noble champion himself with his retainers, to where the wise one was, waiting to know whether after tidings of woe the All-Wielder would ever bring about change for him. The worthy warrior walked over the floor with his retainers—hall-wood resounded—that he might address words to the wise prince of Ing's friends, asked if the night had been pleasant according to his desires.

(XX.) Hrothgar spoke, protector of the Scyldings: "Ask not about pleasure. Sorrow is renewed to the people of the Danes: Aeschere is dead, Yrmenlaf's elder brother, my speaker of wisdom and my bearer of counsel, my shoulder-companion when we used to defend our heads in battle, when troops clashed, beat on boar-images. Whatever an earl should be, a man good from old times, such was Aeschere. Now a wandering murderous spirit has slain him with its hands in Heorot. I do not know by what way the awful creature, glorying in its prey, has made its retreat, gladdened by its feast. She has avenged the feud—that last night you killed Grendel with hard hand-grips, savagely, because too long he had diminished and destroyed my people. He fell in the fight, his life forfeited, and now the other has come, a mighty worker of wrong, would avenge her kinsman, and has carried far her revenge—as many a thane may think who weeps in his spirit for his treasure-giver, bitter sorrow in heart. Now the hand lies lifeless that was strong in support of all your desires.

"I have heard landsmen, my people, hall-counselors, say this, that they have seen two such huge walkers in the wasteland holding to the moors, alien spirits. One of them, so far as they could clearly discern, was the likeness of a woman. The other wretched shape trod the tracks of exile in the form of a man, except that he was bigger than any other man. Land-dwellers in the old days named him Grendel. They know of no father, whether in earlier times any was begotten for them among the dark spirits. They hold to the secret land, the wolf-slopes, the windy headlands, the dangerous fen-paths where the mountain stream goes down under the darkness of the hills, the flood under the earth. It is not far from here, measured in miles, that the mere stands; over it hang frost-covered woods, trees fast of root close over the water. There each night may be seen fire on the flood, a fearful wonder. Of the sons of men there lives none, old of wisdom, who knows the bottom. Though the heath-stalker, the strong-horned hart, harassed by hounds makes for the forest after long flight, rather will he give his life, his being, on the bank than save his head by entering. That is no pleasant place. From it the surging waves rise up black to the heavens when the wind stirs up awful storms, until the air becomes gloomy, the skies weep. Now once again is the cure in you alone. You do not yet know the land, the perilous place, where you might find the seldom-seen creature: seek if you dare. I will give you wealth for the feud, old treasure, as I did before, twisted gold—if you come away.”

(XXI.) Beowulf spoke, the son of Ecgtheow: “Sorrow not, wise warrior. It is better for a man to avenge his friend than much mourn. Each of us must await his end of the world’s life. Let him who may get glory before death: that is best for the warrior after he has gone from life. Arise, guardian of the kingdom, let us go at once to look on the track of Grendel’s kin. I promise you this: she will not be lost under cover, not in the earth’s bosom nor in the mountain woods nor at the bottom of the sea, go where she will. This day have patience in every woe—as I expect you to.”

Then the old man leapt up, thanked God, the mighty Lord, that the man had so spoken. Then was a horse bridled for Hrothgar, a curly-maned mount. The wise king moved in state; the band of shield-bearers marched on foot. The tracks were seen wide over the wood-paths where she had gone on the ground, made her way forward over the dark moor, borne lifeless the best of retainers of those who watched over their home with Hrothgar. The son of noble forebears⁶ moved over the steep rocky slopes, narrow paths where only one could go at a time, an unfamiliar trail, steep hills many a lair of water-monsters. He went before with a few wise men to spy out the country, until suddenly he found mountain trees leaning out over hoary stone, a joyless wood: water lay beneath, bloody and troubled. It was pain of heart for all the Danes to suffer, for the friends of the Scyldings, for many a thane, grief to each earl when on the cliff over the water they came upon Aeschere’s head. The flood boiled with blood—the men looked upon it—with hot gore. Again and again the horn sang its urgent war-song. The whole troop sat down to rest. Then they saw on the water many a snake-shape, strong sea-serpents exploring the mere, and water-monsters lying on the slopes of the shore such as those that in the morning often attend a perilous journey on the paths of the sea, serpents and wild beasts.

These fell away from the shore, fierce and rage-swollen: they had heard the bright sound, the war-horn sing. One of them a man of the Geats with his bow cut off from his life, his water-warring, after the hard war-arrow stuck in his heart: he was weaker in swimming the lake when death took him. Straightway he was hard beset on the waves with barbed boar-spears, strongly surrounded, pulled up on the shore, strange spawn of the waves. The men looked on the terrible alien thing.

6. I.e., Hrothgar.

Beowulf put on his warrior's dress, had no fear for his life. His war-shirt, hand-fashioned, broad and well-worked, was to explore the mere: it knew how to cover his body-cave so that foe's grip might not harm his heart, or grasp of angry enemy his life. But the bright helmet guarded his head, one which was to stir up the lake-bottom, seek out the troubled water—made rich with gold, surrounded with splendid bands, as the weapon-smith had made it in far-off days, fashioned it wonderfully, set it about with boar-images so that thereafter no sword or battle-blade might bite into it. And of his strong supports that was not the least which Hrothgar's spokesman ⁷ lent to his need: Hrunting was the name of the hilted sword; it was one of the oldest of ancient treasures; its edge was iron, decorated with poison-stripes, hardened with battle-sweat. Never had it failed in war any man of those who grasped it in their hands, who dared enter on dangerous enterprises, onto the common meeting place of foes: this was not the first time that it should do work of courage. Surely the son of Ecglaf, great of strength, did not have in mind what, drunk with wine, he had spoken, when he lent that weapon to a better sword-fighter. He did not himself dare to risk his life under the warring waves, to engage his courage: there he lost his glory, his name for valor. It was not so with the other when he had armed himself for battle.

[BEOWULF ATTACKS GRENDEL'S MOTHER]

(XXII.) Beowulf spoke, the son of Ecgtheow: "Think now, renowned son of Healfdene, wise king, now that I am ready for the venture, gold-friend of warriors, of what we said before, that, if at your need I should go from life, you would always be in a father's place for me when I am gone: be guardian of my young retainers, my companions, if battle should take me. The treasure you gave me, beloved Hrothgar, send to Hygelac. The lord of the Geats may know from the gold, the son of Hrethel may see when he looks on that wealth, that I found a ring-giver good in his gifts, enjoyed him while I might. And let Unferth have the old heirloom, the wide-known man my splendid-waved sword, hard-edged: with Hrunting I shall get glory, or death will take me."

After these words the man of the Weather-Geats turned away boldly, would wait for no answer: the surging water took the warrior. Then was it a part of a day before he might see the bottom's floor. Straightway that which had held the flood's tract a hundred half-years, ravenous for prey, grim and greedy, saw that some man from above was exploring the dwelling of monsters. Then she groped toward him, took the warrior in her awful grip. Yet not the more for that did she hurt his hale body within: his ring-armor shielded him about on the outside so that she could not pierce the war-dress, the linked body-mail, with hateful fingers. Then as she came to the bottom the sea-wolf bore the ring-prince to her house so that—no matter how brave he was—he might not wield weapons; but many monsters attacked him in the water, many a sea-beast tore at his mail-shirt with war-tusks, strange creatures afflicted him. Then the earl saw that he was in some hostile hall where no water harmed him at all, and the flood's onrush might not touch him because of the hall-roof. He saw firelight, a clear blaze shine bright.

7. I.e., Unferth.

Then the good man saw the accursed dweller in the deep, the mighty mere-woman. He gave a great thrust to his sword—his hand did not withhold the stroke—so that the etched blade sang at her head a fierce war-song. Then the stranger found that the battle-lightning would not bite, harm her life, but the edge failed the prince in his need: many a hand-battle had it endured before, often sheared helmet, war-coat of man fated to die: this was the first time for the rare treasure that its glory had failed.

But still he was resolute, not slow of his courage, mindful of fame, the kinsman of Hygelac. Then, angry warrior, he threw away the sword, wavy-patterned, bound with ornaments, so that it lay on the ground, hard and steel-edged: he trusted in his strength, his mighty hand-grip. So ought a man to do when he thinks to get long-lasting praise in battle: he cares not for his life. Then he seized by the hair Grendel's mother—the man of the War-Geats did not shrink from the fight. Battle-hardened, now swollen with rage, he pulled his deadly foe so that she fell to the floor. Quickly in her turn she repaid him his gift with her grim claws and clutched at him: then weary-hearted, the strongest of warriors, of foot-soldiers, stumbled so that he fell. Then she sat upon the hall-guest and drew her knife, broad and bright-edged. She would avenge her child, her only son. The woven breast-armor lay on his shoulder: that protected his life, withstood entry of point or of edge. Then the son of Ecgtheow would have fared amiss under the wide ground, the champion of the Geats, if the battle-shirt had not brought help, the hard war-net—and holy God brought about victory in war; the wise Lord, Ruler of the Heavens, decided it with right, easily, when Beowulf had stood up again.

XXIII. Then he saw among the armor a victory-blessed blade, an old sword made by the giants, strong of its edges, glory of warriors: it was the best of weapons, except that it was larger than any other man might bear to war-sport, good and adorned, the work of giants. He seized the linked hilt, he who fought for the Scyldings, savage and slaughter-bent, drew the patterned-blade; desperate of life, he struck angrily so that it bit her hard on the neck, broke the bone-rings. The blade went through all the doomed body. She fell to the floor, the sword was sweating, the man rejoiced in his work.

The blaze brightened, light shone within, just as from the sky heaven's candle shines clear. He looked about the building; then he moved along the wall, raised his weapon hard by the hilt, Hygelac's thane, angry and resolute: the edge was not useless to the warrior, for he would quickly repay Grendel for the many attacks he had made on the West-Danes—many more than the one time when he slew in their sleep fifteen hearth-companions of Hrothgar, devoured men of the Danish people while they slept, and another such number bore away, a hateful prey. He had paid him his reward for that, the fierce champion, for there he saw Grendel, weary of war, lying at rest, lifeless with the wounds he had got in the fight at Heorot. The body bounded wide when it suffered the blow after death, the hard sword-swing; and thus he cut off his head.

At once the wise men—who were watching the water with Hrothgar saw that the surging waves were troubled, the lake stained with blood. Gray-haired, old, they spoke together of the good warrior, that they did not again expect of the chief that he would come victorious to seek their great king; for many agreed on it, that the sea-wolf had destroyed him.

Then came the ninth hour of the day. The brave Scyldings left the hill. The gold-friend of warriors went back to his home. The strangers sat sick at heart and stared at the mere. They wished—and did not expect—that they would see their beloved lord himself.

Then the blade began to waste away from the battle-sweat, the war-sword into battle-icicles. That was a wondrous thing, that it should all melt, most like the ice when the Father loosens the frost's fetters, undoes the water-bonds—He Who has power over seasons and times: He is the true Ruler. Beowulf did not take from the dwelling, the man of the Weather-Geats, more treasures—though he saw many there—but only the head and the hilt, bright with jewels. The sword itself had already melted, its patterned blade burned away: the blood was too hot for it, the spirit that had died there too poisonous. Quickly he was swimming, he who had lived to see the fall of his foes; he plunged up through the water. The currents were all cleansed, the great tracts of the water, when the dire spirit left her life-days and this loaned world.

Then the protector of seafarers came toward the land, swimming stout-hearted; he had joy of his sea-booty, the great burden

he had with him. They went to meet him, thanked God, the strong band of thanes, rejoiced in their chief that they might see him again sound. Then the helmet and war-shirt of the mighty one were quickly loosened. The lake drowsed, the water beneath the skies, stained with blood. They went forth on the foot-tracks, glad in their hearts, measured the path back, the known ways, men bold as kings. They bore the head from the mere's cliff, toilsomely for each of the great-hearted ones: four of them had trouble in carrying Grendel's head on spear-shafts to the gold-hall—until at last they came striding to the hall, fourteen bold warriors of the Geats; their lord, high-spirited, walked in their company over the fields to the mead-hall.

Then the chief of the thanes, man daring in deeds, enriched by new glory, warrior dear to battle, came in to greet Hrothgar. Then Grendel's head was dragged by the hair over the floor to where men drank, a terrible thing to the earls and the woman with them, an awful sight: the men looked upon it.

[FURTHER CELEBRATION AT HEOROT]

(XXIV.) Beowulf spoke, the son of Ecgtheow: "Yes, we have brought you this sea-booty, son of Healfdene, man of the Scyldings, gladly, as evidence of glory—what you look on here. Not easily did I come through it with my life, the war under water, not without trouble carried out the task. The fight would have been ended straightway if God had not guarded me. With Hrunting I might not do anything in the fight, though that is a good weapon. But the Wielder of Men granted me that I should see hanging on the wall a fair, ancient great-sword—most often He has guided the man without friends—that I should wield the weapon. Then in the fight when the time became right for me I hewed the house-guardians. Then that war-sword, wavy-patterned, burnt away as their blood sprang forth, hottest of battle-sweats. I have brought the hilt away from the foes. I have avenged the evil deeds, the slaughter of Danes, as it was right to do. I promise you that you may sleep in Heorot without care with your band of retainers, and that for none of the thanes of your people, old or young, need you have fear, prince of the Scyldings—for no life-injury to your men on that account, as you did before."

Then the golden hilt was given into the hand of the old man, the hoary war-chief—the ancient work of giants. There came into the possession of the prince of the Danes, after the fall of devils, the work of wonder-smiths. And when the hostile-hearted creature, God's enemy, guilty of murder, gave up this world, and his mother too, it passed into the control of the best of worldly kings between the seas, of those who gave treasure in the Northlands.

Hrothgar spoke—he looked on the hilt, the old heirloom, on which was written the origin of ancient strife, when the flood, rushing water, slew the race of giants—they suffered terribly: that was a people alien to the Everlasting Lord. The Ruler made them a last payment through water's welling. On the sword-guard of bright gold there was also rightly marked through runestaves, set down and told, for whom that sword, best of irons, had first been made, its hilt twisted and ornamented with snakes. Then the wise man spoke, the son of Healfdene—all were silent: "Lo, this may one say who works truth and right for the folk, recalls all things far distant, an old guardian of the land: that this earl was born the better man. Glory is raised up over the far ways—your glory over every people, Beowulf my friend. All of it, all your strength, you govern steadily in the wisdom of your heart. I shall fulfill my friendship to you, just as we spoke before. You shall become a comfort, whole and long-lasting, to your people, a help to warriors.

"So was not Heremod to the sons of Ecgwela, the Honor-Scyldings. He grew great not for their joy, but for their slaughter, for the destruction of Danish people. With swollen heart he killed his table-companions, shoulder-comrades, until he turned away from the joys of men, alone, notorious king, although mighty God had raised him in power, in the joys of strength, had set him up over all men. Yet in his breast his heart's thought grew blood-thirsty: no rings did he give to the Danes for glory. He lived joyless to suffer the pain of that strife, the long-lasting harm of the people. Teach yourself by him, be mindful of munificence. Old of winters, I tell this tale for you.

"It is a wonder to say how in His great spirit mighty God gives wisdom to mankind, land and earlship—He possesses power over all things. At times He lets the thought of a man of high lineage move in delight, gives him joy of earth in his homeland, a stronghold of men to rule over, makes regions of the world so subject to him, wide kingdoms, that in his unwisdom he may not himself have mind of his end. He lives in plenty; illness and age in no way grieve him, neither does dread care darken his heart, nor does enmity bare sword-hate, for the whole world turns to his will—he knows nothing worse—(XXV.) until his portion of pride increases and flourishes within him; then the watcher sleeps, the soul's guardian; that sleep is too sound, bound in its own cares, and the slayer most near whose bow shoots treacherously. Then is he hit in the heart, beneath his armor, with the bitter arrow—he cannot protect himself—with the crooked dark commands of the accursed spirit. What he has long held seems to him too little, angry-hearted he covets, no plated rings does he give in men's honor, and then he forgets and regards not his destiny because of what God, Wielder of Heaven, has given him before, his portion of glories. In the end it happens in turn that the loaned body weakens, falls doomed; another takes the earl's ancient treasure, one who recklessly gives precious gifts, does not fearfully guard them.

"Keep yourself against that wickedness, beloved Beowulf, best of men, and choose better—eternal gains. Have no care for pride, great warrior. Now for a time there is glory in your might: yet soon it shall be that sickness or sword will diminish your strength, or fire's fangs, or flood's surge, or sword's swing, or spear's flight, or appalling age; brightness of eyes will fail and grow dark; then it shall be that death will overcome you, warrior.

"Thus I ruled the Ring-Danes for a hundred half-years under the skies, and protected them in war with spear and sword against many nations over middle-earth, so that I counted no one as my adversary underneath the sky's expanse. Well, disproof of that came to me in my own land, grief after my joys, when Grendel, ancient adversary, came to invade my home. Great sorrow of heart I have always suffered for his persecution. Thanks be to the Ruler, the Eternal Lord, that after old strife I have come to see in my lifetime, with my own eyes, his blood-stained head. Go now to your seat, have joy of the glad feast, made famous in battle. Many of our treasures will be shared when morning comes."

The Geat was glad at heart, went at once to seek his seat as the wise one bade. Then was a feast fairly served again, for a second time, just as before, for those famed for courage, sitting about the hall.

Night's cover lowered, dark over the warriors. The retainers all arose. The gray-haired one would seek his bed, the old Scylding. It pleased the Geat, the brave shield-warrior, immensely that he should have rest. Straightway a hall-thane led the way on for the weary one, come from far country, and showed every courtesy to the thane's need, such as in those days seafarers might expect as their due.

Then the great-hearted one rested; the hall stood high, vaulted and gold-adorned; the guest slept within until the black raven, blithe-hearted, announced heaven's joy. Then the bright light came passing over the shadows. The warriors hastened, the nobles were eager to set out again for their people. Bold of spirit, the visitor would seek his ship far thence.

Then the hardy one bade that Hrunting be brought to the son of Ecgla⁸, that he take back his sword, precious iron. He spoke thanks for that loan, said that he accounted it a good war-friend,

8. I.e., Unferth.

strong in battle; in his words he found no fault at all with the sword's edge. he was a thoughtful man. And then they were eager to depart, the warriors ready in their armor. The prince who had earned honor of the Danes went to the high seat where the other was: the man dear to war greeted Hrothgar.

[Beowulf Returns Home]

(XXVI.) Beowulf spoke, the son of Ecgtheow: "Now we sea-travelers come from afar wish to say that we desire to seek Hygelac. Here we have been entertained splendidly according to our desire: you have dealt well with us. If on earth I might in any way earn more of your heart's love, prince of warriors, than I have done before with warlike deeds, I should be ready at once. If beyond the sea's expanse I hear that men dwelling near threaten you with terrors, as those who hated you did before, I shall bring you a thousand thanes, warriors to your aid. I know of Hygelac, lord of the Geats, though he is young as a guardian of the people, that he will further me with words and works so that I may do you honor and bring spears to help you, strong support where you have need of men. If Hrethric, king's son, decides to come to the court of the Geats, he can find many friends there; far countries are well sought by him who is himself strong."

Hrothgar spoke to him in answer: "The All-Knowing Lord sent those words into your mind: I have not heard a man of so young age speak more wisely. You are great of strength, mature of mind, wise of words. I think it likely if the spear, sword-grim war, takes the son of Hrethel, sickness or weapon your prince, the people's ruler, and you have your life, that the Sea-Geats will not have a better to choose as their king, as guardian of their treasure, if you wish to hold the kingdom of your kinsmen. So well your heart's temper has long pleased me, beloved Beowulf. You have brought it about that peace shall be shared by the peoples, the folk of the Geats and the Spear-Danes, and enmity shall sleep, acts of malice which they practiced before; and there shall be, as long as I rule the wide kingdom, sharing of treasures, many a man shall greet his fellow with good gifts over the sea-bird's baths; the ring-prowed ship will bring gifts and tokens of friendship over the sea. I know your people, blameless in every respect, set firm after the old way both as to foe and to friend."

Then the protector of earls, the kinsman of Healfdene, gave him there in the hall twelve precious things; he bade him with these gifts seek his own dear people in safety, quickly come back. Then the king noble of race, the prince of the Scyldings, kissed the best of thanes and took him by his neck: tears fell from the gray-haired one. He had two thoughts of the future, the old and wise man, one more strongly than the other—that they would not see each other again, bold men at council. The man was so dear to him that he might not restrain his breast's welling, for fixed in his heartstrings a deep-felt longing for the beloved man burned in his blood. Away from him Beowulf, warrior glorious with gold, walked over the grassy ground, proud of his treasure. The sea-goer awaited its owner, riding at anchor. Then on the journey the gift of Hrothgar was oft-praised: that was a king blameless in all things until age took from him the joys of his strength—old age that has often harmed many.

(XXVII.) There came to the flood the band of brave-hearted ones, of young men. They wore mail-coats, locked limb-shirts. The guard of the coast saw the coming of the earls, just as he had done before. He did not greet the guests with taunts from the cliff's top, but rode to meet them, said that the return of the warriors in bright armor in their ship would be welcome to the people of the Weather-Geats. There on the sand the broad sea-boat was loaded with armor, the ring-prowed ship with horses and rich things. The mast stood high over Hrothgar's hoard-gifts. He gave the boat-guard a sword wound with gold, so that thereafter on the mead-bench he was held the worthier for the treasure, the heirloom. The boat moved out to furrow the deep water, left the land of the Danes. Then on the mast a sea-cloth, a sail, was made fast by a rope. The boat's beams creaked: wind did not keep the sea-floater from its way over the waves. The sea-goer moved, foamy-necked floated forth over the swell, the ship with bound prow over the sea-currents until they might see the cliffs of the Geats, the well-known headlands. The ship pressed ahead, borne by the wind, stood still at the land. Quickly the harbor-guard was at the sea-side, he who had gazed for a long time far out over the currents, eager to see the beloved men. He⁹ moored the deep ship in the sand, fast by its anchor ropes, lest the force of the waves should drive away the fair wooden vessel. Then he bade that the prince's wealth be borne ashore, armor and plated gold. It was not far for them to seek the giver of treasure, Hygelac son of Hrethel, where he dwelt at home near the sea-wall, himself with his retainers.

The building was splendid, its king most valiant, set high in the hall, Hygd¹ most youthful, wise and well-taught, though she had lived within the castle walls few winters, daughter of Hæreth. For she was not niggardly, nor too sparing of gifts to the men of the Geats, of treasures. Modthryth,² good folk-queen, did

9. Beowulf.

1. Hygd is Hygelac's young queen. The suddenness of her introduction here is perhaps due to a faulty text.

2. A transitional passage introducing the contrast between Hygd's good behavior and Modthryth's bad behavior as young women of royal blood seems to have been lost. Modthryth's practice of having those who looked into her face put to death may reflect the folk-motif of the princess whose unsuccessful suitors are executed, though the text does not say that Modthryth's victims were suitors. Modthryth's "great lord" was probably her father.

dreadful deeds [in her youth]: no bold one among her retainers dared venture—except her great lord—to set his eyes on her in daylight, but [if he did] he should reckon deadly bonds prepared for him, arresting hands: that straightway after his seizure the sword awaited him, that the patterned blade must settle it, make known its death-evil. Such is no queenly custom for a woman to practice, though she is peerless—that one who weaves peace³ should take away the life of a beloved man after pretended injury. However the kinsman of Hemming stopped that:⁴ ale-drinkers gave another account, said that she did less harm to the people, fewer injuries, after she was given, gold-adorned, to the young warrior, the beloved noble, when by her father's teaching she sought Offa's hall in a voyage over the pale sea. There on the throne she was afterwards famous for generosity, while living made use of her life, held high love toward the lord of warriors, [who was] of all mankind the best, as I have heard, between the seas of the races of men. Since Offa was a man brave of wars and gifts, wide-honored, he held his native land in wisdom. From him sprang Eomer to the help of warriors, kinsman of Hemming, grandson of Garmund, strong in battle.⁵

(XXVIII.) Then the hardy one came walking with his troop over the sand on the sea-plain, the wide shores. The world-candle shone, the sun moved quickly from the south. They made their way, strode swiftly to where they heard that the protector of earls, the slayer of Ongentheow,⁶ the good young war-king, was dispensing rings in the stronghold. The coming of Beowulf was straightway made known to Hygelac, that there in his home the defender of warriors, his comrade in battle, came walking alive to the court, sound from the battle-play. Quickly the way within was made clear for the foot-guests, as the mighty one bade.

Then he sat down with him, he who had come safe through the fight, kinsman with kinsman, after he had greeted his liege lord with formal speech, loyal, with vigorous words. Haereth's daughter moved through the hall-building with mead-cups, cared lovingly for the people, bore the cup of strong drink to the hands of the warriors. Hygelac began fairly to question his companion in the high hall, curiosity pressed him, what the adventures of the

3. Daughters of kings were frequently given in marriage to the king of a hostile nation in order to bring about peace; hence Modthryth may be called "one who weaves peace."

4. Offa, an Angle king who according to legend ruled Mercia in England; who Hemming was—besides being Offa's forebear—is not known.

5. Offa, the only person that may be identified as English in this English poem, receives high praise; apparently the names of his father Garmund and son Eomer would strike a responsive chord in the poet's audience.

6. Ongentheow was a Scyfling (Swedish) king, whose story is fully told below, sections XL and XLI. In fact Hygelac was not his slayer, but is called so because he led the attack on the Scyflings in which Ongentheow was killed.

Sea-Geats had been. "How did you fare on your journey, beloved Beowulf, when you suddenly resolved to seek distant combat over the salt water, battle in Heorot? Did you at all help the wide-known woes of Hrothgar, the famous prince? Because of you I burned with seething sorrows, care of heart—had no trust in the venture of my beloved man. I entreated you long that you should in no way approach the murderous spirit, should let the South-Danes themselves settle the war with Grendel. I say thanks to God that I may see you sound."

Beowulf spoke, the son of Ecgtheow: "To many among men it is not hidden, lord Hygelac, the great encounter—what a fight we had, Grendel and I, in the place where he made many sorrows for the Victory-Scyldings, constant misery. All that I avenged, so that none of Grendel's kin over the earth need boast of that clash at night—whoever lives longest of the loathsome kind, wrapped in malice. There I went forth to the ring-hall to greet Hrothgar. At once the famous son of Healfdene, when he knew my purpose, gave me a seat with his own sons. The company was in joy: I have not seen in the time of my life under heaven's arch more mead-mirth of hall-sitters. At times the famous queen, peace-pledge of the people, went through all the hall, cheered the young men; often she would give a man a ring-band before she went to her seat. At times Hrothgar's daughter bore the ale-cup to the retainers, to the earls throughout the hall. I heard hall-sitters name her Freawaru when she offered the studded cup to warriors. Young and gold-adorned, she is promised to the fair son of Froda.⁷ That has seemed good to the lord of the Scyldings, the guardian of the kingdom, and he believes of this plan that he may, with this woman, settle their portion of deadly feuds, of quarrels.⁸ Yet most often after the fall of a prince in any nation the deadly spear rests but a little while, even though the bride is good.

"It may displease the lord of the Heatho-Bards and eachthane of that people when he goes in the hall with the woman, [that while] the noble sons of the Danes, her retainers, [are] feasted,⁹ the heirlooms of their ancestors will be shining on them¹—the hard and wave-adorned treasure of the Heatho-Bards, [which was theirs] so long as they might wield those weapons, (XXIX.) until they led to the shield-play, to destruction, their dear companions and their own lives. Then at the beer he² who sees

7. I.e., Ingeld, who succeeded his father a king of the Heatho-Bards.

8. I.e., the feud between the Danes and Heatho-Bards.

9. The text is faulty here.

1. I.e., the weapons and armor which had once belonged to the Heatho-Bards and were captured by the Danes will be worn by the Danish attendants of Hrothgar's daughter Freawaru when she goes to the Heatho-Bards to marry king Ingeld.

2. I.e., some old Heatho-Bard warrior.

the treasure, an old ash-warrior who remembers it all, the spear-death of warriors—grim is his heart—begins, sad of mind, to tempt a young fighter in the thoughts of his spirit, to awaken war-evil, and speaks this word:

“Can you, my friend, recognize that sword, the rare iron-blade, that your father, beloved man, bore to battle his last time in armor, where the Danes slew him, the fierce Scyldings, got possession of the battle-field, when Withergeld³ lay dead, after the fall of warriors? Now here some son of his murderers walks in the hall, proud of the weapon, boasts of the murder, and wears the treasure that you should rightly possess.’ So he will provoke and remind at every chance with wounding words until that moment comes that the woman’s thane,⁴ forfeiting life, shall lie dead, blood-smeared from the sword-bite, for his father’s deeds. The other escapes with his life, knows the land well. Then on both sides the oath of the earls will be broken; then deadly hate will well up in Ingeld, and his wife-love after the surging of sorrows will become cooler. Therefore I do not think the loyalty of the Heatho-Bards, their part in the alliance with the Danes, to be without deceit—do not think their friendship fast.

“I shall speak still more of Grendel, that you may readily know, giver of treasure, what the hand-fight of warriors came to in the end. After heaven’s jewel had glided over the earth, the angry spirit came, awful in the evening, to visit us where, unharmed, we watched over the hall. There the fight was fatal to Hondscioh, deadly to one who was doomed. He was dead first of all, armed warrior. Grendel came to devour him, good young retainer, swallowed all the body of the beloved men. Yet not for this would the bloody-toothed slayer, bent on destruction, go from the gold-hall empty-handed; but, strong of might, he made trial of me, grasped me with eager hand. His glove⁵ hung huge and wonderful, made fast with cunning clasps: it had been made all with craft, with devil’s devices and dragon’s skins. The fell doer of evils would put me therein, guiltless, one of many. He might not do so after I had stood up in anger. It is too long to tell how I repaid the people’s foe his due for every crime. My prince, there with my deeds I did honor to your people. He slipped away, for a little while had use of life’s joy. Yet his right hand remained as his spoor in Heorot, and he went from there abject, mournful of heart sank to the mere’s bottom.

“The lord of the Scyldings repaid me for that bloody combat

3. Apparently a leader of the Heatho-Bards in their unsuccessful war with the Danes.

4. I.e., the Danish attendant of Freawaru who is wearing the sword of his Heatho-Bard attacker’s father.

5. Apparently a large glove that could be used as a pouch.

with much plated gold, many treasures, after morning came and we sat down to the feast. There was song and mirth. The old Scylding, who has learned many things, spoke of times far-off. At times a brave one in battle touched the glad wood, the harp's joy; at times he told tales, true and sad; at times he related strange stories according to right custom; at times, again, the great-hearted king, bound with age, the old warrior, would begin to speak of his youth, his battle-strength. His heart welled within when, old and wise, he thought of his many winters. Thus we took pleasure there the livelong day until another night came to men.

"Then in her turn Grendel's mother swiftly made ready to take revenge for his injuries, made a sorrowful journey. Death had taken her son, war-hate of the Weather-Geats. The direful woman avenged her son, fiercely killed a warrior: there the life of Aeschere departed, a wise old counselor. And when morning came the folk of the Danes might not burn him, death-weary, in the fire, nor place him on the pyre, beloved man: she had borne his body away in fiend's embrace beneath the mountain stream. That was the bitterest of Hrothgar's sorrows, of those that had long come upon the people's prince. Then the king, sore-hearted, implored me by your life⁶ that I should do a man's work in the tumult of the waters, venture my life, finish a glorious deed. He promised me reward. Then I found the guardian of the deep pool, the grim horror, as is now known wide. For a time there we were locked hand in hand. Then the flood boiled with blood, and in the war-hall I cut off the head of Grendel's mother with a mighty sword. Not without trouble I came from there with my life. I was not fated to die then, but the protector of earls again gave me many treasures, the son of Healfdene.

(XXXI.) "Thus the king of that people lived with good customs. I had lost none of the rewards, the meed of my might, but he gave me treasures, the son of Healfdene, at my own choice. I will bring these to you, great king, show my good will. On your kindnesses all still depends: I have few close kinsmen besides you, Hygelac."

Then he bade bring in the boar-banner—the head-sign—the helmet towering in battle, the gray battle-shirt, the splendid sword—afterwards spoke words: "Hrothgar, wise king, gave me this armor; in his words he bade that I should first tell you about his gift: he said that king Heorogar,⁷ lord of the Scyldings, had had it for a long time; not for that would he give it, the breast-armor, to his son, bold Heorowearð, though he was loyal to him. Use it all well!"

6. I.e., "in your name."

7. Hrothgar's elder brother, whom Hrothgar succeeded as king.

I have heard that four horses, swift and alike, followed that treasure, fallow as apples. He gave him the gift of both horses and treasure. So ought kinsmen do, not weave malice-nets for each other with secret craft, prepare death for comrades. To Hygelac his nephew was most true in hard fights, and each one mindful of helping the other. I have heard that he gave Hygd the neck-ring, the wonderfully wrought treasure, that Wealhtheow had given him—gave to the king's daughter as well three horses, supple and saddle-bright. After the gift of the necklace, her breast was adorned with it.

Thus Beowulf showed himself brave, a man known in battles, of good deeds, bore himself according to discretion. Drunk, he slew no hearth-companions. His heart was not savage, but he held the great gift that God had given him, the most strength of all mankind, like one brave in battle. He had long been despised,⁸ so that the sons of the Geats did not reckon him brave, nor would the lord of the Weather-Geats do him much gift-honor on the mead-bench. They strongly suspected that he was slack, a young man unbold. Change came to the famous man for each of his troubles.

Then the protector of earls bade fetch in the heirloom of Hrethel,⁹ king famed in battle, adorned with gold. There was not then among the Geats a better treasure in sword's kind. He laid that in Beowulf's lap, and gave him seven thousand [hides of land], a hall and a throne. To both of them alike land had been left in the nation, home and native soil: to the other more especially wide was the realm, to him who was higher in rank.

[Beowulf and the Dragon]

Afterwards it happened, in later days, in the crashes of battle, when Hygelac lay dead and war-swords came to slay *Heardred*¹ behind the shield-cover, when the Battle-Scylfings, hard fighters, sought him among his victorious nation, attacked bitterly the nephew of Hereric—then the broad kingdom came into Beowulf's hand. He held it well fifty winters—he was a wise king, an old guardian of the land—until in the dark nights a certain one, a dragon, began to hold sway, which on the high heath kept watch over a hoard, a steep stone-barrow. Beneath lay a path unknown to men. By this there went inside a certain man [who made his way near to the heathen hoard; his hand took a cup, large, a shining treasure. The dragon did not afterwards conceal it though in his sleep he was tricked by the craft of the thief. That the

8. Beowulf's poor reputation as a young man is mentioned only here.

9. Hygelac's father.

1. Hygelac's son Heardred, who succeeded Hygelac as king, was killed by the Swedes (Battle-Scylfings) in his own land, as is explained more fully below, section XXXIII. His uncle Hereric was perhaps Hygd's brother.

people discovered, the neighboring folk—that he was swollen with rage].²

(XXXII.) Not of his own accord did he who had sorely harmed him³ break into the worm's hoard, not by his own desire, but for hard constraint; the slave of some son of men fled hostile blows, lacking a shelter, and came there, a man guilty of wrong-doing. As soon as he saw him,⁴ great horror arose in the stranger; [yet the wretched fugitive escaped the terrible worm . . . When the sudden shock came upon him, he carried off a precious cup.]⁵ There were many such ancient treasures in the earth-house, as in the old days some one of mankind had prudently hidden there the huge legacy of a noble race, rare treasures. Death had taken them all in earlier times, and the only one of the nation of people who still survived, who walked there longest, a guardian mourning his friends, supposed the same of himself as of them—that he might little while enjoy the long-got treasure. A barrow stood all ready on the shore near the sea-waves, newly placed on the headland, made fast by having its entrances skillfully hidden. The keeper of the rings carried in the part of his riches worthy of hoarding, plated gold; he spoke few words:

"Hold now, you earth, now that men may not, the possession of earls. What, from you good men got it first! War-death has taken each man of my people, evil dreadful and deadly, each of those who has given up this life, the hall-joys of men. I have none who wears sword or cleans the plated cup, rich drinking vessel. The company of retainers has gone elsewhere. The hard helmet must be stripped of its fair-wrought gold, of its plating. The polishers are asleep who should make the war-mask shine. And even so the coat of mail, which withstood the bite of swords after the crashing of the shields, decays like its warrior. Nor may the ring-mail travel wide on the war-chief beside his warriors. There is no harp-delight, no mirth of the singing wood, no good hawk flies through the hall, no swift horse stamps in the castle court. Baleful death has sent away many races of men."

So, sad of mind, he spoke his sorrow, alone of them all, moved joyless through day and night until death's flood reached his heart. The ancient night-ravager found the hoard-joy standing open, he who burning seeks barrows, the smooth hateful dragon who flies at night wrapped in flame. Earth-dwellers much dread him. He it is who must seek a hoard in the earth where he will guard heathen gold, wise for his winters: he is none the better for it.

2. This part of the manuscript is badly damaged, and the text within brackets is highly conjectural.

3. The dragon.

4. The dragon.

5. Several lines of the text have been lost.

So for three hundred winters the harmer of folk held in the earth one of its treasure-houses, huge and mighty, until one man angered his heart. He bore to his master a plated cup, asked his lord for a compact of peace: thus was the hoard searched, the store of treasures diminished. His requests were granted the wretched man: the lord for the first time looked on the ancient work of men. Then the worm woke; cause of strife was renewed: for then he moved over the stones, hard-hearted beheld his foe's footprints—with secret stealth he had stepped forth too near the dragon's head. (So may an undoomed man who holds favor from the Ruler easily come through his woes and misery.) The hoard-guard sought him eagerly over the ground, would find the man who had done him injury while he slept. Hot and fierce-hearted, often he moved all about the outside of the barrow. No man at all was in the emptiness. Yet he took joy in the thought of war, in the work of fighting. At times he turned back into the barrow, sought his rich cup. Straightway he found that some man had tampered with his gold, his splendid treasure. The hoard-guard waited restless until evening came; then the barrow-keeper was in rage: he would requite that precious drinking cup with vengeful fire. Then the day was gone—to the joy of the worm. He would not wait long on the sea-wall, but set out with fire, ready with flame. The beginning was terrible to the folk on the land, as the ending was soon to be sore to their giver of treasure.

(XXXIII.) Then the evil spirit began to vomit flames, burn bright dwellings; blaze of fire rose, to the horror of men; there the deadly flying thing would leave nothing alive. The worm's warfare was wide-seen, his cruel malice, near and far—how the destroyer hated and hurt the people of the Geats. He winged back to the hoard, his hidden hall, before the time of day. He had circled the land-dwellers with flame, with fire and burning. He had trust in his barrow, in his war and his wall: his expectation deceived him.

Then the terror was made known to Beowulf, quickly in its truth, that his own home, best of buildings, had melted in surging flames, the throne-seat of the Geats. That was anguish of spirit to the good man, the greatest of heart-sorrows. The wise one supposed that he had bitterly offended the Ruler, the Eternal Lord, against old law. His breast within boiled with dark thoughts—as was not for him customary. The fiery dragon with his flames had destroyed the people's stronghold, the land along the sea, the heart of the country. Because of that the war-king, the lord of the Weather-Geats, devised punishment for him. The protector of fighting men, lord of earls, commanded that a wonderful battle-shield be made all of iron. Well he knew that the wood of the forest might not help him—linden against flame. The prince good from old times was to come to the end of the days that had been lent him, life in the world, and the worm with him, though he had long held the hoarded wealth. Then the ring-prince scorned to seek the far-flier with a troop, a large army. He had no fear for himself of the combat, nor did he think the worm's war-power anything great, his strength and his courage, because he himself had come through many battles before, dared perilous straits, clashes of war, after he had purged Hrothgar's hall, victorious warrior, and in combat crushed to death Grendel's kin, loathsome race.

Nor was that the least of his hand-combats where Hygelac was slain, when the king of the Geats, the noble lord of the people, the son of Hrethel, died of sword-strokes in the war-storm among the Frisians, laid low by the blade. From there Beowulf came away by means of his own strength, performed a feat of swimming; he had on his arm the armor of thirty earls when he turned back to the sea. There was no need for the Hetware⁶ to exult in the foot-battle when they bore their shields against him: few came again from that warrior to seek their homes. Then the son of Ecgtheow swam over the water's expanse, forlorn and alone, back to his people. There Hygd offered him hoard and kingdom, rings and a prince's throne. She had no trust in her son, that he could hold his native throne against foreigners now that Hygelac was dead. By no means the sooner might the lordless ones get consent from the noble that he would become lord of Heardred or that he would accept royal power.⁷ Yet he held him up among the people by friendly counsel, kindly with honor, until he became older,⁸ ruled the Weather-Geats.

Outcasts from over the sea sought him, sons of Ohthere.⁹ They had rebelled against the protector of the Scyflings, the best of the sea-kings of those who gave treasure in Sweden, a famous lord. For Heardred that became his life's limit: because of his hospitality there the son of Hygelac got his life's wound from the strokes of a sword. And the son of Ongentheow went back to seek his home after Heardred lay dead, let Beowulf hold the royal throne, rule the Geats: that was a good king.

(XXXIV.) In later days he was mindful of repaying the prince's fall, became the friend of the destitute Eadgils;¹ with folk he

6. I.e., a tribe, with whom the Frisians were allied.

7. I.e., Beowulf refused to take the throne from the rightful heir Heardred.

8. I.e., Beowulf supported the young Heardred.

9. Ohthere succeeded his father Ongentheow as king of the Scyflings (Swedes), but after his death his brother Onela seized the throne, driving out Ohthere's sons Eanmund and Eadgils. They were given refuge at the Geatish court by Heardred, whom Onela attacked for this act of hospitality. In the fight Eanmund and Heardred were killed, and Onela left the kingdom in Beowulf's charge.

1. The surviving son of Ohthere was befriended by Beowulf, who supported him in his successful attempt to gain the Swedish throne and who killed the usurper Onela.

supported the son of Ohthere over the wide sea, with warriors and weapons. Afterwards he got vengeance by forays that brought with them cold care: he took the king's life.

Thus he had survived every combat, every dangerous battle, every deed of courage, the son of Ecgtheow, until that one day when he should fight with the worm. Then, one of twelve, the lord of the Geats, swollen with anger, went to look on the dragon. He had learned then from what the feud arose, the fierce malice to men: the glorious cup had come to his possession from the hand of the finder: he was the thirteenth of that company, the man who had brought on the beginning of the war, the sad-hearted slave—wretched, he must direct them to the place. Against his will he went to where he knew of an earth-hall, a barrow beneath the ground close to the sea-surge, to the struggling waves: within, it was full of ornaments and gold chains. The terrible guardian, ready for combat, held the gold treasure, old under the earth. It was no easy bargain for any man to obtain. Then the king, hardy in fight, sat down on the headland; there he saluted his hearth-companions, gold-friend of the Geats. His mind was mournful, restless and ripe for death: very close was the fate which should come to the old man, seek his soul's hoard, divide life from his body; not for long then was the life of the noble one wound in his flesh.

Beowulf spoke, the son of Ecgtheow: "In youth I lived through many battle-storms, times of war. I remember all that. I was seven winters old when the lord of treasure, the beloved king of the folk, received me from my father: King Hrethel had me and kept me, gave me treasure and feast, mindful of kinship. During his life I was no more hated by him as a man in his castle than any of his own sons, Herebeald and Haethcyn, or my own Hygelac. For the eldest a murder-bed was wrongfully spread through the deed of a kinsman, when Haethcyn struck him down with an arrow from his horned bow—his friend and his lord—missed the mark and shot his kinsman dead, one brother the other, with the bloody arrowhead. That was a fatal fight, without hope of recompense, a deed wrongly done, baffling to the heart; yet it had happened that a prince had to lose life unavenged.

"So it is sad for an old man to endure that his son should ride young on the gallows. Then he may speak a story, a sorrowful song, when his son hangs for the joy of the raven, and, old in years and knowing, he can find no help for him. Always with every morning he is reminded of his son's journey elsewhere. He cares not to wait for another heir in his hall, when the first through death's force has come to the end of his deeds. Sorrowful he sees in his son's dwelling the empty wine-hall, the windy resting place without joy—the riders sleep, the warriors in the grave. There is no sound of the harp, no joy in the dwelling, as there was of old. (XXXV.) Then he goes to his couch, sings a song of sorrow, one alone for one gone. To him all too wide has seemed the land and the dwelling.

"So the protector of the Weather-Geats bore in his heart swelling sorrow for Herebeald. In no way could he settle his feud with the life-slayer; not the sooner could he wound the warrior with deeds of hatred, though he was not dear to him. Then for the sorrow that had too bitterly befallen him he gave up the joys of men, chose God's light. To his sons he left—as a happy man does—his land and his town when he went from life.

"Then there was battle and strife of Swedes and Geats, over the wide water a quarrel shared, hatred between hardy ones, after Hrethel died. And the sons of Ongentheow² were bold and active in war, wanted to have no peace over the seas, but about Hreosnabeorh often devised awful slaughter. That my friends and kinsmen avenged, both the feud and the crime, as is well-known, though one of them bought it with his life, a hard bargain: the war was mortal to Haethcyn, lord of the Geats.³ Then in the morning, I have heard, one kinsman avenged the other on his slayer with the sword's edge, when Ongentheow attacked Eofor: the war-helm split, the old Scyfling fell mortally wounded: his hand remembered feuds enough, did not withstand the life-blow.

"I repaid in war the treasures that he⁴ gave me—with my bright sword, as was granted me by fate: he had given me land, a pleasant dwelling. There was not any need for him, any reason, that he should have to seek among the Gifthas or the Spear-Danes or in Sweden in order to buy with treasure a worse warrior. I would always go before him in the troop, alone in the front. And so all my life I shall wage battle while this sword endures that has served me early and late ever since I became Daeghrefn's slayer in the press—the warrior of the Hugas.⁵ He could not bring armor to the king of the Frisians, breast ornament, but fell in the fight, keeper of the standard, a noble man. Nor was my sword's edge his slayer, but my warlike grip broke open his heart-streams, his bone-house.^{*} Now shall the sword's edge, the hand and hard blade, fight for the hoard."

2. I.e., the Swedes Onela and Ohthere: the reference is, of course, to a time earlier than that referred to in section XXXIII, note 9.

3. Haethcyn had succeeded his father Hrethel as king of the Geats after his accidental killing of his brother Herebeald. When Haethcyn was killed while attacking the Swedes, he was succeeded by Hygelac, who, as the next sentence relates, avenged Haethcyn's death on Ongentheow. The death of Ongentheow is described below, sections XL and XLI.

4. Hygelac.

5. I.e., the Franks.

* bone-chamber

[BEOWULF ATTACKS THE DRAGON]

Beowulf spoke, for the last time spoke words in boast: "In my youth I engaged in many wars. Old guardian of the people, I shall still seek battle, perform a deed of fame, if the evil-doer will come to me out of the earth-hall."

Then he saluted each of the warriors, the bold helmet-bearers, for the last time—his own dear companions. "I would not bear sword, weapon, to the worm, if I knew how else according to my boast I might grapple with the monster, as I did of old with Grendel. But I expect here hot battle-fire, steam and poison. Therefore I have on me shield and mail-shirt. I will not flee a foot-step from the barrow-ward, but it shall be with us at the wall as fate allots, the ruler of every man. I am confident in heart, so I forgo help against the war-flier. Wait on the barrow, safe in your mail-shirts, men in armor—which of us two may better bear wounds after our bloody meeting. This is not your venture, nor is it right for any man except me alone that he should spend his strength against the monster, do this man's deed. By my courage I shall get gold, or war will take your king, dire life-evil."

Then the brave warrior arose by his shield; hardy under helmet he went in his mail-shirt beneath the stone-cliffs, had trust in his strength—that of one man: such is not the way of the cowardly. Then he saw by the wall—he who had come through many wars, good in his great-heartedness, many clashes in battle when troops meet together—a stone arch standing, through it a stream bursting out of the barrow: there was welling of a current hot with killing fires, and he might not endure any while unburnt by the dragon's flame the hollow near the hoard. Then the man of the Weather-Geats, enraged as he was, let a word break from his breast. Stout-hearted he shouted; his voice went roaring, clear in battle, in under the gray stone. Hate was stirred up, the hoard's guard knew the voice of a man. No more time was there to ask for peace. First the monster's breath came out of the stone, the hot war-steam. The earth resounded. The man below the barrow, the lord of the Geats, swung his shield against the dreadful visitor. Then the heart of the coiled thing was aroused to seek combat. The good war-king had drawn his sword, the old heirloom, not blunt of edge. To each of them as they threatened destruction there was terror of the other. Firm-hearted he stood with his shield high, the lord of friends, while quickly the worm coiled itself; he waited in his armor. Then, coiling in flames, he came gliding on, hastening to his fate. The good shield protected the life and body of the famous prince, but for a shorter while than his wish was. There for the first time, the first day in his life, he might not prevail, since fate did not assign him such glory in battle. The lord of the Geats raised his hand, struck the shining horror so with his forged blade that the edge failed, bright on the bone, bit less surely than its folk-king had need, hard-pressed in perils. Then because of the battle-stroke the barrow-ward's heart was savage, he exhaled death-fire—the war-flames sprang wide. The gold-friend of the Geats boasted of no great victories: the war blade had failed, naked at need, as it ought not to have done, iron good from old times. That was no pleasant journey, not one on which the famous son of Ecgtheow would wish to leave his land; against his will he must take up a dwelling-place elsewhere—as every man must give up the days that are lent him.

It was not long until they came together again, dreadful foes. The hoard-guard took heart, once more his breast swelled with his breathing. Encircled with flames, he who before had ruled a folk felt harsh pain. Nor did his companions, sons of nobles, take up their stand in a troop about him with the courage of fighting men, but they crept to the wood, protected their lives. In only one of them the heart surged with sorrows: nothing can ever set aside kinship in him who means well.

(XXXVI.) He was called Wiglaf, son of Weohstan, a rare shield-warrior, a man of the Scyflings,⁶ kinsman of Aelfhere. He saw his liege lord under his war-mask suffer the heat. Then he was mindful of the honors he had given him before, the rich dwelling-place of the Waegmundings, every folk-right such as his father possessed. He might not then hold back, his hand seized his shield, the yellow linden-wood; he drew his ancient sword. Among men it was the heirloom of Eanmund, the son of Ohthere: ⁷ Weohstan had become his slayer in battle with sword's edge—an exile without friends; and he bore off to his kin the bright-shining helmet, the ringed mail-armor, the old sword made by giants that Onela had given him,⁸ his kinsman's war-armor, ready battle-gear: he did not speak of the feud, though he had

6. Though in the next sentence Wiglaf is said to belong to the family of the Waegmundings, the Geatish family to which Beowulf belonged, he is here called a Scyfling (Swede), and immediately below his father Weohstan is represented as having fought for the Swede Onela in his attack on the Geats. But for a man to change his nation was not unusual, and Weohstan, who may have had both Swedish and Geatish blood, had evidently become a Geat long enough before to have brought up his son Wiglaf as one. The identity of Aelfhere is not known.

7. See above, section XXXIII, note 9. Not only did Weohstan support Onela's attack on the Geat king Heardred, but actually killed Eanmund whom Heardred was supporting, and it is Eanmund's sword that Wiglaf is now wielding.

8. The spoils of war belonged to the victorious king, who apportioned them among his fighters: thus Onela gave Weohstan the armor of Eanmund, whom Weohstan had killed.

killed his brother's son.⁹ He¹ held the armor many half-years, the blade and the battle-dress, until his son might do manly deeds like his old father. Then he gave him among the Geats war-armor of every kind, numberless, when, old, he went forth on the way from life. For the young warrior this was the first time that he should enter the war-storm with his dear lord. His heart's courage did not slacken, nor did the heirloom of his kinsman fail in the battle. That the worm found when they had come together.

Wiglaf spoke, said many fit words to his companions—his mind was mournful: "I remember that time we drank mead, when we promised our lord in the beer-hall—him who gave us these rings—that we would repay him for the war-arms if a need like this befell him—the helmets and the hard swords. Of his own will he chose us among the host for this venture, thought us worthy of fame—and gave me these treasures—because he counted us good war-makers, brave helm-bearers, though our lord intended to do this work of courage alone, as keeper of the folk, because among men he had performed the greatest deeds of glory, daring actions. Now the day has come that our liege lord has need of the strength of good fighters. Let us go to him, help our war-chief while the grim terrible fire persists. God knows of me that I should rather that the flame enfold my body with my gold-giver. It does not seem right to me for us to bear our shields home again unless we can first fell the foe, defend the life of the prince of the Weather-Geats. I know well that it would be no recompense for past deeds that he alone of the company of the Geats should suffer pain, fall in the fight. For us both shall there be a part in the work of sword and helmet, of battle-shirt and war-clothing."

Then he waded through the deadly smoke, bore his war-helmet to the aid of his king, spoke in few words: "Beloved Beowulf, do all well, for, long since in your youth, you said that you would not let your glory fail while you lived. Now, great-spirited noble, brave of deeds, you must protect your life with all your might. I shall help you."

After these words, the worm came on, angry, the terrible malice-filled foe, shining with surging flames, to seek for the second time his enemies, hated men. Fire advanced in waves; shield burned to the boss; mail-shirt might give no help to the young spear-warrior; but the young man went quickly under his kinsman's shield when

9. This ironic remark points out that Onela did not claim wergild or seek vengeance from Weohstan, as in other circumstances he ought to have done inasmuch as Weohstan had killed his own was consumed with flames. Then the war-king was again mindful of fame, struck with his war-sword with great strength so that it stuck in the head-bone, driven with force: Naegling broke, the sword of Beowulf failed in the fight, old and steel-gray. It was not ordained for him that iron edges might help in the combat. Too strong was the hand that I have heard strained every sword with its stroke, when he bore wound-hardened weapon to battle: he was none the better for it.

Onela's close kinsman, his nephew Eanmund: but Onela was himself trying to kill Eanmund.

1. Weohstan.

Then for the third time the folk-harmer, the fearful fire-dragon, was mindful of feuds, set upon the brave one when the chance came, hot and battle-grim seized all his neck with his sharp fangs: he was smeared with life-blood, gore welled out in waves.

(XXXVII.) Then, I have heard, at the need of the folk-king the earl at his side made his courage known, his might and his keenness—as was natural to him. He took no heed for that head,² but the hand of the brave man was burned as he helped his kinsman, as the man in armor struck the hateful foe a little lower down, so that the sword sank in, shining and engraved; and then the fire began to subside. The king himself then still controlled his senses, drew the battle-knife, biting and war-sharp, that he wore on his mail-shirt: the protector of the Weather-Geats cut the worm through the middle. They felled the foe, courage drove his life out, and they had destroyed him together, the two noble kinsmen. So ought a man be, a thane at need. To the prince that was the last moment of victory for his own deeds, of work in the world.

Then the wound that the earth-dragon had caused began to burn and to swell; at once he felt dire evil boil in his breast, poison within him. Then the prince, wise of thought, went to where he might sit on a seat near the wall. He looked on the work of giants, how the timeless earth-hall held within it stone-arches fast on pillars. Then with his hands the thane, good without limit, washed him with water, blood-besmeared, the famous prince, his beloved lord, sated with battle; and he unfastened his helmet.

Beowulf spoke—despite his wounds spoke, his mortal hurts. He knew well he had lived out his days' time, joy on earth; all passed was the number of his days, death very near. "Now I would wish to give my son my war-clothing, if any heir after me, part of my flesh, were granted. I held this people fifty winters. There was no folk-king of those dwelling about who dared approach me with swords, threaten me with fears. In my land I awaited what fate brought me, held my own well, sought no treacherous quarrels, nor did I swear many oaths unrightfully. Sick with life-wounds, I may have joy of all this, for the Ruler of Men need not blame me for the slaughter of kinsmen when life goes from my body. Now quickly go to look at the hoard under the gray stone, beloved Wiglaf, now that the worm lies sleeping from sore wounds, bereft of his treasure. Be quick now, so that I may see the ancient wealth, the golden things, may clearly look on the bright curious gems, so that for that, because of the treasure's richness, I may the more easily leave life and nation I have long held."

2. I.e., the dragon's flame-breathing head.

(XXXVIII.) Then I have heard that the son of Weohstan straightway obeyed his lord, sick with battle-wounds, according to the words he had spoken, went wearing his ring-armor, woven battle-shirt, under the barrow's roof. Then he saw, as he went by the seat, the brave young retainer, triumphant in heart, many precious jewels, glittering gold lying on the ground, wonders on the wall, and the worm's lair, the old night-flier's—cups standing there, vessels of men of old, with none to polish them, stripped of their ornaments. There was many a helmet old and rusty, many an arm-ring skillfully twisted. (Easily may treasure, gold in the ground, betray each one of the race of men, hide it who will.) Also he saw a standard all gold hang high over the hoard, the greatest of hand-wonders, linked with fingers' skill. From it came a light so that he might see the ground, look on the works of craft. There was no trace of the worm, for the blade had taken him. Then I have heard that one man in the mound pillaged the hoard, the old work of giants, loaded in his bosom cups and plates at his own desire. He took also the standard, brightest of banners. The sword of the old lord—its edge was iron—had already wounded the one who for a long time had been guardian of the treasure, waged his fire-terror, hot for the hoard, rising up fiercely at midnight, till he died in the slaughter.

The messenger was in haste, eager to return, urged on by the treasures. Curiosity tormented him, whether eagerly seeking he should find the lord of the Weather-Geats, strength gone, alive in the place where he had left him before. Then with the treasures he found the great prince, his lord, bleeding, at the end of his life. Again he began to sprinkle him with water until this word's point broke through his breast-hoard—he spoke, the king, old man in sorrow, looked on the gold: "I speak with my words thanks to the Lord of All for these treasures, to the King of Glory, Eternal Prince, for what I gaze on here, that I might get such for my people before my death-day. Now that I have bought the hoard of treasures with my old life, you attend to the people's needs hereafter: I can be here no longer. Bid the battle-renowned make a mound, bright after the funeral fire, on the sea's cape. It shall stand high on Hronesness as a reminder to my people, so that sea-travelers later will call it Beowulf's barrow, when they drive their ships far over the darkness of the seas."

He took off his neck the golden necklace, bold-hearted prince, gave it to the thane, to the young spear-warrior—gold-gleaming helmet, ring, and mail-shirt, bade him use them well. "You are the last left of our race, of the Waegmundings. Fate has swept away all my kinsmen, earls in their strength, to destined death. I have to go after." That was the last word of the old man, of the thoughts of his heart, before he should taste the funeral pyre, hot hostile flames. The soul went from his breast to seek the doom of those fast in truth.

[Beowulf's Funeral]

(XXXIX.) Then sorrow came to the young man that he saw him whom he most loved on the earth, at the end of his life, suffering piteously. His slayer likewise lay dead, the awful earth-dragon bereft of life, overtaken by evil. No longer should the coiled worm rule the ring-hoard, for iron edges had taken him, hard and battle-sharp work of the hammers, so that the wide-flier, stilled by wounds, had fallen on the earth near the treasure-house. He did not go flying through the air at midnight, proud of his property, showing his aspect, but he fell to earth through the work of the chief's hands. Yet I have heard of no man of might on land, though he was bold of every deed, whom it should prosper to rush against the breath of the venomous foe or disturb with hands the ring-hall, if he found the guard awake who lived in the barrow. The share of the rich treasures became Beowulf's, paid for by death: each of the two had journeyed to the end of life's loan.

Then it was not long before the battle-slack ones left the woods, ten weak troth-breakers together, who had not dared fight with their spears in their liege lord's great need. But they bore their shields, ashamed, their war-clothes, to where the old man lay, looked on Wiglaf. He sat wearied, the foot-soldier near the shoulders of his lord, would waken him with water: it gained him nothing. He might not, though he much wished it, hold life in his chieftain on earth nor change anything of the Ruler's: the judgment of God would control the deeds of every man, just as it still does now. Then it was easy to get from the young man a grim answer to him who before had lost courage. Wiglaf spoke, the son of Weohstān, a man sad at heart, looked on the unloved ones:

"Yes, he who will speak truth may say that the liege lord who gave you treasure, the war-gear that you stand in there, when he used often to hand out to hall-sitters on the ale-benches, a prince to his thanes, helmets and war-shirts such as he could find mightiest anywhere, both far and near—that he quite threw away the war-gear, to his distress when war came upon him. The folk-king had no need to boast of his war-comrades. Yet God, Ruler of Victories, granted him that he might avenge himself, alone with his sword, when there was need for his courage. I was able to give him little life-protection in the fight, and yet beyond my power I did begin to help my kinsman. The deadly foe was ever the weaker after I struck him with my sword, fire poured less strongly from his head. Too few defenders thronged about the prince when the hard time came upon him. Now there shall cease for your race the receiving of treasure and the giving of swords, all enjoyment of pleasant homes, comfort. Each man of your kindred must go deprived of his land-right when nobles from afar learn of your flight, your inglorious deed. Death is better for any earl than a life of blame."

(XL.) Then he bade that the battle-deed be announced in the city, up over the cliff-edge, where the band of warriors sat the whole morning of the day, sad-hearted, shield-bearers in doubt whether it was the beloved man's last day or whether he would come again. Little did he fail to speak of new tidings, he who rode up the hill, but spoke to them all truthfully: "Now the joy-giver of the people of the Weathers, the lord of the Geats, is fast on his death-bed, lies on his slaughter-couch through deeds of the worm. Beside him lies his life-enemy, struck down with dagger-wounds—with his sword he might not work wounds of any kind on the monster. Wiglaf son of Weohstan sits over Beowulf, one earl by the lifeless other, in weariness of heart holds death-watch over the loved and the hated.

"Now may the people expect a time of war, when the king's fall becomes wide-known to the Franks and the Frisians. A harsh quarrel was begun with the Hugas when Hygelac came traveling with his sea-army to the land of the Frisians, where the Hetware assailed him in battle, quickly, with stronger forces, made the mailed warrior bow; he fell in the ranks: that chief gave no treasure to his retainers. Ever since then the good will of the Merewioing king has been denied us.

"Nor do I expect any peace or trust from the Swedish people, for it is wide-known that Ongentheow took the life of Haethcyn, Hrethel's son, near Ravenswood when in their over-pride the people of the Geats first went against the War-Scylfings. Straightway the wary father of Ohthere,³ old and terrible, gave a blow in return, cut down the sea-king,⁴ rescued his wife, old woman of times past, bereft of her gold, mother of Onela and Ohthere, and then he followed his life-foes until they escaped, lordless, painfully, to Ravenswood. Then with a great army he besieged those whom the sword had left, weary with wounds, often vowed woes to the wretched band the livelong night, said that in the morning he would cut them apart with sword-blades, [hang] some on gallows-trees as sport for birds. Relief came in turn to the sorry-hearted together with dawn when they heard Hygelac's horn and trumpet, his sound as the good man came on their track with a body of retainers. (XLI.) Wide-seen was the bloody track of Swedes and Geats, the slaughter-strife of men, how the peoples stirred up the feud between them. Then the good man went with his kinsmen, old and much-mourning, to seek his stronghold: the earl Ongentheow moved further away. He had heard of the warring of Hygelac, of the war-power of the proud one. He did not trust in resistance, that he might fight off the sea-men, defend his hoard against the war-sailors, his children and wife. Instead he drew back, the old man behind his earth-wall.

"Then pursuit was offered to the people of the Swedes, the standards of Hygelac overran the stronghold as Hrethel's people pressed forward to the citadel. There Ongentheow the gray-haired was brought to bay by sword-blades, and the people's king had to submit to the judgment of Eofor alone. Wulf⁵ son of Wonred had struck him angrily with his weapon so that for the blow the blood sprang forth in streams beneath his hair. Yet not for that was he afraid, the old Scylfing, but he quickly repaid the assault with worse exchange, the folk-king, when he turned toward him. The strong son of Wonred could not give the old man a return blow, for Ongentheow had first cut through the helmet of his head so that he had to sink down, smeared with blood—fell on the earth: he was not yet doomed, for he recovered, though the wound hurt him. The hardythane of Hygelac,⁶ when his brother lay low, let his broad sword, old blade made by giants, break the great helmet across the shield-wall; then the king bowed, the keeper of the folk was hit to the quick.

3. I.e., Ongentheow.

4. I.e., Haethcyn, king of the Geats. Haethcyn's brother Hygelac, who succeeded him, was not present at this battle, but arrived after the death of Haethcyn with reinforcements to relieve the survivors and to pursue Ongentheow in his retreat to his city.

5. The two sons of Wonred, Wulf and Eofor, attacked Ongentheow in turn. Wulf was struck down but not killed by the old Swedish king, who was then slain by Eofor.

6. I.e., Eofor.

"Then there were many who bound up the brother, quickly raised him up after it was granted them to control the battle-field. Then one warrior stripped the other, took from Ongentheow his iron-mail, hard-hilted sword, and his helmet, too; he bore the arms of the hoary one to Hygelac. He accepted that treasure and fairly promised him rewards among the people, and he stood by it thus: the lord of the Geats, the son of Hrethel, when he came home, repaid Wulf and Eofor for their battle-assault with much treasure, gave each of them a hundred thousand [units] of land and linked rings: there was no need for any man on middle-earth to blame him for the rewards, since they had performed great deeds. And then he gave Eofor his only daughter as a pledge of friendship—a fair thing for his home.

"That is the feud and the enmity, the death-hatred of men, for which I expect that the people of the Swedes, bold shield-warriors after the fall of princes, will set upon us after they learn that our prince has gone from life, he who before held hoard and kingdom against our enemies, did good to the people, and further still, did what a man should. Now haste is best, that we look on the people's king there and bring him who gave us rings on his way to the funeral pyre. Nor shall only a small share melt with the great-hearted one, but there is a hoard of treasure, gold uncounted, grimly purchased, and rings bought at the last now with his own life. These shall the fire devour, flames enfold—no earl to wear ornament in remembrance, nor any bright maiden add to her beauty with neck-ring; but mournful-hearted, stripped of gold, they shall walk, often, not once, in strange countries—now that the army-leader has laid aside laughter, his game and his mirth. Therefore many a spear, cold in the morning, shall be grasped with fingers, raised by hands; no sound of harp shall waken the warriors, but the dark raven, low over the doomed, shall tell many tales, say to the eagle how he fared at the feast when with the wolf he spoiled the slain bodies."

Thus the bold man was a speaker of hateful news, nor did he much lie in his words or his prophecies. The company all arose. Without joy they went below Eamanness⁷ to look on the wonder with welling tears. Then they found on the sand, soulless, keeping his bed of rest, him who in former times had given them rings. Then the last day of the good man had come, when the war-king, prince of the Weather-Geats, died a wonderful death. First they saw the stranger creature, the worm lying loathsome, opposite him in the place. The fire-dragon was grimly terrible with his many colors, burned by the flames; he was fifty feet long in the place where he lay. Once he had joy of the air at night, came back down to seek his den. Then he was made fast by death, had made use of the last of his earth-caves. Beside him stood cups and pitchers, plates and rich swords lay eaten through by rust, just as they had been there in the bosom of the earth for a thousand winters. Then that huge heritage, gold of men of old, was wound in a spell, so that no one of men must touch the ring-hall unless God himself, the True King of Victories—He is men's protection—should grant to whom He wished to open the hoard—whatever man seemed fit to Him.

7. The headland near where Beowulf had fought the dragon.

(XLII.) Then it was seen that the act did not profit him who wrongly kept hidden the handiworks under the wall. The keeper had first slain a man like few others, then the feud had been fiercely avenged. It is a wonder where an earl famed for courage may reach the end of his allotted life—then may dwell no longer in the mead-hall, man with his kin. So it was with Beowulf when he sought quarrels, the barrow's ward: he himself did not then know in what way his parting with the world should come. The great princes who had put it⁸ there had laid on it so deep a curse until doomsday that the man who should plunder the place should be guilty of sins, imprisoned in idol-shrines, fixed with hell-bonds, punished with evils—unless the Possessor's favor were first shown the more clearly to him who desired the gold.

Wiglaf spoke, the son of Weohstan: "Often many a man must suffer distress for the will of one man, as has happened to us. We might by no counsel persuade our dear prince, keeper of the kingdom, not to approach the gold-guardian, let him lie where he long was, live in his dwelling to the world's end. He held to his high destiny. The hoard has been made visible, grimly got. What drove the folk-king thither was too powerfully fated. I have been therein and looked at it all, the rare things of the chamber, when it was granted me—not at all friendly was the journey that I was permitted beneath the earth-wall. In haste I seized with my hands a huge burden of hoard-treasures, of great size, bore it out here to my king. He was then still alive, sound-minded and aware. He spoke many things, old man in sorrow, and bade greet you, commanded that for your lord's deeds you make a high barrow in the place of his pyre, large and conspicuous, since he was of men the worthiest warrior through the wide earth, while he might enjoy wealth in his castle.

"Let us now hasten to see and visit for the second time the heap of precious jewels, the wonder under the walls. I shall direct you so that you may look on enough of them from near at hand—rings and broad gold. Let the bier be made ready, speedily prepared, when we come out, and then let us carry our prince, beloved man, where he shall long dwell in the Ruler's protection."

8. The treasure.

Then the son of Weohstan, man brave in battle, bade command many warriors, men who owned houses, leaders of the people, that they carry wood from afar for the pyre for the good man. "Now shall flame eat the chief of warriors—the fire shall grow dark—who often survived the iron-shower when the storm of arrows driven from bow-strings passed over the shield-wall—the shaft did its task, made eager by feather-gear served the arrowhead."

And then the wise son of Weohstan summoned from the host thanes of the king, seven together, the best; one of eight warriors, he went beneath the evil roof. One who walked before bore a torch in his hands. Then there was no lot to decide who should plunder that hoard, since the men could see that every part of it rested in the hall without guardian, lay wasting. Little did any man mourn that hastily they should bear out the rare treasure. Also they pushed the dragon, the worm, over the cliff-wall, let the wave take him, the flood enfold the keeper of the treasure. Then twisted gold was loaded on a wagon, an uncounted number of things, and the prince, hoary warrior, borne to Hronesness.

(XLIII.) Then the people of the Geats made ready for him a funeral pyre on the earth, no small one, hung with helmets, battle-shields, bright mail-shirts, just as he had asked. Then in the midst they laid the great prince, lamenting their hero, their beloved lord. Then warriors began to awaken on the barrow the greatest of funeral-fires; the wood-smoke climbed, black over the fire; the roaring flame mixed with weeping—the wind-surge died down—until it had broken the bone-house, hot at its heart. Sad in spirit they lamented their heart-care, the death of their liege lord. [And the Geatish woman, wavy-haired, sang a sorrowful song about Beowulf, said]⁹ again and again that she sorely feared for herself invasions of armies, many slaughters, terror of troops, humiliation, and captivity. Heaven swallowed the smoke.

Then the people of the Weather-Geats built a mound on the promontory, one that was high and broad, wide-seen by seafarers, and in ten days completed a monument for the bold in battle, surrounded the remains of the fire with a wall, the most splendid that men most skilled might devise. In the barrow they placed rings and jewels, all such ornaments as troubled men had earlier taken from the hoard. They let the earth hold the wealth of earls, gold in the ground, where now it still dwells, as useless to men as it was before. Then the brave in battle rode round the mound, children of nobles, twelve in all, would bewail their sorrow and mourn their king, recite dirges and speak of the man. They praised his great deeds and his acts of courage, judged well of his prowess. So it is fitting that man honor his liege lord with words, love him in heart when he must be led forth from the body. Thus the people of the Geats, his hearth-companions, lamented the death of their lord. They said that he was of world-kings the mildest of men and the gentlest, kindest to his people, and most eager for fame.

9. The manuscript is badly damaged and the interpretation conjectural.

THE WANDERER

The lament of The Wanderer is an excellent example of the elegiac mood so common in Old English poetry. The loss of a lord, of companions in arms, of a mead-hall (in which Anglo-Saxon life realized itself to the full) are themes that enhance the melancholy tone of Beowulf as they are the emotional basis for such a poem as the present one. But nowhere more poignantly expressed than in The Wanderer is the loneliness of the exile in search of a new lord and hall: this is what Beowulf's father, Ecgtheow, would have suffered, had it not been for Hrothgar's hospitality. To the wretched seeker all weather is wintry, for nature seems to conspire to match a man's mood as he moves over the water from one land to another, yearning for a home and kin to replace those vanished ones that still fill his thoughts.

As is true of most Old English elegiac laments, both the language and the structure of The Wanderer are difficult. At the beginning the speaker (whom the poet identifies as an "earth-walker") voices hope of finding comfort after his many tribulations. After the poet's interruption, the wanderer continues to speak—to himself—of his long search for a new home, describing how he must keep his thoughts locked within him while he makes his search. But these thoughts form the most vivid and moving part of his soliloquy—how, floating upon the sea, dazed with sorrow and fatigue, he imagines that he sees his old companions, and how, as he wakens to reality, they vanish over the water like sea-birds. The second part of the poem, beginning with the seventh paragraph ("Therefore I cannot think why * * *"), expands the theme from one man to all men in a world wasted by war and time, and the speaker draws philosophical implications from his harsh experiences (presumably now in the past). He derives such cold comfort as he can from asking the old question, Ubi sunt?—where are they who were once so glad to be alive? And he concludes with the thought that "all this earthly habitation shall be emptied" of mankind. The narrator, "wise in heart," sits apart at the council, apparently as an indication of his detachment from life. The poem concludes with a characteristic Old English injunction to practice restraint on earth, place hope only in heaven.

The Wanderer is preserved only in the Exeter Book, a manuscript copied about 975, which contains the largest surviving collection of Old English poetry.

The Wanderer¹

"He who is alone often lives to find favor, mildness of the Lord, even though he has long had to stir with his arms the frost-cold sea, troubled in heart over the water-way had to tread the tracks of exile. Fully-fixed is his fate."

So spoke the earth-walker, remembering hardships, fierce wars—slaughters—the fall of dear kinsmen.

"Often before the day dawned I have had to speak of my cares, alone: there is now none among the living to whom I dare clearly express the thought of my heart. I know indeed that it is a fine custom for a man to lock tight his heart's coffer, keep closed the hoard-case of his mind, whatever his thoughts may be. Words of a weary heart may not withstand fate, nor those of an angry spirit bring help. Therefore men eager for fame shut sorrowful thought up fast in their breast's coffer.

"Thus I, wretched with care, removed from my homeland, far from dear kinsmen, have had to fasten with fetters the thoughts of my heart—ever since the time, many years ago, that I covered my gold-friend in the darkness of the earth; and from there I crossed the woven waves, winter-sad, downcast for want of a hall, sought a giver of treasure—a place, far or near, where I might find one in a mead-hall who should know of my people, or would comfort me friendless, receive me with gladness. He who has experienced it knows how cruel a companion sorrow is to the man who has no beloved protectors. Exile's path awaits him, not twisted gold—frozen thoughts in his heart-case, no joy of earth. He recalls the hall-warriors and the taking of treasure, how in youth his gold-friend made him accustomed to feasting. All delight has gone.

"He who has had long to forgo the counsel of a beloved lord knows indeed how, when sorrow and sleep together bind the poor dweller-alone, it will seem to him in his mind that he is embracing and kissing his liege lord and laying his hands and his head on his knee, as it some times was in the old days when he took part in the gift-giving. Then he wakens again, the man with no lord, sees the yellow waves before him, the sea-birds bathe, spread their feathers, frost and snow fall, mingled with hail.

"Then the wounds are deeper in his heart, sore for want of his dear one. His sorrow renews as the memory of his kinsmen moves through his mind: he greets them with glad words, eagerly looks at them, a company of warriors. Again they fade, moving off over the water; the spirit of these fleeting ones brings to him no familiar voices. Care renews in him who must again and again send his weary heart out over the woven waves.

1. This new translation by the editor is based on the text as edited by John C. Pope in Seven Old English Poems (1966).

"Therefore I cannot think why the thoughts of my heart should not grow dark when I consider all the life of men through this world—with what terrible swiftness they forgo the hall-floor, bold young retainers. So this middle-earth each day fails and falls. No man may indeed become wise before he has had his share of winters in this world's kingdom. The wise man must be patient, must never be too hot-hearted, nor too hasty of speech, nor too fearful, nor too glad, nor too greedy for wealth, nor ever too eager to boast before he has thought clearly. A man must wait, when he speaks in boast, until he knows clearly, sure-minded, where the thoughts of his heart may turn.

"The wise warrior must consider how ghostly it will be when all the wealth of world stands waste, just as now here and there through this middle-earth wind-blown walls stand covered with frost-fall, storm-beaten dwellings. Wine-halls totter, the lord lies bereft of joy, all the company has fallen, bold men beside the wall. War took away some, bore them forth on their way; a bird carried one away over the deep sea; a wolf shared one with Death; another a man sad of face hid in an earth-pit.

"So the Maker of mankind laid waste this dwelling-place until the old works of giants stood idle, devoid of the noise of the stronghold's keepers. Therefore the man wise in his heart considers carefully this wall-place and this dark life, remembers the multitude of deadly combats long ago, and speaks these words: 'Where has the horse gone? Where the young warrior? Where is the giver of treasure? What has become of the feasting seats? Where are the joys of the hall? Alas, the bright cup! Alas, the mailed warrior! Alas, the prince's glory! How that time has gone, vanished beneath night's cover, just as if it never had been! The wall, wondrous high, decorated with snake-likenesses, stands now over traces of the beloved company. The ash-spears' might has borne the earls away—weapons greedy for slaughter, Fate the mighty; and storms beat on the stone walls, snow, the herald of winter, falling thick binds the earth when darkness comes and the night-shadow falls, sends harsh hailstones from the north in hatred of men. All earth's kingdom is wretched, the world beneath the skies is changed by the work of the fates. Here wealth is fleeting, here friend is fleeting, here man is fleeting, here woman is fleeting—all this earthly habitation shall be emptied.' "

So spoke the man wise in heart, sat apart at the council. He is good who keeps his word; a man must never utter too quickly his breast's passion, unless he knows first how to achieve remedy, as a leader with his courage. It will be well with him who seeks favor, comfort from the Father in heaven, where for us all stability resides.

THE BATTLE OF MALDON

The Battle of Maldon celebrates an event of the year 991, when a large party of Scandinavian raiders met the English defense forces on the estuary of the Blackwater River (the Pant of the poem), near Maldon in Essex. The Vikings had made a number of successful raids on seaports in the vicinity, after which they had encamped on an island near the mouth of the river. The island, since it was accessible from the mainland by a causeway that might be used only at low tide, provided a natural base from which the Vikings could continue their hit-and-run depredations on the countryside. Birhtnoth, the Earl of Essex, who was leader of the English militia, took up his position at the end of the causeway and from there was able to prevent the enemy from crossing to the mainland. As the poem relates, however, in his "overconfidence" he allowed them free passage so that a battle might take place. As a result, he was himself killed, and many of the defenders took to their heels; but the earl's retinue—his close associates and retainers—continued to fight bravely until they were overwhelmed. In the incomplete form in which the poem has come down to us we do not hear of the ultimate defeat of the English, though the grim tone and in particular the famous speech of Birhtwold prepare us for the disaster.

The unknown poet of late Anglo-Saxon times was apparently well versed in heroic English poetry of the type of Beowulf, and he does a brilliant job of adapting traditional epic mannerisms to his description of a local battle of no particular historical importance, which involved people with whom he was acquainted. The defense forces were actually no more than a home guard: inexperienced farmers and laborers conscripted for the local defense, together with a small group of aristocrats who were acquainted with heroic martial tradition but had not before had the opportunity to behave heroically. Since the defeat of the Scandinavians at Brunanburg in 937, the kingdom had enjoyed a long, peaceful respite from attack; the present Viking raid was, indeed, the beginning of a new and bloody era during which the realm that Alfred had consolidated weakened badly under Ethelred "the Unready." Godric and his brothers, who, according to the poem, fled from the battle, are representative of those Englishmen who preferred to pay tribute rather than to fight. But Birhtnoth and his retinue are of the traditional tough fiber, and it is especially in their speeches and single combats that the poet uses the epic style, contenting himself elsewhere with a forceful but generally realistic narrative of what occurred. Birhtnoth's decision to let the Vikings cross the river is treated in the epic manner as an instance of heroic overconfidence, like Beowulf's refusal to use his sword against the unarmed Grendel

—but in this case it is a gesture that leads to tragic doom. Probably Birhtnoth had a practical motive for his rashness: if the Vikings were prevented from raiding here, they would simply sail along the coast to a less well-defended spot in order to continue their depredations. Only their destruction would insure general peace; but from the local point of view, Birhtnoth's permitting the enemy to come where he could fight with them might well appear as the rashly noble act of a traditional hero.

The poem was written down in a manuscript that was reduced to charred fragments in the same fire that damaged the Beowulf manuscript. Fortunately, a transcript had been made of it before the fire, and on this modern editions depend. Even before the manuscript was burned the poem must have lacked a number of lines at its beginning and end, though most scholars feel that nothing very substantial has been lost.

The Battle of Maldon¹

Then he² commanded each of his warriors to leave his horse, drive it far away, and walk forward, trusting in his hands and in his good courage. When Offa's kinsman³ understood that the earl would not put up with cowardice, he let his beloved hawk fly from his hand toward the woods and advanced to the battle: by this men might know that the youth would not weaken in the fight once he had taken up his weapons. Eadric wished also to serve his lord the earl in the battle; he carried his spear forward to the conflict. He was of good heart as long as he might hold shield and broadsword in his hands; he carried out the vow that he had made, now that he was to fight before his lord.

Then Birhtnoth began to place his men at their stations; he rode about and advised them, taught the troops how they should stand and hold the place and bade them grasp their shields aright, firm in their hands, and have no fear. When he had arranged his folk properly, he alighted among them where it seemed best to him, where he knew his retainers to be most loyal.

Then the Vikings' herald stood on the river bank, cried out loudly, spoke words, boastfully proclaimed the seafarers' message to the earl where he stood on the shore: "Bold seamen have sent me to you, have commanded me to say to you that you must quickly send treasure in order to protect yourself; and it is better for you to buy off this spear-assault with tribute than to have us give you harsh war. There is no need for us to destroy one another, if you are rich

1. In this prose translation by the present editor, a few liberties have been taken with the text in order to make clear the references of some of the loosely used Old English terms for "warrior." The translation is in general based on the text in J. C. Pope's

Seven Old English Poems (1966).

2. Earl Birhtnoth, commander of the English defense forces.

3. Offa is mentioned later in the poem as one of Birhtnoth's principal retainers; his young kinsman is not otherwise identified.

enough to pay. With the gold we will confirm truce. If you that are highest here decide upon this, that you will ransom your people, and in return for peace give the seamen money in the amount they request, and receive peace from us, we will go to ship with the tribute, set sail on the sea, and keep peace with you."

Birhtnoth spoke, raised his shield, his slender ash-spear, uttered words, angry and resolute gave him answer: "Do you hear, sea-farer, what this folk says? They will give you spears for tribute, poisoned point and old sword, heriot⁴ that avails you not in battle. Sea-wanderers' herald, take back our answer, speak to your people a message far more hateful, that here stands with his host an undisgraced earl who will defend this country, my lord Æthelred's⁵ homeland, folk and land. Heathen shall fall in the battle. It seems to me too shameful that you should go unfought to ship with our tribute, now that you have come thus far into our land. Not so easily shall you get treasure: point and edge shall first reconcile us, grim battle-play, before we give tribute."

Then he ordered the men to bear their shields, go forward so that they all stood on the river bank. Because of the water neither band could come to the other: after the ebb, the floodtide came flowing in; currents met and crossed. It seemed to them too long a time before they might bear their spears together. On the river Pant they stood in proud array, the battle-line of the East Saxons and the men from the ash-ships. Nor might any of them injure another, unless one should receive death from the flight of an arrow.

The tide went out. The seamen stood ready, many Vikings eager for war. The earl, protector of men, bade a war-hard warrior—he was named Wulfstan, of bold lineage—to hold the bridge:⁶ he was Ceola's son, who with his spear pierced the first man bold enough to step upon the bridge. There stood with Wulfstan fearless fighters, Ælfhere and Maccus, bold men both who would not take flight from the ford, but defended themselves stoutly against the enemy as long as they might wield weapons.

When the loathed strangers saw that, and understood clearly that they would face bitter bridge-defenders there, they began to prefer words to deeds,⁷ prayed that they might have access to the bank, pass over the ford and lead their forces across. Then in his overconfidence the earl began to yield ground—too much ground—to the hateful people: Birhthelm's son began to call over the cold water while warriors listened: "Now the way is laid open for you.

4. The weapons a tenant received from his lord; they were returned to the lord upon the tenant's death.

5. King Ethelred "the Unready," who reigned from 978 to 1016.

6. Not a bridge in the modern sense, but probably a stone causeway, under water even at low tide; immediately below, it is called a ford.

7. Literally, "to practice deception"—an overstatement due to the poet's scorn for fighters who refused to do things the hard heroic way.

Come straightway to us, as men to battle. God alone knows which of us may be master of the field."

The slaughter-wolves advanced, minded not the water, a host of Vikings westward over the Pant, over the bright water bore their shields: sailors to land brought shields of linden. Opposite stood Birhtnoth with his warriors, ready for the fierce invaders. He ordered his men to form a war-hedge⁸ with their shields and to hold the formation fast against the enemy. Now was combat near, glory in battle. The time had come when doomed men should fall. Shouts were raised; ravens circled, the eagle eager for food. On earth there was uproar.

They let the file-hard spears fly from their hands, grim-ground javelins. Bows were busy, shield felt point. Bitter was the battle-rush. On either side warriors fell, young men lay dead. Wulfmær was wounded, chose the slaughter-bed: kinsman of Birhtnoth—his sister's son—he was cruelly hewn down with swords. Then requital was made to the Vikings: I have heard that Eadweard struck one fiercely with his sword, withheld not the stroke, so that the warrior fell doomed at his feet; for this his lord gave the chamberlain⁹ thanks when he had opportunity. Thus men stood firm in the battle, stern of purpose. Eagerly all these armed fighters contended with one another to see who could be the first with his weapon's point to take life from doomed man. The slain fell, carrion, to the earth. The defenders stood fast; Birhtnoth urged them on, bade each man who would win glory from the Danes to give his whole heart to the battle.

A war-hard Viking advanced, raised up his weapon, his shield to defend himself, moved against Birhtnoth. As resolute as the churl,¹ the earl advanced toward him. Each of them meant harm to the other. Then the seaman threw his southern-made² spear so that the fighters' chief was wounded. But he thrust the spear with his shield so that the shaft split and the spearhead broke off and sprang away.³ The war-chief was maddened; with his spear he stabbed the proud Viking that had given him the wound. Wise in war was the host's leader: he let his spear go through the man's neck, guided his hand so that he mortally wounded the raider. Then he quickly stabbed another, breaking through the mail-shirt: in the breast, quite through the corselet, was this one wounded; at his heart stood the poisoned point. The earl was the blither; the bold man laughed, gave thanks to God that the Lord had given him this day's work.

8. A wall of shields (a common defensive formation).

9. I.e., Eadweard.

1. Here "churl" means something like "villain."

2. Apparently the Vikings preferred weapons made in England or France—the "south."

3. The maneuver described frees the spear from the wounded man's body and enables him to take retaliatory action.

One of the Vikings loosed a javelin from his hand, let it fly from his fist, and it sped its way through Æthelred's noble thane. By the earl's side stood a lad not yet grown, a boy in the battle, son of Wulfstan, Wulfmær the young, who plucked full boldly the bloody spear from the warrior. He sent the hard spear flying back again: its point went in, and on the earth lay the man who had sorely wounded his lord. Then an armed Viking stepped toward the earl. He wished to seize the earl's war-gear, make booty of rings and ornamented sword. Then Birhtnoth took his sword from its sheath, broad and bright-edged, and struck at his assailant's coat of mail. Too soon one of the seafarers hindered him, wounded the earl in his arm. Then the gold-hilted sword fell to the earth: he might not hold the hard blade, wield his weapon. Yet he spoke words, the hoar battle-leader, encouraged his men, bade them go forward stoutly together. He might no longer stand firm on his feet. He looked toward Heaven and spoke: "I thank thee, Ruler of Nations, for all the joys that I have had in the world. Now, gentle Lord, I have most need that thou grant my spirit grace, that my soul may travel to thee—under thy protection, Prince of Angels, depart in peace. I beseech thee that fiends of hell harm it not." Then the heathen warriors slew him and both the men who stood by him; Ælfnoth and Wulfmær both were laid low; close by their lord they gave up their lives.

Then there retired from the battle those who did not wish to be there. The son of Odda was the first to flee: Godric went from the fight and left the good man that had given him many a steed. He leaped upon the horse that his lord had owned, upon trappings that he had no right to, and both his brothers galloped with him, Godwine and Godwig cared not for battle, but went from the war and sought the wood, fled to its fastness and saved their lives—and more men than was in any way right, if they remembered all the favors he had done for their benefit. So Offa had said to him that day at the meeting he had held in the place, that many there spoke boldly who would not remain firm at need.

The folk's leader had fallen, Æthelred's earl: all his hearth-companions saw that their lord lay dead. Then the proud thanes advanced; men without fear pressed eagerly on. They all desired either of two things, to leave life or avenge the man they loved. Thus Ælfric's son urged them on; the warrior young of winters spoke words; Ælfwine it was who spoke, and spoke boldly: "Remember the speeches we have spoken so often over our mead,⁴ when we raised boast on the bench, heroes in the hall, about hard fighting. Now may the man who is bold prove that he is. I will make my noble birth known to all, that I was of great kin in Mercia. My grandfather was named Ealhelm, a wise earl, worldly-prosperous. Thanes among that people shall not have reason to reproach me that I would go from this band of defenders, seek my home, now that my lord lies hewn down in battle. To me that is greatest of griefs: he was both my kinsman and my lord." Then he went forward, bent on revenge, and with the point of his spear pierced one of the pirate band, so that he lay on the earth, destroyed by the weapon. Then Ælfwine began to encourage his comrades, friends and companions, to go forward.

4. Boasting of prowess while drinking is a common element in Old English poetry.

Offa spoke, shook his ash-spear: "Lo, you, Ælfwine, have encouraged us all, thanes in need. Now that our lord the earl lies on the earth, there is need for us all that each one of us encourage the other, warriors to battle, as long as he may have and hold weapon, hard sword, spear and good blade. The coward son of Odda, Godric, has betrayed us all; when he rode off on that horse, on that proud steed, many a man thought that he was our lord. Therefore here on the field folk were dispersed, the shield-wall broken. Curses on his action, by which he caused so many men here to flee."

Leofsunu spoke, raised the linden buckler, his shield to defend himself; he answered the warrior: "I promise that I will not flee a footstep hence, but I will go forward, avenge my dear lord in the fight. Steadfast warriors about Sturmer⁵ need not reproach me with their words that now that my patron is dead I would go lordless home, abandon the battle. But weapon, point and iron, shall take me." Full wrathful he went forward, fought fiercely; flight he despised.

Then Dunnere spoke, shook his spear; humble churl,⁶ he cried over all, bade each warrior avenge Birhtnoth: "He who intends to avenge his lord on the folk may not hesitate nor care for life." Then they advanced: they cared not for life. The retainers began to fight hardily, fierce spear-bearers, and prayed God that they might avenge their patron and bring destruction to their enemies.

The hostage⁷ began to help them eagerly. He was of bold kin among the Northumbrians, the son of Ecglafr: his name was Æscferth. He did not flinch at the war-play, but threw spears without pause. Now he hit shield, now he pierced man: each moment he caused some wound, as long as he might wield weapons.

Eadweard the Long still stood in the line, ready and eager, spoke boasting words, how he would not flee a footstep nor turn back, now that his chief lay dead. He broke the shield-wall and fought against

5. The Essex village where the speaker lived.

6. I.e., freeman of the lowest rank.

7. Among Germanic peoples, hostages of high rank generally fought on the side of the warriors who held them in hostage.

the foe until he had worthily avenged his treasure-giver on the seamen—before he himself lay on the slaughter-bed.

So also did Æthelric, noble companion, eager and impetuous; he fought most resolutely, this brother of Sibirht, as did many another: they split the hollow shield and defended themselves boldly⁸. . . The shield's rim broke and the mail-shirt sang one of horror's songs. Then in the battle Offa struck the seafarer so that he fell on the earth, and there Gadd's kinsman himself sought the ground: Offa was quickly hewn down in the fight. He had, however, performed what he had promised his lord, what he had vowed before to his ring-giver, that they should either both ride to the town, hale to their home, or fall among the host, die of wounds in the slaughter-place. He lay as a thane should, near his lord.

Then there was a crash of shields. The seamen advanced, enraged by the fight. Spear oft pierced life-house of doomed man. Then Wistan advanced: Thurstan's son fought against the men. He was the slayer of three of them in the throng before the son of Wigelm⁹ lay dead in the carnage. There was stubborn conflict. Warriors stood fast in the fight. Fighting men fell, worn out with wounds: slain fell among slain.

All the while Oswald and Eadwold, brothers both, encouraged the men, with their words bade their dear kinsmen that they should stand firm at need, wield their weapons without weakness.

Birhtwold spoke, raised his shield—he was an old retainer—shook his ash-spear; full boldly he exhorted the men: "Purpose shall be the firmer, heart the keener, courage shall be the more, as our night lessens.¹ Here lies our lord all hewn down, good man on ground. Ever may he lament who now thinks to turn from war-play. I am old of life; from here I will not turn, but by my lord's side, by the man I loved, I intend to lie."

So also the son of Æthelgar encouraged them all to the battle: this Godric oft let spear go, slaughter-shaft fly on the Vikings; thus he advanced foremost among the folk, hewed and laid low until he died in the fighting: he was not that Godric who fled the battle.

8. Apparently a description of a Viking's attack on Offa has been lost.

9. Identification uncertain: perhaps Offa was the son of Wigelm.

1. These famous lines appear thus in the original: "Hige sceal þe heardra, heorte þe cenre, / mod sceal þe mare, þe ure mægen lytlaþ."

GEOFFREY CHAUCER

(ca. 1343-1400)

1370: The Book of the Duchess (first important extant poem).

1372: First Italian journey: contact with Italian literature.

1385: Troilus and Criseide.1386: Canterbury Tales begun.

Social thought in the Middle Ages lagged far behind social realities. Medieval England did not recognize the existence of any class between the aristocracy, a relatively small group that attained its position by birth alone, and the commons, which included everyone not of high birth. There was, theoretically, no way by which one might advance from the commons to the aristocracy. But in actual fact there existed a large and increasingly important middle class that was constantly infiltrating the aristocracy, and it was into this middle class that Chaucer was born. He was the son of a well-to-do wine merchant, and probably spent his boyhood in the down-to-earth atmosphere of London's Vintry, the wine-merchandising area; here, despite the privileges, especially in the way of education, that his father's wealth secured for him, he must have mixed daily with other commoners of all sorts. He might well have passed his whole life there, counting casks and money; but in his early teens he was sent to serve as a page in one of the great aristocratic households of England, that of Lionel of Antwerp, a son of the reigning monarch, Edward III. The rest of his life Chaucer spent in close association with the ruling nobility of the kingdom, not only with Lionel, but with his more powerful brother John of Gaunt; with their father King Edward; with their nephew Richard II, who succeeded to the throne in 1377; and finally with John's son Henry IV, who desposed his cousin and became king in 1399. Chaucer's wife Philippa was a member of the households of Edward's queen and of John of Gaunt's second wife, Constance of Castile, and she was doubtless of higher birth than the poet. A Thomas Chaucer, who was probably their son, was an eminent man in the next generation, and an Alice Chaucer, quite possibly Chaucer's granddaughter, was sufficiently important in her day to have been married successively to the Earl of Salisbury and the Duke of Norfolk. The theoretically unbridgeable gap between the commons and the aristocracy was thus ably bridged by the poet.

In order to accomplish this, Chaucer must have been able in other ways than as a poet, though doubtless his extraordinary poetic ability was of great service to his advancement. Yet if one were to rely merely on the preserved historical records, one would have little reason to suspect that the Geoffrey Chaucer they keep mentioning ever wrote a line of verse. We catch glimpses of him serving as a page in Lionel's household (1357); as a soldier getting himself captured by the French in one of Edward III's many sallies to the continent (1359); of his being the well-beloved valetus of Edward III (1367)—despite the term, which means “valet.” Chaucer’s duties were hardly menial—and the well-beloved servant of John of Gaunt (1374), and of receiving substantial rewards for his services; of his being sent to Italy to assist in arranging a trade agreement with the Genoese (1372), and to France, perhaps to assist in getting a royal bride for young Prince Richard (1377); of his receiving a rent-free house on the city wall of London (1374); of his keeping, “in his own hand,” the accounts for which he was responsible as Controller of the Customs and Subsidies on Wool for the port of London (1374–86)—and the wool trade was England’s largest trade; of other trips abroad on official business; of his becoming Justice of the Peace and Knight of the Shire (Member of Parliament) for the county of Kent (1385–86); of his erecting grandstands, inventorying pots and pans, and getting himself robbed as Clerk of the King’s Works (1389–91); of his being appointed deputy forester of one of the royal preserves in Somerset (1391); and—throughout his life—of his receiving grants and annuities, or having them confirmed by royal act when a new king took the throne, or asking that butts of wine given him by the crown be transformed into cash, or merely asking for money or more money. We last glimpse him, in the final months of his life, renting a house in the garden of Westminster Abbey, within a stone’s throw of Westminster Hall, the ancient seat of English government.

CHAUCER’S LITERARY CAREER

It might seem that a man so busy would have had little time to write poetry, but Chaucer seems to have been an assiduous versifier all his adult life. Unfortunately, few of his poems can be precisely dated, and some have not been preserved. Probably among his earliest works was a translation of the Roman de la Rose, a 13th-century French poem that exercised a profound influence on Chaucer’s work. The first part of the Roman is an allegory, written by Guillaume de Lorris, which tells, in the form of a dream, the progress of a youthful love affair. Guillaume left the poem unfinished, but an enormous sequel was added to it after Guillaume’s death by Jean de Meun: in this sequel the young courtier finally wins his lady (the rose), but not until Jean has discussed at great length many of the issues considered important by medieval intellectuals. The poem is a mixture of highly diverse elements, and it is characteristic of Chaucer’s love of variety that he was able to assimilate into his own work both the courtly emotionalism of Guillaume and the philosophical, often satiric, detachment of Jean. Of a 14th-century English translation of the French poem only a fragment has come down to us, and that without any mention of the translator’s name; scholars are generally agreed that the first 1700 lines of this fragment are Chaucer’s.

Chaucer’s work on the Roman is thought to have been done during the 60’s. During this decade he probably made other translations from the French, and kept on sharpening his rhetorical tools. At the end of the decade he produced his first major work (and the only one of his poems that can be accurately dated): the Book of the Duchess, probably completed in early 1369, an elegy for John of Gaunt’s first wife, the lovely Blanche of Lancaster, who died in 1368. This is at once one of Chaucer’s most derivative and most original poems: many of its octosyllabic lines are translated directly from various works by Jean Froissart, a French poet contemporary with Chaucer, and from his countryman Guillaume de Machaut as well as from other Frenchmen; yet the plan of the work is imaginative and daring, and as a whole the elegy is on a level of excellence never attained by the poets from whom Chaucer is borrowing. It is also interesting to observe how that tact which was later to earn Chaucer his status as a minor diplomat controls the direction of the poem and gives it artistic form.

In the first period of his literary activity Chaucer's specific poetic models were French, but a knowledge of writings in Latin lies behind virtually everything he wrote—although the Latin writers Chaucer read were not the same as those which we should study today. He probably had a more than adequate knowledge of the Aeneid and of Ovid in the original, but it is likely that he knew the other classical authors mostly through French translations and paraphrases. He was directly familiar with a number of (to us) cumbersome medieval Latin poems. Certainly his favorite Latin writer was Boethius, the 6th-century Roman whose Consolation of Philosophy, written while its author was in prison awaiting his execution, became one of the most valued of books for the whole Middle Ages, which never failed to find inspiration and comfort in its nobly stoic doctrine. Chaucer's own philosophical attitude, that of living wholeheartedly in the world while remaining spiritually detached from it, is at least partially a legacy from Boethius. His wooden but painstaking prose translation of the Consolation, probably made during the 70's, is only one of innumerable indications of Chaucer's reverence for the Roman writer.

The journey that Chaucer made to Italy in 1372 was in all likelihood a milestone in his literary development. Hitherto the influences upon him had been largely French and Latin, and while he may have read Italian before, it is likely that it was his Italian journey that immersed him in the works of Dante, Petrarch, and Boccaccio—the last two still alive at the time of Chaucer's visit, though he probably did not meet them. Between Chaucer and the greatest of the Italian writers, Dante, there was a large dissimilarity of temperament; yet if Chaucer could not assimilate The Divine Comedy, he nevertheless appreciated its austere moral grandeur, and his work shows its influences in subtle, oblique ways. Moreover, one of his funniest poems, the House of Fame, written sometime while he was in the customs (1374–86), may be read as a light-hearted imitation of the Comedy, though not a wholly successful one. From the works of Petrarch, also a writer of alien temperament, Chaucer obtained less, though he accords him respect on the several occasions when he mentions him. It was Boccaccio, whose cast of mind was far more congenial to Chaucer than the more sober Dante and Petrarch, who was to provide the source for some of Chaucer's finest poems—though his name is never mentioned in Chaucer's works. Many of the Canterbury Tales are indebted to one or another of Boccaccio's works, as is his lovely, cryptic love vision, the Parliament of Fowls (between 1375 and 1385). And his longest poem, Troilus and Criseide, probably completed about 1385, is an adaptation of Boccaccio's Il Filostrato ("The Love-Stricken"). The Italian work is one of considerable stature, which Chaucer reworked into one of the greatest love poems in any language. Even if he had never written the Canterbury Tales, Troilus would have secured Chaucer a place among the great English poets.

Chaucer probably began work on the Canterbury Tales in 1386, and this was his chief literary interest until his death. The old tripartite division of Chaucer's literary career which assigns him a French period (to 1372), and an Italian period (1372-85), calls this last period of his life "English." But it was not English in the same sense as the earlier periods were French and Italian (i.e., dominated by French and Italian models), for the fact is that Chaucer from the beginning to the end stands apart from the mainstream of English literature. In the Rhyme of Sir Thopas, which he assigns himself in the Canterbury Tales, the wonderful fun he makes of popular Middle English romances shows his intimate knowledge of them; and undoubtedly he had read much English writing of all kinds. Yet his notion of literary art seems to have excluded many of the common characteristics—and the characteristic vices—of what had been and was being written in English, so that it is difficult to relate his work to that of his fellow English writers. His friend John Gower is a case in point: like Chaucer, he wrote a collection of English narrative poems in his Confessio Amantis ("The Lover's Confession"), and Chaucer tells some of the same stories in the Canterbury Tales and in the Legend of Good Women. The last, which may have interrupted Chaucer's work on the Canterbury Tales in the late 80's, was apparently assigned him by some eminent person; in order to make amends for his portrait of the unfaithful Criseide, he had to write a series of short poems celebrating famous faithful women. To make each story prove exactly the same point and nothing more is something that the conventional Gower had no trouble in doing. Yet Chaucer was able to complete the tales of only nine solemnly steadfast ladies before giving up in something like despair, and the most amusing thing about his narratives is his evident exasperation with having to make everything accord to a single formula. He could not bring himself to use the simple moralistic technique of conventional English poetry, and what Gower treats seriously appears in Chaucer often to be bordering on burlesque. Every comparison between Chaucer and run-of-the-mill English poetry either so exalts him as to make the act of comparison ludicrous or else, when Chaucer is trying to behave conventionally, shows him writing with his left hand. Chaucer had no really "English" period; English poetry had little to teach the first great English poet.

CHAUCER'S ART

The extraordinary variety of the Canterbury Tales as well as their number might well have demanded their author's full energy and attention during the last fourteen years of his life, but while he was at work on them he continued, almost to the end, to perform what seem to have been full-time jobs having nothing to do with literature. Doubtless this practical business prevented him from achieving more than the 22 tales he finished; and it probably made him search his old papers for tales that he could work in without substantial revision. Yet if it reduced his literary output—which, even so, is enormous—this lifelong involvement with the practical is one of the chief reasons for his greatness as a poet. From his birth to his death he dealt continually with all sorts of people, the highest and the lowest, and his wonderfully observant mind made the most of this ever-present opportunity. His wide reading gave him plots and ideas, but his experience gave him people. As a commoner himself he had a sympathy with and understanding of the lower classes that few men who attained his ultimate station might boast of—and the lower classes must have accepted him. Similarly, he seems to have won full acceptance from the proud and important personages with whom he associated at court, and this he could not have won if he had not understood them perfectly. He understands both the high and the low, but he remains curiously detached from both, and it is detachment, perfectly balanced in his poetry by sympathy, which distinguishes Chaucer's art. Although he was born a commoner, he did not live as a commoner; and although he was accepted by the aristocracy, he must always have been conscious of the fact that he did not really belong to that society of which birth alone could make one a true member. Medieval aristocratic society arrogated to itself all idealism, and Chaucer characteristically regards life in terms of aristocratic ideals; but he never lost the ability, which for the poorer class was also a positive necessity, of regarding life as a purely practical matter. The art of being at once involved in and detached from a given situation is peculiarly Chaucer's.

In the physical realm, double vision results in a blurred image, but not so in Chaucer's poetic world, where images have often an extraordinary clarity, as if reality itself were made more real. His Prioress in the Canterbury Tales is an example of the basic human paradox which places what people are in opposition to what they think they are or pretend to be: Chaucer shows us clearly her inability to be what she professes to be, a nun; shows also the inadequacy of what she thinks a nun ought to be, a lady; and shows the great human charm of what she is, a woman. The elements of the portrait are divided between the critical and the admiring: a heavily satiric poet might well enhance the critical comment, so that our ultimate impression would be of the Prioress' weakness, while a sentimental one might enhance her amiable side so as to make that the aspect which we should remember. But in Chaucer's handling the reality comprehends both sides of the Prioress, expresses the paradox without attempting to resolve it. He appears to have been a man who had no illusions about the world or its inhabitants, but was nevertheless deeply fond of them both, and thought it worth while to keep the world spinning as well as possible, either by telling stories of high artistic truth or by counting pots and pans.

The text given here is from the present editor's Chaucer's Poetry: An Anthology for the Modern Reader (1958, 1975). For the Canterbury Tales the Hengwrt Manuscript has provided the textual basis. The spelling has been altered to improve consistency, and has been modernized in so far as is possible without distorting the phonological values of the Middle English. Discussions of Middle English pronunciation, grammar, and prosody will be found in the introduction to the period.

The Canterbury Tales Chaucer's original plan for the Canterbury Tales projected about 120 stories, two for each pilgrim to tell on the way to Canterbury and two more on the way back. Chaucer actually completed only 22, though two more exist in fragments; a modification of the original plan is seen in the assignment of one of the completed tales to a pilgrim who was not a member of the group that assembled at Southwark. The work was probably first conceived in 1386, when Chaucer was living in Greenwich, some miles east of London. From his house he might have been able to see the pilgrim road that led toward the shrine of the famous English saint, Thomas à Becket, the Archbishop of Canterbury who was murdered in his cathedral in 1170. Medieval pilgrims were notorious tale-tellers (liars, according to the austere Langland), and the sight and sound of the bands riding toward Canterbury may well have suggested to Chaucer the idea of using a fictitious pilgrimage as a "framing" device for a number of stories. Collections of stories linked by such a device were common in the later Middle Ages. Chaucer's contemporary John Gower had used one in his Confessio Amantis; earlier in the century Boccaccio had placed the hundred tales of his Decameron in the mouths of ten characters, each of whom told a tale a day for ten days; and another Italian, Giovanni Sercambi, had placed a series of stories in the mouth of the leader of a group of persons journeying on horseback. Even if, as seems likely, Chaucer was unaware of the Italian precedents, the device of the framing fiction was in the air.

Chaucer's artistic exploitation of the device is, however, altogether his own. In Gower and Sercambi, one speaker relates all the stories; and in Boccaccio, the relationship between any one of the ten speakers and the story he tells is haphazard, so that reassignment of all the stories to different speakers would not materially change the effect. But in the best of the Canterbury Tales there is a fascinating accord between the narrator and his story, so that the story takes on rich overtones from what we have learned of its teller in the General Prologue and elsewhere, and the character himself grows and is revealed by his story. Chaucer conducts two fictions simultaneously—that of the individual tale and that of the pilgrim to whom he has assigned it. He develops the second fiction not only through the General Prologue but also through the "links," the interchanges among the pilgrims between stories. These interchanges sometimes lead to animosities. Thus the Miller's Tale offends the Reeve, who, formerly a carpenter, sees himself slandered in the figure of the Miller's silly, cuckolded carpenter; and the Reeve replies with a story that scores a miller who seems very like the pilgrim Miller. Similarly the Friar and the Summoner quarrel at the end of the Wife of Bath's Prologue, so that when the Friar is called upon he tells a tale most offensive to the Summoner, who in turn retaliates with an even more offensive story about a friar. The effect of each of these tales is enhanced by the animus of its teller, while the description of the animus in the links is exciting in itself: we are given at once a story and a drama. Furthermore, the Wife of Bath's monstrous feminism sets up resonances that are felt through all the succeeding tales. Indeed, so powerful are these resonances that some see in them a thematic unifying device: the question of marriage that the Wife introduces is further treated from two opposing points of view by the Clerk and the Merchant, and is finally settled by the common sense of the Franklin. In addition to such artistic stratagems as these, the personality and mind of the reporter—a half-burlesque version of Chaucer himself—permeate the poem and enrich its meaning.

The composition of none of the tales can be accurately dated; most of them were written during the last fourteen years of Chaucer's life, though some which fail to fit their tellers may be much earlier. The popularity of the poem in late mediæval England is attested by the number of surviving manuscripts: more than 80, mostly from the 15th century. It was also twice printed by Caxton, and often reprinted by Caxton's early successors. The manuscripts reflect the unfinished state of the poem—the fact that when he died Chaucer had not made up his mind about a number of details, and hence left many inconsistencies. The poem appears in the manuscripts as nine or ten "fragments" or blocks of tales; the order of the poems within each fragment is generally the same, but the order of the fragments themselves varies widely. The fragment containing the General Prologue, the Knight's, Miller's and Reeve's Tales, and the Cook's unfinished tale, always comes first, and the fragment consisting of the Parson's Tale and the Retraction always comes last; but the others, such as that containing the Wife of Bath, the Friar, and the Summoner, or that consisting of the Physician and Pardoner, or the longest fragment consisting of six tales concluding with the Nun's Priest's, are by no means stable in relation to one another. The order followed here is one of the two that seems most nearly satisfactory.

THE GENERAL PROLOGUE

Chaucer did not need to make a pilgrimage himself in order to meet the types of people that his fictitious pilgrimage includes, for most of them had long inhabited literature as well as life: the ideal Knight, who had fought against the pagans in all the great battles of the last half-century; his son the Squire, a lover out of any love poem; the Prioress without a vocation but with the dogs and jewelry that satirical literature was always condemning nuns for; the hunting Monk and flattering Friar, chief butts of mediæval satirists; the too-busy and too-rich lawyer; the prosperous Franklin; the fraudulent Doctor; the Wife—or Archwife—of Bath; the austere Parson; and so on down through the lower orders to that flamboyant hypocrite, the Pardoner, a living vice. One meets all these types in mediæval literature, and, since literature imitates life, one might have met them also in mediæval society, as Chaucer, with his wide experience, undoubtedly did. Indeed, it has been argued that in some of his portraits he is drawing real people; but the appearance of doing so is actually a function of his art, which is able to endow types with a reality we generally associate only with people we know. Chaucer achieves this effect largely by persuading us that his own interest lies only in the visible, in what actually met his eye on the pilgrimage. He pretends to let the salient features of each pilgrim leap out directly at the reader, and does not seem to mind if some of his descriptions are from top to toe, others all toe and no top. This imitation of the way our minds actually perceive reality may make us fail to notice the care with which Chaucer has selected his details in order to give an integrated sketch of the person being described. While they are generally not full-blown literary symbols, most of these details give something more than mere verisimilitude to the description; actually, they mediate between the world of types and the world of real people. Independent bourgeois women of the time were often makers of cloth, so that the Wife of Bath's proficiency at the trade is, in one way, merely part of her historical reality; yet the first weaver of cloth was the unparadised Eve, and her descendant is an unregenerate member of the distaff side. The Franklin's red face and white beard are in the same way merely individualizing factors in the portrait; yet the red face and white beard seem always to associate themselves with a man of good will who likes good living, and since Chaucer's time they have become the distinguishing marks of a kind of mythic Franklin, Santa Claus.

The rich suggestiveness of the details is what makes the portraits worth reading again and again. One may begin by enjoying the bright if flat photographic image of reality that the reporter creates, but one will find that the initial appearance of flatness is deceptive, and that the more one rereads the more complex and significant the portraits become. Here, as elsewhere in his work, Chaucer shows himself to be a rival to Shakespeare in the art of providing entertainment on the most primitive level, and at the same time, of significantly increasing the reader's ability to comprehend reality.

From THE CANTERBURY TALES

The General Prologue 1387?

	Whan that April with his ^o showres soote ^o	its / sweet
	The droughte of March hath perced to the roote,
	And bathed every veine ¹ in swich ^o licour, ^o	such / liquid
	Of which vertu ² engendred is the flowr;
	Whan Zephyrus ³ eek ^o with his sweete breeth	also
	Inspired hath in every holt ^o and heeth ^o	grove / field
	The tendre croppes, ^o and the yonge sonne ⁴	shoots
	Hath in the Ram his halve cours yronne,
	And smale fowles maken melodye
10	That sleepen al the night with open yē ^o —	eye
	So priketh hem ^o Nature in hir corages ⁵ —	them
	Thanne longen folk to goon ^o on pilgrimages,	go
	And palmeres ⁶ for to seeken straunge strondes

1. I.e., in plants.

2. By the power of which.

3. The west wind.

4. The sun is young because it has run only halfway through its course in Aries, the Ram—the first sign of the zodiac in the solar year.

5. Their hearts.

6. Palmers, wide-ranging pilgrims—especially those who sought out the "straunge strondes" (foreign shores) of the Holy Land. "Ferne halwes": far-off shrines.

Spring

- To ferne halwes, couthe° in sondry londes; known
 15 And specially from every shires ende
 Of Engelond to Canterbury they wende,
 The holy blisful martyr⁷ for to seeke
 That hem hath holpen° whan that they were seke.° helped / sick
 Bifel that in that seson on a day,
 20 In Southwerk⁸ at the Tabard as I lay,
 Redy to wenden on my pilgrimage
 To Canterbury with ful° devout corage, very
 At night was come into that hostelrye
 Wel ninc and twenty in a compaignye
 25 Of sondry folk, by aventure° yfalle chance
 In felaweshipe, and pilgrimes were they alle
 That toward Canterbury wolden° ride. would
 The chambres and the stables weren wide,
 And wel we weren esed° at the beste.⁹ accommodated
 30 And shortly, whan the sonne was to reste,¹
 So hadde I spoken with hem everichoon° every one
 That I was of hir felaweshipe anon°, at once
 And made forward² erly for to rise,
 To take oure way ther as³ I you devise.° describe 35 But nathelees°, whil I have time and space,⁴ nevertheless
 Er° that I ferther in this tale pace°, before / pass
 Me thinketh it accordant to resoun⁵
 To telle you al the condicioun
 Of eech of hem, so as it seemed me,
 40 And whiche they were, and of what degree,
 And eek in what array that they were inne:
 And at a knight thanne° wol I first biginne. then
 A Knight ther was, and that a worthy man,
 That fro the time that he first bigan
 45 To riden out, he loved chivalrye,
 Trouthe⁶ and honour, freedom and curteisye.
 Ful worthy was he in his lordes werre,° war
 And therto hadde he riden, no man ferre,° further
 As wel in Cristendom as hethenesse,° heathen lands
 50 And⁷ evere honoured for his worthinesse.
 At Alisandre⁸ he was whan it was wonne;
 Ful ofte time he hadde the boord bigonne⁹

7. St. Thomas à Becket, murdered in Canterbury Cathedral in 1170.

8. Southwark, site of the Tabard Inn, was then a suburb of London, south of the Thames River.

9. In the best possible way.

1. Had set.

2. I.e., (we) made an agreement.

3. "Ther as": where.

4. I.e., opportunity.

5. It seems to me according to reason.

6. Integrity. "Freedom" is here generosity of spirit, while "curteisye" is courtesy.

7. I.e., and he was.

8. The Knight has taken part in campaigns fought against all three groups of pagans who threatened Europe during the 14th century: the Moslems in the Near East, from whom Alexandria was seized after a famous siege; the northern barbarians in Prussia, Lithuania, and Russia; and the Moors in North Africa. The place names in the following lines refer to battlegrounds in these continuing wars.

9. Sat in the seat of honor at military feasts.

- Aboven alle nacions in Pruce;
 In Lettou had he reised,^o and in Ruce, campaigned
 No Cristen man so ofte of his degree;
 55 In Gernade at the sege eek hadde he be
 Of Algezir, and riden in Belmarye;
 At Lyeis was he, and at Satalye,
 Whan they were wonne; and in the Grete See¹
 60 At many a noble arivee^o hadde he be. military landing
 At mortal batailes² hadde he been fiteene,
 And foughten for oure faith at Tramissene
 In listes³ thries,^o and ay^o slain his fo. thrice / always
 This ilke^o worthy Knight hadde been also same
 65 Somtime with the lord of Palatye⁴
 Again^o another hethen in Turkye; against
 And everemore he hadde a sovereign pris.^o reputation
 And though that he were worthy,⁵ he was wis,
 And of his port^o as meeke as is a maide. demeanor
 70 He nevere yit no vilainye^o ne saide rudeness
 In al his lif unto no manere wight:⁶
 He was a verray,^o parfit,^o gentil knight.⁷ highborn true / perfect
 But for to tellen you of his array;
 His hors^o were goode, but he was nat gay. horses
 75 Of fustian^o he wered^o a gipoun⁷ thick cloth / wore
 Al bismotered with his haubergeoun,⁸
 For he was late come from his viage,^o expedition
 And wente for to doon his pilgimage.
 With him ther was his sone, a yong Squier,⁹
 80 A loveur and a lusty bachelur,
 With lokkes crulle^o as they were laid in presse. curly
 Of twenty year of age he was, I gesse.
 Of his stature he was of evene^o lengthe, moderate
 And wonderly delivere,^o and of greet^o strengthe. agile / great
 85 And he hadde been som time in chivachye¹
 In Flandres, in Artois, and Picardye,
 And born him wel as of so litel space,²
 In hope to stonden in his lady^o grace. lady's Embrouded^o was he as it were a mede,³ embroidered
 90 Al ful of fresshe flowres, white and rede;^o red
 Singing he was, or floiting,^o al the day: whistling

1. The Mediterranean.

2. Tournaments fought to the death.

3. Lists, tournament grounds.

4. "The lord of Palatye" was a pagan: alliances of convenience were often made during the Crusades between Christians and pagans.

5. I.e., a valiant knight.

6. "No manere wight": any sort of person. In Middle English, negatives are multiplied for emphasis, as in these two lines: "nevere," "no," "ne," "no."

7. Tunic worn underneath the coat of mail.

8. All rust-stained from his hauberk (coat of mail).

9. The vague term "Squier" (Squire) here seems to be the equivalent of "bachelor," a young knight still in the service of an older one.

1. On cavalry expeditions. The places in the next line are sites of skirmishes in the constant warfare between the English and the French.

2. I.e., considering the little time he had been in service.

3. Mead, meadow.

- He was as fressh as is the month of May.
 Short was his gowne, with sleeves longe and wide.
 Wel coude he sitte on hors, and faire ride;
 95 He coude songes make, and wel endite,^o compose verse
 Juste⁴ and eek daunce, and wel portraye^o and write. sketch
 So hote^o he loved that by nightertale⁵ hotly
 He slepte namore than dooth a nightingale.
 Curteis he was, lowely,^o and servisable, humble
 100 And carf biforn his fader at the table.⁶
 A Yeman⁷ hadde he and servants namo^o no more
 At that time, for him liste⁸ ride so;
 And he⁹ was clad in cote and hood of greene.
 A sheef of pecok arwes,^o bright and keene, arrows
 105 Under his belt he bar^o ful thriftily;^o bore / properly
 Wel coude he dresse^o his takel^o yemanly:¹ tend to / gear
 His arwes drouped nought with fetheres lowe.
 And in his hand he bar a mighty bowe.
 A not-heed^o hadde he with a brown visage. close-cut head
 110 Of wodecraft wel coude^o he al the usage. knew
 Upon his arm he bar a gay bracer,²
 And by his side a swerd^o and a bokeler,³ sword
 And on that other side a gay daggere,
 Harneised^o wel and sharp as point of spere; mounted
 115 A Cristophre⁴ on his brest of silver sheene;^o bright
 An horn he bar, the baudrik⁵ was of greene.
 A forster^o was he soothly,^o as I gesse. forester / truly
 Ther was also a Nonne, a Prioress,⁶
 That of hir smiling was ful simple and coy.
 120 Hir gretteste ooth was but by sainte Loy!^o Eloi
 And she was cleped^o Madame Eglantine. named
 Ful wel she soong^o the service divine, sang
 Entuned^o in hir nose ful semely;⁷ chanted
 And Frenssh she spak ful faire and fetisly,^o elegantly
 125 After the scole^o of Stratford at the Bowe⁸— school
 For Frenssh of Paris was to hire unknowe.
 At mete^o wel ytaught was she withalle:^o meals / besides
 She leet^o no morsel from hir lippes falle, let
 Ne wette hir fingres in hir sauce deepe;
 130 Wel coude she carye a morsel, and wel keepe^o take care
 That no drope ne fille^o upon hir brest. should fall

4. Joust, fight in a tournament.

5. At night.

6. It was a squire's duty to carve his lord's meat.

7. The "Yeman" (Yeoman) is an independent commoner who acts as the Knight's military servant; "he" is the Knight.

8. "Him liste": it pleased him to.

9. I.e., the Yeoman.

1. In a workmanlike way.

2. Wristguard for archers.

3. Buckler (a small shield).

4. St. Christopher medal.

5. Baldric (a supporting strap).

6. The Prioress is the mother superior of her nunnery. "Simple and coy": sincere and mild.

7. In a seemly manner.

8. The French learned in a convent school in Stratford-at-the-Bow, a suburb of London, was evidently not up to the Parisian standard.

- In curteisye was set ful muchel hir lest.⁹
 Hir over-lippe wiped she so clene
 That in hir coppe^o ther was no ferthing^o seene cup / bit
 135 Of grece,^o when she dronken hadde hir draughte; grease
 Ful semely after hir mete she raughte.^o reached
 And sikerly^o she was of greet disport,¹ certainly
 And ful plesant, and amiable of port,^o mien
 And pained hire to countrefete cheere²
 140 Of court, and to been statlich^o of manere, dignified
 And to been holden digne³ of reverence.
 But, for to speken of hir conscience,
 She was so charitable and so pitous^o merciful
 She wolde weepe if that she saw a mous
 145 Caught in a trappe, if it were deed^o or bledde. dead
 Of⁴ smale houndes hadde she that she fedde
 With rosted flessch, or milk and wastelbreed;^o fine white bread
 But sore wepte she if oon of hem were deed,
 Or if men smoot it with a yerde smerte;⁵
 150 And al was conscience and tendre herte.
 Ful semely hir wimpel^o pinched^o was, headdress / pleated
 Hir nose tretis,^o hir yēn^o greye as glas, well-formed / eyes
 Hir mouth ful smal, and therto^o softe and reed,^o moreover / red
 But sikerly^o she hadde a fair forheed: certainly 155 It was almost a spanne brood,⁶ I trowe,^o believe
 For hardily,^o she was nat undergrowe. assuredly
 Ful fetis^o was hir cloke, as I was war;^o becoming / aware
 Of smal^o coral aboute hir arm she bar dainty
 A paire⁷ of bedes, gauded al with greene,
 160 And theron heeng^o a brooch of gold ful sheene,^o hung / bright
 On which ther was first writen a crowned A,⁸
 And after, Amor vincit omnia.⁹
- Another Nonne with hire hadde she
 That was hir chapelaine,^o and preestes three.¹ secretary
 165 A Monk ther was, a fair for the maistrye,²
 An outridcre³ that loved venerye,^o hunting
 A manly man, to been an abbot able.^o sub junctive worthy
 Ful many a daintee^o hors hadde he in stable, fine
 And whan he rood,^o men mighte his bridel heere rode 170 Ginglen^o in a whistling wind as clere jingle
 And eek as loude as dooth the chapel belle

9. I.e., her chief delight lay in good manners.

1. Of great good cheer.

2. And took pains to imitate the behavior.

3. And to be considered worthy.

4. I.e., some.

5. If someone struck it with a rod sharply.

6. A handsbreadth wide.

7. String (i.e., a rosary); "gauded al with greene": provided with green beads to mark certain prayers.

8. An A with an ornamental crown on it.

9. A Latin motto meaning "Love conquers all."

1. Although he here awards this charming lady three priests, Chaucer later reduces the number to one.

2. I.e., a superlatively fine one.

3. A monk charged with supervising property distant from the monastery.

- Ther as this lord was kepere of the celle.⁴
 The rule of Saint Maure or of Saint Beneit,⁵
 By cause that it was old and somdeel strait—
 175 This ilke Monk leet olde thinges pace,⁶ pass away
 And heeld⁶ after the newe world the space.⁶ held
 He yaf nought of that text a pulled hen⁷
 That saith that hunteres been⁸ nought holy men, are Ne that a monk, whan he is recchelees,⁸ 180 Is likned til⁹ a fissh that is waterlecs— to
 This is to sayn, a monk out of his cloistre;
 But thilke⁹ text heeld he nat worth an oystre. that same
 And I saide his opinion was good:
 What⁹ sholde he studye and make hiselven wood⁹ why / crazy
 185 Upon a book in cloistre alway to poure,
 Or swinke⁹ with his handes and labourc, work
 As Austin bit?⁹ How shal the world be served?
 Lat Austin have his swink to him reserved!
 Therefore he was a prikasour⁹ aright. hard rider
 190 Grehoundes he hadde as swift as fowl in flight.
 Of priking⁹ and of hunting for the hare;
 Was al his lust,⁹ for no cost wolde he spare. riding
 I sawgh his sleeves purfild⁹ at the hand pleasure
 With gris,⁹ and that the fineste of a land; fur-lined
 195 And for to festne his hood under his chin
 He hadde of gold wrought a ful curious¹ pin:
 A love-knotte in the grettere⁹ ende ther was. greater
 His heed was balled,⁹ that shoon as any glas, bald
 And eck his face, as he hadde been anoint:
 200 He was a lord ful fat and in good point;²
 His yën steepe,⁹ and rolling in his heed, protruding
 That stemed as a furnais of a leed,³
 His bootes souple,⁹ his hors in greet estat⁹— supple / condition
 Now certainly he was a fair prelat.⁴
 205 He was nat pale as a forpined⁹ gost: wasted away
 A fat swan loved he best of any rost.
 His palfrey⁹ was as brown as is a berye. saddle horse
 A Frere⁵ ther was, a wantoun and a merye,
 A limitour, a ful solempne⁹ man. pompous
 210 In alle the ordres foure is noon that can⁹ knows
 So muche of daliaunce⁹ and fair langage: flirtation

4. Keeper of an outlying cell (branch) of the monastery.

5. St. Maurus and St. Benedict, authors of monastic rules. "Somdeel strait": somewhat strict.

6. I.e., in his own lifetime (?).

7. He didn't give a plucked hen for that text.

8. Reckless, careless of rule.

9. I.e., as St. Augustine bids. St. Augustine had written that monks should perform manual labor.

1. Of careful workmanship.

2. In good shape, plump.

3. That glowed like a furnace with a pot in it.

4. Prelate (an important churchman).

5. The "Frere" (Friar) is a member of one of the four religious orders whose members live by begging; as a "limitour" (line 209) he has been granted by his order exclusive begging rights within a certain limited area.

- He hadde maad ful many a mariage
 Of yonge wommen at his owene cost;
 Unto his ordre he was a noble post.⁶
- 215 Ful wel biloved and familer was he
 With frankelains over al⁷ in his contree,
 And with worthy wommen of the town—
 For he hadde power of confessioun,
 As saide himself, more than a curat,⁸ parish priest
- 220 For of⁹ his ordre he was licenciat.⁸ by
 Ful swetely herde he confessioun,
 And plesant was his absolucioun.
 He was an esy man to yive penaunce
 Ther as he wiste to have⁹ a good pitaunce;⁹ donation
- 225 For unto a poore ordre for to yive
 Is signe that a man is wel yshrive;¹
 For if he yaf, he dorste make avaunt⁹ boast
 He wiste that a man was repentaunt;
 For many a man so hard is of his herte
- 230 He may nat weepe though him sore smerte;²
 Therfore, in stede of weeping and prayeres,
 Men mote⁹ yive silver to the poore freres.³ may
- His tipet⁹ was ay farsed⁹ ful of knives scarf / packed
 And pinnes, for to yiven faire wives;
- 235 And certainly he hadde a merye note;
 Wel coude he singe and playen on a rote;⁹ fiddle
 Of yeddinges he bar outrely the pris.⁴
 His nekke whit was as the flowr-de-lis;⁹ lily
 Therto he strong was as a champioun.
- 240 He knew the tavernes wel in every town,
 And every hostiler⁹ and tappestere,⁹ innkeeper / barmaid
 Bet⁹ than a lazarus⁵ or a beggestere. better
 For unto swich a worthy man as he Accorded nat, as by his facultee,⁶
- 245 To have with sike⁹ lazarus aquaintaunce: sick
 It is nat honeste,⁹ it may nought avaunce,⁹ dignified / profit
 For to delen with no swich poraile,⁷
 But al with riche, and selleres of vitaille;⁹ foodstuffs
 And over al ther as profit sholde arise,
- 250 Curteis he was, and lowely of servise.
 Ther was no man nowher so vertuous:⁹ efficient
 He was the beste beggere in his hous.⁹ friary

6. I.e., pillar.

7. I.e., with franklins everywhere. Franklins were well-to-do country men.

8. I.e., licensed to hear confessions.

9. Where he knew he would have.

1. Shrive, absolved.

2. Though he is sorely grieved.

3. Before granting absolution, the confessor must be sure the sinner is contrite; moreover, the absolution is contingent upon the sinner's performance of an act of satisfaction. In the case of Chaucer's Friar, a liberal contribution served both as proof of contrition and as satisfaction.

4. He absolutely took the prize for ballads.

5. Leper; "beggestere": female beggar.

6. It was not suitable because of his position.

7. I.e., poor people. The oldest order of friars had been founded by St. Francis to administer to the spiritual needs of precisely those classes the Friar avoids.

- And yaf a certain ferme for the graunt:⁸
 Noon of his bretheren cam ther in his haunt.⁹
 255 For though a widwe° hadde nought a sho,° widow / shoe
 So plesant was his *In principio*¹
 Yit wolde he have a ferthing° er he wente; small coin
 His purchas was wel better than his rente.²
 And rage he coude as it were right a whelpe;³
 260 In love-dayes⁴ ther coude he muchel° helpe, much
 For ther he was nat lik a cloisterer,
 With a thredbare cope, as is a poore scoler,
 But he was lik a maister⁵ or a pope.
 Of double worstede was his semicope,° short robe
 265 And rounded as a belle out of the presse.° bell-mold
 Somwhat he lipped° for his wantounesse° lisped / affectation
 To make his Englissh sweete upon his tonge;
 And in his harping, whan he hadde songe,° sung
 His yē twinkled in his heed aright
 270 As doon the sterres° in the frosty night. stars
 This worthy limitour was cleped Huberd. named
 A Marchant was ther with a forked beerd,
 In motelee,⁶ and hve on hors he sat,
 Upon his heed a Flandrissh° bevere hat, Flemish 275 His bootes clasped faire and fetisly.° elegantly
 His resons° he spak ful solempnely, opinions
 Souning° alway th'encrees of his winning. sounding
 He wolde the see were kept for any thing⁷
 Bitwixen Middelburgh and Orewelle.
 280 Wel coude he in eschaunge sheeldes⁸ selle.
 This worthy man ful wel his wit bisette:° employed
 Ther wiste° no wight that he was in dette, knew
 So statly° was he of his governaunce,⁹ dignified
 With his bargaines,¹ and with his chevisaunce.
 285 Forsoothe he was a worthy man withalle;
 But, sooth to sayn, I noot° how men him calle. don't know
 A Clerk² ther was of Oxenforde also
 That unto logik hadde longe ygo.³
 As lene was his hors as is a rake,

8. And he paid a certain rent for the privilege of begging.

9. Assigned territory.

1. A friar's usual salutation (John i.1): "In the beginning (was the Word)."

2. I.e., the money he got through such activity was more than his regular income.

3. And he could flirt wantonly, as if he were a puppy.

4. Days appointed for the settlement of lawsuits out of court.

5. A man of recognized learning.

6. Motley, a cloth of mixed color.

7. I.e., he wished the sea to be guarded at all costs. The sea route between Middelburgh (in the Netherlands) and Orwell (in Suffolk) was vital to the Merchant's export and import of wool—the basis of England's chief trade at the time.

8. Shields, écus (French coins): he could speculate profitably (if illegally) in foreign exchange.

9. The management of his affairs.

1. Bargainings; "chevisaunce": borrowing.

2. The Clerk is a student at Oxford; in order to become a student, he would have had to signify his intention of becoming a cleric, but he was not bound to proceed to a position of responsibility in the church.

3. Who had long since matriculated in philosophy.

- 290 And he was nought right fat, I undertake,
 But looked holwe,^o and therto sobrecly. hollow
 Ful thredbare was his overeste courtpey,⁴
 For he hadde geten him yit no benefice,
 Ne was so worldly for to have office.^o secular employment
- 295 For him was levere⁵ have at his beddes heed
 Twenty bookes, clad in blak or reed,
 Of Aristotle and his philosophye,
 Than robes riche, or fithele,^o or gay sautrye.⁶ fiddle
 But al be that he was a philosophre⁷
 Yit hadde he but litel gold in cofre;^o coffer
 300 But al that he mighte of his freendes hente,^o take
 On bookes and on lerning he it spente,
 And bisily gan for the soules praye
 Of hem that yaf him wherwith to scoleye.^o study
- 305 Of studye took he most cure^o and most hecde. care
 Nought oo^o word spak he more than was neede, one
 And that was said in forme⁸ and reverence,
 And short and quik,^o and ful of heigh sentence.⁹ lively
 Souning^o in moral vertu was his speeche, resounding
- 310 And gladly wolde he lerne, and gladly teche.
 A Sergeant of the Lawe,¹ war and wis,
 That often hadde been at the Parvis²
 Ther was also, ful riche of excellence.
 Discreet he was, and of greet reverence—
- 315 He seemed swich, his wordes weren so wise.
 Justice he was ful often in assise^o circuit courts
 By patente³ and by plein^o commissioun. full
 For his science^o and for his heigh renown knowledge
 Of fees and robes hadde he many oon.
- 320 So greet a purchasour^o was nowher noon; speculator in land
 Al was fee simple⁴ to him in effect—
 His purchasing mighte nat been infect.⁵
 Nowher so bisy a man as he ther nas;^o was not
 And yit he seemed bisier than he was.
- 325 In termes⁶ hadde he caas and doomes alle
 That from the time of King William⁷ were falle.
 Therto he coude endite and make a thing,⁸
 Ther coude no wight pinchen^o at his writing; cavil
 And every statut coude^o he plein^o by rote.⁹ knew / entire
- 330 He rood but hoornly^o in a medlee cote,¹ unpretentiously

4. Outer cloak. "Benefice": ecclesiastical living.

5. He would rather.

6. Psalter (a kind of harp).

7. The word may also mean "alchemist."

8. With decorum.

9. Elevated thought.

1. The Sergeant is not only a practicing lawyer, but one of the high justices of the nation. "War and wis": wary and wise.

2. The "Paradise," a meeting place for lawyers and their clients.

3. Royal warrant.

4. "Fee simple": owned outright without legal impediments.

5. Invalidated on a legal technicality.

6. I.e., by heart. "Caas and doomes": lawcases and decisions.

7. I.e., the Conqueror (reigned 1066–87).

8. Compose and draw up a deed.

9. By heart.

1. A coat of mixed color. "Ceint": belt; "barres": transverse stripes.

Girt with a ceint of silk, with barres smale.
Of his array telle I no lenger tale.

A Frankelain² was in his compaignye:

Whit was his beerd as is the dayesye,^o daisy

335 Of his complexion he was sanguin.³

Wel loved he by the morwe a sop in win.⁴

To liven in delit^o was evere his wone,^o sensual delight / wont

For he was Epicurus⁵ owene sone,

That heeld opinion that plein^o delit full

340 Was verray felicitee parfit.

An housholdere and that a greet was he:

Saint Julian⁶ he was in his contree.

His breed, his ale, was always after oon;⁷

A bettre envined^o man was nevere noon. wine-stocked

345 Withouten bake mete was nevere his hous,

Of fissh and flessch, and that so plenteuous^o plenteous

It snewed^o in his hous of mete and drinke, snowed

Of alle daintees that men coude thinke.

After^o the sondry sesons of the yeer according to 350 So chaunged he his mete⁸ and his soper.

Ful many a fat partrich hadde he in mewe,^o cage

And many a breem,^o and many a luce^o in stewe.⁹ carp / pike

Wo was his cook but if his sauce were

Poinant^o and sharp; and redy all his gere. pungent

355 His table dormant in his halle alway

Stood redy covered all the longe day.¹

At sessions² ther was he lord and sire.

Ful ofte time he was Knight of the Shire.

An anlaas^o and a gipser^o al of silk

dagger / purse

360 Heeng at his girdel,³ whit as morne^o milk. morning

A shirreve^o hadde he been, and countour.⁴ sheriff

Was nowher swich a worthy vavasour.⁵

An Haberdasshere and a Carpenter,

A Webbe,^o a Dyere, and a Tapicer^o — weaver / tapestry-maker

365 And they were clothed alle in oo liverce⁶

Of a solempne and gret fraternitee.

Ful fresshe and newe hir gere apiked^o was;

polished

Hir knives were chaped^o nought with bras, mounted

2. The "Frankelain" (Franklin) is a prosperous country man, whose lower-class ancestry is no impediment to the importance he has attained in his county.

3. A reference to the fact that the Franklin's temperament is dominated by blood as well as to his red face.

4. I.e., in the morning he was very fond of a piece of bread soaked in wine.

5. The Greek philosopher whose teaching is popularly believed to make pleasure the chief goal of life.

6. The patron saint of hospitality.

7. Always of the same high quality.

8. Dinner; "soper": supper.

9. Fishpond.

1. Tables were usually dismounted when not in use, but the Franklin kept his mounted and set ("covered"), hence "dormant."

2. I.e., sessions of the justices of the peace. "Knight of the Shire": county representative in Parliament.

3. Hung at his belt.

4. Auditor of county finances.

5. Member of an upper, but not an aristocratic, feudal class.

6. In one livery, i.e., the uniform of their "fraternitee" or guild, a partly religious, partly social organization.

- But al with silver; wrought ful clene and weel
 370 Hir girdles and hir pouches everydeel.^o altogether
 Wel seemed eech of hem a fair burgeis^o burgher
 To sitten in a yeldehalle^o on a dais. guildhall
 Everich, for the wisdom that he can,⁷
 Was shaply^o for to been an alderman. suitable 375 For catel^o hadde they ynough and rente,^o property / income
 And eek hir wives wolde it wel assente—
 And elles certain were they to blame:
 It is ful fair to been ycleped "Madame,"
 And goon to vigilies⁸ all bifore,
 380 And have a mantel royalliche ybore.⁹
 A Cook they hadde with hem for the nones,¹ marrowbones
 To boile the chiknes with the marybones,^o
 And powdre-marchant tart and galingale.²
 Wel coude he knowe^o a draughte of London ale. recognize 385 He coude roste, and seethe,^o and broile, and frye, boil
 Maken mortreux,^o and wel bake a pie. stews
 But greet harm was it, as it thoughte^o me, seemed to
 That on his shing a mormal^o hadde he. ulcer
 For blankmanger,³ that made he with the beste.
 390 A Shipman was ther, woning^o fer by weste— dwelling
 For ought I woot,^o he was of Dertemouthe.⁴ know
 He rood upon a rouncy^o as he couthe,⁵ large nag
 In a gowne of falding^o to the knee. heavy wool
 A daggere hanging on a laas^o hadde he strap
 395 Aboute his nekke, under his arm adown.
 The hote somer hadde maad his hewe^o al brown; color
 And certainly he was a good felawe.
 Ful many a draughte of win hadde he drawe⁶
 Fro Burdeuxward,⁷ whil that the chapman sleep:
 400 Of nice^o conscience took he no keep,^o fastidious / heed
 If that he faught and hadde the hyer hand,
 By water he sente hem hoom to every land.
 But of his craft, to rekene wel his tides,
 His stremes^o and his daungers^o him bisides,⁸ currents / hazards
 405 His herberwe^o and his moonc, his lodcmenage,⁹ anchorage
 There was noon swich from Hulle to Cartage.¹
 Hardy he was and wis to undertake;
 With many a tempest hadde his beerd been shake;
 He knew alle the havnes^o as they were harbors

7. Was capable of.

8. Feasts held on the eve of saints' days. "Al bifore": i.e., at the head of the procession.

9. Royally carried.

1. For the occasion.

2. "Powdre-marchant" and "galingale" are flavoring materials.

3. An elaborate stew.

4. Dartmouth, a port in the southwest of England.

5. As best he could.

6. Drawn, i.e., stolen.

7. From Bordeaux; i.e., while carrying wine from Bordeaux (the wine center of France). "Chapman sleep": merchant slept.

8. Around him.

9. Pilotage.

1. From Hull (in northern England) to Cartagena (in Spain).

- 410 Fro Gotlond to the Cape of Finistere,²
 And every crike° in Britaine° and in Spaine. inlet / Brittany
 His barge ycleped was the Maudelaine.° Magdalene
 With us ther was a Doctour of Physik:° medicine
 In al this world ne was ther noon him lik
 415 To speken of physik and of surgerye.
 For° he was grounded in astronomye,° because / astrology
 He kepte° his pacient a ful greet deel³ tended to
 In houres⁴ by his magik naturel.
 Wel coude he fortunen the ascendent
 420 Of his images⁵ for his pacient.
 He knew the cause of every maladye,
 Were it of hoot or cold or moiste or drye,
 And where engendred and of what humour:°⁶
 He was a verray parfit praktisour.⁷
 425 The cause yknowe,° and of his harm the roote, known
 Anoon he yaf the sike man his boote.° remedy
 Ful redy hadde he his apothecaries
 To senden him drogges° and his letuaries,° drugs / medicines
 For eech of hem made other for to winne:
 430 Hir frendshiþe was nought newe to biginne.
 Wel knew he the olde Esculapius,⁸
 And Deiscorides and eek Rufus,
 Olde Ipocras, Hali, and Galien,
 Serapion, Razis, and Avicen,
 435 Averrois, Damascien, and Constantin,
 Bernard, and Gatesden, and Gilbertin.
 Of his diete mesurable° was he, moderate
 For it was of no superfluitee,
 But of greet norissing° and digestible. nourishment
 440 His studye was but litel on the Bible.
 In sanguin° and in pers° he clad was al, blood-red / blue
 Lined with taffata and with sendal;° silk

2. From Gotland (an island in the Baltic) to Finisterre (the westernmost point in Spain).

3. Closely.

4. I.e., the astrologically important hours (when conjunctions of the planets might help his recovery). "Magik naturel": natural—as opposed to black—magic.

5. Assign the propitious time, according to the position of stars, for using talismanic images. Such images, representing either the patient himself or points in the zodiac, were thought to be influential on the course of the disease.

6. Diseases were thought to be caused by a disturbance of one or another of the four bodily "humors," each of which, like the four elements, was a compound of two of the elementary qualities mentioned in line 422: the melancholy humor, seated in the black bile was cold and dry (like earth); the sanguine, seated in the blood, hot and moist (like air); the choleric, seated in the yellow bile, hot and dry (like fire); the phlegmatic, seated in the phlegm, cold and moist (like water).

7. True perfect practitioner.

8. The Doctor is familiar with the treatises that the Middle Ages attributed to the "great names" of medical history, whom Chaucer names in lines 431–36: the purely legendary Greek demigod Aesculapius; the Greeks Dioscorides, Rufus, Hippocrates, Galen, and Serapion; the Persians Hali and Rhazes; the Arabians Avicenna and Averroës; the early Christians John (?) of Damascus and Constantine Afer; the Scotsman Bernard Gordon; the Englishmen John of Gatesden and Gilbert, the former an early contemporary of Chaucer.

- And yit he was but esy of dispence;⁹ expenditure
 He kepte that he wan in pestilence.⁹
- 445 For^o gold in physik is a cordial,¹ because Therfore he loved gold in special.
- A good Wif was ther of biside Bathe,
 But she was somdcel deef, and that was scathe.^o a pity
 Of cloth-making she hadde swich an haunt,^o practice
 450 She passed^o hem of Ypres and of Gaunt.² surpassed
 In al the parisshe wif ne was ther noon
 That to the offering³ biforn hire sholde goon,
 And if ther dide, certain so wroth^o was she angry
 That she was out of alle charitec.
- 455 Hir coverchiefs ful fine were of ground^o— texture
 I dorste^o swere they weyeden^o ten pound dare / weighed
 That on a Sonday weren^o upon hir heed. were Hir hosen weren of fin scarlet reed,^o red
 Ful straite yteyd,⁴ and shoes ful moiste^o and newe. unworn
- 460 Bold was hir face and fair and reed of hewe.
 She was a worthy womman al hir live:
 Housbondes at chirche dore⁵ she hadde five,
 Withouten other compaignye in youthe—
 But therof needeth nought to speke as nouthe.^o now
- 465 And thries hadde she been at Jerusalem;
 She hadde passed many a straunge^o streem; foreign
 At Rome she hadde been, and at Boloigne,
 In Galice at Saint Jame, and at Coloigne;⁶
 She coude^o muchel of wandring by the waye. knew
- 470 Gat-toothed^o was she, soothly for to saye. gap-toothed
 Upon an amblere⁷ esily she sat,
 Ywimpled^o wel, and on hir heed an hat veiled
 As brood as is a bokeler or a targe,⁸
 A foot-mantel^o aboute hir hipes large, riding skirt
 475 And on hir feet a paire of spores^o sharpe. spurs
 In felawshipe wel coude she laughe and carpe.^o talk
 Of remedies of love she knew parchaunce,^o as it happened
 For she coude of that art the olde daunce.⁹
- A good man was ther of religioun,
 480 And was a poore Person^o of a town, parson
 But riche he was of holy thought and werk.
 He was also a lerned man, a clerk,
 That Cristes gospel trewely^o wolde preche; faithfully

9. He saved the money he made during the plague time.

1. A stimulant. Gold was thought to have some medicinal properties.

2. Ypres and Ghent ("Gaunt") were Flemish cloth-making centers.

3. The offering in church, when the congregation brought its gifts forward.

4. Tightly laced.

5. In medieval times, weddings were performed at the church door.

6. Rome; Boulogne (in France); St. James (of Compostella) in Galicia (Spain); Cologne (in Germany): all sites of shrines much visited by pilgrims.

7. Horse with an easy gait.

8. "Bokeler" and "targe": small shields.

9. I.e., she knew all the tricks of that trade.

His parisshe^o devoutly wolde he teche. parishioners
 485 Benigne he was, and wonder^o diligent, wonderfully
 And in adversitee ful pacient,
 And swich he was preved^o ofte sithes.^o proved / times
 Ful loth were him to cursen for his tithes,¹
 But rather wolde he yiven, out of doute,²
 490 Unto his poore parisshe^o aboute
 Of his offring³ and eek of his substaunce:^o property
 He coude in litel thing have suffisaunce.^o sufficiency
 Wid was his parisshe, and houses fer asonder,
 But he ne lafte^o nought for rain ne thonder, neglected
 495 In siknesse nor in meschief,^o to visite misfortune
 The ferreste^o in his parisshe, muche and lite,⁴ farthest
 Upon his feet, and in his hand a staf.
 This noble ensample^o to his sheep he yaf example
 That first he wroughte,⁵ and afterward he taughte.
 500 Out of the Gospel he tho^o wordes caughte,^o those / took
 And this figure he added eek therto:
 That if gold ruste, what shal iren do?
 For if a preest be foul, on whom we truste,
 No wonder is a lewed^o man to ruste. uneducated
 505 And shame it is, if a preest take keep,^o heed
 A shiten^o shepherde and a clene sheep. befouled
 Wel oughte a preest ensample for to yive
 By his clenness how that his sheep sholde live.
 He sette nought his benefice⁶ to hire
 510 And leet his sheep encombred in the mire
 And ran to London, unto Sainte Poules,⁷
 To seeken him a chaunterye⁸ for soules,
 Or with a bretherhede to been withholde,⁹
 But dwelte at hoom and kepte wel his folde,
 515 So that the wolf ne made it nought miscarye:
 He was a shepherde and nought a mercenarye.
 And though he holy were and vertuous,
 He was to sinful men nought despitous,^o scornful
 Ne of his speche daungerous^o ne digne,^o disdainful / haughty
 520 But in his teching discreet and benigne,
 To drawen folk to hevene by fairnesse
 By good ensample—this was his bisnesse.
 But it^o were any persone obstinat, if there
 What so he were, of heigh or lowe estat,

1. He would be most reluctant to invoke excommunication in order to collect his tithes.

2. Without doubt.

3. The offering made by the congregation of his church was at the Parson's disposal.

4. Great and small.

5. I.e., he practiced what he preached.

6. I.e., his parish. A priest might rent his parish to another and take a more profitable position. "Leet": i.e., he did not leave.

7. St. Paul's Cathedral.

8. Chantry, i.e., a foundation that employed priests for the sole duty of saying masses for the souls of certain persons. St. Paul's had many of them.

9. Or to be employed by a brotherhood; i.e., to take a lucrative and fairly easy position as chaplain with a parish guild.

- 525 Him wolde he snibben° sharply for the nones:¹ scold
 A bettre preest I trowe° ther nowher noon is. believe
 He waited after² no pompe and reverence,
 Ne maked him a spiced conscience.³
 But Cristes lore° and his Apostles twelve teaching
 530 He taughte, but first he folwed it himselve.
 With him ther was a Plowman, was his brother,
 That hadde ylad° of dong° ful many a fother.⁴ carried / dung
 A trewe swinkere° and a good was he, worker
 Living in pees° and parfit charitee. peace
 535 God loved he best with al his hoole° herte whole
 At alle times, though him gamed or smerte,⁵
 And thanne his neighebor right as himselve.
 He wolde thresshe, and therto dike° and delve, dig ditches
 For Cristes sake, for every poore wight, 540 Withlouten hire, if it laye in his might.
 His tithes payed he ful faire and wel,
 Bothe of his propre swink⁶ and his catel.[°] property
 In a tabard° he rood upon a mere.[°] short coat / mare
 Ther was also a Reeve° and a Millere, estate manager
 545 A Somnour, and a Pardoner⁷ also,
 A Manciple,[°] and myself—ther were namo. steward
 The Millere was a stout carl° for the nones. fellow
 Ful big he was of brawn° and eek of bones— muscle
 That preved⁸ wel, for overal ther he cam
 550 At wrastling he wolde have alway the ram.⁹
 He was short-shuldred, brood,[°] a thikke knarre.[°] broad / bully
 Ther was no dore that he nolde heve of harre,¹
 Or breke it at a renning° with his heed.[°] running / head
 His beerd as any sowe or fox was reed,[°] red
 555 And therto brood, as though it were a spade;
 Upon the cop° right of his nose he hade ridge
 A werte,[°] and theron stood a tuft of heres, wart
 Rede as the bristles of a sowes ercs;
 His nosethirles° blake were and wide. nostrils
 560 A swerd and a bokeler° bar° he by his side. shield / bore
 His mouth as greet was as a greet furnais.[°] furnace
 He was a janglere° and a Goliardais,² chatterer
 And that was most of sinne and harlotries.[°] obscenities
 Wel coude he stelen corn and tollen thries³—

1. On any occasion.

2. I.e., expected.

3. Nor did he assume an overfastidious conscience.

4. Load.

5. Whether he was pleased or grieved.

6. His own work.

7. "Somnour" (Summoner): server of summonses to the ecclesiastical court; Pardoner: dispenser of papal pardons.

See lines 625 and 671, and notes, below.

8. Proved, i.e., was evident.

9. A ram was frequently offered as the prize in wrestling.

1. He would not heave off (its) hinge.

2. Goliard, teller of ribald stories.

3. Take toll thrice—i.e., deduct from the grain far more than the lawful percentage.

- 565 And yit he hadde a thombe⁴ of gold, pardee.^o by heaven
 A whit cote and a blew hood wered^o he. wore
 A baggepipe wel coude he blowe and soun^o, sound
 And therewithal^o he broughte us out of towne. therewith
- A gentil Manciple⁵ was ther of a temple,
 570 Of which achatours^o mighte take exemple buyers of food
 For to been wise in bying of vitaile,^o victuals
 For wheither that he paide or took by taile,⁶
 Algate he waited so in his achat⁷
 That he was ay biforn⁸ and in good stat.
- 575 Now is nat that of God a ful fair grace
 That swich a lewed^o mannes wit shal pace^o ignorant / surpass
 The wisdom of an heap of lerned men?
 Of maistres^o hadde he mo than thries ten masters
 That weren of lawe expert and curious,^o cunning
 580 Of whiche ther were a dozeine in that hous
 Worthy to been stiwardes of rente^o and lond income
 Of any lord that is in Engelond,
 To make him live by his propre good⁹
 In honour dettelees but if¹ he were wood,^o insane
 585 Or live as scarsly^o as him list^o desire, sparely / it pleases
 And able for to helpen al a shire
 In any caas^o that mighte falle^o or happe, event / befall
 And yit this Manciple sette hir aller cappe!²
- The Reeve³ was a splendre^o colerik man; slender
 590 His beerd was shave as neigh^o as evere he can; close
 His heer was by his eres ful round yshorn;
 His top was dokked⁴ lik a preest biforn;
 Ful longe were his legges and ful lene,
 Ylik a staf, ther was no calf yseene.^o visible
 595 Wel coude he keepe^o a gerner^o and a binne— guard / granary
 Ther was noon auditour coude on him winne.⁵
 Wel wiste^o he by the drouhte and by the rain knew
 The yeelding of his seed and of his grain.
 His lordes sheep, his neet,^o his dayerve, cattle dairy
 600 His swin, his hors, his stoor,^o and his pultrye stock
 Was hoolly^o in this Reeves governinge, wholly
 And by his covenant yaf⁶ the rekeninge,
 Sin^o that his lord was twenty-yeer of age. since

4. Thumb. The narrator seems to be questioning the validity of the adage that (only) an honest miller has a golden thumb.

5. The Manciple is the steward of a community of lawyers in London (a "temple").

6. By talley, i.e., on credit.

7. Always he was on the watch in his purchasing.

8. I.e., ahead of the game. "Stat": financial condition.

9. His own money.

1. Out of debt unless.

2. This Manciple made fools of them all.

3. The Reeve is the superintendent of a large farming estate; "colerik" (choleric) describes a man whose dominant humor is yellow bile (choler)—i.e., a hot-tempered man.

4. Cut short: the clergy wore the head partially shaved.

5. I.e., find him in default.

6. And according to his contract he gave.

- There coude no man bringe him in arrerage.⁷
 605 Ther nas baillif, hierde, nor other hinc,
 That he ne knew his sleighte and his covine⁸—
 They were adrad⁹ of him as of the deeth.[°] afraid / plague
 His woning[°] was ful faire upon an heeth;[°] dwelling / meadow
 With grene trees shadwed was his place.
 610 He coude bettre than his lord purchace.[°] acquire goods
 Ful riche he was astored[°] prively.[°] stocked / secretly
 His lord wel coude he plesen subtilly,
 To yive and lene[°] him of his owene good,[°] lend / property
 And have a thank, and yit a cote and hood.
 615 In youthe he hadde lerned a good mister:[°] occupation
 He was a wel good wrighte, a carpenter.
 This Reeve sat upon a ful good stot[°] stallion
 That was a pomely[°] grey and highte[°] Scot. dapple / was named
 A long surcote[°] of pers[°] upon he hade,⁹ overcoat / blue
 620 And by his side he bar[°] a rusty blade. bore
 Of Northfolk was this Reeve of which I telle,
 Biside a town men clepen Baldeswelle.[°] Bawdswell
 Tukked¹ he was as is a frere aboute,
 And evcre he rood the hindreste of oure route.²
 625 A Somnour³ was ther with us in that place
 That hadde a fir-reed[°] cherubinnes⁴ face, fire-red
 For saucefleem[°] he was, with yën narwe, pimply
 And hoot[°] he was, and lecherous as a sparwe,[°] hot / sparrow
 With scaled[°] browes blake and piled⁵ beerd: scabby
 630 Of his visage children were aferd.[°] afraid
 Ther nas quiksilver, litarge, ne brimstoon,
 Boras, ceruce, ne oile of tartre noon,⁶
 Ne oinment that wolde clense and bite,
 That him mighte helpen of his whelkes[°] white, blotches
 635 Nor of the knobbes[°] sitting on his cheekes. lumps
 Wel loved he garlek, oinons, and eek leekes,
 And for to drinke strong win reed as blood.
 Thanne wolde he speke and crye as he were wood;[°] mad
 And whan that he wel dronken hadde the win,
 640 Thanne wolde he speke no word but Latin:
 A fewe termes hadde he, two or thre,
 That he hadde lerned out of som decree;
 No wonder is—he herde it al the day,

7. Convict him of being in arrears financially.

8. There was no bailiff (i.e., foreman), shepherd, nor other farm laborer whose craftiness and plots he didn't know.

9. "Upon he hade": he had on.

1. With clothing tucked up.

2. Hindmost of our group.

3. The "Somnour" (Summoner) is an employee of the ecclesiastical court, whose defined duty is to bring to court persons whom the archdeacon—the justice of the court—suspects of offenses against canon law. By this time, however, summoners had generally transformed themselves into corrupt detectives who spied out offenders and blackmailed them by threats of summonses.

4. Cherub's, often depicted in art with a red face.

5. Uneven, partly hairless.

6. These are all ointments for diseases affecting the skin, probably diseases of venereal origin.

- And eek ye knowe wel how that a jay° parrot
 645 Can clepen "Watte"⁷ as wel as can the Pope—
 But whoso coude in other thing him grope°, examine Thanne hadde he spent all his philosophye;⁸
 Ay *Questio quid juris*⁹ wolde he crye.
 He was a gentil harlot° and a kinde; rascal
 650 A bettre felawe sholde men nought finde:
 He wolde suffre°, for a quart of win, permit
 A good felawe to have his concubin
 A twelfmonth, and excusen him at the fulle;¹
 Ful prively a finch eek coude he pulle.²
 655 And if he foond° owher° a good felawe found / anywhere
 He wolde techen him to have noon awe
 In swich caas of the Ercecekenes curs,³
 But if⁴ a mannes soule were in his purs,
 For in his purs he sholde ypunished be.
 660 "Purs is the Ercecekenes helle," saide he.
 But wel I woot he lied right in deede:
 Of cursing° oughthe eech gilty man drede, excommunication
 For curs wol slee° right as assoiling° savith— slay / absolution
 And also war him of a significavit.⁵
 665 In daunger° hadde he at his owene gise° disposal
 The yonge girles of the diocese,
 And knew hir conseil°, and was al hir reed.⁷ secrets
 A gerland hadde he set upon his heed
 As greet as it were for an ale-stake;⁸
 670 A bokeler hadde he maad him of a cake.
 With him ther rood a gentil Pardonere° comrade
 Of Rouncival, his freend and his compeer°, sang
 That straight was comen fro the Court of Rome.
 Ful loude he soong°, "Com hider, love, to me."
 675 This Somnour bar to him a stif burdoun.¹ trumpet
 Was nevere trompe° of half so greet a soun.
 This Pardonere hadde heer as yelow as wax,
 But smoothe it heeng° as dooth a strike° of hung / hank / flax flex;°
 By ounces² henge his lokkes that he hadde,

7. Call out: "Walter"—like modern parrots' "Polly."

8. I.e., learning.

9. "What point of law does this investigation involve?": a phrase frequently used in ecclesiastical courts.

1. "At the fulle": fully. Ecclesiastical courts had jurisdiction over many offenses which today would come under civil law, including sexual offenses.

2. "To pull a finch" is to have carnal dealings with a woman.

3. Archdeacon's sentence of excommunication.

4. "But if": unless.

5. And also one should be careful of a significavit (the writ which transferred the guilty offender from the ecclesiastical to the civil arm for punishment).

6. Under his domination.

7. Was their chief source of advice.

8. A tavern was signalized by a pole ("ale-stake"), rather like a modern flagpole, projecting from its front wall; on this hung a garland, or "bush."

9. A Pardonere dispensed papal pardon for sins to those who contributed to the charitable institution that he was licensed to represent; this Pardonere purported to be collecting for the hospital of Roncesvalles ("Rouncival") in Spain, which had a London branch.

1. I.e., provided him with a strong vocal accompaniment.

2. I.e., thin strands.

- 680 And therwith he his shuldres overspradde,^o overspread
 But thinne it lay, by colpons,^o oon by oon; strands
 But hood for jolitee^o wered^o he noon, nonchalance / wore
 For it was trussed up in his walet:^o pack
 Him thoughte he rood al of the newe jet.^o fashion
- 685 Dischevelee^o save his cappe he rood al bare. with hair down
 Swiche glaring yēn hadde he as an hare.
 A vernicle³ hadde he sowed upon his cappe,
 His walet biforn him in his lappe,
 Bretful^o of pardon, comen from Rome al hoot.^o brimful / hot
- 690 A vois he hadde as smal^o as hath a goot;^o fine / goat
 No beerd hadde he, ne nevere sholde have;
 As smoothe it was as it were late yshave:
 I trowe^o he were a gelding or a mare. believe
 But of his craft, fro Berwik into Ware,⁴
- 695 Ne was ther swich another pardoner;
 For in his male^o he hadde a pilwe-beer^o bag / pillowcase
 Which that he saide was Oure Lady veil;
 He saide he hadde a gobet^o of the sail piece
 That Sainte Peter hadde whan that he wente
- 700 Upon the see, til Jesu Crist him hente.^o seized
 He hadde a crois^o of laton,^o ful of stones, cross / brassy metal
 And in a glas he hadde pigges bones,
 But with thise relikes⁵ whan that he foond^o found
 A poore person^o dwelling upon lond,⁶ parson
- 705 Upon^o a day he gat^o him more moneye in / got
 Than that the person gat in monthes twaye;
 And thus with feined^o flaterye and japes^o false / tricks
 He made the person and the peple his apes.^o dupes
 But trewely to tellen at the laste,
- 710 He was in chirche a noble ecclesiaste;
 Wel coude he rede a lesson and a storye,^o liturgical narrative
 But alderbest^o he soong an offertorye, best of all
 For wel he wiste^o whan that song was songe, knew
 He moste^o preche and wel affile^o his tonge must / sharpen
- 715 To winne silver, as he ful wel coude—
 Therfore he soong the mericrly^o and loude. more merrily
 Now have I told you soothly in a clause⁷
 Th'estaat, th'array, the nombre, and eek the cause
 Why that assembled was this compaignye
- 720 In Southwerk at this gentil hostelrye
 That highte the Tabard, faste^o by the Belle;⁸ close
 But now is time to you for to telle
 How that we baren us⁹ that ilke^o night same

3. Portrait of Christ's face as it was said to have been impressed on St. Veronica's handkerchief.

4. Probably towns south and north of London.

5. Relics—i.e., the pigs' bones which the Pardoner represented as saints' bones.

6. "Upon lond": upcountry.

7. I.e., in a short space.

8. Another tavern in Southwark.

9. Bore ourselves.

- Whan we were in that hostelrye alight;
 725 And after wol I telle of oure viage,^o trip
 And al the remenant of oure pilgrimage.
 But first I praye you of youre curteisye
 That ye n'arette it nought my vilainye¹
 Though that I plainly speke in this matere
 730 To telle you hir wordes and hir cheere,^o behavior
 Ne though I speke hir wordes proprely,^o accurately
 For this ye knowen also wel as I:
 Who so shal telle a tale after a man
 He moot^o reherce,^o as neigh as evere he can, must / repeat
 735 Everich a word, if it be in his charge,^o responsibility
 Al speke he² nevere so rudeliche and large,^o broadly
 Or elles he moot telle his tale untrewe,
 Or feine^o thing, or finde^o wordes newe; falsify / devise
 He may nought spare³ although he were his brother:
 740 He moot as wel saye oo word as another.
 Crist spak himself ful brode^o in Holy Writ, broadly
 And wel ye woot no vilainye is it;
 Eek Plato saith, who so can him rede,
 The wordes mote be cosin to the deede.
 745 Also I praye you to foryive it me
 Al^o have I nat set folk in hir degree although
 Here in this tale as that they sholde stonde:
 My wit is short, ye may wel understonde.
 Greet cheere made oure Host⁴ us everichoon,
 750 And to the soper sette he us anon.^o at once
 He served us with vitaille^o at the beste. food
 Strong was the win, and wel to drinke us leste.^o it pleased
 A semely man oure Hoste was withalle
 For to been a marchal⁵ in an halle;
 755 A large man he was, with yēn steepe,^o prominent
 A fairer burgeis^o was ther noon in Chepe⁶— burgher
 Bold of his speeche, and wis, and wel ytaught,
 And of manhood him lakkede right naught.
 Eek therto he was right a merye man,
 760 And after soper playen he bigan,
 And spak of mirthe amonges othere thinges—
 Whan that we hadde maad oure rekeninges⁷—
 And saide thus, “Now, lordinges, trewely,
 Ye been to me right welcome, hertely.^o heartily
 765 For by my trouthe, if that I shal nat lie,
 I sawgh nat this veer so merye a compaignye
 At ones in this herberwe^o as is now. inn

1. That you do not charge it to my lack of decorum.

2. Although he speak.

3. I.e., spare anyone.

4. The Host is the landlord of the Tabard Inn.

5. Marshal, one who was in charge of feasts.

6. Cheapside, bourgeois center of London.

7. Had paid our bills.

- Fain° wolde I doon you mirthe, wiste I⁸ how. gladly
 And of a mirthe I am right now bithought,
 770 To doon you ese, and it shal coste nought.
 “Ye goon to Canterbury—God you speede;
 The blisful martyr quite you youre meede.⁹
 And wel I woot as ye goon by the waye
 Ye shapen you¹ to taken° and to playe, converse
 775 For trewely, confort ne mirthe is noon
 To ride by the waye domb as stoon;° stone
 And therefore wol I maken you disport
 As I saide erst,° and doon you som confort; before
 And if you liketh alle, by oon assent,
 780 For to stonden at² my juggement,
 And for to werken as I shal you saye,
 Tomorwe whan ye riden by the waye—
 Now by my fader° soule that is deed, father's
 But° ye be merye I wol yive you myn heed!° unless / head
 785 Holde up youre handes withouten more speeche.”
 Oure counseil was nat longe for to seeche;° seek Us thoughte it was nat worth to make it wis,³
 And graunted him withouten more avis,° deliberation
 And bade him saye his voirdit° as him leste.⁴ verdict
 790 “Lordinges,” quod he, “now herkneth for the beste;
 But taketh it nought, I praye you, in desdain.
 This is the point, to speken short and plain,
 That cech of you, to shorte with oure waye
 In this viage, shal tellen tales twaye°— two 795 To Canterburyward, I mene it so,
 And hoomward he shal tellen othere two,
 Of aventures that whilom° have bifalle; once upon a time
 And which of you that bereth him best of alle—
 That is to sayn, that telleth in this cas
 800 Tales of best sentence° and most solas°— purport / delight
 Shal have a soper at oure aller cost,⁵
 Here in this place, sitting by this post,
 Whan that we come again fro Canterbury.
 And for to make you the more mury° merry
 805 I wol myself goodly° with you ride— kindly Right at myn owene cost—and be youre gide.
 And who so wol my juggement withsave° contradict
 Shal paye al that we spende by the waye.
 And if ye vouche sauf that it be so,
 810 Telle me anoon, withouten wordes mo,° more
 And I wol erly shape me⁶ therfore.”
 This thing was graunted and oure othes swore
 With ful glad herte, and prayden⁷ him also

8. If I knew.

9. Pay you your reward.

1. “Shapen you”: intend.

2. Abide by.

3. We didn't think it worthwhile to make an issue of it.

4. It pleased.

5. At the cost of us all.

6. Prepare myself.

7. I.e., we prayed.

- That he wolde vouche sauf for to do so,
 815 And that he wolde been oure governour,
 And of oure tales juge and reportour,^o
 And sette a soper at a certain pris,^o
 And we wol ruled been at his devis,^o
 In heigh and lowe; and thus by oon assent
 820 We been accorded to his juggement.
 And therupon the win was fet^o anoon;
 We dronken and to reste wente eechoon
 Withouten any lenger^o taryinge.
 Amorwe^o whan that day bigan to springe
 825 Up roos oure Host and was oure aller cok,⁸
 And gadred us togidres in a flok,
 And forth we riden, a litel more than pas,^o
 Unto the watering of Saint Thomas;⁹
 And ther oure Host bigan his hors arreste,^o
 830 And saide, "Lordes, herkneth if you leste:^o
 Ye woot youre forward^o and it you recorde:¹
 If evensong and morwesong^o accorde,^o
 Lat see now who shal telle the firste tale.
 As evere mote I drinken win or ale,
 100 835 Who so be rebel to my juggement
 Shal paye for al that by the way is spent.
 Now draweth cut² er that we ferrer twinne:
 He which that hath the shorteste shal biginne.
 "Sire Knight," quod he, "my maister and my lord,
 840 Now draweth cut, for that is myn accord.^o
 Cometh neer," quod he, "my lady Prioress,
 And ye, sire Clerk, lat be youre shamefastnesse^o—Ne studieth nought. Lay hand to, every man!"
 Anoon to drawen every wight bigan,
 845 And shortly for to tellen as it was,
 Were it by aventure, or sort, or cas,³
 The soothe^o is this, the cut fil^o to the Knight;
 Of which ful blithe and glad was every wight,
 And telle he moste^o his tale, as was resoun,
 850 By forward and by composicioun,⁴
 As ye han herd. What needeth wordes mo?
 And whan this goode man sawgh that it was so,
 As he that wis was and obedient
 To keepe his forward by his free assent,
 855 He saide, "Sin I shal biginne the game,
 What, welcome be the cut, in Goddes name!
 Now lat us ride, and herkneth what I saye."
 And with that word we riden forth oure waye,
 And he bigan with right a merye checre^o
 860 His tale anoon, and saide as ye may hecre.

accountant price disposal fetched

longer
in the morning

a step halt it please agreement

morningsong / agree

will modesty

truth / fell

must countenance

8. Was rooster for us all.

9. A watering place near Southwark.

1. You recall it.

2. I.e., draw lots; "ferrer twinne": go farther.

3. Whether it was luck, fate, or chance.

4. By agreement and compact.

The Miller's Tale¹*The Introduction*

- Whan that the Knight hadde thus his tale ytold;²
 In al the route° nas ther yong ne old group
 That he ne saide it was a noble storye,
 And worthy for to drawn° to memorye, recall
 5 And namely° the gentils everichoon. especially Oure Hoste lough° and swoor, "So mote I goon,³ laughed
 This gooth aright: unboked is the male.° pouch
 Lat see now who shal telle another tale.
 For trewely the game is wel bigonne.
 10 Now telleth ye, sire Monk, if that ye conne,° can Somwhat to quite° with the Knightes tale." repay
 The Millere, that for dronken⁴ was al pale,
 So that unneth° upon his hors he sat, with difficulty
 He nolde avalen° neither hood ne hat, doff
 15 Ne abiden no man for his curteisye,
 But in Pilates vois⁵ he gan to crye,
 And swoor, "By armes⁶ and by blood and bones,
 I can° a noble tale for the nones, know
 With which I wol now quite the Knightes tale."
 20 Oure Hoste sawgh that he was dronke of ale,
 And saide, "Abide, Robin, leve° brother, dear
 Som better man shal telle us first another.
 Abide, and lat us werken thriftily."° with propriety
 "By Goddes soule," quod he, "that wol nat I,
 25 For I wol speke or elles go my way."
 Oure Host answerde, "Tel on, a deleve way!⁷
 Thou art a fool; thy wit is overcome."
 "Now herkneth," quod the Millere, "alle and some."⁸

1. The Miller's Tale belongs to the literary genre known as the "fabliau," a short story in verse that generally involves bourgeois or lower-class characters in an outrageous, often obscene plot, which is, however, realistically handled by the narrator. The fabliau is peculiarly French, and aside from the three or four examples in Chaucer there are few representatives of it in English. Yet Chaucer was supreme in this kind of tale as in many others, and the Miller's Tale is generally considered the best-told fabliau in any language.

Two originally separate plots are the basis of the Miller's Tale, both of them probably already old in Chaucer's time. In the first, a student—students are often the heroes of fabliaux and were probably often their authors—creates an opportunity to sleep with a woman by persuading her husband that Noah's flood is about to be repeated; and in the second, a lover who has been tricked into a humiliatingly misdirected kiss takes a dreadful vengeance on his tormentor. Whether or not Chaucer first united these traditional plots is not clear, but in any case their union, culminating in the scorched student's cry of "Water!" is a brilliant stroke, and brilliantly handled by Chaucer.

2. The Knight's Tale is actually the first one told on the Canterbury pilgrimage, immediately following the General Prologue.

3. So might I walk.

4. I.e., drunkenness.

5. The harsh voice usually associated with the character of Pontius Pilate in the mystery plays.

6. I.e., by God's arms.

7. I.e., in the devil's name.

8. Each and every one.

- But first I make a protestacioun° public affirmation
 30 That I am dronke: I knowe it by my soun.° tone of voice
 And therfore if that I mis° speke or saye, amiss
 Wite it⁹ the ale of Southwerk, I you praye;
 For I wol telle a legende and a lif
 Bothe of a carpenter and of his wif,
 35 How that a clerk hath set the wrightes cappe."¹
 The Reeve answerde and saide, "Stint thy clappe!²
 Lat be thy lewed° drunken harlotrye.° ignorant / obscenity
 It is a sinne and eek° a greet folve also
 To apairen° any man or him defame, injure
 40 And eek to bringen wives in swich fame.° report
 Thou maist ynough of othere thinges sayn."
 This dronken Millere spak ful soone again,
 And saide, "Leve° brother Osewold, dear
 Who hath no wif, he is no cokewold.° cuckold
 45 But I saye nat therfore that thou art oon.
 Ther ben ful goode wives many oon,° a one
 And evere a thousand goode ayains oon badde.
 That knowestou wel thyself but if thou madde.° rave
 Why artou angry with my tale now?
 50 I have a wif, pardee, as wel as thou,
 Yit nolde° I, for the oxen in my plough, would not Take upon me more than ynough
 As deemen of myself that I were oon:
 I wol bileve wel that I am noon.
 55 An housbonde shal nought been inquisitif
 Of Goddes privetee,° nor of his wif. secrets
 So³ he may finde Goddes foison° there, plenty
 Of the remenant° needeth nought enquire."^o rest / inquire
 What sholde I more sayn but this Millere
 60 He nolde his wordes for no man forbere,
 But tolde his cherles tale in his manere.
 M'athinketh° that I shal reherce° it here, I regret / repeat
 And therfore every gentil wight I praye;
 Deemeth nought, for Goddes love, that I saye
 65 Of yvel entente, but for° I moot reherse because Hir tales alle, be they bet° or werse, better
 Or elles falsen° som of my matere. falsify
 And therefore, whoso list it nought yheere
 Turne over the leef, and chese° another tale, choose
 70 For he shal finde ynowe,° grete and smale, enough
 Of storial⁴ thing that toucheth gentillesse,° gentility
 And eek moralitee and holinesse:
 Blameth nought me if that ye chese amis.
 The Millere is a cherl, ye knowe wel this,
 75 So was the Reeve eek, and othere mo,

9. Blame it on.

1. I.e., how a clerk made a fool of a carpenter.

2. Stop your chatter.

3. Provided that.

4. Historical, i.e., true.

And harlotrye° they tolden bothe two. ribaldry
 Aviseth you,⁵ and putte me out of blame:
 And eek men shal nought maken ernest of game.

The Tale

Whilom° ther was dwelling at Oxenforde once upon a time
 80 A riche gnof° that gestes heeld to boorde,⁶ boor
 And of his craft he was a carpenter.
With him ther was dwelling a poore scoler,
Hadde lerned art,⁷ but al his fantasye° interest
 Was turned for to lere° astrologye, learn 85 And coude a certain of conclusionys,
 To deemen by interrogaciouns,⁸
 If that men axed° him in certain houres asked
 Whan that men sholde have drouhte or elcs showres,
 Or if men axed him what shal bifalle
 90 Of every thing—I may nat rekene hem alle.
 This clerk was cleped° hende° Nicholas. called
 Of derne love he coude, and of solas,¹
 100 And therto he was sly and ful privee,° secretive
 And lik a maide meeke for to sec.
 95 A chambre hadde he in that hostelrye
Allone, withouten any compaignye,
 107 Ful fetisly ydight° with herbes swoote,° sweet
 And he himself as swete as is the roote
 Of licoris or any setewale.³
 100 His Almageste⁴ and bookes grete and smale,
 His astrelabye,⁵ longing for his art,
 His augrim stones,⁶ layen faire apart
 On shelves couchede° at his beddes heed; set
 His presse° ycovered with a falding reed,⁷ storage chest
 105 And al above ther lay a gay sautrye,° psaltery
 On which he made a nighes melodye
 So swetely that al the chambre roong,° 200 rang
 And Angelus ad Virginem⁸ he soong,
 And after that he soong the Kinges Note:
 110 Ful often blessed was his nierye throte.
 And thus this sweete clerk his time spente
 After his freendes finding and his rente.⁹
 This carpenter hadde wedded newe° a wif lately

5. Take heed.

6. I.e., took in boarders.

7. Who had completed the first stage of university education (the trivium).

8. I.e., and he knew a number of propositions on which to base astrological analyses (which would reveal the matters in ll. 87–90).

9. Handy, sly, attractive.

1. I.e., he knew about secret love and pleasurable practices.

2. Elegantly furnished.

3. Setwall, a spice.

4. 2nd-century treatise by Ptolemy, still the standard astronomy textbook.

5. Astrolabe, an astronomical instrument. "Longing for": belonging to.

6. Counters used in arithmetic.

7. Red coarse wool.

8. "The Angel's Address to the Virgin," a hymn; "Kinges Note": probably a popular song of the time.

9. In accordance with his friends' provision and his own income.

- Which that he loved more than his lif.
 115 Of eighteteene yeer she was of age;
 Jalous he was, and heeld hire narwe in cage,
 For she was wilde and yong, and he was old,
 And deemed himself been lik a cokewold.¹
 He knew nat Caton,² for his wit was rude,
 120 That bad men sholde wedde his similitude.³
 Men sholde wedden after hir estat,⁴
 For youthe and elde° is often at debat. age
 But sith that he was fallen in the snare,
 He moste endure, as other folk, his care.
 125 Fair was this yonge wif, and therewithal
 As any wesele° hir body gent and smal.⁵ weasel
 A ceint she wered, barred⁶ al of silk;
 A barmcloth° as whit as morne milk apron
 Upon hir lendes,° ful of many a gore;° loins / strip of cloth
 130 Whit was hir smok,° and broiden⁷ al bifore undergarment
 And eek bihinde, on hir coler° aboute, collar
 Of° col-blak silk, withinne and eek withoute;
 The tapes° of hir white voluper° with
 Were of the same suite of⁸ hir coler; ribbons / cap
 135 Hir filet° brood° of silk and set ful hyc; headband / broad
 And sikerly° she hadde a likerous° yē; certainly / wanton
 Ful smale ypull⁹ were hir browes two,
 And tho were bent,° and blake as any slo.° arching / sloebery
 She was ful more blisful on to see
 140 Than is the neue perejonette° tree, pear
 And softer than the wolfe° is of a wether;° wool / ram
 And by hir girdel° heeng° a purs of lether, belt / hung
 Tasseled with silk and perled with latoun.¹
 In al this world, to seeken up and down,
 145 Ther nis no man so wis that coude thenche° imagine
 So gay a popeiote° or swich° a wenche. doll / such
 Ful brighter was the shining of hir hewe
 Than in the Towr² the noble° yforged newe. gold coin
 But of hir song, it was as loud and yerne° lively
 150 As any swalwe sitting on a berne.° barn
 Therto she coude skippe and make game³
 As any kide or calf folwing his dame.° mother
 Hir mouth was sweete as bragot or the meeth,⁴
 Or hoord of apples laid in hay or heeth.° heather

1. I.e., suspected of himself that he was like a cuckold.

2. Dionysius Cato, the supposed author of a book of maxims used in elementary education.

3. Commanded that one should wed his equal.

4. Men should marry according to their condition.

5. Slender and delicate.

6. A belt she wore, with transverse stripes.

7. Embroidered.

8. I.e., the same pattern as.

9. Delicately plucked.

1. I.e., with brassy spangles on it.

2. The Tower of London.

3. Play.

4. "Bragot" and "meeth" are honey drinks.

- 155 Winsing° she was as is a joly° colt, skittish / high-spirited
 Long as a mast, and upright° as a bolt.° straight / arrow
 A brooch she bar upon hir lowe coler
 As brood as is the boos° of a bokeler;° boss / shield
 Hir shoes were laced on hir legges hye.
 160 She was a primerole,° a piggesnye,° cowslip / pig's eye
 For any lord to leggen° in his bedde, lay
 Or yit for any good yeman to wedde.
 Now sire, and eft° sire, so bifel the cas again
 That on a day this hende Nicholas
 165 Fil° with this yonge wif to rage° and playe, happened / flirt
 Whil that hir housbonde was at Oseneye,⁵
 (As clerkes been ful subtil and ful quainte),° clever
 And prively he caughte hire by the queinte,° pudendum
 And saide, "Ywis, but if ich° have my wille, I 170 For derne° love of thee, lemman, I spille,"° secret / die
 And heeld hire harde by the haunche-bones,
 And saide, "Lemman,° love me al atones,⁶ mistress
 Or I wol dien, also° God me save." so
 And she sproong° as a colt dooth in a trave,⁷ sprang
 175 And with hir heed she wried° faste away; twisted
 She saide, "I wol nat kisse thee, by my fay.° faith
 Why, lat be," quod she, "lat be, Nicholas!
 Or I wol crye 'Out, harrow,° and allas!' help
 Do way youre handes, for your curteisye!"
 180 This Nicholas gan mercy for to crye,
 And spak so faire, and profred him so faste,⁸
 That she hir love him graunted atte laste,
 And swoor hir ooth by Saint Thomas of Kent⁹
 That she wolde been at his comandement,
 185 Whan that she may hir leiser¹ wel espye.
 "Myn housbonde is so ful of jalousye
 That but ye waite° wel and been privee, be on guard
 I woot right wel I nam but deed," quod she. secret
 "Ye moste been ful derne° as in this cas."
 190 "Nay, therof care thee nought," quod Nicholas.
 "A clerk hadde litherly biset his while,²
 But if he coude a carpenter bigile."
 And thus they been accorded and ysworn
 To waite° a time, as I have told biforn. watch for 195 Whan Nicholas hadde doon this everydeel,
 And thakked° hire upon the lendes° weel, patted / loins
 He kiste hire sweete, and taketh his sautrye,
 And playeth faste, and maketh melodye.
 Thanne fil° it thus, that to the parissch chirche, befell

5. A town near Oxford.

6. Right now.

7. Frame for a restive horse.

8. I.e., pushed himself so vigorously.

9. Thomas à Becket.

1. I.e., opportunity.

2. Poorly employed his time.

- 200 Cristes owene werkes for to wirche,^o perform
 This goode wif wente on an haliday:^o holy day
 Hir forheed shoon as bright as any day,
 So was it wasshen whan she leet^o hir werk. left
 Now was ther of that chirche a pariss clerk, 205 The which that was ycleped^o Absolon: called Crul^o was his heer, and as the gold it shoon, curly
 And strouted^o as a fanne³ large and brode; spread out
 Ful straight and evene lay his joly shode.⁴
 His rode^o was reed, his yën greye as goos.^o complexion / goose
 210 With Poules window corven⁵ on his shoos,
 In hoses^o rede he wente fetisly.^o stockings / elegantly
 Yclad he was ful smale^o and proprely, finely
 Al in a kirtel^o of a light waget^o— tunic / blue
 Ful faire and thikke been the pointes⁶ set—215 And therupon he hadde a gay surplis,^o surplice
 As whit as is the blosme upon the ris.^o bough
 A merye child^o he was, so God me save. lad
 Wel coude he laten^o blood, and clippe, and shave, let
 And maken a chartre of land, or acquitaunce;⁷
 220 In twenty manere^o coude he trippe and daunce. ways
 After the scole of Oxenforde tho,
 And with his legges casten^o to and fro, prance
 And playen songes on a smal rubible;^o fiddle
 Therto he soong somtime a loud quible;⁸
 225 And as wel coude he playe on a giterne:^o guitar
 In al the town nas brewhous ne taverne
 That he ne visited with his solas,^o entertainment
 Ther any gailard tappestere⁹ was.
 But sooth to sayn, he was somdeel squaimous^o squeamish
 230 Of farting, and of speeche daungerous,^o fastidious
 This Absolon, that joly^o was and gay, pretty, amorous
 Gooth with a cencer^o on the haliday, incense-burner
 Cencing the wives of the pariss faste,
 And many a lovely look on hem he caste,
 235 And namely^o on this carpenteres wif: especially
 To looke on hire him thoughte a merye lif.
 She was so propre^o and sweete and likerous,¹ neat
 I dar wel sayn, if she hadde been a mous,
 And he a cat, he wolde hire hente^o anon. pounce on 240 This pariss clerk, this joly Absolon,
 Hath in his herte swich a love-longinge^o lovesickness
 That of no wif ne took he noon offringe—
 For curteisye he saide he wolde noon.

3. Wide-mouthed basket for separating grain from chaff.

4. Parting of the hair.

5. Carved with intricate designs, like the tracery in the windows of St. Paul's.

6. Laces for fastening the tunic and holding up the hose.

7. Legal release.

8. Part requiring a very high voice.

9. Gay barmaid.

1. Wanton, appetizing.

- The moone, whan it was night, ful brighte shoon,^o shone
 245 And Absolon his giterne^o hath ytake— guitar
 For paramours^o he thoughte for to wake— love
 And forth he gooth, jolif^o and amorous, pretty
 Til he cam to the carpenteres hous,
 A litel after cokkes hadde ycrowe,
 250 And dressed him up by a shot-windowe²
 That was upon the carpenteres wal.
 He singeth in his vois gentil and smal,^o dainty
 "Now dere lady, if thy wille be,
 I praye you that ye wol rewe^o on me," have pity
 255 Ful wel accordant to his giterninge.³
 This carpenter awook and herde him singe,
 And spak unto his wif, and saide anon,
 "What, Alison, heerestou nought Absolon
 That chaunteth thus under oure bowres^o wal?" bedroom's
 260 And she answerde hir housbonde therwithal,
 "Yis, God woot, John, I heere it everydeel."
 This passeth forth. What wol ye bet than weel?⁴
 Fro day to day this joly Absolon
 So woweth^o hire that him is wo-bigoon: woos
 265 He waketh^o al the night and al the day; stays awake
 He kembeth^o his lokkes brode⁵ and made him gay; combed
 He woweth hire by menes and brocage,⁶
 And swoor he wolde been hir owene page;^o personal servant
 He singeth, brokking^o as a nightingale; trilling
 270 He sente hire piment,⁷ meeth, and spiced ale,
 And wafres^o piping hoot out of the gleede;^o pastries / coals
 And for she was of towne,⁸ he profred meede^o— bribe
 For som folk wol be wonnen for richesse,
 And som for strokes,^o and som for gentillesse. blows
 275 Somtime to shewe his lightnesse and maistrye,⁹
 He playeth Herodes¹ upon a scaffold^o hye. platform, stage
 But what availeth him as in this cas?
 She loveth so this hend² Nicholas
 That Absolon may blowe the bukkes horn;² indiscreetly attractive
 280 He ne hadde for his labour but a scorn.
 And thus she maketh Absolon hir ape,³
 And al his earnest turneth til a jape.^o joke
 Ful sooth is this proverbe, it is no lie;
 Men saith right thus: "Alway the nye slye
 285 Maketh the ferre leve to be loth."⁴

2. Took his position by a hinged window.

3. In harmony with his guitar-playing.

4. Better than well.

5. I.e., wide-spreading.

6. By intermediaries and mediation.

7. Spiced wine; "meeth": mead.

8. Since she was a town woman.

9. Facility and virtuosity.

1. Herod, a role traditionally played as a bully in the mystery plays.

2. Blow the buck's horn, i.e., go without reward.

3. I.e., thus she makes a fool of Absolon.

4. Always the sly man at hand makes the distant dear one hated.

- For though that Absolon be wood° or wroth, furios
 By cause that he fer was from hir sighte,
 This nye° Nicholas stood in his lighte. nearby
 Now beer° thee wel, thou hende Nicholas, bear
- 290 For Absolon may waile and singe allas.
 And so bifel it on a Saterdag
 This carpenter was goon til Oseney,
 And hende Nicholas and Alisoun
 Accorded been to this conclusioun,
- 305 That Nicholas shal shapen° hem a wile° arrange / trick
 This sely⁵ jealous housbonde to bigile,
 And if so be this game wente aright,
 She sholden sleepen in his arm al night—
 For this was his desir and hire° also. hers
- 300 And right anoon, withouten wordes mo,
 This Nicholas no lenger wolde tarye,
 But dooth ful softe unto his chambre carye
 Bothe mete and drinke for a day or twaye,
 And to hir housbonde bad hire for to saye,
- 305 If that he axed after Nicholas,
 She sholde saye she niste° wher he was— didn't know
 Of al that day she sawgh him nought with yē:
 She trowed° that he was in maladye, believed
 For for no cry hir maide coude him calle,
- 310 He nolde answer for no thing that mighte falle.° happen
 This passeth forth al thilke° Saterdag this
 That Nicholas stille in his chambre lay,
 And eet,° and sleep,° or dide what him leste,° ate / slept
 Til Sonday that the sonne gooth to reste.
- 315 This sely carpenter hath greet mervaille
 Of Nicholas, or what thing mighte him aile,
 And saide, "I am adrad,° by Saint Thomas, afraid
 It stondeth nat aright with Nicholas.
 God shilde° that he deide sodeinly!
- 320 This world is now ful tikel,° sikerly: forbid
 I sawgh today a corps yborn to chirche changeable
 That now a° Monday last I sawgh him wirche.° on / work
 Go up," quod he unto his knave° anoon, manservant
 "Clepe° at his dore or knokke with a stoon.° call / stone
- 325 Looke how it is and tel me boldely."
 This knave gooth him up ful sturdily,
 And at the chambre dore whil that he stood
 He cride and knocked as that he were wood,° mad
 "What? How? What do ye, maister Nicholay?
- 330 How may ye sleepen al the longe day?"
 But al for nought: he herde nat a word.
 An hole he foond ful lowe upon a boord,
 Ther as the cat was wont in for to creepe,

5. "Poor innocent."

6. He wanted.

- And at that hole he looked in ful deepe,
 335 And atte laste he hadde of him a sighte.
 This Nicholas sat evere caping° uprighte gaping
 As he hadde kiked° on the newe moone. gazed
 Adown he gooth and tolde his maister soone
 In what array° he saw this ilke° man. condition / same
 340 This carpenter to blessen him⁷ bigan,
 And saide, "Help us, Sainte Frideswide!
 A man woot litel what him shal bitide.
 This man is falle, with his astromye,⁸
 In som woodnesse° or in som agonye. madness
 345 I thoughte ay° wel how that it sholde be: always
 Men sholde nought knowe of Goddes privetee.
 Ye, blessed be alway a lewed° man ignorant
 That nought but only his bileve° can.° creed / knows
 So ferde° another clerk with astromye: fare
 350 He walked in the feeldes for to pry
 Upon the sterres,° what ther sholde bifalle, stars
 Til he was in a marle-pit⁹ yfalle—
 He saw nat that. But yit, by Saint Thomas,
 Me reweth sore¹ for hende Nicholas.
 355 He shal be rated of² his studying,
 If that I may, by Jesus, hevene king!
 Get me a staf that I may underspore,° pry up
 Whil that thou, Robin, hevest° up the dore. heave
 He shal³ out of his studying, as I gesse."
 360 And to the chambre dore he gan him dresse.⁴
 His knave was a strong carl° for the nones,° fellow / purpose
 And by the haspe he haaf° it up atones: heaved
 Into° the floor the dore fil° anoon. on / fell
 This Nicholas sat ay as stille as stoon,
 365 And evere caped up into the air.
 This carpenter wende° he were in despair, thought
 And hente° him by the shuldres mightily, seized
 And shook him harde, and cride spitously,° roughly
 "What, Nicholay, what, how! What! Looke adown!
 370 Awaak and thenk on Cristes passioun!⁵
 I crouche⁶ thee from elves and fro wighthes."
 Therwith the nightspel saide he anoonrightes⁷
 On foure halves° of the hous aboute, sides
 And on the thresshold° on the dore withoute: threshold
 375 "Jesu Crist and Sainte Benedight,° Benedict
 Blesse this hous from every wikked wight!
 For nightes nerye the White Pater Noster.⁸

7. Cross himself.

8. Illiterate form of "astronomye."

9. Pit from which a fertilizing clay is dug.

1. I sorely pity.

2. Scolded for.

3. I.e., shall come.

4. Took his stand.

5. I.e., the Crucifixion.

6. Make the sign of the cross on; "wighthes": wicked creatures.

7. The night-charm he said right away.

8. I.e., the White-Lord's Prayer defend (us). This personification was considered a powerful beneficent spirit.

- Where wentestou, thou Sainte Petres soster?"^o sister
 And at the laste this hende Nicholas
 380 Gan for to sike^o sore, and saide, "Allas, Shal al the world be lost eftsoones^o now?" sigh again
 This carpenter answerde, "What saistou?
 What, thenk on God as we doon, men that swinke."⁹
 This Nicholas answerde, "Fecche me drinke,
 385 And after wol I speke in privetee
 Of certain thing that toucheth me and thee.
 I wol telle it noon other man, certain."
 This carpenter gooth down and comth again,
 And broughte of mighty ale a large quart,
 390 And when that eech of hem hadde dronke his part,
 This Nicholas his dore faste shette,^o shut
 And down the carpenter by him he sette,
 And saide, "John, myn hoste lief^o and dere, beloved
 Thou shalt upon thy trouthe^o swere me here word of honor
 395 That to no wight thou shalt this conseil^o wraye;^o secret / disclose
 For it is Cristes conseil that I saye,
 And if thou telle it man,¹ thou art forlore,^o lost
 For this vengeance thou shalt have therfore,
 That if thou wraye me, thou shalt be wood."²
 400 "Nay, Crist forbode it, for his holy blood," Quod tho this sely^o man. "I nam no labbe,³ innocent
 And though I saye, I nam nat lief to gabbe.⁴
 Say what thou wilt, I shal it nevere telle
 To child ne wif, by him that harwed helle."⁵
 405 "Now John," quod Nicholas, "I wol nought lie.
 I have yfounde in myn astrologye,
 As I have looked in the moone bright,
 That now a Monday next, at quarter night,⁶
 Shal falle a rain, and that so wilde and wood,^o furious
 410 That half so greet was nevere Noees^o flood. Noah's
 This world," he saide, "in lasse^o than an hour
 Shal al be dreint,^o so hidous is the showr. less
 Thus shal mankinde drenche^o and lese^o hir lif." drowned
 This carpenter answerde, "Allas, my wif! drown / lose
 415 And shal she drenche? Allas, myn Alisoun!"
 For sorve of this he fil almost⁷ adown,
 And saide, "Is there no remedye in this cas?"
 "Why yis, for⁸ Gode," quod hende Nicholas,
 "If thou wolt werken after lore and reed⁹—
 420 Thou maist nought werken after thyn owene hecd;^o head
 For thus saith Salomon that was ful trewe,
 'Werk al by conseil and thou shalt nought rewe.'^o be sorry

9. Work.

1. To anyone.
2. Go mad.
3. Blabbermouth.
4. And though I say it myself, I don't like to gossip.
5. By Him that despoiled hell—i.e.,

Christ.

6. I.e., shortly before dawn.
7. Almost fell.
8. I.e., by.
9. Act according to learning and advice.

- And if thou werken wolt by good conseil, conseil
 I undertake, withouten mast or sail,
 425 Yit shal I save hire and thee and me.
 Hastou nat herd how saved was Noee
 Whan that oure Lord hadde warned him bifore
 That al the world with water sholde be lorn?"^o lost
 "Yis," quod this carpenter, "ful yore ago."
 430 "Hastou nat herd," quod Nicholas, "also
 The sorwe of Noee with his felaweshipe?
 Er that he mighte gete his wif to shipe,
 Him hadde levere,¹ I dar wel undertake,
 At thilke time than alle his wetheres blake
 435 That she hadde had a ship hirself allone.²
 And therfore woostou^o what is best to doone? do you know
 This axeth^o haste, and of an hastif^o thing requires / urgent
 Men may nought preche or maken taryng.
 Anoon go gete us faste into this in^o lodging
 440 A kneeding trough or elles a kimelin^o brewing tub
 For eech of us, but looke that they be large,^o wide
 In whiche we mowen swimme as in a barge,³
 And han therinne vitaille suffisaunt⁴
 But for a day—fy^o on the remenaunt!
 445 The water shal aslake^o and goon away fie
 Aboute prime⁵ upon the nexte day. diminish
 But Robin may nat wite^o of this, thy knave, know
 Ne eek thy maide Gille I may nat save.
 Axe nought why, for though thou axe me,
 450 I wol nought tellen Goddes privetee.^o secrets
 Suffiseth thee, but if thy wittes madde,^o go mad
 To han^o as greet a grace as Noee hadde. have
 Thy wif shal I wel saven, out of doute.
 Go now thy way, and speed thee heraboute.
 455 But whan thou hast for hire^o and thee and me her
 Ygeten us thise kneeding-tubbes three,
 Thannc shaltou hangen hem in the roof ful hyc,
 That no man of oure purveyance^o espye. foresight
 And whan thou thus hast doon as I have said,
 460 And hast oure vitaille faire in hem ylaid,
 And cek an ax to smite the corde atwo,
 Whan that the water comth that we may go,
 And broke an hole an heigh⁶ upon the gable
 Unto the gardinward,⁷ over the stable,
 465 That we may freely passen forth oure way,
 Whan that the grete showr is goon away,

1. He had rather. "Wetheres": rams. I.e., he'd have given all the rams he had.

2. The reluctance of Noah's wife to board the ark is a traditional comic theme in the mystery plays.

3. In which we can float as in a vessel.

4. Sufficient food.

5. 9 A.M.

6. On high.

7. Toward the garden.

- Thanne shaltou swimme as merye, I undertake,
 As dooth the white doke° after hir drake.
 Thanne wol I clepe,° 'How, Alison? How, John?
 Be merye, for the flood wol passe anon.'
 And thou wolt sayn, 'Hail, maister Nicholay!
 Good morwe, I see thee wel, for it is day!
 And thanne shal we be lordes al oure lif
 Of al the world, as Noce and his wif.
 But of oo thing I warne thee ful right:
 Be wel avised on that ilke night
 That we been entred into shippes boord
 That noon of us ne speke nought a word,
 Ne clepe, ne crye, but been in his prayere,
 For it is Goddes owene heste dere.⁸
 Thy wif and thou mote hange fer atwinne,⁹
 For that bitwixe you shal be no sinne—
 Namore in looking than ther shal in deede.
 This ordinance is said: go, God thee speede.
 Tomorwe at night whan men been alle asleepe,
 Into oure kneeding-tubbes wol we crepe,
 And sitten there, abiding Goddes grace.
 Go now thy way, I have no lenger space°
 To make of this no lenger sermoning.
 Men sayn thus: 'Send the wise and say no thing.'
 Thou art so wis it needeth thee nat teche:
 Go save oure lif, and that I thee biseeche."
 This sely carpenter gooth forth his way:
 Ful ofte he saide alas and wailaway,
 And to his wif he tolde his privetee,
 And she was war,° and knew it bet° than he,
 What al this quainte cast° was for to saye.
 But natheles she ferde° as she wolde deye,
 And saide, "Allas, go forth thy way anon.
 Help us to scape,° or we been dede eechoon.
 I am thy trewe verray wedded wif:
 Go, dere spouse, and help to save oure lif."
 Lo, which a greet thing is affeccoun!¹⁰
 Men may dien of imaginacioun,
 So deepe° may impression be take.
 This sely carpenter biginneth quake;
 Him thinketh verrailiche° that he may see
 Noees flood come walwing° as the see
 To drenchen° Alison, his hony dere.
 He weepeth, waileth, maketh sory checre;
 He siketh° with ful many a sory swough,
 And gooth and geteth him a kneeding-trough,
 And after a tubbe and a kimclin,
 And prively he sente hem to his in,° duck

call

time

aware / better trick / mean acted escape emotion deeply truly rolling drown

sighs / breath

dwelling

8. Precious commandment.

9. Far apart.

- 515 And heeng° hem in the roof in privetee; hung
 His owene hand he made laddres three,
 To climben by the ronges° and the stalkes° rungs / uprights
 Unto the tubbes hanging in the balkes,° rafters
 And hem vitailed,° bothe trough and tubbe, victualled
 520 With bredd and cheese and good ale in a jubbe,° jug
 Suffising right ynough as for a day.
 But er that he hadde maad al this array,
 He sente his knave, and eck his wenche also,
 Upon his neede¹ to London for to go.
 525 And on the Monday whan it drow to² nighte,
 He shette° his dore withouten candel-lighte, shut
 And dressed° alle thing as it sholde be, arranged
 And shortly up they clomben° alle three. climbed
 They seten° stille wcl³ a furlong way.³ # sat
 530 "Now, Pater Noster, clum,"⁴ saide Nicholay, Our Father (?)
 And "Clum" quod John, and "Clum" saide Alisoun.
 This carpenter saide his devocioun,
 And stille he sit° and biddeth his prayere, sits
 Awaiting on the rain, if he it heere.° might hear 535 The dede sleep, for wery bisnesse,
 Fil° on this carpenter right as I gesse fell
 Aboute corfew time,⁵ or litel more.
 For travailing of his gost⁶ he groneth sore,
 And eft° he routeth,° for his heed mislay.⁷ then / snores
 540 Down of the laddre stalketh Nicholay,
 And Alison ful softe adown she spedde:
 Withouten wordes mo they goon to bedde
 Ther as the carpenter is wont to lie.
 Ther was the revel and the melodye,
 545 And thus lith° Alison and Nicholas lies
 In bisnesse of mirthe and of solas,° pleasure
 Til that the belle of Laudes⁸ gan to ringe,
 And freres in the chauncel° gonne singe. chancel
 This pariss clerk, this amorous Absolon,
 550 That is for love alway so wo-bigoon,
 Upon the Monday was at Oseneye,
 With compaignye him to disporte and playe,
 And axed upon caas⁹ a cloisterer
 Ful prively after John the carpenter;
 555 And he drow him apart out of the chirche,
 And saide, "I noot:¹ I sawgh him here nought wirche Sith Saterday. I trowe that he be went
 For timber ther oure abbot hath him sent.

1. On an errand for him.

2. Drew toward.

3. The time it takes to go a furlong (i.e., a few minutes).

4. Hush (?).

5. Probably about 8 P.M.

6. Affliction of his spirit.

7. Lay in the wrong position.

8. The first church service of the day.

9. By chance; "cloisterer": here, a member of the religious order of Osney Abbey.

1. Don't know; "wirche": work.

- For he is wont for timber for to go,
560 And dwellen atte grange² a day or two.
Or elles he is at his hous, certain.
Where that he be I can nought soothly sayn.”
This Absolon ful jolif was and light,³
And thoughte, “Now is time to wake al night, 565 For sikerly,⁴ I sawgh him nought stiringe certainly
Aboute his dore sin day bigan to springe.
So mote⁵ I thrive, I shal at cokkes crowe may
Ful prively knokken at his windowe
That stant⁶ ful lowe upon his bowres⁴ wal. stands
570 To Alison now wol I tellen al
My love-longing,⁵ for yet I shal nat misse lovesickness
That at the leeste way⁵ I shal hire kisse.
Som manere confort shal I have, parfay.⁶ in faith
My mouth hath icched al this longe day:
575 That is a signe of kissing at the leeste.
Al night me mette⁶ eck I was at a feeste.
Therfore I wol go sleepe an hour or twaye,
And al the night thanne wol I wake and playe.”
Whan that the firste cok hath crowe, anoon
580 Up rist⁷ this joly love Absolon, rises
And him arrayeth gay at point devis.⁷
But first he cheweth grain⁸ and licoris,
To smellen sweete, er he hadde kembd⁹ his heer. combed
Under his tonge a trewe-love⁹ he beer,⁹ bore
585 For therby wende⁹ he to be gracious.⁹ supposed / pleasing
He rometh⁹ to the carpenteres hous, strolls
And stille he stant⁹ under the shot-windowe— stands
Unto his brest it raughte,⁹ it was so lowe— reached
And ofte he cougheth with a semisoun.⁹ small sound
590 “What do ye, hony-comb, sweete Alisoun,
My faire brid,¹ my sweete cinamome?
Awaketh, lemman⁹ myn, and speke to me. mistress
Wel litel thinken ye upon my wo
That for your love I swete⁹ ther I go. sweat
595 No wonder is though that I swelte⁹ and swete: melt
I moorne as doth a lamb after the tete.⁹ tit
Ywis, lemman, I have swich love-longinge,
That lik a turtle⁹ trewe is my moorninge: dove
I may nat ete namore than a maide.”
600 “Go fro the windowe, Jakke fool,” she saide.
“As help me God, it wol nat be com-pa-me.⁹ come-kiss-me
I love another, and elles I were to blame,
Wel bet⁹ than thee, by Jesu, Absolon. better

2. The outlying farm belonging to the abbey.

3. Was very amorous and gay.

4. Bower's, bedroom's.

5. I.e., at least.

6. I dreamed.

7. To perfection.

8. Grain of paradise (a spice).

9. Sprig of a clover-like plant.

1. Bird or bride.

- Go forth thy way or I wol caste a stoon,
 605 And lat me sleepe, a twenty devele way."²
 "Allas," quod Absolon, "and wailaway,
 That trewe love was evere so yvele biset.³
 Thanne kis me, sin that it may be no bet,
 For Jesus love and for the love of me."
 610 "Woltou thanne go thy way therwith?" quod she.
 "Yc, certes, lemman," quod this Absolon.
 "Thanne maak thee redy," quod she. "I come anoon."
 And unto Nicholas she saide stille,^o quietly
 "Now hust,^o and thou shalt laughen al thy fille." hush
 615 This Absolon down sette him on his knees,
 And said, "I am a lord at alle degrees,⁴
 For after this I hope ther cometh more.
 Lemman, thy grace, and sweete brid, thyn ore!"^o mercy
 The windowe she undooth, and that in haste.
 620 "Have do," quod she, "come of and speed thee faste,
 Lest thatoure neighebores thee espve."
 This Absolon gan wipe his mouth ful drye:
 Derk was the night as pich or as the cole,
 And at the windowe out she putte hir hole,
 625 And Absolon, him fil no bet ne wers,⁵
 But with his mouth he kiste hir naked ers,
 Ful savourly,^o or he were war of this. with relish
 Abak he sterte,^o and thoughte it was amis, started
 For wel he wiste a womman hath no beerd.
 630 He felte a thing al rough and longe yherd,^o haired
 And saide, "Fy, allas, what have I do?"
 "Teehee," quod she, and clapte the windowe to.
 And Absolon gooth forth a sory pas.⁶
 "A beerd, a beerd!" quod hende Nicholas,
 635 "By Goddes corpus,^o this gooth faire and weel." body
 This sely Absolon herde everydeel,
 And on his lippe he gan for anger bite,
 And to himself he saide, "I shal thee quite."^o repay
 Who rubbeth now, who froteth^o now his lippes wipes
 640 With dust, with sond,⁷ with straw, with cloth, with chippes,
 But Absolon, that saith ful ofte allas?
 "My soule bitake^o I unto Satanas,^o commit / Satan
 But me were lever⁸ than all this town," quod he,
 "Of this despit^o awroken^o for to be. insult / avenged
 645 Allas," quod he, "allas I ne hadde ybleint!"^o turned aside
 His hote love was cold and al yqueint,^o quenched
 For fro that time that he hadde kist hir ers
 Of paramours he sette nought a kers,⁹

2. In the name of twenty devils.

3. Ill-used.

4. In every way.

5. It befell him neither better nor worse.

6. I.e., walking sadly.

7. Sand.

8. I had rather.

9. He didn't care a piece of cress for woman's love.

- For he was heled^o of his maladye. cured
650 Ful ofte paramours he gan defve,^o renounce
And weep^o as dooth a child that is ybete. wept
A softe paas¹ he wente over the streete
Until^o a smith men clepen daun Gervais,² to
That in his forge smithed plough harneis:^o equipment
655 He sharpeth shaar and cultour³ bisily.
This Absolon knokketh al esily,^o quietly
And saide, "Undo, Gervais, and that anon."^o at once
"What, who artou?" "It am I, Absolon."
"What, Absolon? What, Cristes sweete tree!
660 Why rise ye so rathe?^o Ey, benedicite,^o early / bless me
What aileth you? Som gay girl, God it woot,
Hath brought you thus upon the viritoot.⁴
By Sainte Note, ye woot wel what I mcne."
This Absolon ne roughte nat a bene⁵
665 Of al his play. No word again he yaf:
He hadde more tow on his distaf⁶
Than Gervais knew, and saide, "Freend so dere,
This hote cultour in the chimenee^o here, fireplace
As lene⁷ it me: I have therwith to doone.
670 I wol bringe it thee again ful soone."
Gervais answerde, "Certes, werc it gold,
Or in a poke nobles alle untold,⁸
Thou sholdest have, as I am trewe smith.
Ey, Cristes fo,⁹ what wol ye do therwith?"
675 "Therof," quod Absolon, "be as be may.
I shal wel telle it thee another day,"
And caughte the cultour by the colde stele.^o handle
Ful softe out at the dore he gan to stele,
And wente unto the carpenteres wal:
680 He cougheth first and knokketh therwithal
Upon the windowe, right as he dide er.^o before
This Alison answerde, "Who is ther
That knokketh so? I warante¹ it a thief."
"Why, nay," quod he, "God woot, my sweete lief,^o dear
685 I am thyn Absolon, my dereling.
Of gold," quod he, "I have thee brought a ring—
My moder yaf it me, so God me save;
Ful fin it is and therto wel ygrave:^o engraved
This wol I yiven thee if thou me kisse."
690 This Nicholas was risen for to pisse,
And thoughte he wolde amenden² al the jape:^o joke
He sholde kisse his ers er that he scape.

1. I.e., quiet walk.

2. Master Gervais.

3. He sharpens plowshare and coulter
(the turf-cutter on a plow).

4. I.e., on the prowl.

5. Didn't care a bean.

6. I.e., more on his mind.

7. I.e., please lend.

8. Or gold coins all uncounted in a bag.

9. Foe, i.e., Satan.

1. I.e., wager.

2. Improve on.

- And up the window dide he hastily,
 And out his ers he putteth prively,
 695 Over the buttok to the haunche-boon.
 And therwith spak this clerk, this Absolon,
 "Speek, sweete brid, I noot nought wher thou art."
 This Nicholas anoon leet flec³ a fart
 As greet as it hadde been a thonder-dent° thunderbolt
 700 That with the strook he was almost yblent°, blinded
 And he was redy with his iren hoot°, hot
 And Nicholas amidde the ers he smoot°: smote
 Of gooth the skin an hande-brede° aboute; handsbreadth
 The hote cultour brende so his toute° buttocks
 705 That for the smert he wende for to⁴ die;
 As he were wood° for wo he gan to crye, crazy
 "Help! Water! Water! Help, for Goddes herte!"
 This carpenter out of his slomber sterte,
 And herde oon cryen "Water!" as he were wood,
 710 And thoughte, "Allas, now cometh Noweles⁵ flood!"
 He sette him up withoute wordes mo,
 And with his ax he smoot the corde atwo,
 And down gooth al: he foond neither to selle
 Ne breed ne ale til he cam to the celle,⁶
 715 Upon the floor, and ther aswoun° he lay. in a faint
 Up sterte hire⁷ Alison and Nicholay,
 And criden "Out" and "Harrow" in the streete.
 The neighebores, bothe smale and grete,
 In ronnen for to gauren° on this man gape
 720 That aswoun lay bothe pale and wan,
 For with the fal he brosten° hadde his arm; broken
 But stonde he moste° unto his owene harm, must
 For whan he spak he was anoon bore down⁸
 With° heide Nicholas and Alisoun: by 725 They tolden every man that he was wood—
 He was agast so of Noweles flood,
 Thurgh fantasye, that of his vanitee° folly
 He hadde ybought him kneeding-tubbes three,
 And hadde hem hanged in the roof above,
 730 And that he prayed hem, for Goddes love,
 To sitten in the roof, par compaignye.⁹
 The folk gan laughen at his fantasye.
 Into the roof they kiken° and they cape°, peer / gape
 And turned al his harm unto a jape°, joke
 735 For what so that this carpenter answerde,
 It was for nought: no man his reson° herde; argument
 With othes grete he was so sworn adown,
 That he was holden° wood in al the town. considered

3. Let fly.

4. Thought he would.

5. The carpenter is confusing Noah and Noel (Christmas).

6. He found time to sell neither bread nor ale until he arrived at the foundation.

7. Started.

8. Refuted.

9. For company's sake.

- For every clerk anonright heeld with other:
 740 They saide, "The man was wood, my leve brother,"
 And every wight gan laughen at this strif.^o
 Thus swived^o was the carpenteres wif
 For al his keeping^o and his jalousye,
 And Absolon hath kist hir nether^o yē,
 745 And Nicholas is scalded in the tonte:
 This tale is doon, and God save al the route!^o
- fuss*
slept with guarding lower company

The Wife of Bath's Prologue and Tale

The Prologue¹

- Experience, though noon auctoritee
 Were in this world, is right ynough for me
 To speke of wo that is in mariage:
 For lordinges,^o sith I twelf yeer was of age—
 5 Thanked be God that is eterne on live—
 Housbondes at chirche dore² I have had five
 (If I so ofte mighte han wedded be),
 And alle were worthy men in hir degree.
 But me was told, certain, nat longe agoon is,
 10 That sith that Crist ne wente nevere but ones
- gentlemen*

1. The Wife of Bath is the remarkable culmination of many centuries of an antifeminism that was particularly nurtured by the medieval church. In their eagerness to exalt the spiritual ideal of chastity, certain theologians developed an idea of womankind that was nothing less than monstrous. According to these, insatiable lecherousness and indomitable shrewishness (plus a host of attendant vices) were characteristic of women. This notion was given most eloquent expression by St. Jerome in his attack (written about A.D. 400) on the monk Jovinian, who had uttered some good words for matrimony, and it is Jerome that the Wife of Bath comes forward not, curiously enough, to refute, but to confirm. The first part of her Prologue is a mass of quotations from that part of Jerome's tract where he is appealing to St. Paul's Epistle (I Corinthians vii) for antimatrimonial authority. On the narrow issue of her right to remarry, to be sure, the Wife finds fault—rather mildly—with Jerome, but on the more central issue of why she wishes to marry and remarry she expresses no disagreement with him. Yet in the failure to defend herself and refute the saint, she somehow manages to make the latter's point of view look a good deal sillier than she looks herself; and instead of embodying the satire on womanhood that one would expect because of her origins in antifeminist literature, she becomes instead a satirist of the grotesquely woman-hating men who had first defined her personality.

More important, because of the extraordinary vitality that Chaucer has imparted to her, the Wife of Bath by the end of her Prologue comes to bear a less significant relation to satire than she does to reality itself. Making the best of the world in which they have arbitrarily been placed is the occupation of both the Wife of Bath and the reader, and it is in doing this that the Wife ceases to be a monstrosity of fiction and becomes alive—wonderfully alive, both to the potentialities of which she and her world are capable and to the limitations that even in her world time and age place upon her. It is especially in the attitude with which she regards these limitations that her fiction becomes most true to life, since they are also the limitations imposed by the real world. Despite the loss of youth and beauty, her best weapons, she faces her future not only with a woman's ability to endure and enjoy what she cannot reshape, but also with a zest for life on its own terms that is almost more than human.

2. The actual wedding ceremony was celebrated at the church door, not in the chancel.

- To wedding in the Cane³ of Galilee,
 That by the same ensample^o taughte he me example
 That I ne sholde wedded be but ones.
 Herke eek,^o lo, which^o a sharp word for the nones,⁴ also / what 15 Beside a welle, Jesus, God and man,
 Spak in repreve^o of the Samaritan: reproof
 "Thou hast yhad five housbondes," quod he,
 "And that ilke^o man that now hath thee same
 Is nat thyn housbonde." Thus saide he certain.
 20 What that he mente therby I can nat sayn,
 But that I axe^o why the fifthe man ask
 Was noon housbonde to the Samaritan?⁵
 How manye mighte she han in mariage?
 Yit herde I nevere tellen in myn age
 25 Upon this nombre diffinicioun.^o definition
 Men may divine^o and glosen^o up and down, guess / interpret
 But wel I woot,^o expres,^o withouten lie, know / expressly
 God bad us for to wexe⁶ and multiplie:
 That gentil text can I wel understonde.
 30 Eek wel I woot^o he saide that myn housbonde know
 Sholde lete^o fader and moder and take to me,⁷ leave
 But of no nombre mencion made he—
 Of bigamy^e or of octogamy^e:⁸
 Why sholde men thanne speke of it vilainye?
 35 Lo, here the wise king daun^o Salomon: master
 I trowe^o he hadde wives many oon,⁹ believe
 As wolde God it lefe^{ful} were to me permissible
 To be refreshed half so ofte as he.
 Which yifte¹ of God hadde he for alle his wives!
 40 No man hath swich that in this world alive is.
 God woot this noble king, as to my wit,^o knowledge
 The firste night hadde many a merye fit^o bout
 With eech of hem, so wel was him on live.²
 Blessed be God that I have wedded five,
 45 Of whiche I have piked out the beste,³
 Bothe of hir nether^o purs and of hir cheste.^o lower / moneybox
 Diverse scoles maken parfit^o clerkes, perfect
 And diverse practikes⁴ in sondry werkes
 Maken the werkman parfit sikerly:^o certainly
 50 Of five housbondes scoleying^o am I. schooling
 Welcome the sixte whan that evere he shall!⁵

3. Cana (see John ii.1).

4. To the purpose.

5. Christ was actually referring to a sixth man who was not married to the Samaritan woman (cf. John iv.6 ff.).

6. I.e., increase. See Genesis i.28.

7. See Matthew xix.5.

8. I.e., of two or even eight marriages.

The Wife is referring to successive,

rather than simultaneous marriages.

9. Solomon had 700 wives and 300 concubines (I Kings xi.3).

1. What a gift.

2. I.e., so pleasant a life he had.

3. Whom I have cleaned out of everything worthwhile.

4. Practical experiences.

5. I.e., shall come along.

- For sith I wol nat kepe me chast in al,
 Whan my housbonde is fro the world agoon,
 Som Cristen man shal wedde me anon.^o right away
- 55 For thanne th'Apostle⁶ saith that I am free
 To wedde, a Goddes half,⁷ where it liketh me.
 He said that to be wedded is no sinne:
 Bet^o is to be wedded than to brinne.^o better / burn
- 60 What rekketh me⁸ though folk saye vilainye
 Of shrewed^o Lamech⁹ and his bigamy?
 I woot wel Abraham was an holy man,
 And Jacob eek, as fer as evere I can,^o know
 And eech of hem hadde wives mo than two,
 And many another holy man also.
- 65 Where can ye saye in any manere age
 That hye God defended^o mariage prohibited
 By expres word? I praye you, telleth me.
 Or where comanded he virginitee?
 I woot as wel as ye, it is no drede,^o doubt
- 70 Th'Apostle, whan he speket of maidenhede,^o maidenhood
 He saide that precept therof hadde he noon:
 Men may conseile a womman to be oon,^o single
 But conseiling nis no comandement.
 He putte it in oure owene juggement.
- 75 For hadde God comanded maidenhede,
 Thanne hadde he dampned^o wedding with the condemned deede;¹
 And certes, if there were no seed ysowe,
 Virginitee, thanne wherof sholde it growe?
 Paul dorste nat comanden at the leeste
- 80 A thing of which his maister yaf^o no heeste.^o gave / command
 The dart² is set up for virginitee:
 Cacche whoso may, who renneth^o best lat see. runs
 But this word is nought take of³ every wight,
 But ther as⁴ God list^o yive it of his might. it pleases
- 85 I woot wel that th'Apostle was a maide,^o virgin
 But nathelees, though that he wroot and saide
 He wolde that every wight were swich^o as he, such
 Al nis but conseil to virginitee;
 And for to been a wif he yaf me leve
- 90 Of indulgence; so nis it no repreve^o disgrace
 To wedde me⁵ if that my make^o die, mate
 Withouten excepcion of bigamy⁶—

6. St. Paul.

7. On God's behalf; "it liketh me": I please.

8. What do I care.

9. The first man whom the Bible mentions as having two wives (Genesis iv.19-24).

1. I.e., at the same time.

2. I.e., prize in a race.

3. Understood for, i.e., applicable to.

4. Where.

5. For me to marry.

6. I.e., without there being any legal objection on the score of remarriage.

- Al^o were it good no womman for to touche
 (He mente as in his bed or in his couche,
 95 For peril is bothe fir^o and tow^o t'assemble—
 Ye knowe what this ensample may resemble).⁷ True. The Greek is although fire / flax usually misinterpreted,
 This al and som,⁸ he heeld virginitee
 More parfit than wedding in freletee.^o frailty (Freletee clepe I but if⁹ that he and she 100 Wolde leden al hir lif in chastitee.)
 I graunte it wel, I have noon envye
 Though maidenhede preferre^o bigamy^e:^o excel / remarriage
 It liketh hem to be clene in body and gost.^o spirit
 Of myn estaat ne wol I make no boost;
 105 For wel ye knowe, a lord in his houshold
 Ne hath nat every vessel al of gold:
 Some been of tree,^o and doon hir lord servise. wood
 God clepeth folk to him in sondry wise,
 And everich hath of God a propre¹ yifte,
 110 Som this, som that, as him liketh shifte.^o ordain
 Virginitee is greet perfeccioun,
 And continence eek with devocioun,
 But Crist, that of perfeccion is welle,^o source
 Bad nat every wight he sholde go selle
 115 Al that he hadde and yive it to the poore,
 And in swich wise folwe him and his fore:²
 He spak to hem that wolde live parfitly^o— perfectly
 And lordinges, by youre leve, that am nat I.
 I wol bistowe the flour of al myn age
 120 In th'actes and in fruit of mariage.
 Telle me also, to what conclusioun^o end
 Were membres maad of generacioun
 And of so parfit wis a wrighte ywrought?³
 Trusteth right wel, they were nat maad for nought.
 125 Glose^o whoso wol, and saye bothe up and down interpret
 That they were makid for purgacioun
 Of urine, and oure bothe thinges smale
 Was eek to knowe a femele from a male,
 And for noon other cause—saye ye no?
 130 Th'experience woot it is nought so.
 So that the clerkes be nat with me wrothe,
 I saye this, that they been maad for bothe—
 That is to sayn, for office^o and for ese excretion
 Of engendrure, ther we nat God displese.
 135 Why sholde men elles in hir bookes sette
 That man shal yeelde⁴ to his wif hir dette?

7. I.e., what this metaphor may apply to.

8. This is all there is to it.

9. Frailty I call it unless.

1. I.e., his own.

2. Matthew xix.21: "Fore": footsteps.

3. And wrought by so perfectly wise a maker.

4. I.e., pay.

- Now wherwith sholde he make his payement
 If he ne used his sely^o instrument? innocent
 Thanne were they maad upon a creature
 140 To purge urine, and eek for engendrure.
 But I saye nought that every wight is holde,^o bound
 That hath swich harneis^o as I to you tolde, equipment
 To goon and usen hem in engendrure:
 Thanne sholde men take of chastitee no cure.^o heed
 145 Crist was a maide^o and shapen as a man, virgin
 And many a saint sith that the world bigan,
 Yit lived they evere in parfit chastitee.
 I nil envye no virginitee:
 Lat hem be breed^o of pured^o whete seed, bread / refined
 150 And lat us wives hote^o barly breed— be called
 And yit with barly-breed, Mark telle can,
 Oure Lord Jesu refreshed many a man.⁵
 In swich estaat as God hath cleped us
 I wol persevere: I nam nat precious.^o fastidious
 155 In wifhood wol I use myn instrument
 As freely^o as my Makere hath it sent. generously
 If I be daungerous,^o God yive me sorwe: stand-offish
 Myn housbonde shal it han both eve and morwe,^o morning
 Whan that him list⁶ come forth and paye his dette.
 160 An housbonde wol I have, I wol nat lette,⁷
 Which shal be bothe my dettour^o and my thral,^o debtor / slave
 And have his tribulacion withal
 Upon his flessh whil that I am his wif.
 I have the power during al my lif
 165 Upon his propre^o body, and nat he: own
 Right thus th'Apostle tolde it unto me,
 And bad oure housbondes for to love us weel.
 Al this sentence^o me liketh everydeel.^o purport / entirely

[AN INTERLUDE]

- Up sterte^o the Pardoner and that anon: started 170 "Now dame," quod he, "by God and by Saint John,
 Ye been a noble prechour in this cas.
 I was aboute to wedde a wif: allas,
 What^o sholde I bye^o it on my flessh so dere? why / purchase
 Yit hadde I levere wedde no wif towere."^o this year
 175 "Abid," quod she, "my tale is nat bigonne.
 Nay, thou shalt drinken of another tonne,^o tun
 Er that I go, shal savoure wors than ale.
 And whan that I have told thee forth my tale
 Of tribulacion in mariage,
 180 Of which I am expert in al myn age—

5. In the descriptions of the miracle of the loaves and fishes, it is actually John, not Mark, who mentions barley bread (vi.9).

6. When he wishes to.

7. I will make no difficulty.

- This is to saye, myself hath been the whippe—
 Thanne maistou chese° wheither thou wolt sippe choose
 Of thilke° tonne that I shal abroche:° this same / broach
 Be war of it, er thou too neigh approche, 185 For I shal telle ensamples mo than ten.
 'Whoso that nile° be war by othere men, would not
 By him shal othere men corrected be.'
 Thise same wordes writeth Ptolomee:
 Rede in his Almageste and take it there."⁸
 190 "Dame, I wolde praye you if youre wil it were,"
 Saide this Pardoner, "as ye bigan,
 Telle forth youre tale; spareth for no man,
 And teche us yonge men of youre practike."⁹ mode of operation
 "Gladly," quod she, "sith it may you like;" please
 195 But that I praye to al this compaignye,
 If that I speke after my fantasye,⁹
 As taketh nat agrief° of that I saye, amiss
 For myn entente nis but for to playe."

[THE WIFE CONTINUES]

- Now sire, thanne wol I telle you forth my tale.
 200 As evere mote I drinke win or ale,
 I shal saye sooth: tho° housbondes that I hadde, those
 As three of hem were goode, and two were badde.
 The three men were goode, and riche, and olde;
 Unnethe° mighte they the statut holde with difficulty
 205 In which they were bounden unto me—
 Ye woot wel what I mene of this, pardee.
 As help me God, I laughe whan I thinke
 How pitously anight I made hem swinke;° work
 And by my fay,° I tolde of it no stoor:¹ faith
 210 They hadde me yiven hir land and hir tresor;
 Me needed nat do lenger diligence
 To winne hir love or doon hem reverence.
 They loved me so wel, by God above,
 That I ne tolde no daintee of² hir love.
 215 A wis womman wol bisye hire evere in oon³
 To gete hire love, ye, ther as she hath noon.
 But sith I hadde hem hoolly in myn hand,
 And sith that they hadde yiven me al hir land,
 What° sholde I take keep° hem for to plese, why / care
 220 But it were for my profit and myn ese?
 I sette hem so awerke,° by my fay,° awork / faith
 That many a night they songen° waylaway. sang

8. The Almagest, an astronomical work by the Greek astronomer and mathematician Ptolemy (second century A.D.), contains no such aphorism. The aphorism does, however, appear in a collection ascribed to him.

9. If I speak according to my whim.

1. I set no store by it.

2. Set no value on.

3. Busy herself constantly.

- The bacon was nat fet^o for hem, I trowe, brought back
 That some men han in Essexe at Dunmowe.⁴
- 225 I governed hem so wel after^o my lawe according to
 That ecch of hem ful blisful was and fawe^o glad
 To bringe me gaye thinges fro the faire;
 They were ful glade whan I spak hem faire,
 For God it woot, I chidde^o hem spitously.^o chided / cruelly
- 230 Now herkneth how I bar me⁵ proprely:
 Ye wise wives, that conne understonde,
 Thus sholde ye speke and bere him wrong on honde⁶—
 For half so boldely can ther no man
 Swere and lie as a woman can.
- 235 I saye nat this by wives that been wise,
 But if it be whan they hem misavise.⁷
 A wis wif, if that she can hir good,⁸
 Shal bere him on hande the cow is wood,⁹
 And take witesse of hir owene maide
- 240 Of hir assent.¹ But herkneth how I saide:
 "Sire olde cainard,^o is this thyn array?² sluggard
 Why is my neighebores wif so gay?
 She is honoured overal ther she gooth:
 I sitte at hoom; I have no thrifty^o cloth. decent
- 245 What doostou at my neighebores hous?
 Is she so fair? Artou so amorous?
 What roun^o ye with oure maide, benedicite?³ whisper
 Sire olde lechour, lat thy japes^o be. tricks, intrigues
 And if I have a gossib^o or a freend, confidant
- 250 Withouten gilt ye chiden as a feend,
 If that I walke or playe unto his hous.
 Thou comest hoom as dronken as a mous,
 And prechest on thy bench, with yvel preef.⁴
 Thou saist to me, it is a greet meschief^o misfortune
- 255 To wedde a poore womman for costage.⁵
 And if that she be riche, of heigh parage,^o descent
 Thanne saistou that it is a tormentrye
 To suffre hir pride and hir malencolye.
 And if that she be fair, thou verray knave,
- 260 Thou saist that every holour^o wol hire have: whoremonger
 She may no while in chastitee abide
 That is assailed upon ecch a side.
 "Thou saist som folk desiren us for richesse,

4. The Dunmow flitch was awarded to the couple who after a year of marriage could claim no quarrels, no regrets, and the desire, if freed, to remarry one another.

5. Bore myself, behaved.

6. Accuse him falsely.

7. When they make a mistake.

8. If she knows what's good for her.

9. Shall persuade him the chough has gone crazy. The chough, or jackdaw, was popularly supposed to tell husbands of their wives' infidelity.

1. And call as a witness her maid, who is on her side.

2. I.e., is this how you behave?

3. Bless me.

4. I.e., (may you have) bad luck.

5. Because of the expense.

- Som⁶ for oure shap, and som for oure fairnesse,
 265 And som for she can outh^o singe or daunce,
 And som for gentillesse and daliaunce,^o either
 Som for hir handes and hir armes smale^o— flirtatiousness
 Thus gooth al to the devel by thy tale!⁷ slender
 Thou saist men may nat keepe⁸ a castel wal,
 270 It may so longe assailed been overal.^o everywhere
 And if that she be foul, thou saist that she Coveiteth^o every man that she may see; desires
 For as a spaniel she wol on him lepe,
 Til that she finde som man hire to chepe.^o buy
 275 Ne noon so grey goos gooth ther in the lake,
 As, saistou, wol be withoute make;^o mate
 And saist it is an hard thing for to weelde^o possess
 A thing that no man wol, his thanks, heelde.⁹
 Thus saistou, lorel,^o whan thou goost to bedde, loafer
 280 And that no wis man needeth for to wedde,
 Ne no man that entendeth^o unto hevenc— aims
 With wilde thonder-dint¹ and fry leve^o
 Mote thy welked nekke be tobroke!²
 Thou saist that dropping^o houses and eek smoke leaking
 285 And chiding wives maken men to flee
 Out of hir owene hous: a, benedicite,⁹ bless me!
 What aileth swich an old man for to chide?
 Thou saist we wives wil oure vices hide
 Til we be fast,³ and thanne we wol hem shewe—
 290 Wel may that be a proverbe of a shrewel^o villain
 Thou saist that oxen, asses, hors,^o and houndes, horses
 They been assayed at diverse stoundes;^o times
 Bacins, lavours,^o er that men hem bye, washbowls
 Spoones, stooles, and al swich housbondrye,^o household goods
 295 And so be^o pottes, clothes, and array^o— are / clothing
 But folk of wivcs maken noon assay
 Til they be wedded—olde dotard shrewel
 And thanne, saistou, we wil oure vices shewe.
 Thou saist also that it displeth me
 300 But if that thou wolt praise my beautce,
 And but thou poure alway upon my face,
 And clepe me 'Faire Dame' in every place,
 And but thou make a feeste on thilke day
 That I was born, and make me fressh and gay,
 305 And but thou do to my norice^o honour, nurse
 And to my chamberere within my bowr,⁴
 And to my fadres folk, and his allies⁵—

6. "Som," in this and the following lines, means "one."

7. I.e., according to your story.

8. I.e., keep safe.

9. No man would willingly hold.

1. Thunderbolt; "leve^o": lightning.

2. May thy withered neck be broken!

3. I.e., married.

4. And to my chambermaid within my bedroom.

5. Relatives by marriage.

- Thus saistou, olde barel-ful of lies.
 And vit of our apprentice Janekin,
 310 For his crisepe° heer, shining as gold so fin, curly
 And for he squiereth me bothe up and down,
 Yit hastou caught a fals suspeciou;
 I wil° him nat though thou were deed° tomorwe. want / dead
 "But tel me this, why hidestou with sorwe"⁶
 315 The keyes of thy cheste away fro me?
 It is my good° as wel as thyn, pardce. property
 What, weenestou° make an idiot of oure dame? do you think to
 Now by that lord that called is Saint Jame,
 Thou shalt nought bothe, though thou were wood,° furious
 320 Be maister of my body and of my good:
 That oon thou shalt forgo, maugree thine yēn.⁷
 "What helpeth it of me enquire° and spyen? inquire
 I trowe thou woldest loke° me in thy cheste. lock
 Thou sholdest saye, 'Wif, go wher thee leste.° it may please 325 Taak youre disport. I nil leve° no tales: believe
 I knowe you for a trewe wif, dame Alis.'
 We love no man that taketh keep or charge⁸
 Wher that we goon: we wol been at oure large.⁹
 Of alle men yblessed mote he be
 330 The wise astrologen° daun Ptolomee, astronomer
 That saith this proverbe in his Almageste:
 'Of alle men his wisdom is the hyste
 That rekketh° nat who hath the world in honde.' cares
 By this proverbe thou shalt understonde,
 335 Have thou¹ ynough, what thar° thee rekke or care need
 How merily that othere folkes fare?
 For certes, olde dotard, by youre leve,
 Ye shal han queinte° right ynough at eve: pudendum
 He is too greet a nigard that wil werne° refuse 340 A man to lighte a candle at his lanterne;
 He shal han nevere the lasse° lighte, pardce. less
 Have thou ynough, thee thar nat plaine thee.²
 "Thou saist also that if we make us gay
 With clothing and with precious array,
 345 That it is peril of oure chastitee,
 And yit with sorwe thou moste enforce thee,³
 And saye thise wordes in th'Apostles name:
 'In habit° maad with chastitee and shame clothing
 Ye wommen shal apparaile you,' quod he,
 350 'And nat in tressed heer⁴ and gay perree,° jewelry
 As perles ne with gold ne clothes riche.'⁵

6. I.e., with sorrow to you.

7. Despite your eyes—i.e., despite anything you can do about it.

8. Notice or interest.

9. I.e., liberty.

1. If you have.

2. I.e., you need not complain.

3. Strengthen your position.

4. I.e., elaborate hairdo.

5. See I Timothy ii. 9.

- After thy text, ne after thy rubriche,⁶
 I wol nat werke as muchel as a gnat.
 Thou saigest this, that I was lik a cat:
 355 For whoso wolde senge^o a cattes skin,
 Thanne wolde the cat wel dwellen in his in;^o
 And if the cattes skin be slik^o and gay,
 She wol nat dwelle in house half a day,
 But forth she wol, er any day be dowed,⁷
 360 To shewe her skin and goon a-caterwawed.^o
 This is to saye, if I be gay, sire shrewe,
 I wol renne^o out, my borel^o for to shewe.
 Sire olde fool, what helpeth⁸ thee t'espyen?
 Though thou praye Argus with his hundred yēn
 365 To be my wardecors,^o as he can best,
 In faith, he shal nat keepe^o me but me lest:⁹
 Yit coude I make his beard,¹ so mote I thee.^o
 "Thou saigest eek that ther been thinges thre,
 The whiche thinges troublen al this crthe,
 370 And that no wight may endure the fertlic.^o
 O leve^o sire shrewe, Jesu shorte^o thy lif!
 Yit prechesteou and saist an hateful wif
 Yrekened is for oon of thise meschaunces.
 Been ther nat none othere resemblaunces
 375 That ye may likne youre parables to,²
 But if³ a sely^o wif be oon of tho?
 "Thou liknest eek wommanes love to helle,
 To bareine^o land ther water may nat dwelle;
 Thou liknest it also to wilde fir—
 380 The more it brenneth,^o the more it hath desir
 To consumen every thing that brent^o wol be;
 Thou saist right^o as wormes shende^o a tree,
 Right so a wif destroyeth hir housbonde—
 This knowen they that been to wives bonde."^o
 385 Lordinges, right thus, as ye han understonde,
 Bar I stifly mine olde housbondes on honde⁴
 That thus they saiden in hir dronkenesse—
 And al was fals, but that I took witnesse
 On Janekin and on my nece also.
 390 O Lord, the paine I dide hem and the wo,
 Ful giltelces, by Goddes sweete pine!^o
 For as an hors I coude bite and whine;^o
 I coude plaine^o and^o I was in the gilt,
 Or elles often time I hadde been spilt.^o
 395 Whoso that first to mille comth first grint.^o singe lodging sleek caterwauling run / clothing

bodyguard guard thrive

fourth
dear / shorten

innocent

barren

burns burned just / destroy bound suffering whinny complain / if ruined grinds

6. Rubric, i.e., direction.

7. Has dawned.

8. What does it help.

9. Unless I please.

1. I.e., deceive him.

2. Isn't there something else appropriate that you can apply your metaphors to?

3. Unless.

4. I rigorously accused my old husbands.

- I plained first: so was oure werre stint.⁵
 They were ful glade to excusen hem ful blive⁶ quickly
 Of thing of which they nevere agilte hir live.⁶
 Of wenches wolde I bren hem on honde,
 400 Whan that for sik⁷ they mighte unnethe⁸ stonde, scarcely
 Yit tikled I his herte for that he Wende⁹ I hadde had of him so greet cheertee.⁸ thought
 I swoor that al my walking out by nighte
 Was for to espye wenches that he dighte.⁹
 405 Under that colour¹ hadde I many a mirth.
 For al swich wit is given us in oure birth:
 Deceite, weeping, spinning God hath yive
 To wommen kindly⁹ whil they may live. naturally
 And thus of oo thing I avaunte me:²
 410 At ende I hadde the bet⁹ in ecch degre, better
 By sleighte or force, or by som manere thing,
 As by continuell murmur⁹ or grucching;⁹ complaint / grumbling
 Namely⁹ abedde hadden they meschaunce: especially Ther wolde I chide and do hem no plesaunce;³
 415 I wolde no lenger in the bed abide
 If that I felte his arm over my side,
 Til he hadde maad his raunson⁹ unto me; ransom
 Thanne wolde I suffre him do his nicetec.⁹ lust
 And therefore every man this tale I telle:
 420 Winne whoso may, for al is for to selle;
 With empty hand men may no hawkes lure.
 For winning⁹ wolde I al his lust endure, profit
 And make me a feined appetit—
 And yit in bacon⁴ hadde I nevere delit.
 425 That made me that evere I wolde hem chide;
 For though the Pope hadde seten⁹ hem biside, sat
 I wolde nought spare hem at hir owene boord.
 For by my trouthe, I quitte⁹ hem word for word. repaid
 As help me verray God omnipotent,
 430 Though I right now sholde make my testament,
 I ne owe hem nat a word that it nis quit.
 I broughte it so aboute by my wit
 That they moste yive it up as for the beste,
 Or elles hadde we nevere been in reste;
 435 For though he looked as a wood⁹ leoun,
 Yit sholde he faile of his conclusioun.⁹ furiosus object
 Thanne wolde I saye, "Goodelief, taak keep,⁵
 How mekely looketh Wilekin, oure sheep!

5. Our war brought to an end.

6. Of a thing in which they never offended in their lives.

7. I.e., sickness.

8. Affection.

9. Had intercourse with.

1. I.e., excuse.

2. Boast.

3. Show them no affection.

4. I.e., old meat.

5. Good friend, take notice.

- Com neer my spouse, lat me ba° thy cheeke— kiss
- 440 Ye sholden be al pacient and meeke,
 And han a sweete-spiced⁶ conscience,
 Sith ye so preche of Jobes pacience;
 Suffreth alway, sin ye so wel can preche;
 And but ye do, certain, we shal you teche
 445 That it is fair to han a wif in pees.
 Oon of us two moste bowen, doutelees,
 And sith a man is more resonable
 Than womman is, ye mosten been suffrable.^o
 What aileth you to grucche° thus and grone?
 450 Is it for ye wolde have my queinte° allone?
 Why, taak it al—lo, have it everydeel.^o
 Peter, I shrewe° you but ye love it weel.
 For if I wolde selle my bele chose,⁷
 I coude walke as fressh as is a rose;
 455 But I wol keepe it for youre owene tooth.^o taste
 Ye be to blame. By God, I saye you sooth!"
 Swiche manere° wordes hadde we on honde. kind of
 Now wol I speke of my ferthe° housbonde. fourth
- My ferthe housbonde was a revelour—
- 460 This is to sayn, he hadde a paramour— mistress
 And I was yong and ful of ragerye,^o wantonness
 Stibourne° and strong and joly as a pie:^o untamable / magpie
 How coude I daunce to an harpe smale,^o gracefully
 And singe, ywis,^o as any nightingale, indeed
 465 Whan I hadde dronke a draughte of sweete win.
 Metellius, the foule cherl, the swin,
 That with a staf birafte° his wif hir lif deprived
 For° she drank win, though I hadde been his wif, because Ne sholde nat han daunted me fro drinke;
- 470 And after win on Venus moste° I thinke, must
 For also siker° as cold engendreth hail, sure
 A likerous° mouth moste han a likerous° tail: greedy / lecherous
 In womman vinolent° is no defence— bibulous
 This knowen lechours by experience.
- 475 But Lord Crist, whan that it remembreth me⁸
 Upon my youthe and on my jolitee,
 It tikleth me aboute myn herte roote—
 Unto this day it dooth myn herte boote° good
 That I have had my world as in my time.
- 480 But age, allas, that al wol envenime,^o poison
 Hath me biraft° my beautee and my pith—
 Lat go, farewel, the devel go therwith!
 The flour is goon, ther is namore to telle:
 The bren° as I best can now moste I selle;
 485 But yit to be right merye wol I fonde.^o bran strive

6. I.e., delicate.

7. Fair thing.

8. When I look back.

9. Has taken away from me.

Now wol I tellen of my ferthe housbonde.

I saye I hadde in herte greet despit

That he of any other hadde delit,

But he was quit,^o by God and by Saint Joce:

paid back

490 I made him of the same wode a croce¹—

Nat of my body in no foul manere—

But, certainly, I made folk swich cheere

That in his owene grece I made him frye,

For angre and for verray jalousye.

495 By God, in erthe I was his purgatorye,

For which I hope his soule be in glorie.

For God it woot, he sat ful ofte and soong^o

sang

Whan that his sho ful bitterly him wroong.^o

pinched

Ther was no wight save God and he that wiste^o

knew

500 In many wise how sore I him twiste.

He deide whan I cam fro Jerusalem,

And lith ygrave under the roode-beem,²

Al^o is his tombe nought so curious³

although

As was the sepulcre of him Darius,

505 Which that Apelles wroughte subtilly:⁴

It nis but wast to burye him preciously.^o

expensively

Lat him fare wel, God yive his soule reste;

He is now in his grave and in his cheste.

Now of my fifthe housbonde wol I telle—

510 God lete his soule nevere come in helle—

And yit he was to me the moste shrewe:⁵

That feele I on my ribbes al by rewe,⁶

And evere shal unto myn ending day.

But in oure bed he was so fressh and gay,

515 And therwithal so wel coude he me glose^o

wheedle

Whan that he wolde han my bele chose,

That though he hadde me bet^o on every boon,^o beaten / bone

He coude winne again my love anon.^o

immediately

I trowe I loved him best for that he 520 Was of his love daungerous⁷ to me.

We wommen han, if that I shal nat lie,

In this matere a quainte fantasye:

Waite what⁸ thing we may nat lightly^o have,

easily

Therafter wol we crye al day and crave;

525 Forbede us thing, and that desiren we;

Preesse on us faste, and thanne wol we flee.

With daunger oute we al oure chaffare:⁹

Greet prees^o at market maketh dere^o ware, crowd / expensive

1. I made him a cross of the same wood. The proverb has much the same sense as the one quoted in line 493.

2. And lies buried under the rood beam (the crucifix beam running between nave and chancel).

3. Carefully wrought.

4. According to medieval legend, the artist Apelles decorated the tomb of Darius, king of the Persians.

5. Worst rascal.

6. In a row.

7. I.e., he played hard to get.

8. "Waite what": whatever.

9. With coyness, we spread out our merchandise.

- And too greet chepe is holden at litel pris.¹
 530 This knoweth every womman that is wis.
 My fifthe housbonde—God his soule blesse!—
 Which that I took for love and no richesse,
 He somtime was a clerk at Oxenforde,
 And hadde laft° scole and wente at hoom to boorde left
 535 With my gossib,° dwelling in oure town— confidante
 God have hir soule!—hir name was Alisoun;
 She knew myn herte and eek my privetee° secrets
 Bet° than oure parissch preest, as mote I thee.° better / thrive
 To hire biwrayed° I my conseil° al, disclosed / secrets
 540 For hadde myn housbonde pissed on a wal,
 Or doon a thing that sholde han cost his lif,
 To hire,° and to another worthy wif, her
 And to my nece which I loved weel,
 I wolde han told his conseil everydeel;° entirely
 545 And so I dide ful often, God it woot,
 That made his face often reed° and hoot° red / hot
 For verray shame, and blamed himself for þe
 Hadde told to me so greet a privetee.
 And so bifel that ones in a Lente—
 550 So often times I to my gossib wente,
 For evere yit I loved to be gay,
 And for to walke in March, Averil, and May,
 From hous to hous, to heere sondry tales—
 That Janekin clerk and my gossib dame Alis
 555 And I myself into the feeldes wente.
 Myn housbonde was at London al that Lente:
 I hadde the better leiser for to playe,
 And for to see, and eek for to be scye° seen
 Of lusty folk—what wiste I wher my grace° luck
 560 Was shapen° for to be, or in what place? destined
 Therefore I made my visitaciouns
 To vigilies² and to processions,
 To preching eek, and to thise pilgrimages,
 To playes of miracles and to mariages,
 565 And wered upon³ my gaye scarlet gites°— dress
 Thise wormes ne thise motthes ne thise mites,
 Upon my peril, frete° hem neveradeel: ate
 And woostou why? For they were used weel.
 Now wol I tellen forth what happed me.
 570 I saye that in the feeldes walked we,
 Til trewely we hadde swich daliaunce,° flirtation
 This clerk and I, that of my purveyaunce° foresight
 I spak to him and saide him how that he,
 If I were widwe, sholde wedde me.

1. Too good a bargain is held at little value.

2. Feasts preceding a saint's day.

3. Wore.

- 575 For certainly, I saye for no bobaunce,^o boast
 Yit was I nevere withouten purveyaunce
 Of mariage n'of othere thinges eek:
 I holde a mouses herte nought worth a leek
 That hath but oon hole for to sterte^o to, run
- 580 And if that faile thanne is al ydo.⁴
 I bar him on hand⁵ he hadde enchaunted me
 (My dame taughte me that subtiltee);
 And eek I saide I mette^o of him al night: dreamed
 He wolde han slain me as I lay upright,^o supine
- 585 And al my bed was ful of verray blood—
 “But yit I hope that ye shul do me good;
 For blood bitokeneth gold, as me was taught.”
 And al was fals, I dremed of it right naught,
 But as I folwed ay my dames^o lore^o mother's / teaching
- 590 As wel of that as othere thinges more.
 But now sire—lat me see, what shal I sayn?
 Aha, by God, I have my tale again.
 Whan that my ferthe housbonde was on beere,^o bier
 I weep^o algate,^o and made sory cheere, wept / anyhow
 595 As wives moten,^o for it is usage,^o must / custom
 And with my coverchief covered my visage;
 But for I was purveyed^o of a make.^o provided / mate
 I wepte but smale, and that I undertake.^o guarantee
- To chirche was myn housbonde born amowre⁶
 600 With neighebores that for him maden sorwe,
 And Janekin oure clerk was oon of tho.
 As help me God, whan that I saw him go
 After the beere, me thoughte he hadde a paire
 Of legges and of feet so clene⁷ and faire,
 605 That al myn herte I yaf unto his hold.^o possession
 He was, I trowe,^o twenty winter old, believe
 And I was fourty, if I shal saye sooth—
 But yit I hadde alway a coltes tooth:⁸
 Gat-toothed^o was I, and that bicam me weel; gap-toothed
- 610 I hadde the prente⁹ of Sainte Venus seel.
 As help me God, I was a lusty oon,
 And fair and riche and yong and wel-bigoon,^o well-situated
 And trewely, as mine housbondes tolde me,
 I hadde the beste quoniam^o mighte be. pudendum
- 615 For ccrtes I am al Venerien¹
 In feeling, and myn herte is Marcien:
 Venus me yaf my lust, my likerousnesse,^o lecherousness
 And Mars yaf me my sturdy hardinesse.

4. I.e., the game is up.

5. I pretended to him.

6. In the morning.

7. I.e., neat.

8. I.e., youthful appetites.

9. Print, i.e., a birthmark; “seel”: seal.

1. Astrologically influenced by Venus; “Marcien”: influenced by Mars.

- Myn ascendent was Taur² and Mars therinne—
 620 Allas, allas, that evere love was sinnel
 I folwed ay° my inclinacioun ever
 By vertu of my constellacioun;³
 That made me I coude nought withdrawe
 My chambre of Venus from a good felawe.
 625 Yit have I Martes° merk upon my face, Mars'
 And also in another privee place.
 For God so wis° be my savacioun,° surely / salvation
 I loved nevere by no discrecioun,
 But evere folwede myn appetit,
 630 Al were he short or long or blak or whit;
 I took no keep,° so that he liked° me, heed / pleased
 How poore he was, ne eek of what degree.
 What sholde I saye but at the monthes ende
 This joly clerk Janekin. that was so hende° nice
 635 Hath wedded me with greet solempnitee,° splendor
 And to him yaf I al the land and fee° property
 That cvere was me yiven therbifore—
 But afterward repented me ful sore:
 He nolde suffre no thing of my list.° pleasure
 640 By God, he smoot° me ones on the list° struck / ear
 For that I rente° out of his book a leef, tore
 That of the strook° myn ere weex° al deef. blow / grew
 Stibourne° I was as is a leonesse,
 And of my tonge a verray jangleresse,° stubborn
 645 And walke I wolde, as I hadde doon biforn,
 From hous to hous, although he hadde it⁴ sworn;
 For which he often times wolde preche,
 And me of olde Romain geestes° teche, stories
 How he Simplicius Callus lafte° his wif, left 650 And hire forsook for terme of al his lif,
 Nought but for open-heveded he hire sey⁵
 Looking out at his dore upon a day.
 Another Romain tolde he me by name
 That, for his wif was at a someres° game summer's 655 Withouten his witing,° he forsook hire eke; knowledge
 And thanne wolde he upon his Bible seeke
 That ilke proverbe of Ecclesiaste⁶
 Where he comandeth and forbedeth faste° strictly Man shal nat suffre his wif go roule° aboute; roam 660 Thanne wolde he saye right thus withouten doute:
 "Whoso that buildeth his hous al of salves,° willow sticks
 And priketh° his blinde hors over the falwes,⁷ rides

2. My birth sign was the constellation Taurus.

3. I.e., horoscope.

4. I.e., the contrary.

5. Just because he saw her bareheaded.

6. Ecclesiasticus (xxv.25).

7. Plowed land.

- And suffreth his wif to go seeken halwes,^o shrines
 Is worthy to be hanged on the galwes."^o gallows
- 665 But al for nought—I sette nought an hawe⁸
 Of his proverbes n'of his olde sawe;
 N'I wolde nat of him corrected be:
 I hate him that my vices telleth me,
 And so doon mo, God woot, of us than I.
- 670 This made him with me wood al outrely:⁹
 I nolde nought forbere^o him in no cas. submit to
- Now wol I saye you sooth, by Saint Thomas,
 Why that I rente^o out of his book a leef, tore
 For which he smoot me so that I was deaf.
- 675 He hadde a book that gladly night and day
 For his disport he wolde rede alway.
 He cleped it *Valerie*¹ and Theofraste,
 At which book he lough^o alway ful faste; laughed
 And eek ther was somtime a clerk at Rome,
- 680 A cardinal, that highte Saint Jerome,
 That made a book² again Jovinian;
 In which book eek ther was Tertulan,³
 Crysippus, Trotula, and Helouis,
 That was abbesse nat fer fro Paris;
- 685 And eek the Parables of Salomon,⁴
 Ovides Art, and bookes many oon—
 And alle thise were bounden in oo volume.
 And every night and day was his custume,
 Whan he hadde leiser and vacacioun
- 690 From other worldly occupacioun,
 To reden in this book of wikked wives.
 He knew of hem mo legendes and lives
 Than been of goode wives in the Bible.
 For trusteth wel, it is an impossible^o impossibility
- 695 That any clerk wol speke good of wives,
 But if it be of holy saintes lives,
 N'of noon other womman nevere the mo—
 Who painted the leon, tel me who?⁵
 By God, if wommen hadden writen stories,
- 700 As clerkes han within hir oratories,

8. I did not rate at the value of a hawthorn berry.

9. Entirely.

1. I.e., the Letter of Valerius Concerning Not Marrying, by Walter Map; "Theofraste": Theophrastus' Book Concerning Marriage. Medieval manuscripts often contained a number of different works, sometimes, as here, dealing with the same subject.

2. St. Jerome's antifeminist Reply to Jovinian; "again": against.

3. Tertullian, author of treatises on sexual modesty. Crysippus (or Chrysip-pus), in the next line, is mentioned by Jerome as an antifeminist; Trotula was a female doctor whose presence here is unexplained; "Helouis" is Eloise, whose love affair with the great scholar Abelard was a medieval scandal.

4. The Biblical Book of Proverbs; "Ovides Art": Ovid's Art of Love.

5. In one of Aesop's fables, the lion, shown a picture of a man killing a lion, asked who painted the picture. Had a lion been the artist, of course, the roles would have been reversed.

- They wolde han writen of men more wikkednesse
 Than al the merk⁶ of Adam may redresse.
 The children of Mercurye and Venus⁷
 Been in hir working⁸ ful contrarious:⁹ operation / opposed
 705 Mercurye loveth wisdom and science,
 And Vcnus loveth riot⁹ and dispence;⁹ parties / expenditures
 And for hir diverse disposicioun
 Each falleth in otheres exaltacioun,⁸
 And thus, God woot, Mercurye is desolat
 710 In Pisces wher Venus is exaltat,⁹
 And Venus falleth ther Mercurye is raised:
 Therfore no womman of no clerk is praised.
 The clerk, whan he is old and may nought do
 Of Vcnus werkes worth his olde sho,⁹ shoe
 715 Thanne sit⁹ he down and writ⁹ in his dotage sits / writes
 That wommen can nat keepe hir mariage.
 But now to purpose why I tolde thee
 That I was beten for a book, pardee:
 Upon a night Janckin, that was oure sire,¹
 720 Redde on his book as he sat by the fire
 Of Eva first, that for hir wikkednesse
 Was al mankind brought to wrecchednesse,
 For which that Jesu Crist himself was slain
 That boughte⁹ us with his herte blood again— redeemed
 725 Lo, heer expres of wommen may ye finde
 That womman was the los⁹ of al mankind.² ruin
 Tho⁹ redde he me how Sampson loste his heres: then Sleeping his lemman⁹ kitte⁹ it with hir sheres, mistress / cut
 Thurgh which treson loste he both his yēn.
 730 Tho redde he me, if that I shal nat lien,
 Of Ercules and of his Dianire,³
 That caused him to sette himself afre.
 No thing forgat he the sorwe and wo
 That Socrates hadde with his wives two—735 How Xantippa caste pisse upon his heed:
 This sely⁹ man sat stille as he were deed; silly
 He wipd his heed, namore dorste he sayn
 But “Er that thonder stinte,⁹ comth a rain.” stops
 Of Pasipha⁴ that was the queene of Crete—
 740 For shrewednesse⁹ him thoughte the tale sweete— malice

6. Mark, sex.

7. I.e., clerks and women, astrologically ruled by Mercury and Venus respectively.

8. Because of their contrary positions (as planets), each one descends (in the belt of the zodiac) as the other rises; hence one loses its power as the other becomes dominant.

9. I.e., Mercury is deprived of power in Pisces (the sign of the Fish), where Venus is most powerful.

1. My husband.

2. The stories of wicked women Chaucer drew mainly from St. Jerome and Walter Map.

3. Dejanira unwittingly gave Hercules a poisoned shirt, which hurt him so much that he committed suicide by fire.

4. Pasiphaë, who fell in love with a bull.

- Fy, speek namore, it is a grisly thing
 Of hir horrible lust and hir liking.^o pleasure
 Of Clytermistra⁵ for hir lecherye
 That falsly made hir housbonde for to die,
 He redde it with ful good devocioun.
 745 He tolde me eek for what occasioun
 Amphiorax⁶ at Thebes loste his lif:
 Myn housbonde hadde a legende of his wif
 Eriphylem, that for an ouche^o of gold trinket
 750 Hath prively unto the Greekes told
 Wher that hir housbonde hidde him in a place,
 For which he hadde at Thebes sory grace.
 Of Livia⁷ tolde he me and of Lucie:
 They bothe made hir housbondes for to die,
 755 That oon for love, that other was for hate;
 Livia hir housbonde on an even late
 Empoisoned hath for that she was his fo;
 Lucia likerous^o loved hir housbonde so lecherous
 That for^o he sholde alway upon hire thinke, in order that 760 She yaf him swich a manere love-drinke
 That he was deed er it were by the morwe.⁸
 And thus algates^o housbondes han sorwe. constantly
 Thanne tolde he me how oon Latumius
 Complained unto his felawe Arrius
 765 That in his gardin grewed swich a tree,
 On which he saide how that his wives three Hanged himself for herte despitous.⁹
 "O leve^o brother," quod this Arrius, dear
 "Yif me a plante of thilke blessed tree, 770 And in my gardin planted shal it be."
 Of latter date of wives hath he red
 That some han slain hir housbondes in hir bed
 And lete hir lechour dighte¹ hire al the night,
 Whan that the cors^o lay in the floor upright;^o corpse / supine
 775 And some han driven nailes in hir brain
 Whil that they sleepe, and thus they han hem slain;
 Some han hem yiven poison in hir drinke.
 He spak more harm than herte may bithinke,^o imagine
 And therwithal he knew of mo proverbes
 780 Than in this world ther growen gras or herbes:
 "Bet is," quod he, "thyn habitacioun
 Be with a leon or a foul dragoun

5. Clytemnestra, who, with her lover Aegisthus, slew her husband Agamemnon.

6. Amphiaras, betrayed by his wife Eriphyle and forced to go to the war against Thebes.

7. Livia murdered her husband in behalf of her lover Sejanus. "Lucie": Lucilla, who was said to have poisoned her husband, the poet Lucretius, with a potion designed to keep him faithful.

8. He was dead before it was near morning.

9. For malice of heart.

1. Have intercourse with.

- Than with a womman using° for to chide." accustomed
 "Bet is," quod he, "hve in the roof abide 785 Than with an angry wif down in the hous:
 They been so wikked° and contrarious, perverse
 They haten that hir housbondes loveth ay."
 He saide, "A womman cast° hir shame away casts
 When she cast of° hir smok,"² and ferthermo, off
 790 "A fair womman, but she be chast also,³
 Is like a gold ring in a sowes nose." Psalm 5 interpreted incorrectly,
 Who wolde weene°, or who wolde suppose "ichaste" think
 The wo that in myn herte was and pine?° should suffering
 And whan I sawgh he wolde nevere fine° probably be end
 795 To reden on this cursed book al night, "wise"
 Al sodeinly three leves have I plight° snatched
 Out of his book right as he redde, and eke
 I with my fist so took° him on the cheeke
 That in oure fir he fil° bakward adown. fell
 800 And up he sterte as dooth a wood° leoun, raging
 And with his fist he smoot me on the heed° head
 That in the floor I lay as I were deed.
 And whan he sawgh how stille that I lay,
 He was agast, and wolde have fled his way,
 805 Til atte laste out of my swough° I braide:° swoon / started
 "O hastou slain me, false thief?" I saide,
 "And for my land thus hastou mordred° me? murdered
 Er I be deed° yit wol I kisse thee." dead
 And neer he cam and kneeled faire adown,
 810 And saide, "Dere suster Alisoun,
 As help me God, I shal thee nevere smite.
 That I have doon, it is thyself to wite.° blame
 Foryif it me, and that I thec biseeke."
 And yit eftsoones° I hitte him on the cheeke, again
 815 And saide, "Thief, thus muchel am I wreke.° avenged
 Now wol I die: I may no lenger speke."
 But at the laste with muchel care and wo
 We fille⁴ accorded by us selven two.
 He yaf me al the bridel° in myn hand, bridle
 820 To han the governance of hous and land,
 And of his tonge and his hand also;
 And made⁵ him brenne° his book anoonright tho. burn
 And whan that I hadde geten unto me
 By maistrie° al the sovereinete°, skill / dominion
 825 And that he saide, "Myn owene trewe wif,
 Do as thee lust° the terme of al thy lif;
 Keep thyn honour, and keep eek myn estat,"
 After that day we hadde nevere debat.

2. Undergarment.

3. I.e., bit.

4. I.e., became.

5. I.e., I made.

God help me so, I was to him as kinde
 830 As any wif from Denmark unto Inde,
 And also trewe, and so was he to me.
 I praye to God that sit° in majestee, sits
 So blesse his soule for his mercy dere.
 Now wol I saye my tale if ye wol heere.

[ANOTHER INTERRUPTION]

835 The Frere lough° whan he hadde herd al this: laughed
 "Now dame," quod he, "so have I joye or blis,
 This is a long preamble of a tale."
 And whan the Somnour herde the Frere gale,° exclaim
 "Lo," quod the Somnour, "Goddess armes two,
 840 A frere wol entremette him⁶ everemo!
 Lo, goode men, a flye and eek a frere
 Wol falle in every dissh and eek matere.
 What spekestou of preambulacioun?
 What, amble or trotte or pisse or go sitte down!
 845 Thou lettest° oure disport in this manere." hinder
 "Ye, woltou so, sire Somnour?" quod the Frere.
 "Now by my faith, I shal er that I go
 Telle of a somnour swich a tale or two
 That al the folk shal laughen in this place."
 850 "Now elles, Frere, I wol bishrewe° thy face," curse
 Quod this Somnour, "and I bishrewe me,
 But if I telle tales two or three
 Of freres, er I come to Sidingborne,⁷
 That I shal make thyn herte for to moorne—
 855 For wel I woot thy pacience is goon."
 Oure Hoste cride, "Pees, and that anon!"
 And saide, "Lat the womman telle hir tale:
 Ye fare as folk that dronken been of ale.
 Do, dame, tel forth youre tale, and that is best."
 860 "Al redy, sire," quod she, "right as you lest°— it pleases
 If I have licence of this worthy Frere."
 "Yis, dame," quod he, "tel forth and I wol heere."

6. Intrude himself.

7. Sittingbourne (a town forty miles from London).

*The Tale*¹

- In th'olde daves of the King Arthour,
 Of which that Britouns° speken greet honour, Bretons
 865 Al was this land fulfild of fairye:²
 The elf-queene with hir joly compaignye
 Daunced ful ofte in many a greene mede°— meadow
 This was the olde opinion as I rede;
 I speke of many hundred yeres ago.
 870 But now can no man see none elves mo,
 For now the grete charitee and prayeres
 Of limitours,³ and othere holy freres,
 That serchen every land and every stream,
 As thikke as motes in the sonne-beem,
 875 Blessing halles, chambres, kichenes, bowres,
 Citees, burghes,° castels, hye towres, townships
 Thropes, bernes, shipnes,⁴ dayeries—
 This maketh that ther been no faïries.
 For ther as wont to walken was an elf
 880 Ther walketh now the limitour himself,
 In undermeles° and in morweninges,° afternoons / mornings
 And saith his Matins and his holy thinges,
 As he gooth in his limitacioun.⁵
 Wommen may go sauffly° up and down: safely
 885 In every bussh or under every tree
 Ther is noon other incubus⁶ but he,
 And he ne wol doon hem but dishonour.
 And so bifel it that this King Arthour
 Hadde in his hous a lusty bachelor,
 890 That on a day cam riding fro river,⁷
 And happed° that, allone as he was born, it happened

1. The story of the knight who fully realizes what women most desire only after having been told it in a number of ways was popular in Chaucer's time and a natural one for him to assign to the Wife of Bath, whose well-loved fifth husband had also been slow to learn. But Chaucer reshaped the tale in such a way as to make it fit the Wife and her thesis even more closely. In the other medieval versions of the story the knight is guiltless of any offense to womanhood, and in several of them he is Sir Gawain, traditional model of chivalric courtesy, who weds the hideous hag to save not his own life but that of his lord, King Arthur. Chaucer has made the knight a most ill-behaved and ill-mannered man who needs to learn what women most desire as much in order to redeem his disagreeably virile character as to save his neck. Because within her story he is the sole male in a world of women, Dame Alice is able not only to prove conclusively the value of woman's sovereignty, but also to pay her respects to a world of men that had preached antifeminism, a world here represented by a single rapist.

The story is suited to the Wife's own character psychologically as well as dramatically, for she, like the old hag, had wedded a young man—though unlike the hag she could not restore her former beauty. But if there is a touch of melancholy in the incompleteness of this similarity, it is sharply dispelled by the Wife's final comments, which reassert the sturdy fighting spirit that permeates her Prologue.

2. I.e., filled full of supernatural creatures.

3. Friars licenced to beg in a certain territory.

4. Thorps (villages), barns, stables.

5. I.e., the friar's assigned area. His "holy thinges" are prayers.

6. A spirit that lies with mortal women. "Ne * * * but" in the next line means "only."

7. Hawking, usually carried out on the banks of a stream.

- He sawgh a maide walking him biforn;
 Of which maide anon, maugree hir heed,⁸
 By verray force he rafte° hir maidenheed;
 895 For which oppression° was swich clamour, deprived her of
 And swich pursuite° unto the King Arthour, rape
 That dampned was this knight for to be deed⁹ petitioning
 By cours of lawe, and sholde han lost his heed—
 Paraventure° swich was the statut tho— perhaps 900 But that the queene and othere ladies mo
 So longe prayeden the king of grace,
 Til he his lif him graunted in the place,
 And yaf him to the queene, al at hir wille,
 To chese° wheither she wolde him save or spille.¹ choose 905 The queene thanked the king with al hir might,
 And after this thus spak she to the knight,
 Whan that she saw hir time upon a day:
 "Thou standest yit," quod she, "in swich array° condition
 That of thy lif yit hastou no suretee.° guarantee
 910 I graunte thee lif if thou canst tellen me
 What thing it is that wommen most desiren:
 Be war and keep thy nekke boon° from iren. bone
 And if thou canst nat tellen me anon,
 Yit wol I yive thee leve for to goon
 915 A twelfmonth and a day to seeche° and lere° search / learn
 An answer suffisant° in this matere, satisfactory
 And suretee wol I han er that thou pace,° pass
 Thy body for to yeelden in this place."
 Wo was this knight, and sorwefully he siketh.° sighs
 920 But what, he may nat doon al as him liketh,
 And atte laste he chees° him for to wende, chose
 And come again right at the yeres ende,
 With swich answer as God wolde him purveye,° provide
 And taketh his leve and wendeth forth his waye.
 925 He seeketh every hous and every place
 Wher as he hopeth for to finde grace,
 To lerne what thing wommen love most.
 But he ne coude arriven in no coost²
 Wher as he mighte finde in this matere
 930 Two creatures according in fere.³
 Some saiden wommen loven best richesse;
 Some saide honour, some saide jolinesse;° wantonness
 Some riche array, some saiden lust° abedde, pleasure
 And ofte time to be widwe and wedde.
 935 Some saide that oure herte is most esed
 Whan that we been yflatered and yplesed—
 He gooth ful neigh the soothe, I wol nat lie:
 A man shal winne us best with flaterye,

8. Despite her head, i.e., despite anything she could do.

9. This knight was condemned to death.

1. Put to death.

2. I.e., country.

3. Agreeing together.

- And with attendance and with bisnesse°
 940 Been we ylimed,° bothe more and lesse.
 And some sayen that we loven best
 For to be free, and do right as us lest,°
 And that no man repreve° us of oure vice,
 But saye that we be wise and no thing nice.°
 945 For trewely, ther is noon of us alle,
 If any wight wol clawe us on the galle,°
 That we nil kike° for° he saith us sooth:
 Assaye and he shal finde it that so dooth.
 For be we nevere so vicious withinne,
 950 We wol be holden° wise and clene of sinne.
 And some sayn that greet delit han we
 For to be holden stable and eek secree,⁴
 And in oo purpos stedefastly to dwelle,
 And nat biwaye° thing that men us telle—
 955 But that tale is nat worth a rake-stele.°
 Pardee, we wommen conne no thing hele:°
 Witnesse on Mida.° Wol ye heere the tale?
 Ovide, amonges othere thinges smale,
 Saide Mida hadde under his longe heres,
 960 Growing upon his heed, two asses eres,
 The whiche vice° he hidde as he best mighte
 Ful subtilly from every mannes sighte,
 That save his wif ther wiste° of it namo.
 He loved hire most and trusted hire also.
 965 He prayed hire that to no creature
 She sholde tellen of his disfigure.°
 She swoor him nay, for al this world to winne,
 She nolde do that vilainye or sinne
 To make hir housbonde han so foul a name:
 970 She nolde nat telle it for hir owene shame.
 But nathelees, hir thoughte that she dyde°
 That she so longe sholde a conseil° hide;
 Hire thoughte it swal° so sore aboute hir herte
 That nedely som word hire moste asterte,⁵
 975 And sith she dorste nat telle it to no man,
 Down to a marcis° faste° by she ran—
 Til she cam there hir herte was afire—
 And as a bitore° bombleth in the mire,
 She laide hir mouth unto the water down:
 980 "Biway° me nat, thou water, with thy soun,"°
 Quod she. "To thee I telle it and namo:°
 Myn housbonde hath longe asses eres two.
 Now is myn herte al hool,⁷ now is it oute.
 I mighte no lenger keepe it, out of doute."
 985 Here may ye see, though we a time abide, assiduoussness ensnared

it pleases reprove foolish

sore spot kick / because considered disclose rake handle conceal

Midas

defect

knew deformity

would die secret swelled marsh / close betray / sound to no one else

4. Reliable and also close-mouthed.
 5. Of necessity some word must escape her.

6. Bittern, a heron. "Bombleth": makes a booming noise.
 7. I.e., sound.

- Yit oute it moot:° we can no conseil hide. must
 The remenant of the tale if ye wol heere,
 Redeth Ovide, and ther ye may it lere.⁸
- This knight of which my tale is specially,
 990 Whan that he sawgh he mighte nat come therby—
 This is to saye what wommen loven most—
 Within his brest ful sorweful was his gost,[°] spirit
 But hoom he gooth, he mighte nat sojurne:° delay
 The day was come that hoomward moste° he turne. must
- 995 And in his way it happed him to ride
 In al this care under a forest side,
 Wher as he sawgh upon a daunce go
 Of ladies foure and twenty and yit mo;
 Toward the whiche daunce he drow ful yerne,⁹
- 1000 In hope that som wisdom sholde he lerne.
 But certainly, er he cam fully there,
 Vanished was this daunce, he niste° where. knew not
 No creature sawgh he that bar° lif, bore
 Save on the greene he sawgh sitting a wif—
- 1005 A fouler wight ther may no man devise:° imagine
 Again¹ the knight this olde wif gan rise,
 And saide, "Sire knight, heer forth lith° no way." lies / road
 Telle me what ye seeken, by youre fay.[°] faith Paraventure it may the better be:
- 1010 Thise olde folk conne° muchel thing," quod she. know
 "My leve moder,"° quod this knight, "certain,
 I nam but deed but if that I can sayn
 What thing it is that wommen most desire.
 Coude ye me wisse,° I wolde wel quite youre hire."² teach
- 1015 "Plight me thy trouthe here in myn hand," quod she,
 "The nexte thing that I requere° thee, require of Thou shalt it do, if it lie in thy might,
 And I wol telle it you er it be night."
 "Have heer my trouthe," quod the knight. "I graunte."
- 1020 "Thanne," quod she, "I dar me wel avaunte° boast
 Thy lif is sauf,° for I wol stande therby. safe
 Upon my lif the queene wol saye as I.
 Lat see which is the pruddeste° of hem alle proudest
 That wereth on³ a coverchief or a calle° headdress
- 1025 That dar saye nay of that I shal thee teche.
 Lat us go forth withouten lenger speeche."
 Tho rouned° she a pistel° in his ere, whispered / sentence
 And bad him to be glad and have no fere.
 Whan they be comen to the court, this knight
- 1030 Saide he hadde holde his day as he hadde hight,° promised
 And redy was his answer, as he saide.
 Ful many a noble wif, and many a maide,

8. Learn. The reeds disclosed the secret by whispering "aures aselli" (asses' ears).
 9. Drew very quickly.

1. I.e., to meet.
 2. Repay your trouble.
 3. That wears.

- And many a widwe—for that they been wise—
 The queene hirself sitting as justise,
 1035 Assembled been this answer for to heere,
 And afterward this knight was bode° appere. bidden to
 To every wight comanded was silence,
 And that the knight sholde telle in audience° pen hearing
 What thing that worldly wommen loven best.
 1040 This knight ne stood nat stille as dooth a best,° beast
 But to his question anoon answerde
 With manly vois that al the court it herde.
 “My lige° lady, generally,” quod he, liege
 “Wommen desire to have sovereynetee° dominion
 1045 As wel over hir housbonde as hir love,
 And for to been in maistrye him above.
 This is youre moste desir though ye me kille.
 Dooth as you list:° I am here at youre wille.” please
 In al the court ne was ther wif ne maide
 1050 Ne widwe that contraried° that he saide, contradicted
 But saiden he was worthy han° his lif. to have
 And with that word up sterte° that olde wif, started
 Which that the knight sawgh sitting on the greene;
 “Mercy,” quod she, “my sovereign lady queene,
 1055 Er that youre court departe, do me right.
 I taughte this answer unto the knight,
 For which he plighte me his trouthe there
 The firste thing I wolde him requere° require
 He wolde it do, if it laye in his might.
 1060 Bifore the court thanne praye I thee, sire knight,” Quod she, “that thou me take unto thy wif,
 For wel thou woost that I have kept° thy lif. saved
 If I saye fals, say nay, upon thy fay.”
 This knight answerde, “Allas and wailaway,
 1065 I woot right wel that swich was my biheeste.° promise
 For Goddes love, as chees° a newe requeste: choose Taak al my good and lat my body go.”
 “Nay thanne,” quod she, “I shrewe° us bothe two. curse
 For though that I be foul and old and poore,
 1070 I nolde for al the metal ne for ore
 That under erthe is grave° or lith° above, buried / lies
 But if thy wif I were and eek thy love.”
 “My love,” quod he. “Nay, my dampnacioun!° damnation
 Allas, that any of my nacioun⁴
 1075 Sholde evere so foule disparaged° be.” disgraced
 But al for nought, th’ende is this, that he Constrained was: he needes moste hire wedde,
 And taketh his olde wif and gooth to bedde.
 Now wolden some men saye, paraventure,
 1080 That for my negligence I do no cure⁵
 To tellen you the joy and al th’array

4. I.e., family.

5. I do not take the trouble.

That at the feeste was that ilke day.
 To which thing shortly answer I shal:
 I saye ther nas no joye ne feeste at al;
 1085 Ther nas but hevinesse and muche sorwe.
 For prively he wedded hire on morwe,⁶
 And al day after hidde him as an owle,
 So wo was him, his wif looked so foule.

Greet was the wo the knight hadde in his thought:

1090 Whan he was with his wif abedde brought,
 He walweth° and he turneth to and fro. tosses
 His olde wif lay smiling everemo,
 And saide, "O dere housbonde, benedicite,° bless me
 Fareth° every knight thus with his wif as ye? behaves
 1095 Is this the lawe of King Arthures hous?
 Is every knight of his thus daungerous?° stand-offish
 I am youre owene love and youre wif;
 I am she which that saved hath youre lif;
 And certes yit ne dide I you nevere unright.
 1100 Why fare ye thus with me this firste night?
 Ye faren like a man hadde lost his wit.
 What is my gilt? For Goddes love, telle it,
 And it shal been amended if I may."

"Amended!" quod this knight. "Allas, nay, nay,

1105 It wol nat been amended neveremo.
 Thou art so lothly° and so old also, loathsome
 And therto comen of so lowe a kinde,° race
 That litel wonder is though I walwe and winde.° turn
 So wolde God myn herte wolde breste!"° break

1110 "Is this," quod she, "the cause of youre unreste?"

"Ye, certainly," quod he. "No wonder is."

"Now sire," quod she, "I coude amende al this,

If that me liste, er it were dayes three,
 So° wel ye mighte bere you⁷ unto me.

provided that

1115 "But for ye speken of swich gentillesse

As is descended out of old richesse—

That therfore sholden ye be gentilmen—

Swich arrogance is nat worth an hen.

Looke who that is most vertuous alway,

1120 Privee and apert,⁸ and most entendeth ay

To do the gentil deedes that he can,

Taak him for the gretteste° gentilman.

Crist wol° we claime of him oure gentillesse,

Nat of oure eldres for hir 'old richesse.'⁹

greatest desires that

1125 For though they yive us al hir heritage,

For which we claime to been of heigh parage,°

Yit may they nat biquethe for no thing

To noon of us hir vertuous living,

That made hem gentilmen ycalled be, descent

6. In the morning.

7. Behave.

8. Privately and publicly.

9. See Chaucer's Gentillesse, line 16.

- 1130 And bad¹ us folwen hem in swich degree.
 "Wel can the wise poete of Florence,
 That highte Dant,² speken in this sentence;°
 Lo, in swich manere rym is Dantes tale:
 'Ful selde° up riseth by his braunches³ smale
 1135 Prowesse° of man, for God of his prowesse
 Wol that of him we claime oure gentillesse.'
 For of oure eldres may we no thing claime
 But temporel thing that man may hurte and maime.
 Eek every wight woot this as wel as I,
 1140 If gentillesse were planted naturelly
 Unto a certain linage down the line,
 Privee and apert, thanne wolde they nevere fine°
 To doon of gentillesse the faire office°—
 They mighte do no vilainye or vice.
 1145 "Taak fir and beer° it in the derkeste hous
 Bitwixe this and the Mount of Caucasus,
 And lat men shette° the dores and go thenne,°
 Yit wol the fir as faire lie⁴ and brenne°
 As twenty thousand men mighte it biholde:
 1150 His° office natureel ay wol it holde,
 Up° peril of my lif, til that it die.
 Heer may ye see wel how that genterye°
 Is nat annexed° to possessioun,⁵
 Sith folk ne doon hir operacioun
 1155 Alway, as dooth the fir, lo, in his kinde.°
 For God it woot, men may wel often finde
 A lordes sone do shame and vilainye;
 And he that wol han pris of his gentrye,⁶
 For he was boren° of a gentil hous,
 1160 And hadde his eldres noble and vertuons,
 And nil himselven do no gentil deedes,
 Ne folwen his gentil auncestre that deed° is,
 He nis nat gentil, be he duc or erl—
 For vilaines sinful deedes maken a cherl.
 1165 Thy gentillesse⁷ nis but renomee°
 Of thine auncestres for hir heigh bountee,°
 Which is a straunge° thing for thy persone.
 For gentillesse⁸ cometh fro God allone.
 Thanne comth oure verray gentillesse of grace:
 1170 It was no thing biquethe us with oure place.
 Thenketh how noble, as saith Valerius,⁹
 Was thilke Tullius Hostilius
 That out of poverte° roos to heigh noblesse.
 Redeth Senek,° and redeth eek Boece:°
 1175 Ther shul ye seen expres that no drede° is
- topic seldom excellence cease function bear shut / thence burn its upon gentility related nature born dead renown magnanimity alien poverty
Seneca / Boethius doubt

1. I.e., they bade.
 2. Dante; see his Convivio.
 3. I.e., by its own efforts.
 4. I.e., remain.
 5. I.e., inheritable property.

6. Have credit for his noble birth.
 7. I.e., the gentility you claim.
 8. I.e., true gentility.
 9. A Roman historian.

- That he is gentil that dooth gentil deedes.
 And therefore, leve housbonde, I thus conclude:
 Al were it that mine auncestres weren rude,¹
 Yit may the hye God—and so hope I—
 1180 Graunte me grace to liven vertuously.
 Thanne am I gentil whan that I biginne
 To liven vertuously and waive^o sinne. avoid
 “And ther as ye of poverte me repreve,^o reprove
 The hye God, on whom that we bileve,
 1185 In wilful^o poverte chees^o to live his lif;
 And certes every man, maiden, or wif
 May understonde that Jesus, hevene king,
 Ne wolde nat chese^o a vicious living. voluntary / chose
 Glad poverte is an honeste^o thing, certain;
 1190 This wol Senek and othere clerkes sayn.
 Whoso that halt him paid of² his poverte,
 I holde him riche al hadde he nat a sherte.^o choose
 He that coveiteth³ is a poore wight, honorable
 For he wolde han that is nat in his might;
 1195 But he that nought hath, ne coveiteth^o have, shirt
 Is riche, although we holde him but a knave. desires to Verray poverte it singeth proprely.^o appropriately
 Juvenal saith of poverte, ‘Merily
 The poore man, whan he gooth by the waye,
 1200 Biforn the theves he may singe and playe.’
 Poverte is hateful good, and as I gesse,
 A ful greet bringere out of businesse;⁴
 A greet amendere eek of sapience
 To him that taketh it in pacience;
 1205 Poverte is thing, although it seeme elenge,^o wretched
 Possession that no wight wol chalenge;⁵
 Poverte ful often, whan a man is lowe,
 Maketh⁶ his God and eek himself to knowe;
 Poverte a spectacle^o is, as thinketh me, pair of spectacles
 1210 Thurgh which he may his verray freendes see.
 And therefore, sire, sin that I nought you greve,
 Of my poverte namore ye me repreve.^o reproach
 “Now sire, of elde^o ye repreve me: old age
 And certes sire, though noon auctoritee
 1215 Were in no book, ye gentils of honour
 Sayn that men sholde an old wight doon favour,
 And clepe him fader for youre gentillesse—
 And auctours⁷ shal I finden, as I gesse.
 “Now ther ye saye that I am foul and old:
 1220 Thanne drede you nought to been a cokewold,^o cuckold
 For filthe and elde, also mote I thee,⁸
 Been grete wardeins^o upon chastitee. guardians

1. I.e., low born.

2. Considers himself satisfied with.

3. I.e., suffers desires.

4. I.e., cares.

5. Claim as his property.

6. I.e., makes him.

7. I.e., authorities.

8. So may I thrive.

- But nathelees, sin I knowe your delit,
I shal fulfille youre worldly appetit.
- 1225 "Chees now," quod she, "oon of thise thinges twaye:
To han me foul and old til that I deye
And be to you a trewe humble wif,
And nevere you displese in al my lif,
Or elles ye wol han me yong and fair,
1230 And take youre aventure° of the repair° chance
That shal be to youre hous by cause of me—
Or in som other place, wel may be.
Now chees youreselven wheither° that you liketh." whichever
This knight aviseth him¹ and sore siketh;° sighs
- 1235 But atte laste he saide in this manere:
"My lady and my love, and wif so dere,
I putte me in youre wise governaunce:
Cheseth° youreself which may be most plesaunce² choose
And most honour to you and me also.
- 1240 I do no fors the wheither³ of the two,
For as you liketh it suffiseth° me." satisfies
"Thanne have I gete° of you maistrye," quod she, got
"Sin I may chese and governe as me lest?"° it pleases
"Ye, certes, wif," quod he. "I holde it best."
- 1245 "Kisse me," quod she. "We be no lenger wrothe.
For by my trouthe, I wol be to you bothe—
This is to sayn, ye, bothe fair and good.
I praye to God that I mote sterven wood,⁴
But° I to you be al so good and trewe unless 1250 As evere was wif sin that the world was newe.
And but I be tomorn° as fair to seene tomorrow morning
As any lady, emperisse, or queene,
That is bitwixe the eest and eek the west,
Do with my lif and deeth right as you lest:
- 1255 Caste up the curtin, looke how that it is."
And whan the knight sawgh verrailly al this,
That she so fair was and so yong therto,
For joye he hente° hire in his armes two; took
His herte bathed in a bath of blisse;
1260 A thousand time arewe° he gan hire kisse, in a row
And she obeyed him in every thing
That mighte do him plesance or liking.° pleasure
And thus they live unto hir lives ende perfect
In parfit° joye. And Jesu Crist us sende
1265 Housbondes meeke, yonge, and fresshe abedde—
And grace t'overbide° hem that we wedde. outlive
And eek I praye Jesu shorte° hir lives shorten
That nought wol be governed by hir wives,
And olde and angry nigardes of dispençe°—
1270 God sende hem soone a verray° pestilence! expenditure veritable

9. I.e., visits.

1. Considers.

2. Pleasure.

3. I do not care whichever.

4. Die mad.

The Franklin's Tale¹

The Introduction²

	"In faith, Squier, thou hast thee wel yquit°	acquitted
	And gentilly. I praise wel thy wit," Quod the Frankelain. "Considering thy youthe,
	So feelingly thou spekest, sire, I allowe° thee:	praise
5	As to my doom° ther is noon that is heer	judgment
	Of eloquence that shal be thy peer,
	If that thou live. God yive thee good chaunce,
	And in vertu sende thee continuance,
	For of thy speeche I have greet daintee.°	delight
10	I have a sone, and by the Trinitee,
	I hadde levere than twenty pound worth land,
	Though it right now were fallen ³ in myn hand,
	He were a man of swich discrecioun
	As that ye been. Fy on possessioun
15	But if ⁴ a man be vertuous withal!
	I have my sone snibbed° and yit shal	scolded
	For he to vertu listeth nat entende,°	attend
	But for to playe at dees° and to dispende, ⁵	dice
	And lese° al that he hath is his usage.	lose
20	And he hath levere taken with a page

1. The Franklin says that his tale is a Breton lay, a sub-genre of romance of which Sir Orfeo is the best English representative. Indeed, the Franklin's definition of the Breton lay resembles the definition at the beginning of Sir Orfeo so closely that it has led to suspicions that the latter was not only the Franklin's source but the chief source of Chaucer's own knowledge of the genre. The source of the Franklin's Tale itself is probably not a lost Breton lay but an old story told by, among others, Boccaccio. But in any case, features found in Breton lays also occur in the Franklin's Tale: a rash promise that must be kept; a supernatural intervention in a plot containing a love situation; stylistic simplicity; and a generally optimistic spirit.

The Franklin is a fine type of the man of humble origins who has risen to the middle class and has adopted the aspirations of the aristocracy while accumulating wealth. His tale shows a nice blend of unselfconscious interest in the value of money and a self-conscious one in gentillesse, the gentle behavior which should distinguish not only the nobly born but (as the Wife of Bath's old hag tells her husband) any free-born man. In this tale gentillesse embraces the virtues of patience (which Dorigen has to learn the hard way) and, more significantly, of trouthe and freedom, "integrity" and "generosity." Though the Franklin shows no awareness of the Biblical text, "Ye shall know the truth and the truth shall make you free" (John viii.32), his tale exemplifies it almost in the manner of a parable. The characters concerned resolve to maintain their trouthe—their pledged word—and this sets up a chain reaction of freedom which releases them from the dire consequences that keeping their word would entail: when the old law of the covenant is honored, it brings into being the new law of forgiveness. The word franklin means "freeman," a meaning Chaucer seems to be playing on when in the last lines of the tale he has the Franklin ask about the three men in the story, "Which was the most free?"

2. The Squire has been speaking for more than 650 lines but has not made much narrative progress in his enormously over-plotted Oriental tale of Cambyuskan and his three children when the Franklin speaks, apparently interrupting the story. It is uncertain, however, whether the Franklin's words represent an intentional interruption or whether they were written to be spoken at the end of the Squire's Tale, which Chaucer intended sometime to complete.

3. I.e., delivered.

4. Unless.

5. Spend money.

- Than to commune with any gentil wight,
Where he mighte lerne gentillesse° aright.”
- “Straw for thy gentillesse!” Quod oure Host.
- “What, Frankelain, pardee sire, wel thou woost°
- 25 That eech of you moot° tellen atte leeste
A tale or two, or breken his biheeste.”°
- “That knowe I wel, sire,” quod the Frankelain.
“I praye you, haveth me nat in desdain,
Though to this man I speke a word or two.”
- 30 “Tel on thy tale withouten wordes mo.”
“Gladly, sire Host,” quod he, “I wol obeye
Unto youre wil. Now herkneth what I saye.
I wol you nat contrarien⁶ in no wise
As fer as that my wittes wol suffice.
- 35 I praye to God that it may plesen you:
Thanne woot I wel that it is good ynow.”°

gentility

know

must promise

enough

The Prologue

- Thise olde gentil Britons° in hir dayes
- Of diverse adventures maden layes,
Rymeyed⁷ in hir firste Briton tonge;
- 40 Whiche layes with hir instruments they songe,°
- Or elles reddene° hem for hir plesaunce;
And oon of hem have I in remembraunce,
Which I shal sayn with good wil as I can.
- But sires, by cause I am a burel° man,
- 45 At my biginning first I you biseeche
Have me excused of my rude speeche.
I lerned nevere retorike,° certain:
- Thing that I speke it moot° be bare and plain;
- I sleep° nevere in the Mount of Parnaso,⁸
- 50 Ne lerned Marcus Tullius Scithero;°
- Colours° ne knowe I noon, withouten drede,°
- But swiche colours as growen in the mede,°
- Or elles swiche as men dye or painte;
Colours of retorike been too quainte:°
- 55 My spirit feeleth nat of swich matere.
But if you list, my tale shul ye heere.

Bretons

sung

read

ignorant rhetoric

must slept

Cicero

doubt

meadow unfamiliar

The Tale

- In Armorik,° that called is Britaine,°
- Ther was a knight that loved and dide his paine¹
- To serve a lady in his beste wise;
- 60 And many a labour, many a greet emprise°

Armorica / Brittany

enterprise

6. Act contrary to.

7. Composed in rhyme.

8. Parnassus, home of the Muses.

9. I.e., rhetorical figures.

1. I.e., made every effort.

- He for his lady wroughte er she were wonne,
 For she was oon² the faireste under sonne,
 And eek therto come of so heigh kinrede° kindred
 That wel unnethes³ dorste this knight for drede
 65 Telle hire his wo, his paine, and his distresse.
 But atte laste she for his worthinesse,
 And namely° for his meeke obeisaunce,° especially / obedience
 Hath swich a pitee caught of his penaunce° suffering
 That prively she fil of⁴ his accord
 70 To taken him for hir housbonde and hir lord,
 Of swich lordshipe as men han over hir wives.
 And for to lede the more in blisse hir lives,
 Of his free wil he swoor hire as a knight
 That nevere in al his lif he day ne night
 75 Ne sholde upon him take no maistrye° dominion
 Again hir wil, ne kithe° hire jealousy, show
 But hire obeye and folwe hir wil in al,
 As any love to his lady shal°— ought
 Save that the name of sovereignete,° sovereignty
 80 That wolde he have, for shame of⁵ his degree.
 She thanked him, and with ful greet humblesse
 She saide, “Sire, sith of youre gentillesse
 Ye profre me to have so large⁶ a reine.
 Ne wolde nevere God bitwixe us twaine,
 85 As in⁷ my gilt, were outhere° werre° or strif. either / war
 Sire, I wol be your humble, trewe wif—
 Have heer my trouthe⁸—til that myn herte breste.”° break
 Thus been they bothe in quiete and in reste.
 For oo thing, sires, sauflly° dar I saye: safely
 90 That freendes° everich° other moot° obeye, lovers / each / must
 If they wol longe holden campaigne.
 Love wol nat be constrained by maistrye:° force
 Whan maistrye comth, the God of Love anon
 Beteth his winges and farewel, he is goon!
 95 Love is a thing as any spirit free;
 Wommen of kinde⁹ desiren libertee,
 And nat to been constrained as a thral°— slave
 And so doon men, if I sooth sayen shal.
 Looke who that is most pacient in love,
 100 He is at his avantage al above.
 Pacience is an heigh vertu, certain,
 For it venquisshe¹⁰th,° as thise clerkes sayn, vanquishes
 Thinges that rigour sholde nevere attaine.¹
 For° every word men may nat chide or plaine:° at / complain
 105 Lerneth to suffre, or elles, so mote I goon,²

2. I.e., one of.

3. With difficulty.

4. I.e., fell in.

5. Out of respect for.

6. I.e., free.

7. As a result of.

8. Troth, word of honor.

9. By nature.

1. I.e., overcome.

2. So may I walk.

- Ye shul it lerne, wherso° ye wol or noon. whether
 For in this world, certain, ther no wight is
 That he ne dooth or saith somtime amis:
 Ire, siknesse, or constellacioun,³
 110 Win, wo, or chaunging of complexioun⁴
 Causeth ful ofte to doon amis or speken.
 On every wrong a man may nat be wreken:° avenged
 After the time moste° be temperaunce must
 To every wight that can on governaunce.⁵
 115 And therefore hath this wise worthy knight
 To live in ese suffraunce° hire bihight,° toleration / promised
 And she to him ful wisly° gan to swere surely
 That nevere sholde ther be defaute° in here: defect
 Here may men seen an humble wis accord:
 120 Thus hath she take hir servant and hir lord—
 Servant in love and lord in marriage.
 Thanne was he bothe in lordshipe and servage.⁶
 Servage? Nay, but in lordshipe above,
 Sith° he hath bothe his lady and his love; since 125 His lady, certes, and his wif also,
 The which that⁷ lawe of love accordeth to.
 And whan he was in this prosperitee,
 Hoom with his wif he gooth to his contree,
 Nat fer fro Pedmark⁸ ther his dwelling was,
 130 Wher as he liveth in blisse and in solas.° delight
 Who coude telle but he hadde wedded be
 The joye, the ese, and the prosperitee
 That is bitwixe an housbonde and his wif?
 A yeer and more lasted this blisful lif,
 135 Til that the knight of which I speke of thus,
 That of Kairrud⁹ was cleped° Arveragus, called Shoop him¹ to goon and dwelle a yeer or twaine also
 In Engeland, that cleped was eek° Britaine,
 To seeke in armes worshipe and honour—
 140 For al his lust° he sette in swich labour— pleasure
 And dwelled ther two yeer, the book saith thus.
 Now wol I stinte° of this Arveragus, cease
 And speke I wol of Dorigen his wif,
 That loveth hir housbonde as hir hertes lif.
 145 For his absence weepeth she and siketh,° sighs
 As doon thise noble wives whan hem liketh.²
 She moorneth, waketh, waileth, fasteth, plaineth;° complains
 Desir of his presence hire so distraïneth° afflicts
 That al this wide world she sette³ at nought.
 150 Hir freendes, whiche that knewe hir hevvy thought,

3. I.e., planetary influences.

4. The balance of humors in the body.

5. Is capable of self-control.

6. Position of a servant.

7. As.

8. Penmarch, in Brittany.

9. Kerru, a town in Brittany.

1. Prepared.

2. It pleases.

3. I.e., valued.

- Conforten hire in al that evere they may:
 They prechen hire, they telle hire night and day
 That causelees she sleeth^o hirself, allas;
 And every confort possible in this cas
 155 They doon to hire with al hir businesse,^o assiduousness
 Al for to make hire leve^o hir hevinesse. abandon
 By proces,⁴ as ye knowen everichoon,
 Men may so longe graven^o in a stoon engrave
 Til som figure therinne emprinted be:
 160 So longe han they comforted hire til she Received hath, by hope and by resoun,
 The emprinting of hir consolacioun,
 Thurgh which hir grete sorwe gan assuage:
 She may nat alway duren^o in swich rage.^o remain / passion
 165 And eek Arveragus in al this care
 Hath sent hir lettres hoom of his welfare,
 And that he wol come hastily again—
 Or elles hadde this sorwe hir herte slain.
 Hir freendes sawe hir sorwe gan to slake,^o diminish
 170 And prayed hire on knees, for Goddes sake.
 To come and romen hire in compaignye,
 Away to drive hir derke fantasye,
 And finally she graunted that requeste:
 For wel she saw that it was for the beste.
 175 Now stood hir castel faste by the see,
 And often with hir freendes walketh she,
 Hire to disporte upon the bank an heigh,
 Wher as she many a ship and barge^o seigh,^o vessel / saw
 Sailing hir cours wher as hem liste go—
 180 But thanne was that a parcel^o of hir wo, component
 For of hirself ful ofte, "Allas!" saith she,
 "Is ther no ship of so manye as I see
 Wol bringen hoom my lord? Thanne were myn herte
 Al warisshe^o of his bittre paines smerte."
 185 Another time ther wolde she sitte and thinke,
 And caste hir yē downward fro the brinke;
 But whan she sawgh the grisly rokkes blake,
 For verray^o fere so wolde hir herte quake real
 That on hir feet she mighte hire nat sustene:^o sustain
 190 Thanne wolde she sitte adown upon the grene
 And pitously into the see biholde,
 And sayn right thus, with sorweful sikes^o colde:⁵ sighs
 "Eterne God that thurgh thy purveyaunce^o providence
 Ledest the world by certain governaunce,
 195 In idel,⁶ as men sayn, ye nothing make:
 But Lord, thise grisly feendly^o rokkes blake, hostile
 That seemen rather a foul confusioun

4. Course of time.
 5. I.e., grievous.

6. I.e., without purpose.

- Of werk, than any fair creacioun
 Of swich a parfit^o wis God and a stable, perfect
 200 Why han ye wrought this werk unresonable?
 For by this werk south, north, ne west ne eest,
 Ther nis yfostred man ne brid⁷ ne beest:
 It dooth no good, to my wit, but anoyeth.
 See ye nat, Lord, how mankinde it destroyeth?
 205 An hundred thousand bodies of mankinde
 Han rokkes slain, al^o be they nat in minde: although
 Which mankinde is so fair part of thy werk
 That thou it madest lik to thyn owene merk:⁸
 Thanne seemed it ye hadde a greet cheertee^o affection
 210 Toward mankinde. But how thanne may it be
 That ye swiche menes^o make it to destroyen?— means
 Whiche menes do no good, but evere anoyen.
 I woot wel clerkes wol sayn as hem leste,⁹
 By arguments, that al is for the beste,
 215 Though I ne can the causes nat yknowe.
 But thilke^o God that made wind to blowe, that
 As keepe my lord! This¹ my conclusioun.
 To clerkes lete^o I al disputisoun,^o leave / disputation
 But wolde God that alle thise rokkes blake
 220 Were sonken^o into helle for his sake! sunken
 Thise rokkes slain myn herte for the fere.”
 Thus wolde she sayn with many a pitous tere.
 Hir freendes sawe that it was no disport
 To romen by the see, but discomfort,
 225 And shopen^o for to playen somwher elles: arranged
 They leden hire by rivers and by welles,^o springs
 And eek in othere places delitable^o; delightful
 They dauncen and they playen at ches and tables.^o backgammon
 So on a day, right in the morwetide,^o morning
 230 Unto a gardin that was ther biside,
 In which that they hadde maad hir ordinaunce^o arrangements
 Of vitale^o and of other purveyaunce,^o food / provisions
 They goon and playe hem al the longe day.
 And this was on the sixte morwe^o of May, morning
 235 Which May had painted with his softe showres
 This gardin ful of leves and of flowres;
 And craft of mannes hand so curiously^o skillfully
 Arrayed hadde this gardin trewely
 That nevere was ther gardin of swich pris,^o excellence
 240 But if² it were the verray Paradis.
 The odour of flowres and the fresshe sighte
 Wolde han maked any herte lighte
 That evere was born, but if too greet siknesse,

7. Bird; “yfostred”: fed.

8. Mark, i.e., image.

9. May please.

1. I.e., this is.

2. Unless.

- Or too greet sorwe heeld it in distresse,
 245 So ful it was of beautee with plesaunce.
 At after-diner gonne they to daunce,
 And singe also, save Dorigen allone,
 Which made alway hir complainte and hir mone,[°] moan
 For she ne sawgh him on the daunce go 250 That was hir housbonde and hir love also.
 But nathelees she moste[°] a time abide, must
 And with good hope lete[°] hir sorwe slide. make
 Upon this daunce, amonges othere men,
 Daunced a squier bifore Dorigen
 255 That fressher was and jolier[°] of array, gayer
 As to my doom,[°] than is the month of May. judgment
 He singeth, daunceth, passing[°] any man surpassing
 That is or was sith[°] that the world bigan. since Therwith he was, if men him sholde describe,[°] describe
 260 Oon of the beste-faring[°] man on live: handsomest
 Yong, strong, right vertuous, and riche and wis,
 And wel-biloved, and holden in greet pris.[°] repute
 And shortly, if the soothe I tellen shal,
 Unwiting of³ this Dorigen at al,
 265 This lusty squier, servant to Venus,
 Which that ycleped[°] was Aurelius, called
 Hadde loved hire best of any creature
 Two yeer and more, as was his aventure.
 But nevere dorste he tellen hire his grevaunce:
 270 Withouten coppe[°] he drank al his penaunce.⁴ cup
 He was despaired, no thing dorste he saye—
 Save in his songes somewhat wolde he wraye[°] disclose
 His wo, as in a general complaining:
 He saide he loved and was biloved no thing;⁵
 275 Of which matere made he manye layes,
 Songes, complaintes, roundels, virelayes,⁶
 How that he dorste nat his sorwe telle,
 But languishsheth as a fureye dooth in helle;
 And die he moste,[°] he saide, as dide Ekko must 280 For Narcisus that dorste nat telle hir wo.⁷
 In other manere than ye heere me saye
 Ne dorste he nat to hire his wo biwraye,[°] disclose
 Save that paraventure[°] som time at daunces, perchance
 Ther yonge folk keepen hir observaunces,⁸
 285 It may wel be he looked on hir face
 In swich a wise as man that asketh grace;
 But no thing wiste[°] she of his entente. knew

3. Unknown to.

4. Suffering; i.e., he suffered in silence.

5. Not at all.

6. The lover unable to declare his love conventionally expressed his frustration by writing verse: Aurelius produced five kinds of verse, but only rondels and virelays are strictly defined forms.

7. Echo was unable to communicate her love for Narcissus and eventually died in despair.

8. Carry on their rituals.

Nathelees° it happed, er they thennes° wente,

nevertheless / thence

290 By cause that he was hir neighebour,
And was a man of worshipec and honour,
And hadde⁹ yknowen him of time yore.¹
They fille^o in speeche, and forth more and more Unto his purpos drow^e Aurelius, fell drew

And whan he sawgh his time, he saide thus:
 295 "Madame," quod he, "by God that this world made,
 So that I wiste^e it mighte youre herte glade,^e knew / gladden
 I wolde that day that youre Arveragus
 Wente over the see that I, Aurelius,
 Hadde went ther nevere I sholde have come again.

knew / gladden

300 For wel I woot my service is in vain:
My gerdon^o is but brestring^o of myn herte. reward / breaking
Madame, reweth² upon my paines smerte,
For with a word ye may me sleepe^o or save. slay

reward / breaking

Here at youre feet God wolde that I were grave!^o
 305 I ne have as now no leiser more to saye:
 Have mercy, sweete, or ye wol do^o me deye.”

slay buried

She gan to looke upon Aurelius:
 "Is this youre wil?" quod she, "and saye ye thus?
 Nevere erst," quod she, "ne wiste I what ye mente.

before

310 But now, Aurelie, I knowe youre entente,
By thilke° God that yaf me soule and lif,
Ne shal I nevere been untrewē wif,
In word ne werk, as fer as I have wit.

that

315 I wol be his to whom that I am knit:^o
Take this for final answer as of me.”
But after that in play thus saide she:

joined

"Aurelie," quod she, "by hye God above,
Yit wolde I graunte you to been youre love,
Sin° I you see so pitously complaine, since

since

320 Looke what day that endeloug° Britaine since
Ye remeve° alle the rokkes, stoon by stoon, along
That they ne lette° ship ne boot° to goon. remove hinder / boat

along remove

That they ne lette^o ship ne boot^o to goon. hinder / boat
I saye, whan ye han maad the coost^o so clene coast
Of rokkes that there nis no stoon vseene.

hinder / boat

coast

325 Thanne wol I love you best of any man—
Have heer my trouthe°—in al that evere I can. word
For wel I woot that it shal nevere bitide.

word.

Lat swiche folies out of youre herte slide!
 What daintee° sholde a man han by his lif
 330 For to love another mannes wif,
 That hath hir body whan so that him liketh?"³

delight

Aurelius ful ofte sore siketh:° sighs

sighs

9. I.e., she had.

1. Long past.

2. Have pity on.

3. It pleases.

- "Is ther noon other grace in you?" quod he.
 "No, by that Lord," quod she, "that maked me."
 335 Wo was Aurelie whan that he this herde,
 And with a sorweful herte he thus answerde.
 "Madame," quod he, "this were an impossible.
 Thanne moot° I die of sodein deeth horrible." must
 And with that word he turned him anoon.
 340 Tho° come hir othere freendes many oon, then
 And in the aleyes° romeden up and down, paths
 And no thing wiste of this conclusioun,
 But sodeinly bigonne revel newe,
 Til that the brighte sonne loste his hewe,
 345 For th' orisonte° hath reft⁴ the sonne his light— horizon
 This is as muche to saye as it was night.
 And hoom they goon in joye and in solas,° delight
 Save only wrecche° Aurelius, allas. wretched
 He to his hous is goon with sorweful herte;
 350 He seeth he may nat from his deeth asterte;° escape
 Him seemed that he felte his herte colde;
 Up to the hevene his handes he gan holde,
 And on his knees bare he sette him down,
 And in his raving saide his orisoun.
 355 For verray wo out of his wit he braide;° went
 He niste⁵ what he spak, but thus he saide;
 With pitous herte his plainte° hath he bigonne lament
 Unto the goddes, and first unto the sonne:
 He saide, "Appollo, god and governour
 360 Of every plaunte, herbe, tree and flowr,
 That yivest after thy declinacioun⁶
 To eech of hem his time and his sesoun,
 As thyn herberwe⁷ chaungeth, lowe or hye;
 Lord Phebus, cast thy merciable° yē merciful
 365 On wrecche Aurelie which that am but lorn.° lost
 Lo, lord, my lady hath my deeth ysworn Withouten gilt, but° thy benignitee unless
 Upon my deedly herte have som pitee;
 For wel I woot, lord Phebus, if you lest,⁸
 370 Ye may me helpen, save my lady, best.⁹
 Now voucheth sauf that I may you devise° describe
 How that I may been holpe,° and in what wise: helped Youre blisful suster, Lucina¹ the sheene,° bright
 That of the see is chief goddesse and queene—
 375 Though Neptunus have deitee in the see,
 Yit emperisse° aboven him is she— empress
 Ye knowen wel, lord, that right as hir desir

4. Deprived of.

5. Knew not.

6. Who give, according to your position in the sky.

7. Lodging, i.e., one of the astrological houses in which the planets reside in alternation.

8. It pleases.

9. Except for my lady, you may help me best.

1. I., e., Diana, the Moon.

- Is to be quiked° and lighted of youre fir,
 For which she folweth you ful bisily,° quickened
 Right so the see desireth naturelly constantly
- 380 To folwen hire, as she that is goddesse
 Bothe in the see and rivers more and lesse;
 Wherefore, lord Phebus, this is my requeste:
 Do this miracle—or do° myn herte breste°— make / break
- 385 That now next at this opposicioun,²
 Which in the signe shal be of the Leoun,
 As prayeth hire so greet a flood to bringe.
 That five fadme° at the leeste it overspringe° fathoms / overrun
 The hyste rok in Armorik Britaine;
- 390 And lat this flood endure yeres twaine:
 Thanne certes to my lady may I saye,
 'Holdeth youre heeste,° the rokkes been awaye.' promise
 Lord Phebus, dooth this miracle for me!
 Praye hire she go no faster cours than ye—
- 395 I saye this, prayeth youre suster that she go
 No faster cours than ye thise yeres two:
 Thanne shal she been evene at the fulle alway,
 And spring-flood lasten bothe night and day.
 And but° she vouche sauf in swich manere unless
- 400 To graunte me my sovereign lady dere,
 Praye hire³ to sinken every rok adown
 Into hir owene derke regioun
 Under the ground ther Pluto dwelleth inne,
 Or nevere mo° shal I my lady winne. more
- 405 Thy temple in Delphos° wol I barefoot seeke. Delphi
 Lord Phebus, see the teres on my cheeke,
 And of my paine have som compassioun."
 And with that word in swoun° he fil° adown, swoon / fell
 And longe time he lay forth in a traunce.
- 410 His brother, which that knew of his penaunce,° pain
 Up caughte him, and to bedde he hath him brought.
 Despaired in this torment and this thought
 Lete° I this woful creature lie— leave
 Chese⁴ he for me wher° he wol live or die. whether
- 415 Arveragus with hele° and greet honour, prosperity
 As he that was of chivalrye the flour,
 Is comen hoom, and othere worthy men:
 O, blisful artou now, thou Dorigen,
 That hast thy lusty housbonde in thine armes,
- 420 The fresshe knight, the worthy man of armes,
 That loveth thee as his owene hertes lif.
 No thing list⁵ him to been imaginatif
 If any wight hadde spoke whil he was oute

2. The position of the sun and moon when they are at a 180-degree angle from one another as seen from the earth.

3. I.e., Diana in her capacity as goddess of the underworld.

4. Let him choose.

5. It pleases.

- To hire of love; he ne hadde of it no doute:
 425 He nought entendeth⁶ to swich matere,
 But daunceth, justeth,^o maketh hire good cheere. jousts
 And thus in joye and blisse I lete hem dwelle,
 And of the sike Aurelius wol I telle.
 In langour and in torment furious
 430 Two yeer and more lay wrecche Aurelius,
 Er any foot he mighte on erthe goon,
 Ne confort in this hadde he noon,
 Save of his brother, which that was a clerk:
 He knew of al this wo and al this werk,
 435 For to noon other creature, certain,
 Of this matere he dorste no word sayn.
 Under his brest he bar it more secree^o secret
 Than evere dide Pamphilus for Galathee.⁷
 His brest was hool^o withoute^o for to seene, whole / outwardly
 440 But in his herte ay^o was the arwe keene; ever
 And wel ye knowe that of a sursanure⁸
 In surgerye is perilous the cure,
 But^o men mighte touche the arwe or come therby. unless
 His brother weep^o and wailed prively, wept
 445 Til at the laste him fil in remembrance⁹
 That whiles he was at Orliens^o in France, Orleans
 As yonge clerkes that been likerous^o desirous
 To reden artes¹ that been curious,^o occult
 Seeken in every halke and every herne²
 450 Particuler³ sciences for to lerne,
 He him remembred that, upon a day,
 At Orliens in studye a book he sey^o saw
 Of magik naturel,⁴ which his felawe,
 That was that time a bachelor of lawe—
 455 Al were he⁵ ther to lerne another craft—
 Hadde prively upon his desk ylaft:^o left
 Which book spak muchel of the operaciouns
 Touching the eighte and twenty mansiouns⁶
 That longen^o to the moone—and swich folye belong
 460 As in oure dayes is nat worth a flye,
 For holy chirches faith in oure bileve^o creed
 Ne suffreth noon illusion us to greve.
 And whan this book was in his remembraunce,
 Anoon for joye his herte gan to daunce,
 465 And to himself he saide prively,
 “My brother shal be warisshe^o hastily, cured
 For I am siker^o that ther be sciences sure

6. Pays attention.

7. Pamphilus and Galataea are the lovers in the medieval Latin Pamphilus de Amore.

8. Superficially healed wound.

9. I.e., he happened to remember.

1. Study subjects.

2. Every nook and cranny.

3. Out of the way.

4. Natural magic employs astrological knowledge rather than spirits.

5. Although he was.

6. I.e., daily positions.

- By whiche men make diverse apperences,^o apparitions
 Swiche as thise subtil tregettores^o playe; magicians
 470 For ofte at feestes have I wel herd saye
 That tregettores withinne an halle large
 Have maad come in a water and a barge,^o ship
 And in the halle rowen up and down;
 Som time hath seemed come a grim leoun;
 475 Som time flowres springe^o as in a mede; grow
 Som time a vine and grapes white and rede;
 Som time a castel al of lim^o and stoon— lime
 And whan hem liked voided⁷ it anoon:
 Thus seemed it to every mannes sighte.
 480 Now thanne conclude I thus: that if I mighte
 At Orlens som old felawe yfinde
 That hadde thise moones mansions in minde,
 Or other magik naturel above,
 He sholde wel make my brother han his love.
 485 For with an apparence a clerk may make
 To mannes sighte that alle the rokkes blake
 Of Britaine were yvoided everichoon,
 And shippes by the brinke comen and goon,
 And in swich forme enduren a day or two:
 490 Thanne were my brother warisshe^o of his wo; cured
 Thanne moste^o she needes holden hir biheeste,^o must / promise
 Or elles he shal shame hire at the leeste.”
 What sholde I make a lenger^o tale of this? longer
 Unto his brothers bed he comen is,
 495 And swich confort he yaf him for to goon
 To Orlens, that up he sterte^o anoon, started
 And on his way forthward thanne is he fare,
 In hope for to been lissed^o of his care. assuaged
 Whan they were come almost to that citee,
 500 But if it were a two furlong or three,
 A yong clerk roming by himself they mette,
 Which that in Latin thriftily^o hem grette,^o properly / greeted
 And after that he saide a wonder thing:
 “I knowe,” quod he, “the cause of your coming.”
 505 And er they ferther any foote wente,
 He tolde hem al that was in hir entente.
 This Briton clerk him axed^o of felawes, asked
 The whiche that he hadde knowe in olde dawes,^o days
 And he answerde him that they dede^o were; dead
 510 For which he weep^o ful ofte many a tere. wept
 Down of his hors Aurelius lighte anoon,
 And with this magicien forth is he goon
 Hoom to his hous, and maden hem wel at ese:
 Hem lakked no vitaille that mighte hem plesse;
 515 So wel arrayed hous as ther was oon
 Aurelius in his lif saw nevere noon.

7. Caused to disappear.

- Ne his rootes,⁷ ne his othere geres,⁸ paraphernalia
 605 As been his centres and his arguments,⁸
 And his proporcionels convenientis,⁹
 For his equacions in every thing;
 And by his eighte spere¹ in his working^o operation
 He knew ful wel how fer Alnath was shove²
 610 Fro the heed of thilke fixe Aries above
 That in the ninte spere considered is:³
 Ful subtilly he calculed^o al this. calculated
 When he hadde founde his firste mansioun,⁴
 He knew the remenant by porporcioun,⁵
 615 And knew the arising of his moone weel,
 And in whos face and terme⁶ and every deel,^o part
 And knew ful wel the moones mansioun
 Accordant⁷ to his operacioun,
 And knew also his othere observaunces^o rules
 620 For swiche illusions and swiche meschaunces
 As hethen folk useden in thilke^o dayes; those
 For which no lenger maked he delayes,
 But, thurgh his magik, for a wike^o or twaye week
 It seemed that alle the rokkes were awaye.
 625 Aurelius, which that yit despaired is Wher^o he shall han his love or fare amis, whether Awaiteth night and day on this miracle;
 And whan he knew that there was noon obstacle,
 That voided were thise rokkes everichoon,
 630 Down to his maistres feet he fil^o anoon, fell
 And saide, "I, woful wrecche Aurelius,
 Thanke you, lord, and lady myn Venus,
 That me han holpen^o fro my cares colde." helped
 And to the temple his way forth hath he holde, 635 Wher as he knew he sholde his lady see.
 And whan he saw his time, anoon right he,
 With dredful^o herte and with ful humble cheere, fear-struck
 Salued^o hath his sovereign lady dere. greeted
 "My right⁸ lady," quod this woful man,
 640 "Whom I most drede and love as best I can,
 And lothest were of al this world displese,
 Nere it⁹ that I for you have swich disese
 That I moste^o dien heer at youre foot anoon, must

7. Tables for making astrological propositions concerning planetary position, degrees of influence, etc.

8. Centers and arguments are astronomical instruments for determining the positions of planets in relation to fixed stars.

9. Fitting proportionals, i.e., special tables for scaling down more general planetary motions to the most particular.

1. Sphere: i.e., the sphere of the fixed stars.

2. He knew full well how far Alnath

(the star Aries) had moved.

3. From the head of that fixed star Aries which is considered to be above, in the ninth sphere.

4. I.e., the first position of the moon.

5. He knew the remnant (rest of the positions) by the use of proportion.

6. Face and term are sectors of the signs of the zodiac.

7. I.e., to be comfortable.

8. Own true.

9. Were it not.

- Nought wolde I telle how me is wo-bigoon.
 645 But certes, outhere^o moste I die or plaine:^o either / complain
 Ye sleen^o me gilteles for verray paine; slay
 But of my deeth though that ye have no routhe,^o pity
 Aviseth you¹ er that ye breke youre trouthe.
 Repenteth you, for thilke God above,
 650 Er ye me sleen^o by cause that I you love. slay
 For Madame, wel ye woot what ye han hight^o— promised
 Not that I chalenge any thing of right
 Of you, my sovereign lady, but youre grace:
 But in a gardin yond at swich a place,
 655 Ye woot right wel what ye bihighten^o me, promised
 And in myn hand youre trouthe pligheten ye
 To love me best. God woot ye saiden so,
 Al^o be that I unworthy am therto. although
 Madame, I speke it for the honour of you
 660 More than to save myn hertes lif right now.
 I have do so as ye comanded me,
 And if ye vouche sauf, ye may go see.
 Dooth as you list, have youre biheeste^o in minde, promise
 For quik^o or deed^o right ther ye shal me finde. living / dead
 665 In you lith^o al to do^o me live or deye: lies / cause
 But wel I woot the rokkes been awaye.”
 He taketh his leve and she astoned^o stood: astonished
 In al hir face nas a drope of blood;
 She wende^o nevere have come in swich a trappe. thought
 670 “Allas,” quod she, “that evere this sholde happe!
 For wende I nevere by possibilitee
 That swich a monstre^o or merveile mighte be; wonder
 It is agains the proces² of nature.”
 And hoom she gooth a sorweful creature.
 675 For verray fere unnethe^o may she go.^o scarcely / walk
 She weepeth, wailleth al a day or two,
 And swouneth^o that it routhe^o was to see. swoons / pity
 But why it was to no wight tolde she,
 For out of town was goon Arveragus.
 680 But to himself she spak and saide thus,
 With face pale and with ful sorweful cheere,^o countenance
 In hir complainte, as ye shal after heere:
 “Allas,” quod she, “on thee, Fortune, I plaine,^o complain
 That unwar^o wrapped hast me in thy chaine, unawares
 685 For which t’ escape woot I no socour— help
 Save only deeth or dishonour:
 Oon of thise two bihoveth me to chese.^o choose
 But natheles yit have I levere to lese^o lose
 My lif, than of my body to have a shame,
 690 Or knowen myselfen fals or lese my name,

1. Consider.

2. Due course.

- And with my deeth I may be quit,³ ywis.
 Hath ther nat many a noble wif er this,
 And many a maide, yslain hirself, allas,
 Rather than with hir body doon trespas?^o sin
- 695 Yis, certes, lo, thise stories beren witnesse:
 When thritty tyrants ful of cursednesse^o wickedness
 Hadde slain Phidon⁴ in Atthenes atte feeste,
 They comanded his doughtren for t'arreste,
 And bringen hem biforn hem in despit^o scorn
- 700 Al naked, to fulfille hir foule delit,
 And in hir fadres blood they made hem daunce
 Upon the pavement—God yive hem meschaunce!
 For which thise woful maidens, ful of drede,
 Rather than they wolde lese^o hir maidenhede, lose
- 705 They prively been stert⁵ into a welle,
 And dreinte^o hemselven, as the bookes telle. drowned
 They of Messene lete enquere and seeke⁶
 Of Lacedomye^o fifty maidens eke, Lacedaemonia
 On whiche they wolden doon hir lecherye;
- 710 But ther was noon of al that compaignye
 That she nas slain, and with a good entente
 Chees^o rather for to die than assente chose
 To been oppressed^o of hir maidenhede: ravished
 Why sholde I thanne to die been in drede?
- 715 Lo, eek, the tyrant Aristoclidēs
 That loved a maiden highte Stymphalides,^o Stymphalis
 Whan that hir fader slain was on a night,
 Unto Dianas temple gooth she aright,
 And hente^o the image in hir handes two; seized
- 720 Fro which image wolde she nevere go:
 No wight ne mighte hir handes of it arace,^o tear
 Til she was slain right in the selve^o place. same
 Now sith^o that maidens hadden swich despit^o since / indignation
 To been defouled with mannes foul delit,
- 725 Wel ought a wif rather hirselven sleepe^o slay
 Than be defouled, as it thinketh me.
 What shal I sayn of Hasdrubales wif
 That at Cartage birafte⁷ hirself hir lif?
 For whan she saw that Romans wan^o the town, won
- 730 She took hir children alle and skippe adown
 Into the fir, and chees rather to die
 Than any Romain dide hire vilainye.
 Hath nat Lucrece yslain hirself, allas,

3. Freed from dilemma.

4. The story of Phidon's daughters and the thirty tyrants, as well as all the following stories about virtuous women, are from St. Jerome's tract against Jovinian.

5. Have jumped.

6. Had inquiries and searches made.

7. Deprived; Hasdrubal was King of Carthage when it was destroyed by the Romans.

- At Rome whan that she oppressed° was raped
 735 Of° Tarquin, for hire thoughte it was a shame by
 To liven whan that she hadde lost hir name?
 The sevene maidens of Milesie° also Miletus
 Han slain himself for verray drede and wo
 Rather than folk of Gaule hem sholde oppresse:
 740 Mo° than a thousand stories, as I gesse, more
 Coude I now telle as touching this matere.
 Whan Habradate° was slain, his wif so dere Abradates
 Hirselves slow,° and leet hir blood to glide slew
 In Habradates woundes deepe and wide,
 745 And saide, 'My body at the leeste way
 Ther shal no wight defoulen, if I may.'⁸
 What sholde I mo ensamples° herof sayn? examples
 Sith° that so manye han hemselves slain since
 Wel rather than they wolde defouled be,
 750 I wol conclude that it is bet° for me better
 To sleen° myself than been defouled thus: slay
 I wol be trewe unto Arveragus,
 Or rather slee myself in som manere—
 As dide Demociones° doughter dere, Demotion's
 755 By cause that she wolde nat defouled be.
 O Cedasus,° it is ful greet pitee Scedasus
 To reden how thy doughtren deide, alas,
 That slowe herself for⁹ swich manere cas.
 As greet a pitee was it, or wel moor,
 760 The Theban maiden that for Nichanor° Nicanor
 Hirselves slow right for swich manere wo.
 Another Theban maiden dide right so:
 For oon of Macedonie hadde hire oppressed,
 She with hir deeth hir maidenhede redressed.¹
 765 What shal I sayn of Nicerates wif
 That for swich caas birafte himself hir lif?
 How trewe eek was to Alcebiades²
 His love, that rather for to dien chees° chose
 Than for to suffre his body unburied be.
 770 Lo, which a wif was Alceste,³ quod she.
 "What saith Omer⁴ of goode Penelopee?
 Al Greece knoweth of hir chastitee.
 Pardee, of Laodomia⁵ is writen thus,
 That whan at Troye was slain Protheselaus,

8. If I can help it.

9. I.e., for fear of.

1. Made amends for.

2. Alcibiades' mistress risked death by burying his body after he had been decapitated by the Spartan Lysander; she did not, however, lose her life as a result.

3. Alcestis, the proposed heroine of Chaucer's Legend of Good Women, died in her husband's place.

4. Homer relates Odysseus' return from Troy to his faithful wife Penelope.

5. Lacodamia followed her dead husband Proteslaus to the underworld.

- 775 No lenger wolde she live after his day.
 The same of noble Porcia⁶ telle I may:
 Withoute Brutus coude she nat live,
 To whom she hadde al hool^o hir herte yive. whole
 The parfit wifhood of Arthemesie⁷
- 780 Honoured is thurgh al the Barbarye.
 O Teuta⁸ queen, thy wifly chastitee
 To alle wives may a mirour be!
 The same thing I saye of Bilia,
 Of Rodogone, and eek Valeria."⁹
- 785 Thus plained^d Dorigen a day or twaye, lamented
 Purposing evere that she wolde deye.
 But nathelees upon the thridde night
 Hoom cam Arveragus, this worthy knight,
 And axed^o hire why that she weep^o so sore, asked / wept
 And she gan weepen evere lenger the more.¹
- 790 "Allas," quod she, "that evere I was born:
 Thus have I said," quod she; "thus have I sworn—"
 And tolle him al as ye han herd bifore:
 It needeth nat reherce it you namore.
- 795 This housbonde with glad cheer^o in freendly wise manner
 Answerde and saide as I shal you devise:
 "Is there ought elles, Dorigen, but this?"
 "Nay, nay," quod she, "God help me so as wis,^o surely
 This is too muche, and^o it were Goddes wille." if
- 800 "Ye, wif," quod he, "lat sleepen that^o is stille. what
 It may be wel paraunter^o yit today. perhaps
 Ye shul youre trouthe² holden, by my fay,^o faith
 For God so wisly^o have mercy upon me, surely
 I hadde wel levere ystiked^o for to be, stabbed
- 805 For verray love which that I to you have,
 But if³ ye sholde youre trouthe keepe and save:
 Trouthe is the hyeste thing⁴ that man may keepe."
 But with that word he brast^o anon to weepe, burst
 And saide, "I you forbede, up^o paine of deeth, upon
- 810 That nevere whil thee lasteth lif ne breeth,
 To no wight tel thou of this aventure.
 As I may best I wol my wo endure,
 Ne make no countenance^o of hevinesse, appearance
 That folk of you may deemen^o harm or gesse." suspect

6. Portia swallowed burning coals on learning of Brutus' death at the battle of Philippi.

7. Artemesia built for her husband King Mausolus the famed tomb called the Mausoleum.

8. Teuta, Queen of Illyria, was unmarried: Dorigen seems to be stretching a point.

9. Bilia's prowess seems to have consisted in enduring her husband's bad breath in uncomplaining silence; Rhodogune slew her nurse, who suggested that she remarry; Valeria refused to marry again.

1. Always more and more.

2. Pledged word.

3. Unless.

4. Legal bond.

- 815 And forth he cleped° a squier and a maide: called
 "Go forth anon with Dorigen," he saide,
 "And bringeth hire to swich a place anon."
 They tooke hir leve and on hir way they goon,
 But they ne wiste° why they thider wente: knew
- 820 He nolde no wight tellen his entente.
 Paraventure an heap of you, ywis,° indeed
 Wol holden him a lewed° man in this, stupid
 That he wol putte his wif in jupartye.
 Herkneþ the tale er ye upon hire crye: jeopardy
- 825 She may have better fortune than you seemeth,⁵
 And whan that ye han herd the tale, deemeth.⁶ judge
 This squier which that highte Aurelius,
 On Dorigen that was so amorous,
 Of aventure⁶ happed° hire to meete happened
- 830 Amidde the town, right in the quikkeste° streete, busiest
 As she was boun° to goon the way forth right° prepared / direct
 Toward the gardin ther as she hadde hight;° promised
 And he was to the gardinward also,
 For wel he spied whan she wolde go
- 835 Out of hir hous to any manere place.
 But thus they meete of aventure or grace,
 And he salueth° hire with glad entente, greet
 And axed° of hire whiderward she wente. asked
- And she answerde half as she were mad,
 840 "Unto the gardin as myn housbonde bad,⁶ bade
 My trouthe for to holde, allas, allas!"
 Aurelius gan wondren on this cas,
 And in his herte hadde greet compassioun
 Of hire and of hir lamentacioun,
- 845 And of Arveragus, the worthy knight,
 That bad hire holden al that she hadde hight,
 So loth him was his wif sholde breke hir trouthe;
 And in his herte he caughte of this greet routhe,⁷ pity
 Considering the beste on every side
- 850 That fro his lust° yit were him levere abide⁷ pleasure
 Than doon so heigh a cherlissh wrecchednesse⁸
 Agains franchise° and alle gentillesse; generosity
 For which in fewe wordes saide he thus:
 "Madame, sayeth to youre lord Arveragus
- 855 That sith° I see his grete gentillesse since
 To you, and eek I see wel youre distresse,
 That him were levere han shame—and that were routhe—
 Than ye to me sholde breke thus youre trouthe,
 I have wel levere⁹ evere to suffre wo

5. It seems.

6. By chance.

7. I.e., abstain.

8. I.e., low-born, miserable act.

9. Had much rather.

- 860 Than I departe° the love bitwixe you two. divide
 I you releesse, Madame, into youre hond,
 Quit every serement° and every bond oath
 That ye han maad to me as herbiforn,
 Sith° thilke time which that ye were born. since
- 865 My trouthe I plighte, I shal you nevere repreve° reproach
 Of no biheeste.° And here I take my leve, promise
 As of the treweste and the beste wif
 That evere yit I knew in al my lif.
 But every wif be war of hir biheeste:
- 870 On Dorigen remembreth at the leeste.
 Thus can a squier doon a gentil deede
 As wel as can a knight, withouten drede.° doubt
 She thanketh him upon hir knees al bare,
 And hoorn unto hir housbonde is she fare,
- 875 And tolde him al as ye han herd me said.
 And be ye siker,° he was so wel apaid° sure / pleased
 That it were impossible me to write.
 What sholde I lenger of this caas endite?
 Arveragus and Dorigen his wif
- 880 In sovereign blisse leden forth hir lif.
 Never eft° ne was ther angre hem bitweene: again
 He cheriseth hire as though she were a queene,
 And she was to him trewe of everemore.
 Of thise two folk ye gete of me namore.
- 885 Aurelius, that his cost hath al forlorn,° lost
 Curseth the time that evere he was born.
 "Allas," quod he, "allas that I bihighte° promised
 Of pured° gold a thousand pound of wighte° refined / weight
 Unto this philosophre. How shall I do?
- 890 I see namore but that I am fordo.° ruined
 Myn heritage moot° I needes selle must
 And been a beggere. Here may I nat dwelle,
 And shamen al my kinrede° in this place, kindred
 But° I of him may gete bettre grace. unless
- 895 But natheles I wol of him assaye
 At certain dayes yeer by yere to paye,
 And thanke him of his grete curteisye:
 My trouthe wol I keepe, I nil nat lie."
- With herte soor he gooth unto his cofre,
 900 And broughte gold unto this philosophre
 The value of five hundred pound, I gesse,
 And him biseecheth of his gentillesse
 To graunten him dayes¹ of the remenaunt,° remainder
 And saide, "Maister, I dar wel make avaunt° boast
- 905 I failed nevere of my trouthe as yit,
 For sikerly° my dette shal be quit surely

1. I.e., extended terms.

- Towardes you, how evere that I fare,
 To goon abegged° in my kirtel° bare. abegging / undergarment
 But wolde ye vouche sauf upon suretee° security
- 910 Two yer or three for to respiten² me,
 Thanne were I wel, for elles moot° I selle must Myn heritage: ther is namore to telle.”
- This philosophre sobrelly answerde,
 And saide thus, whan he thise wordes herde,
- 915 “Have I nat holden covenant unto thee?”
 “Yis, certes, wel and trewely,” quod he.
 “Hastou nat had thy lady as thee liketh?”³
 “No, no,” quod he and sorwefully he siketh.° sighs
 “What was the cause? Tel me if thou can.”
- 920 Aurelius his tale anon bigan,
 And tolde him al as ye han herd bifore:
 It needeth nat to you reherce it more.
 He saide, “Arveragus, of gentillesse,
 Hadde levere die in sorwe and in distresse
 925 Than that his wif were on hir trouthe fals.”
 The sorwe of Dorigen he tolde him als,° also
 How loth hire was to been a wikked wif,
 And that she levere hadde lost that day hir lif,
 And that hir trouthe she swoor thurgh innocence:
- 930 She nevere erst° hadde herd speke of apparence.° before / illusion
 “That made me han of hire so greet pitee;
 And right as freely° as he sente hire me, generously
 As freely sente I hire to him again:
 This al and som,⁴ ther is namore to sayn.”
- 935 This philosophre answerde, “Leve° brother, dear
 Everich of you dide gentilly to other.
 Thou art a squier, and he is a knight:
 But God forbede, for his blisful might,
 But if a clerk coude doon a gentil deede
- 940 As wel as any of you, it is no drede.° doubt
 Sire, I releesse thee thy thousand pound,
 As thou right now were cropen out of the ground,⁵
 Ne nevere er° now ne haddest knowen me. before
 For sire, I wol nat take a peny of thee,
- 945 For al my craft° ne nought for my travaile.° art / labor
 Thou hast ypayed wel for my vitaile:° food
 It is ynough. And farewel, have good day.”
 And took his hors and forth he gooth his way.
- Lordinges, this question thanne wol I axe now:
 950 Which was the moste free,° as thinketh you? generous
 Now telleth me, er that ye ferther wende.
 I can namore: my tale is at an ende.

2. Give respite.

3. It pleases.

4. This is all there is to it.

5. Had crept.

The Pardoner's Prologue and Tale¹

The Introduction

Oure Hoste gan to swere as he wre wood;°
 "Harrow,"° quod he, "by nailcs² and by blood, insane

 help

1. The Pardoner is the chief actor in a grim comedy which shows how a clever hypocrite exploits Christian principles in order to enrich himself—and which, in the Epilogue, suggests that the exploiter of Christian principles is not immune to their operation. The medieval pardoner's function was to collect money for charitable enterprises supported by branches of the church and to act as the Pope's agent in rewarding donors with some temporal remission of their sins. According to theological doctrine, St. Peter—and through him his papal successors—received from Christ the power to make a gift of mercy from God's infinite treasury to those of the faithful that had earned special favor, such as contributors to charity. The charitable enterprises themselves—generally hospitals—hired pardoners to raise money, but the pardoners had also to be licensed by the Pope to pass on to contributors the papal indulgence. By canon law pardoners were permitted to work only in a prescribed area; within that area they might visit churches during Sunday service, briefly explain their mission, receive contributions, and, in the Pope's name, issue indulgence, which was considered not a sale, but a free gift made in return for a free gift. In actual fact pardoners seem seldom to have behaved as the law required them. Since a parish priest was forbidden to exclude properly licensed pardoners, they made their way into churches at will, and once there did not confine themselves to a mere statement of their business, but rather, in order to make the congregation free of its gifts, preached highly emotive sermons and boasted of the extraordinary efficacy of their own particular pardon, claiming for it powers that not even the Pope could have invested it with. An honest pardoner, if such existed, was entitled to a percentage of his collections; dishonest pardoners took more than their share, and some took everything; indeed, some were complete frauds, bearing forged credentials which, in an age when even clerical illiteracy was common, were no less impressive than if they had been real.

While Chaucer's Pardoner belongs, as he boastfully tells us, to the most dishonest class of fund-gatherers, he is an extremely able one. His text is always the same: Radix malorum est cupiditas, "The love of money is the root of all evil," and he uses it most effectively in order to frighten his hearers into a generosity that will fulfill his own cupidity. The Pardoner's audacious description of his behavior in a parish church is followed by a sample sermon on his invariable text. Aware that his audience is more interested in narrative than in the moralization one expects of a sermon he first introduces the three dissolute young men of his exemplum, that is, of the story which is to illustrate concretely the sermon's point. Having titillated his hearers with the promise of a lurid story, he proceeds to the moralization; curiously enough, this does not concern the sin of avarice, but drunkenness, gluttony, lechery, gambling, and cursing. Yet the apparent lack of logic serves the Pardoner's deeper purpose, for these are the sins people find it exciting to hear about. When his audience has thus been emotionally prepared by a discussion of the debauchees' more flamboyant sins, the Pardoner tells his exemplum of the destructiveness of avarice, shutting it off at the moment of highest interest, and concluding with a demand to the congregation for money in return for his pardon.

The story of the young men who seek Death only to find him in a treasure that had made them forget him is a masterpiece of irony, and indeed the Pardoner is in all ways a master ironist. So highly developed is his own sense of irony that it enables him to feel superior not only to other men but to God, for he dares to exempt himself from the effect of his Christian text. Yet the brief Epilogue seems to show that God's irony, like His other attributes, is supreme. The one fact that the Pardoner's candid confession has concealed—that it was perhaps spoken in order to conceal—is that he is a eunuch. When in the Epilogue his proud avarice leads him to see if he can get money from the pilgrims to whom he has revealed his hypocrisy, the Pardoner's secret is revealed by the Host's coarse response, and the verbal facility by which he maintains his superiority fails him.

2. I.e., God's nails.

desire

- This was a fals cherl and a fals justise.³
 As shameful deeth as herte may devise
 5 Come to thise juges and hir advocats.
 Algate° this sely° maide is slain, allas! at any rate / innocent
 Allas, too dere boughte she beautee!
 Wherefore I save alday° that men may see always
 The yiftes of Fortune and of Nature
 10 Been cause of deeth to many a creature.
 As bothe yiftes that I speke of now,
 Men han ful ofte more for harm than prow.° benefit
 "But trewely, myn owene maister dere,
 This is a pitous tale for to heere.
 15 But nathelees, passe over, is no fors.⁴
 I praye to God so save thy gentil cors,° body
 And eek thine urinals and thy jurdones,⁵
 Thyn ipocras⁶ and eek thy galiones,
 And every boiste° ful of thy letuarie°— box / medicine
 20 God blesse hem, and oure lady Sainte Marye.
 So mote I theen,⁷ thou art a propre man,
 And lik a prelat, by Saint Ronian!⁸
 Saide I nat wel? I can nat speke in terme.⁹
 But wel I woot, thou doost° myn herte to erme° make / grieve
 25 That I almost have caught a cardinacle.¹
 By corpus bones,² but if I have triacle,° medicine
 Or elles a draughte of moiste° and corny° ale, fresh / malty
 Or but I heere anoon° a merye tale, at once
 Myn herte is lost for pitee of this maide.
 30 "Thou bel ami,³ thou Pardoner," he saide,
 "Tel us som mirthe or japes° right anoon."
 "It shal be doon," quod he, "by Saint Ronion.
 But first," quod he, "here at this ale-stake⁴
 I wol bothe drinke and eten of a cake."
 35 And right anoon thise gentils gan to crye,
 "Nay, lat him telle us of no ribaudye.° ribaldry
 Tel us som moral thing that we may lere,° learn
 Som wit,⁵ and thanne wol we gladly heere."
 "I graunte, ywis," quod he, "but I moot thinke 40 Upon som honeste° thing whil that I drinke." decent

3. The Host has been affected by the Physician's sad tale of the Roman maiden Virginia, whose great beauty caused a judge to attempt to obtain her person by means of a trumped-up lawsuit in which he connived with a "churl" who claimed her as his slave; in order to preserve her chastity, her father killed her.

4. I.e., never mind.

5. Jordans (chamber pots): the Host is somewhat confused in his endeavor to use technical medical terms.

6. A medicinal drink named after Hipocrates; "galiones": a medicine, probably invented on the spot by the Host, named after Galen.

7. So might I thrive.

8. St. Ronan or St. Ninian, with a possible play on "rannion" (sexual organ).

9. Speak in technical idiom.

1. Apparently a cardiac condition, confused in the Host's mind with a cardinal.

2. An illiterate oath, mixing "God's bones" with corpus dei. "But if": unless.

3. Fair friend.

4. Sign of a tavern.

5. I.e., something with significance.

The Prologue

- Lordinges—quod he—in chirches whan I preche,
 I paine me⁶ to han an hautein^o speeche, loud
 And ringe it out as round as gooth a belle,
 For I can al by rote⁷ that I telle.
 45 My theme is alway oon,⁸ and evere was:
*Radix malorum est cupiditas.*⁹
 First I pronounce whennes^o that I come, whence
 And thanne my bulles¹ shewe I alle and some:
 Oure lige lordes seel on my patente,²
 50 That shewe I first, my body to warente,^o keep safe
 That no man be so bold, ne preest ne clerk,
 Me to destourbe of Cristes holy werk.
 And after that thanne telle I forth my tales³—
 Bulles of popes and of cardinales,
 55 Of patriarkes and bisshopes I shewe,
 And in Latin I speke a wordes fewe,
 To saffron with⁴ my predicacioun,^o preaching
 And for to stire hem to devocioun.
 Thanne shewe I forth my longe crystal stones,^o jars
 60 Ycrammed ful of cloutes^o and of bones— rags
 Relikes been they, as weenen^o they eechoon. suppose
 Thanne have I in laton^o a shulder-boon zinc
 Which that was of an holy Jewes sheep.
 “Goode men,” I saye, “take of my wordes keep:^o notice
 65 If that this boon be wasshe in any welle,
 If cow, or calf, or sheep, or oxe swelle,
 That any worm hath ete or worm ystonge,⁵
 Take water of that welle and wassh his tonge,
 And it is hool⁶ anon. And ferthermoor,
 70 Of pokkes^o and of scabbe and every soor^o pox / sore
 Shal every sheep be hool that of this welle Drinketh a draughte. Take keep eek^o that I telle: also
 If that the goode man that the beestes oweth^o owns
 Wol every wike,^o er that the cok him croweth, week
 75 Fasting drinken of this welle a draughte—
 As thilke^o holy Jew oure eldres taughte— that same
 His beestes and his stoor^o shal multiplie. stock
 “And sire, also it heleth jalousye:
 For though a man be falle in jalous rage,
 80 Lat maken with this water his potage,^o soup
 And nevere shal he more his wif mistriste,^o mistrust

6. Take pains.

7. I know all by heart.

8. I.e., the same.

9. Avarice is the root of evil (I Timothy vi.10).

1. Episcopal mandates; “alle and some”: each and every one.

2. I.e., the Pope's seal on my papal license.

3. I go on with my yarn.

4. To add spice to.

5. That has eaten or been bitten by any worm.

6. I.e., sound.

- Though he the soothe of hir defaute wiste,⁷
 Al hadde she⁸ taken preestes two or three.
 "Here is a mitein⁹ eek that ye may see: mitten
- 85 He that his hand wol putte in this mitein
 He shal have multiplying of his grain,
 Whan he hath sowed, be it whete or otes—
 So that he offre pens or elles grotes.⁹
 "Goode men and wommen, oo thing warne I you:
- 90 If any wight be in this chirche now
 That hath doon sinne horrible, that he
 Dar nat for shame of it yshrive^o be, absolved
 Or any womman, be she yong or old,
 That hath ymaked hir housbonde cokewold,^o cuckold
- 95 Swich folk shal have no power ne no grace
 To offren to¹ my relikes in this place;
 And whoso findeth him out of swich blame,
 He wol come up and offre in Goddes name,
 And I assoile^o him by the auctoritee absolve
- 100 Which that by bulle ygraunted was to me."
 By this gaude^o have I wonne, yeer by yeer, trick
 An hundred mark² sith^o I was pardoner. since
 I stonde lik a clerk in my pulpet,
 And whan the lewed^o peple is down yset, ignorant
- 105 I preche so as ye han herd bifore,
 And telle an hundred false japes^o more. tricks
 Thanne paine I me³ to strecche forth the nekke,
 And eest and west upon the peple I bekke⁴
 As dooth a dove,^o sitting on a berne;^o dove / barn
- 110 Mine handes and my tonge goon so yerne^o fast
 That it is joye to see my bisnesse.
 Of avarice and of swich cursednesse^o sin
 Is al my preching, for to make hem free^o generous
 To yiven hir pens, and namely^o unto me, especially
- 115 For myn entente is nat but for to winne,⁵
 And no thing for correccion of sinne:
 I rekke^o nevere whan that they been beried^o care / buried
 Though that hir soules goon a-blakeberied.⁶
 For certes, many a predicacioun^o sermon
- 120 Comth ofte time of yvel entencioun:
 Som for plesance of folk and flaterye,
 To been avaunced^o by ypocrisie, promoted
 And som for vaine glorye, and som for hate;
 For whan I dar noon otherways debate,^o fight
- 125 Thanne wol I stinge him with my tonge smerte
 In preching, so that he shal nat asterte^o escape
 To been defamed falsly, if that he

7. Knew the truth of her infidelity.

8. Even if she had.

9. Pennies, groats, coins.

1. To make gifts in reverence of.

2. Marks (pecuniary units).

3. I take pains.

4. I.e., I shake my head.

5. Only to gain.

6. Go blackberrying, i.e., go to hell.

- Hath trespassed to⁷ my bretheren or to me.
 For though I telle nought his propre name,
 130 Men shal wel knowe that it is the same
 By signes and by othere circumstaunces.
 Thus quite⁸ I folk that doon us displeasaunces;⁸ pay back
 Thus spete⁹ I out my venim under hewe⁹ spit / color
 Of holinesse, to seeme holy and trewe.
 135 But shortly myn entente I wol devise:⁹ describe
 I preche of no thing but for coveitise;
 Therfore my theme is yit and evere was Radix malorum est cupiditas.
 Thus can I preche again that same vice 140 Which that I use, and that is avarice.
 But though myself be gilty in that sinne,
 Yit can I make other folk to twinne⁹ separate
 From avarice, and sore to repente—
 But that is nat my principal entente:
 145 I preche no thing but for coveitise.
 Of this matere it oughte ynough suffise.
 Thanne telle I hem ensamples⁹ many oon
 Of olde stories longe time agoon,
 For lewed⁹ peple loven tales olde— ignorant
 150 Swiche thinges can they wel reporte and holde.¹
 What, trowe⁹ ye that whiles I may preche,
 And winne gold and silver for⁹ I teche,
 That I wol live in poverte wilfully?
 Nay, nay, I thoughte⁹ it nevere, trewely, intended
 155 For I wol preche and begge in sondry landes;
 I wol nat do no labour with mine handes,
 Ne make baskettes and live therby,
 By cause I wol nat beggen idelly.²
 I wol none of the Apostles countrefete:⁹ imitate
 160 I wol have moncy, wolle,⁹ checse, and whete, wool
 Al were it³ yiven of the pooreste page,
 Or of the pooreste widwe in a village—
 Al sholde hir children sterve⁴ for famine.
 Nay, I wol drinke licour of the vine
 165 And have a joly wenche in every town.
 But herkneth, lordinges, in conclusioun,
 Youre liking⁹ is that I shal telle a tale: pleasure
 Now have I dronke a draughte of corny ale,
 By God, I hope I shal you telle a thing
 170 That shal by rason been at youre liking;
 For though myself be a ful vicious man,
 A moral tale yit I you telle can,
 Which I am wont to preche for to winne.
 Now holde youre pees, my tale I wol biginne.

7. Injured.

8. Do us discourtesies.

9. Exempla (stories illustrating moral principles).

1. Repeat and remember.

2. I.e., without profit.

3. Even though it were.

4. Even though her children should die.

The Tale

- 175 In Flandres whilom^o was a compaignye once
 Of yonge folk that haunteden^o folye— practiced
 As riot, hasard, stewes,^o and tavernes,
 Wher as with harpes, lutes, and giternes^o guitars
 They daunce and playen at dees^o bothe day and night, dice
 180 And ete also and drinke over hir might,^o
 Thurgh which they doon the devel sacrificen
 Within that develes temple in cursed wise
 By superfluitee^o abhominale. overindulgence
 Hir othes been so grete and so dampnable 67
 185 That it is grisly for to heere hem swere:
 Oure blessed Lordes body they totere⁷—
 Hem thoughte that Jewes rente^o him nought ynough. tore
 And eech of hem at otheres sinne lough.^o laughed
 And right anon thanne comen tombesteres,^o dancing girls
 190 Fetis^o and smale,^o and yonge frutesteres,⁸ shapely / neat
 Singers with harpes, bawdes,^o wafereres⁹— pimps
 Whiche been the verray develes officers,
 To kindle and blowe the fir of lecherye—
 That is annexed unto glotony:¹
 195 The Holy Writ take I to my wittenesse
 That luxure^o is in win and dronkenesse. (A) lechery
 Lo, how that dronken Lot² unkindely^o unnaturally
 Lay by his doughtres two unwitingly: 160
 So dronke he was he niste^o what he wroughte. didn't know
 200 Herodes, who so wel the stories soughte,³
 When he of win was repleet at his feeste,
 Right at his owne table he yaf his heeste^o command
 To sleen^o the Baptist John, ful giltelees. slay
 Senek⁴ saith a good word doutlees:
 205 He saith he can no difference finde
 Bitwixe a man that is out of his minde
 And a man which that is dronkelewe,^o drunken
 But that woodnesse, yfallen in a shrewe,⁵
 Persevereth lenger than dooth dronkenesse.
 210 O glotony, ful of cursednesse!^o wickedness
 O cause first of oure confusioun!^o downfall
 O original of oure dampnacioun,^o damnation
 Til Crist hadde bought^o us with his blood again! redeemed
 Lo, how dere, shortly for to sayn,
 215 Abought^o was tilke^o cursed vilainye; paid for / that same
 Corrupt was al this world for glotony:

5. Wild parties, gambling, brothels.

6. Beyond their capacity.

7. Tear apart (a reference to oaths sworn by parts of His body, such as "God's bones!" or "God's teeth!").

8. Fruit-selling girls.

9. Girl cake-vendors.

1. I.e., closely related to gluttony.

2. For Lot, see Genesis xix.30-36.

3. For the story of Herod and St. John the Baptist, see Mark vi.17-29. "Who so * * * soughte": i.e., whoever looked it up in the Gospel would find.

4. Seneca, the Roman Stoic philosopher.

5. But that madness, occurring in a wicked man.

- Adam oure fader and his wif also Fro Paradis to labour and to wo
 Were driven for that vice, it is no drede.^o doubt
- 220 For whil that Adam fasted, as I rede,
 He was in Paradis; and whan that he
 Eet^o of the fruit defende^o on a tree, ate / forbidden
 Anoon he was out cast to wo and paine.
 O glotonye, on thee wel oughte us plaine!^o complain
- 225 O, wiste a man⁶ how manye maladies
 Folwen of excessse and of glotonies,
 He wolde been the more mesurable^o moderate
 Of his dicte, sitting at his table.
 Allas, the shorte throte, the tendre mouth,
 230 Maketh that cest and west and north and south,
 In erthe, in air, in water, men to swinke,^o work
 To gete a gloton daintee mete and drinke.
 Of this matere, O Paul, wel canstou trete:
 "Mete unto wombe,^o and wombe eek unto mete, belly 235 Shal God destroyen bothe," as Paulus saith.⁷
 Allas, a foul thing is it, by my faith,
 To saye this word, and fouler is the deede
 Whan man so drinketh of the white and rede⁸
 That of his throte he maketh his privee^o privy
 240 Thurgh thilke cursed superfluitee.^o overindulgence
 The Apostle⁹ weeping saith ful pitously,
 "Ther walken manye of which you told have I—
 I saye it now weeping with pitous vois—
 They been enemies of Cristes crois,^o cross
 245 Of whiche the ende is deeth—wombe is hir god!"¹
 O wombe, O bely, O stinking cod,^o bag
 Fulfilled^o of dong^o and of corrupcioun! filled full / dung
 At either ende of thee foul is the soun.^o sound
 How greet labour and cost is thee to finde!^o provide for 250 This cookes, how they stampe² and straine and grinde,
 And turnen substance into accident³
 To fulfillen al thy likerous^o talent!^o dainty / appetite
 Out of the harde bones knokke they
 The mary,^o for they caste nought away marrow
 255 That may go thurgh the golet⁴ softe and soote.^o sweetly
 Of spicerye^o of leef and bark and roote spices
 Shal been his sauce ymaked by dclit,
 To make him yit a newer appetit.
 But certes, he that haunteth swiche delices^o pleasures 260 Is deed^o whil that he liveth in tho^o vices. dead / those
 A lecherous thing is win, and dronkenesse

6. If a man knew.

7. See I Corinthians vi.13.

8. I.e., white and red wines.

9. I.e., St. Paul.

1. See Philippians iii.18.

2. Pound.

3. A philosophic joke, depending on the distinction between inner reality (substance) and outward appearance (accident).

4. Through the gullet.

- Is ful of striving° and of wrecchednesse. quarreling
 O dronke man, disfigured is thy face!
 Sour is thy breeth, foul artou to embrace!
 265 And thurgh thy dronke nose secmeth the soun
 As though thou saidest ay,° "Sampsoun, Sampsoun." always
 And yit, God woot,° Sampsoun drank nevere win.⁵ knows
 Thou fallest as it were a stiked swin;⁶
 Thy tonge is lost, and al thyn honeste cure,
 270 For dronkenesse is verray sepulture° burial
 Of mannes wit° and his discrecioun. intelligence
 In whom that drinke hath dominacioun.
 He can no conseil° keepe, it is no drede.° secrets / doubt
 Now keepe you fro the white and fro the rede—
 275 And namely° fro the white win of Lepe⁷ particularly
 That is to selle in Fisshstreete or in Chepe:⁸
 The win of Spaine creepeth subtilly
 In othere wines growing faste° by, close
 Of which ther riseth swich fumositee° heady fumes
 280 That whan a man hath dronken draughtes three
 And weeneth° that he be at hoom in Chepe, supposes
 He is in Spaine, right at the town of Lepe,
 Nat at The Rochele ne at Burdeux town;⁹
 And thanne wol he sayn, "Sampsoun, Sampsoun."
 285 But herkneth, lordinges, oo° word I you praye, one
 That alle the sovereign actes,¹ dar I saye,
 Of victories in the Olde Testament,
 Thurgh verray God that is omnipotent,
 Were doon in abstinence and in prayere:
 290 Looketh° the Bible and ther ye may it lere.° behold / learn
 Looke Attila, the grete conquerour,²
 Deide° in his sleep with shame and dishonour, died
 Bleeding at his nose in dronkenesse:
 A capitain sholde live in sobrenesse.
 295 And overal this, aviseth you³ right wel
 What was comanded unto Lamuel⁴—
 Nat Samuel, but Lamuel, saye I—
 Redeth the Bible and finde it expresly,
 Of win-yiving° to hem that han⁵ justise: wine-serving 300 Namore of this, for it may wel suffice.
 And now that I have spoken of glotonye,
 Now wol I you defende° hasardrye:° prohibit / gambling
 Hasard is verray moder° of lesinges,° mother / lies

5. Before Samson's birth an angel told his mother that he would be a Nazarite throughout his life; members of this sect took no strong drink.

6. Stuck pig. "Honeste cure": care for self-respect.

7. A town in Spain.

8. Fishstreet and Cheapside in the London market district.

9. The Pardoner is joking about the illegal custom of adulterating fine wines of Bordeaux and La Rochelle with strong Spanish wine.

1. Distinguished deeds.

2. Attila was the leader of the Huns who captured Rome in the 5th century.

3. Consider.

4. Lemuel's mother told him that kings should not drink (Proverbs xxxi.4-5).

5. I.e., administer.

- And swere in doom³ and eek in rightwisnesse,
 350 But idel swering is a cursednesse."^o wickedness
 Biholde and see that in the firste Table⁴
 Of hye Goddes heestes^o honorable commandments
 How that the seconde heeste of him is this:
 "Take nat my name in idel or amis."
 355 Lo, rather^o he forbedeth swich swering sooner
 Than homicide, or many a cursed thing.
 I saye that as by ordre thus it stondeth—
 This knoweth that⁵ his heestes understondeth
 How that the seconde heeste of God is that.
 360 And fertherover,^o I wol thee telle al plat^o moreover / flat
 That vengeance shal nat parten^o from his hous depart
 That of his othes is too outrageous.
 "By Goddes precious herte!" and "By his nailes!"^o fingernails
 And "By the blood of Crist that is in Hailes,"⁶
 365 Sevene is my chaunce, and thyn is cink and trayel!"⁷
 "By Goddes armes, if thou falsly playe
 This daggere shal thurghout thyn herte go!"
 This fruit cometh of the bicche bones⁸ two—
 Forswering, ire, falsnesse, homicide.
 370 Now for the love of Crist that for us dyde,
 Lete^o youre othes bothe grete and smale. leave
 But sires, now wol I telle forth my tale.
 These riotoures^o three of whiche I telle, revelers
 Longe erst er prime⁹ ronge of any belle,
 375 Were set hem in a taverne to drinke,
 And as they sat they herde a belle clinke
 Biforn a cors^o was caried to his grave. corpse
 That oon of hem gan callen to his knave:^o servant
 "Go bet,"¹ quod he, "and axe^o redily" ask / promptly
 380 What cors is this that passeth heer forby,
 And looke^o that thou reporte his name weel."^o be sure / well
 "Sire," quod this boy, "it needeth neveradcel:"²
 It was me told er ye cam heer two houres.
 He was, pardee, an old felawe of yours,
 385 And sodeinly he was yslain tonight,^o last night
 Fordronke^o as he sat on his bench upright; very drunk
 Ther cam a privee^o thief men clepeth^o Deeth, stealthy / call
 That in this contree al the peple sleeth,^o slays
 And with his spere he smoot his herte atwo,
 390 And wente his way withouten wordes mo.
 He hath a thousand slain this^o pestilence. during this
 And maister, er ye come in his presence,

3. Equity; "rightwisnesse": righteousness.

4. I.e., the first four of the Ten Commandments.

5. I.e., he that.

6. An abbey in Gloucestershire supposed to possess some of Christ's blood.

7. Five and three.

8. I.e., damned dice.

9. Long before 9 A.M.

1. Better, i.e., quick.

2. It isn't a bit necessary.

Me thinketh that it were necessarye

For to be war of swich an adversarye;

395 Beeth redy for to meete him everemore:

Thus taughte me my dame.^o I save namore." mother

"By Sainte Marye," saide this taverner,

"The child saith sooth, for he hath slain this yeer,
Henne^o over a mile, within a greet village, hence

400 Bothe man and womman, child and hinc³ and page.

I trowe^o his habitacion be there. believe

To been avised^o greet wisdom it were wary

Er that he dide a man a dishonour."

"Ye, Goddes armes," quod this riotour,

405 "Is it swich peril with him for to meete?

I shal him seeke by way and eek by streete,⁴

I make avow to Goddes digne^o bones. worthy

Herkeneth, felawes, we three been alle ones:^o of one mind

Lat cech of us holde up his hand to other

410 And eech of us bicom eotheres brother,

And we wol sleen this false traitour Deeth.

He shal be slain, he that so manye sleeth,

By Goddes dignitee, er it be night."

Togidres han thise three hir trouthes plight⁵

415 To live and dien eech of hem with other,

As though he were his owene ybore^o brother.

And up they sterde,^o al dronken in this rage, born

And forth they goon towards that village

Of which the taverner hadde spoke biforn.

420 And many a grisly ooth thanne han they sworn,

And Cristes blessed body they torente:^o tore apart

Deeth shal be deed^o if that they may him hente.^o dead / catch

Whan they han goon nat fully half a mile,

Right as they wolde han treden^o over a stile, stepped

425 An old man and a poore with hem mette;

This olde man ful mekely hem grette,^o greeted

And saide thus, "Now lordes, God you see."⁶

The pruddeste^o of thise riotoures threc

Answerde again, "What, carl^o with sory grace, proudest

430 Why artou al forwrapped save thy face?

Why livestou so longe in so greet age?" churl

This olde man gan looke in his visage,

And saide thus, "For^o I ne can nat finde because

A man, though that I walked into Inde,

435 Neither in citee ne in no village,

That wolde chaunge his youthe for myn age;

And therfore moot I han myn age stille,

As longe time as it is Goddes wille.

"Ne Deeth, allas, ne wol nat have my lif.

440 Thus walke I lik a restelee caitif,^o captive

3. Farm laborer.

4. By highway and byway.

5. Pledged their words of honor.

6. May God protect you.

- And on the ground which is my modres^o gate mother's
 I knokke with my staf bothe erly and late,
 And saye, 'Leve^o moder, leet me in: dear
 Lo, how I vanisshe, flessch and blood and skin.
 445 Allas, whan shal my bones been at reste?
 Moder, with you wolde I chaunge^o my cheste⁷ exchange
 That in my chambre longe time hath be,
 Ye, for an haire-clout⁸ to wrappe me.'
 But yit to me she wol nat do that grace,
 450 For which ful pale and welked^o is my face. withered
 But sires, to you it is no curteisye
 To speken to an old man vilainye,^o rudeness
 But^o he trespasse^o in word or elles in deede. unless / offend
 In Holy Writ ye may yourself wel rede,
 455 'Agains^o an old man, hoor^o upon his heed, hoar
 Ye shal arise.¹ Wherefore I give you reed,^o advice
 Ne dooth unto an old man noon harm now,
 Namore than that ye wolde men dide to you
 In age, if that ye so longe abide.
 460 And God be with you wher ye go^o or ride: walk
 I moot go thider as I have to go."
 "Nav, olde cherl, by God thou shalt nat so,"
 Saide this other hasardour anoon.
 "Thou partest nat so lightly,^o by Saint John! easily 465 Thou speke^o right now of thilke traitour Deeth, spoke
 That in this contree alle oure freendes sleeth:
 Have here my trouthe, as thou art his espye,
 Tel wher he is, or thou shalt it abyde,^o pay for
 By God and by the holy sacrament!
 470 For soothly thou art oon of his assent²
 To sleen us yonge folk, thou false thief."
 "Now sires," quod he, "if that ye be so lief^o anxious
 To finde Deeth, turne up this crooked way,
 For in that grove I lafte^o him, by my fay,^o left / faith
 475 Under a tree, and ther he wol abide:
 Nat for youre boost^o he wol him no thing hide. boast
 See ye that ook?^o Right ther ye shal him finde. oak
 God save you, that boughte again³ mankinde,
 And you amende." Thus saide this olde man.
 480 And everich of these riotoures ran
 Til he cam to that tree, and ther they founde
 Of florins^o fine of gold ycoined rounde coins
 Wel neigh an eghte busshels as hem thoughte—
 Ne lenger thanne after Deeth they soughte,
 485 But eech of hem so glad was of the sighte,
 For that the florins been so faire and brighte,

7. Chest for one's belongings, used here as the symbol for life—or perhaps a coffin.

8. Haircloth, for a winding sheet.

9. In the presence of.

1. Cf. Leviticus xix.32.

2. I.e., one of his party.

3. Redeemed.

That down they sette hem by this precious hoord.

The worste of hem he spak the firste word:

"Bretheren," quod he, "take keep^o what that I save: heed

490 My wit is greet though that I bourde^o and playe. joke

This tresor hath Fortune unto us yiven

In mirthe and jolitee oure lif to liven,

And lightly^o as it cometh so wol we spende. easily

Ey, Goddes precious dignitee, who wende⁴

495 Today that we sholde han so fair a grace?

But mighte this gold be caried fro this place

Hoom to myn hous—or elles unto youre—

For wel ye woot that al this gold is oures—

Thanne were we in heigh felicittee.

500 But trewely, by daye it mighte nat be:

Men wolde sayn that we were theves stronge,^o flagrant

And for oure owene tresor doon us honge.⁵

This tresor moste ycaried be by nighte,

As wisely and as slyly as it mighte.

505 Therfore I rede^o that cut^o amonges us alle advise / lots

Be drawe, and lat see wher the cut wol falle;

And he that hath the cut with herte blithe

Shal renne^o to the town, and that ful swithe,^o run / quickly

And bringe us breed and win ful prively;

510 And two of us shal keepen^o subtilly guard

This tresor wel, and if he wol nat tarye,

Whan it is night we wol this tresor carye

By oon assent wher as us thinketh best."

That oon of hem the cut broughte in his fest^o fist

515 And bad hem drawe and looke wher it wol falle;

And it fil^o on the yongeste of hem alle, fell

And forth toward the town he wente anoon.

And also^o soone as that he was agoon,^o as / gone away

That oon of hem spak thus unto that other:

520 "Thou knowest wel thou art my sworn brother;

Thy profit wol I telle thee anoon:

Thou woost wel that oure felawe is agoon,

And here is gold, and that ful greet plentee,

That shal departed^o been among us three. divided

525 But natheles, if I can shape^o it so arrange

That it departed were among us two,

Hadde I nat doon a freendes turn to thee?"

That other answerde, "I noot⁶ how that may be:

He woot that the gold is with us twaye.

530 What shal we doon? What shal we to him save?"

"Shal it be conseil?"⁷ saide the firste shrewe.^o villain

"And I shal telle in a wordes fewe

What we shul doon, and bringe it wel aboute."

"I graunte," quod that other, "out of doute,

4. Who would have supposed.

5. Have us hanged.

6. Don't know.

7. A secret.

- 535 That by my trouthe I wol thee nat biwraye.”° expose
 “Now,” quod the firste, “thou woost wel we be twaye,
 And two of us shal stronger° be than oon: stronger
 Looke whan that he is set that right anoon
 Aris as though thou woldest with him playe,
 540 And I shal rive° him thurgh the sides twaye, pierce
 Whil that thou strugelest with him as in game;
 And with thy daggere looke thou do the same;
 And thanne shal al this gold departed be,
 My dere freend, bitwixe thee and me.
 545 Thanne we may bothe oure lustes° al fulfille, desires
 And playe at dees° right at oure owene wille.” dice
 And thus accorded been thise shrewes twaye
 To sleen the thridde, as ye han herd me saye.
 This yongeste, which that wente to the town,
 550 Ful ofte in herte he rolleth up and down
 The beautee of thise florins newe and brighte.
 “O Lord,” quod he, “if so were that I mighte
 Have al this tresor to myself allone,
 Ther is no man that liveth under the trone° throne
 555 Of God that sholde live so merye as I.”
 And at the laste the feend oure enemy
 Putte in his thought that he sholde poison beye,° buy
 With which he mighte sleen his felawes twaye—Forwhy° the feend found him in swich livinge because 560 That he hadde leve° him to sorwe bringe:° permission
 For this was outrelly° his fulle entente, plainly
 To sleen hem bothe, and nevere to repente.
 And forth he gooth—no longer wolde he tarye—
 Into the town unto a pothecarye,° apothecary
 565 And prayed him that he him wolde selle
 Som poison that he mighte his rattes quelle,° kill
 And eek ther was a polcat° in his hawe° yard
 That, as he saide, his capons hadde yslawe,° slain
 And fain he wolde wreke him¹ if he mighte
 570 On vermin that destroyed him² by nighte.
 The pothecarye answerde, “And thou shalt have
 A thing that, also° God my soule save,
 In al this world there is no creature
 That ete or dronke hath of this confiture°— mixture
 575 Nat but the mountance° of a corn° of whete— amount / grain
 That he ne shal his lif anoon forlete.° lose
 Ye, sterve° he shal, and that in lasse° while die / less
 Than thou wolt goon a paas³ nat but a mile,
 The poison is so strong and violent.”
 580 This cursed man hath in his hand yhent° taken

8. Christian doctrine teaches that the devil may not tempt men except with God's permission.

9. A weasel-like animal.

1. He would gladly avenge himself.

2. I.e., were ruining his farming.

3. Take a walk.

This poison in a box and sith° he ran then
 Into the nexte streete unto a man
 And borwed of him large botels three,
 And in the two his poison poured he—
 585 The thridde he kepte clene for his drinke,
 For al the night he shoop him⁴ for to swinke° work
 In caryng of the gold out of that place.
 And whan this riotour with sory grace
 Hadde filled with win his grete botels three, 590 To his felawes again repaireth he.
 What needeth it to sermone of it more?
 For right as they had cast° his deeth bifore, plotted
 Right so they han him slain, and that anon.
 And whan that this was doon, thus spak that oon:
 595 “Now lat us sitte and drinke and make us merye,
 And afterward we wol his body berye.”° bury
 And with that word it happed him par cas⁵
 To take the botel ther the poison was,
 And drank, and yaf his felawe drinke also,
 600 For which anon they storven° bothe two. died
 But certes I suppose that Avicen
 Wroot nevere in no canon ne in no fen⁶
 Mo wonder signes⁷ of empoisoning
 Than hadde thise wrecches two er hir ending:
 605 Thus ended been thise homicides two,
 And eek the false empoisonere also.
 O cursed sinne of alle cursednesse!
 O traitours homicide, O wikkednesse!
 O glotonye, luxure,° and hasardrye! lechery
 610 Thou blasphemour of Crist with vilainye
 And othes grete of usage° and of pride! habit
 Allas, mankinde, how may it bitide
 That to thy Creatour which that thee wroughte,
 And with his precious herte blood thee boughte,° redeemed
 615 Thou art so fals and so unkinde,° allas? unnatural
 ¶ Now goode men, God foryive you youre trespas,
 And ware° you fro the sinne of avarice:
 Myn holy pardon may you alle warice°—
 So that ye offre nobles or sterlinges,⁸ guard
 620 Or elles silver brooches, spoones, ringes. save
 Boweth your heed under this holy bulle!
 Cometh up, ye wives, offreth of youre wolle!° wool
 Youre name I entre here in my rolle: anon
 Into the blisse of hevene shul ye goon.
 625 I you assoile° by myn heigh power— absolve
 Ye that wol offre—as clene and eek as cleer,³

4. He was preparing.

5. By chance.

6. The Canon of Medicine, by Avicenna, an 11th-century Arabic philosopher, was divided into sections called “fens.”

7. More wonderful symptoms.

8. “Nobles” and “sterlinges” were valuable coins.

As ye were born.—And lo, sires, thus I preche.
 And Jesu Crist that is oure soules leech^o physician
 So graunte you his pardon to receive,
 630 For that is best—I wol you nat deceive.

The Epilogue

“But sires, oo word forgat I in my tale:
 I have relikes and pardon in my male^o bag
 As faire as any man in Engelond,
 Whiche were me yiven by the Popes hond.
 635 If any of you wol of devocioun
 Offren and han myn absolucioun,
 Come forth anoon, and knecleth here adown,
 And mekely receiveth my pardoun,
 Or elles taketh pardon as ye wende,
 640 Al newe and fressh at every miles ende—
 So that ye offre alway newe and newe^o
 Nobles or pens whiche that be goode and trewe.
 It is an honour to everich that is heer
 That ye have a suffisant^o pardoner competent 645 T’assoile you in contrees as ye ride,
 For adventures whiche that may bitide:
 Paraventure ther may falle oon or two
 Down of his hors and breke his nekke atwo;
 Looke which a suretee^o is it to you alle safeguard
 650 That I am in youre felaweshipe yfalle
 That may assoile you, bothe more and lasse,¹
 Whan that the soule shal fro the body passe.
 I rede^o that oure Hoste shal biginne,
 For he is most enveloped^o in sinne. advise involved
 655 Com forth, sire Host, and offre first anoon,
 And thou shalt kisse the relikes everichoon,^o each one
 Ye, for a grote: unbokele^o anoon thy purs.” unbuckle
 “Nay, nay,” quod he, “thanne have I Cristes curs!
 Lat be,” quod he, “it shal nat be, so theech!^o may I thrive
 660 Thou woldest make me kisse thyn olde breech^o breeches
 And swere it were a relik of a saint,
 Though it were with thy fundament depeint.^o stained
 But, by the crois which that Sainte Elaine foond,²
 I wolde I hadde thy coilons^o in myn hond, testicles
 665 In stede of relikes or of saintuarve.^o relic-box
 Lat cutte hem of: I wol thee helpe hem carve.
 They shal be shrined in an hogges tord.”^o turd
 This Pardoner answerde nat a word:
 So wroth he was no word ne wolde he saye.
 670 “Now,” quod oure Host, “I wol no lenger playe
 With thee, ne with noon other angry man.”

9. Over and over.

1. Both high and low (i.e., everybody).

2. I.e., by the cross that St. Helena found. Helena, mother of Constantine the Great, was reputed to have found the True Cross.

- But right anon the worthy Knight bigan,
 Whan that he sawgh that al the peple lough,^o laughed
 "Namore of this, for it is right ynough.
 675 Sire Pardoner, be glad and merye of checre,
 And ye, sire Host that been to me so dere,
 I praye you that ye kisse the Pardoner,
 And Pardoner, I praye thee, draw thee neer,
 And as we diden lat us laughe and playe."
 680 Anoon they kiste and riden forth hir waye.

The Nun's Priest's Tale¹

- A poore widwe somdeel stape^o in age advanced
 Was whilom^o dwelling in a narwe² cotage, once upon a time
 Biside a grove, standing in a dale:
 This widwe of which I telle you my tale,
 5 Sin thilke^o day that she was last a wif, that same
 In pacience ladde^o a ful simple lif. led
 For litel was hir catel^o and hir rente,^o property / income
 By housbondrye^o of swich as God hire sente economy
 She foond^o hirself and cek hir doughtren two. provided for 10 Three large sowes hadde she and namo,
 Three kin,^o and eek a sheep that highte Malle. cows
 Ful sooty was hir bowr^o and eek hir halle. bedroom
 In which she eet ful many a sclendre^o meel; scanty
 Of poinant^o sauce hire needed neveradeel: pungent
 15 No daintee morsel passed thurgh hir throte— NB

1. The Nun's Priest's Tale is an example of the literary genre known as the "beast fable," in which animals behave like human beings. The beast fable is inevitably injurious to man's dignity, since to pretend that animals behave like men is to suggest that men behave like animals, for a pig cannot look like a man unless a man in some way looks like a pig. In the Nun's Priest's Tale, as in its French source, the history of Reynard the Fox, the beast fable is combined with the mock heroic, and the result is doubly injurious to man's dignity. The elevated language of true heroic poetry means to enhance the splendid deeds of men of great stature, while the elevated language of mock heroic, by treating the trivial as if it were sublime, reveals man's lack of dignity in the awful gulf that separates the idealized language from the petty action it describes; and when the petty action is carried on not even by men, but by animals masquerading as men (that is, by men reduced to the status of animals), the loss of human dignity is even greater.

The nominal hero of the Tale is Chauntecleer, a fowl of courtly bearing, profound learning, and superior crowing. This rooster is, like Achilles or Aeneas, made the center of a "great" action—which, however, takes up a relatively small portion of the total number of lines in the poem. The hero of the larger portion, and the real hero of the poem, is rhetoric, which is responsible for all Chauntecleer's importance, though it almost drowns his story in its vast tumid flow. Rhetoric as employed by the Nun's Priest includes not only elevated speech, but proverbs, saws, conventional similes—all the clichés of formal language and thought. Epic mannerisms abound; proverbs fly thick and fast and contradict one another with impunity; sententious generalizations about the tragic inevitability of certain events, the bad counsel given by women, and the folly of heeding flattery are successively used to account for Chauntecleer's near-fall; and throughout the tale learned pedantry invokes rhetorical tradition to footnote the least original of ideas. All rhetoric's ordering devices achieve a fine disorder.

2. I.e., small.

Satirize man's generic pride

	Hir diete was accordant to hir cote. ^o	cottage
	Repleccioun ^o ne made hire nevere sik:	overeating
	Attempre ^o dict ^e was al hir physik, ^o	moderate / medicine
	And exercise and hertes suffisaunce. ^o	contentment
20	The goute lette hire nothing for to daunce, ³
	N'apoplexye shente ^o nat hir heed. ^o	hurt / head
	No win ne drank she, neither whit ne reed: ^o	red
	Hir boord ^o was served most with whit and blak, ⁴	table
	Milk and brown breed, in which she foond no lak; ⁵
25	Seind bacon, and somtime an ey ^o or twaye,	egg
	For she was as it were a manere daye. ⁶
	A yeerd ^o she hadde, enclosed al withoute	yard
	With stikkes, and a drye dich aboute,
	In which she hadde a cok heet ^o Chauntecleer:	named
30	In al the land of crowing nas ^o his peer.	was not
	His vois was merier than the merye orgon
	On massedayes that in the chirche goon; ⁷
	Wel sikerer ⁸ was his crowing in his logge ^o	dwelling
	Than is a klok or an abbeye orlogge; ^o	timepiece
35	By nature he knew eech ascension
	Of th'cquinioxial ⁹ in thilke town:
	For whan degrees fiteene were ascended,
	Thanne crew ¹ he that it mighte nat been amended.
	His comb was redder than the fin coral,
40	And batailed ^o as it were a castel wal;	battlemented
	His bile ^o was blak, and as the jeet ^o it shoon;	bill / jet
	Like asure ² were his legges and his toon; ^o	toes
	His nailes whitter ^o than the lilye flowr,	whiter
	And lik the burned ^o gold was his colour.	burnished
45	This gentil cok hadde in his governaunce
	Sevene hennes for to doon al his plesaunce, ^o	pleasure
	Whiche were his sustres and his paramours, ³
	And wonder like to him as of colours;
	Of whiche the faireste hewed ^o on hir throte	colored
50	Was cleped faire damoisele Pertelote:
	Curteis she was, discreet, and debonaire, ^o	meek
	And compaignable, ⁴ and bar ^o himself so faire,	bore
	Sin thilke day that she was seven night old,
	That trewely she hath the herte in hold
55	Of Chauntecleer, loken ^o in every lith. ^o	locked / limb
	He loved hire so that wel was him therwith. ⁵

3. The gout didn't hinder her at all from dancing.

4. I.e., milk and bread.

5. Found no fault. "Seind": scorched (i.e., broiled).

6. I.e., a kind of dairymaid.

7. I.e., is played.

8. More reliable.

9. I.e., he knew by instinct each step in the progression of the celestial equator. The celestial equator was thought to make a 360-degree rotation around the earth every 24 hours; therefore a progression of 15 degrees would be equal to the passage of an hour (line 37).

1. Crowed; "amended": improved.

2. Lapis lazuli.

3. His sisters and his mistresses.

4. Companionable.

5. That he was well contented.

- But swich a joye was it to heere hem singe,
 Whan that the brighte sonne gan to springe,
 In sweete accord *My Lief is Faren in Londe*⁶—
- 60 For thilke time, as I have understonde,
 Beestes and briddes couden speke and singe.
 And so bifel that in a daweninge,
 As Chauntecleer among his wives alle
 Sat on his perche that was in the halle,
- 65 And next him sat this faire Pertelote,
 This Chauntecleer gan gronen in his throte,
 As man that in his dreem is drecched⁷ sore. troubled
 And whan that Pertelote thus herde him rore,
 She was agast, and saide, "Herte dere,
 70 What aileth you to grone in this manere?
 Ye been a verray slepere,⁷ fy, for shamel!"
 And he answerde and saide thus, "Madame,
 I praye you that ye take it nat agrief.⁸ amiss
 By God, me mette I was in swich meschief⁸
 75 Right now, that yit myn herte is sore afright.
 Now God," quod he, "my swevene recche aright,⁹
 And keepe my body out of foul prisoun!
 Me mette how that I romed up and down
 Within oure yeerd, wher as I sawgh a beest,
 80 Was lik an hound and wolde han maad arrest¹
 Upon my body, and han had me deed.²
 His colour was bitwixe yelow and reed,
 And tipped was his tail and bothe his eres
 With blak, unlik the remenant⁹ of his heres;⁹ rest / hairs
 85 His snoute smal, with glowing yen twaye.
 Yit of his look for fere almost I deye:⁹ die
 This caused me my groning, doutelees."
 "Avoi,"⁹ quod she, "fy on you, hertelees!⁹ fie / coward
 Allas," quod she, "for by that God above,
 90 Now han ye lost myn herte and al my love!
 I can nat love a coward, by my faith.
 For certes, what so any womman saith,
 We alle desiren, if it mighte be,
 To han housbondes hardy, wise, and free,⁹ generous
 95 And secree,⁹ and no nigard, ne no fool, discreet
 Ne him that is agast of every tool,⁹ weapon
 Ne noon avauntour.⁹ By that God above, boaster
 How dorste ye sayn for shame unto youre love
 That any thing mighte make you aferd?
 100 Have ye no mannes herte and han a beard?
 Allas, and conne⁹ ye been agast of swevenes?⁹ can / dreams
 No thing, God woot, but vanitee³ in swevene is!

6. A popular song of the time.

7. Sound sleeper.

8. I dreamed that I was in such misfortune.

9. Interpret my dream correctly (i.e., in an auspicious manner).

1. Would have laid hold.

2. I.e., killed me.

3. I.e., empty illusion.

- Swevenes engendren of replexiouns,⁴
 And ofte of fume° and of complexiouns,° gas / bodily humors
 105 Whan humours been too habundant in a wight.⁵
 Certes, this dreem which ye han met° tonight dreamed
 Comth of the grete superfluitee
 Of youre rede colera,⁶ pardee,
 Which causeth folk to drcden° in hir dremes fear
 110 Of arwes,° and of fir with rede lemes,° arrows / flames
 Of rede beestes, that they wol hem bite,
 Of kontek,° and of whelpes grete and lite⁷— strife
 Right° as the humour of malencolye⁸ just
 Causeth ful many a man in sleep to crye
 115 For fere of blake beres° or boles° blake, bears / bulls
 Or elles blake develes wol hem take.
 Of othere humours coude I tell also
 That werken many a man in sleep ful wo,
 But I wol passe as lightly° as I can. quickly
 120 Lo, Caton,⁹ which that was so wis a man,
 Saide he nat thus? 'Ne do no fors of¹ dremes.'
 Now, sire," quod she, "whan we flee fro the bemes,²
 For Goddes love, as take som laxatif.
 Up° peril of my soule and of my lif, upon
 125 I conseile you the beste, I wol nat lie,
 That bothe of colere and of malencolye
 Ye purge you; and for° ye shal nat tarye, in order that Though in this town is noon apothecarye,
 I shal myself to herbes techen you,
 130 That shal been for youre hele³ and for youre prow,
 And in oure yeerd tho herbes shal I finde,
 The whiche han of hir propretee by kinde° nature
 To purge you binethe and eek above.
 Foryet° nat this, for Goddes owene love. forget
 135 Ye been ful colerik° of complexioun;
 Ware° the sonne in his ascencioun bilious
 Ne finde you nat repleet° of humours hote;° beware that
 And if it do, I dar wel laye° a grote filled / hot
 That ye shul have a fevere terciane,⁴ bet
 140 Or an agu that may be youre bane.° death
 A day or two ye shul han digestives
 Of wormes, er ye take youre laxatives
 Of lauriol, centaure, and fumetere,⁵

4. Dreams have their origin in over-eating.

5. I.e., when humors are too abundant in a person. Pertelote's diagnosis is based on the familiar concept that an overabundance of one of the bodily humors in a person affected his temperament.

6. Red bile.

7. And of big and little dogs.

8. I.e., black bile.

9. Dionysius Cato, supposed author of a book of maxims used in elementary education.

1. Pay no attention to.

2. Fly down from the rafters.

3. Health; "prow": benefit.

4. Tertian (recurring every other day).

5. Of laureole, centaury, and fumitory. These, and the herbs mentioned in the next lines, were all common medieval medicines used as cathartics.

- Or elles of ellebor° that groweth there, hellebore
 145 Of catapuce, or of gaitres beries,⁶
 Of herbe-ive° growing in oure yeerd ther merye is.⁷ herb ivy
 Pekke hem right up as they growe and ete hem in.
 Be merye, housbonde, for youre fader kin!
 Dredeth no dreem: I can saye you namore.”
 150 “Madame,” quod he, “graunt mercy of youre lore.⁸
 But natheles, as touching daun° Catoun, master
 That hath of wisdom swich a greet renown,
 Though that he bad no dremes for to drede,
 By God, men may in olde bookes rede
 155 Of many a man more of auctoritee° authority
 Than evere Caton was, so mote I thee,° thrive
 That al the revers sayn of his sentence,° opinion
 And han wel founden by experience
 That dremes been significaciouns
 160 As wel of joye as tribulaciouns
 That folk enduren in this lif present.
 Ther needeth make of this noon argument:
 The verray preve⁹ sheweth it in deede.^{phrase}
 “Oon of the gretteste auctour¹ that men rede^{phrase}
 165 Saith thus, that whilom two felawes wente
 On pilgrimage in a ful good entente,
 And happed so they comen in a town,
 Wher as ther was swich congregacioun ~~ph~~
 Of peple, and eek so strait of herbergage.²
 170 That they ne founde as muche as oo cotage
 In which they bothe mighte ylogged° be; lodged Wherefore they mosten° of necessitee must
 As for that night departe° compaignye. part
 And eech of hem gooth to his hostelrye,
 175 And took his logging as it wolde falle.° befall
 That oon of hem was logged in a stalle,
 Fer° in a yeerd, with oxen of the plough; far away
 That other man was logged wel ynough,
 As was his aventure° or his fortune, lot
 180 That us governeth alle as in commune.
 And so bifel that longe er it were day,
 This man mette° in his bed, ther as he lay, dreamed
 How that his felawe gan upon him calle,
 And saide, ‘Allas, for in an oxes stalle
 185 This night I shal be mordred° ther I liel murdered
 Now help me, dere brother, or I die!
 In alle haste com to me,’ he saide.
 “This man out of his sleep for fere abraide,° started up
 But whan that he was wakened of his sleep,

6. Of caper berry or of gaiter berry.
 7. Where it is pleasant.
 8. Many thanks for your instruction.
 9. Actual experience.

1. I.e., one of the greatest authors (perhaps Cicero).
 2. And also such a shortage of lodging.

- 190 He turned him and took of this no keep:° heed
 Him thoughte his dreem nas but a vanitee.
 Thus twies in his sleeping dremed he,
 And atte thridde time yit his felawe
 Cam, as him thoughte, and saide, 'I am now slawe:°' slain
 195 Bihold my bloody woundes deepe and wide.
 Aris up erly in the morwe tide³
 And atte west gate of the town,' quod he,
 'A carte ful of dong° ther shaltou see, dung
 In which my body is hid ful prively:
 200 Do thilke carte arresten boldly.⁴
 My gold caused my mordre, sooth to sayn'—
 And tolde him every point how he was slain,
 With a ful pitous face, pale of hewe.
 And truste wel, his dreem he foond° ful trewe, found
 205 For on the morwe° as soone as it was day, morning
 To his felawes in° he took the way, lodging
 And whan that he cam to this oxes stalle,
 After his felawe he began to calle.
 "The hostiler° answerde him anoon, innkeeper
 210 And saide, 'Sire, youre felawe is agoon:°' gone away
 As soone as day he wente out of the town.'
 "This man gan fallen in suspecioun,
 Remembring on his dremes that he mette;° dreamed
 And forth he gooth, no lenger wolde he lette,° tarry
 215 Unto the west gate of the town, and foond
 A dong carte, wente as it were to donge° lond, put manure on
 That was arrayed in that same wise
 As ye han herd the dede° man devise; dead
 And with an hardy herte he gan to crye,
 220 'Vengeance and justice of this felonye!
 My felawe mordred is this same night,
 And in this carte he lith° gaping upright!° lies / supine
 I crye out on the ministres,' quod he,
 "That sholde keepe and rulen this citee.
 225 Harrow,° alas, here lith my felawe slain!' help
 What sholde I more unto this tale sayn?
 The peple up sterte° and caste the carte to grounde, started
 And in the middel of the dong they founde
 The dede man that mordred was al newe,⁵
 230 "O blisful God that art so just and trewe,
 Lo, how that thou biwrayest° mordre alway! disclose
 Mordre wol out, that see we day by day:
 Mordre is so wlatson° and abhominable loathsome
 To God that is so just and resonable,
 235 That he ne wol nat suffre it heled° be, concealed
 Though it abide a yeer or two or three.
 Mordre wol out: this my conclusioun.

3. In the morning.

5. Recently.

4. Boldly have this same cart stopped.

- And right anon ministres of that town
 Han hent° the cartere and so sore him pined,⁶ seized
 240 And eek the hostiler so sore engined,[°] racked
 That they biknewe° hir wikkednesse anon, confessed
 And were anhangen° by the nekke boon. hanged
 Here may men seen that dremes been to drede.⁷
 "And certes, in the same book I rede—
 245 Right in the nexte chapitre after this—
 I gabbe° nat, so have I joye or blis— lie
 Two men that wolde han passed over see
 For certain cause into a fer contree,
 If that the wind ne hadde been contrarye
 250 That made hem in a citee for to tarye,
 That stood ful merye upon an haven° side— harbor's
 But on a day again° the even tide toward
 The wind gan chaunge, and blewe right as hem leste:⁸
 Jolif° and glad they wenten unto reste, merry
 255 And casten hem⁹ ful erly for to saile.
 "But to that oo man fil° a greet mervaille; befell
 That oon of hem, in sleeping as he lay,
 Him mette¹ a wonder drem again the day:
 Him thoughte a man stood by his beddes side,
 260 And him comanded that he sholde abide,
 And saide him thus, 'If thou tomorwe wende,
 Thou shalt be dreint:° my tale is at an ende.' drowned
 "He wook and tolde his felawe what he mette,
 And prayed him his viage° to lette;° voyage / delay
 265 As for that day he prayed him to bide.
 "His felawe that lay by his beddes side
 Gan for to laughe, and scorned him ful faste.° hard
 'No drem,' quod he, 'may so myn herte agaste° terrify
 That I wol lette° for to do my thinges.° delay / business
 270 I sette nat a straw by thy dreminges,²
 For swevenes been but vanitees and japes:³
 Men dreme alday° of owles or of apes,⁴ constantly
 And of many a maze° therewithal— delusion
 Men dreme of thing that nevere was ne shal.⁵
 275 But sith I see that thou wolt here abide,
 And thus forsleuthen° wilfully thy tide,° waste / time
 Good woot, it reweth me;⁶ and have good day.'
 And thus he took his leve and wente his way.
 But er that he hadde half his cours ysailed—
 280 Noot I nat why ne what meschaunce it ailed—
 But casuelly the shippes botme rente,⁷

6. Tortured.

7. Worthy of being feared.

8. Just as they wished.

9. Determined.

1. He dreamed.

2. I don't care a straw for your dreamings.

3. Dreams are but illusions and frauds.

4. I.e., of absurdities.

5. I.e., shall be.

6. I'm sorry.

7. I don't know why nor what was the trouble with it—but accidentally the ship's bottom split.

- And ship and man under the water wente,
 In sighte of othere shippes it biside,
 That with hem sailed at the same tide.
- 285 And therfore, faire Pertelote so dere,
 By swiche ensamples olde maistou lere°
 That no man sholde been too recchelees°
 Of dremes, for I saye thee doutelees
 That many a dreem ful sore is for to drede.
- 290 "Lo, in the lif of Saint Kenelm⁸ I rede—
 That was Kenulphus sone, the noble king
 Of Mercenrike°—how Kenelm mette° a thing dreamed Mercia
 A lite° er he was mordred on a day. little
 His mordre in his avision° he sey°. dream / saw 295 His norice° him expounded everydeel° nurse / entirely
 His swevene, and bad him for to keepe him⁹ weel
 For traizon, but he nas but seven yeer old,
 And therfore litel tale hath he told
 Of any dreem,¹ so holy was his herte.
- 300 By God, I hadde levere than my sherte²
 That ye hadde rad° his legende as have I. read
 "Dame Pertelote, I saye you trewely,
 Macrobeus,³ that writ the Avisioun
 In Affrike of the worthy Scipioun,
 305 Affermeth° dremes, and saith that they been confirms Warning of things that men after seen.
 "And ferthermore, I praye you looketh wel
 In the Olde Testament of Daniel,
 If he heeld° dreines any vanitee.⁴ considered
- 310 "Rede eek of Joseph⁵ and ther shul ye see Wher° dremes be sometime—I saye nat alle— whether Warning of things that shul after falle.
 "Looke of Egypte the king daun Pharao,
 His bakere and his botelere° also, butler
 315 Wher they ne felte noon effect in dremes.⁶
 Whoso wol seeke actes of sondry remes° realms
 May rede of dremes many a wonder thing.
 "Lo Cresus, which that was of Lyde° king, Lydia
 Mette° he nat that he sat upon a tree, dreamed
 320 Which signified he sholde anhangd° be? hanged
 "Lo here Andromacha, Ectores° wif, Hector's
 That day that Ector sholde lese° his lif, lose
 She dremed on the same night biforn
 How that the lif of Ector sholde be lorn°, lost
 325 If thilke° day he wente into bataile; that same

8. Kenelm succeeded his father as king of Mercia at the age of 7, but was slain by his aunt (in 821).

9. Guard himself.

1. Therefore he has set little store by any dream.

2. I.e., I'd give my shirt.

3. Macrobius wrote a famous commentary on Cicero's account in De Republica of the dream of Scipio Africanus Minor; the commentary came to be regarded as a standard authority on dream lore.

4. See Daniel vii.

5. See Genesis xxxvii.

6. See Genesis xxxix-xli.

96 She warned him, but it mighte nat availe:° do any good
 He wente for to fighte nathelees.
 But he was slain ~~anoon~~° of Achilles. right away
 But thilke tale is al too long to telle,
 330 And eek it is neigh day, I may nat dwelle.
 Shortly I saye, ~~as for conclusioun~~,
 That I shal han of this avisioun⁷
 Adversitee, and I saye ~~ferthermoor~~
 That I ne telle of⁸ laxatives no stoor,
 335 For they been venimes,° I woot it weel: poisons
 I hem defye, I love hem neveradecl.° not a bit
 "Now lat us speke of mirth and stinte° al this. stop
 Madame Pertelote, so have I blis,
 Of oo thing God hath sente me large grace:
 340 For whan I see the ~~beautee~~ of youre face—
 Ye been so ~~scarlet reed~~° aboute youre yē— red
 It maketh al my drede for to dien.
 For also siker° as In principio,⁹ certain
Mulier est hominis confusio.¹
 345 Madame, the sentence° of this Latin is, meaning
 'Womman is mannes joye and al his blis.'
 For whan I feele ~~anight~~ youre softe side—
 Al be it that I may nat ~~on you ride~~,
 For that oure perche is maad so narwe, allas—
 350 I am so ful of joye and of solas° delight
 That I defye bothe swevene and dreem."◀
 And with that word he fleigh° down fro the beem, flew
 For it was day, and eek his hennes alle,
 And with a "chuk" he gan hem for to calle,
 355 For he hadde founde a corn lay in the yeerd.
 Real° he was, he was namore aferd:° regal / afraid
 He fethered² Pertelote twenty time,
 And trad³ hire as ofte er it was prime.
 He looketh as it were a grim leoun,
 360 And on his toes he rometh up and down:
 Him deined⁴ nat to sette his foot to grounde.
 He chukketh whan he hath a corn yfounde,
 And to him rennen° thanne his wives alle. run
 Thus royal, as a prince is in his halle,
 365 Leve I this Chauntecleer in his pasture,
 And after wol I telle his aventure.
 Whan that the month in which the world bigan,
 That highte March, whan God first maked man,
 Was compleet, and passed were also,

7. Divinely inspired dream (as opposed to the more ordinary "swevene" or "dreem").

8. Set by.

9. A tag from the Gospel of St. John which gives the essential premises of Christianity: "In the beginning was the Word."

1. Woman is man's ruination.

2. I.e., embraced.

3. Trod, copulated with; "prime": 9 A.M.

4. He deigned.

* March was then the 1st month of the year.

- 370 Sin March bigan, thritty days and two,⁵ Bifel that Chauntecleer in al his pride,
 His sevene wives walking him biside,
 Caste up his vën to the brighte sonne,
 That in the signe of Taurus hadde yronne
 375 Twenty degrees and oon and somewhat more,
 And knew by kinde,⁶ and by noon other lore; nature
 That it was prime, and crew with blisful stevene.⁶ voice
 "The sonne," he saide, "is clomben⁶ up on hevene
 Fourty degrees and oon and more, ywis.
 380 Madame Pertelote, my worldes blis,
 Herkneþ this blisful briddes⁶ how they singe, birds
 And see the fresshe flowres how they springe:
 Ful is myn herte of revel and solas."
 But sodeinly him fil⁶ a sorweful cas,⁶ befell / chance
 385 For evere the latter ende of joye is wo—
 Cod woot that worldly joye is soone ago,
 And if a rethor⁶ coude faire endite, rheticorian
 He in a cronicle saufly⁶ mighte it write, safely
 As for a sovereign notabilitee.⁷
 390 Now every wis man lat him herkne me:
 This storve is also⁶ trewe, I undertake, as
 As is the book of Launcelot de Lake,⁸
 That wommen holde in ful greet reverence.
 Now wol I turne again to my sentence.⁶ main point
 395 A colfox⁹ ful of sly iniquitee,
 That in the grove hadde woned⁶ yeres thre, dwelled
 By heigh imaginacion forncast,¹
 The same night thurghout the hegges⁶ brast⁶ hedges / burst
 Into the yeerd ther Chauntecleer the faire
 400 Was wont, and eek his wives, to repaire;
 And in a bed of wortes⁶ stille he lay cabbages
 Til it was passed undren⁶ of the day, midmorning
 Waiting his time on Chauntecleer to falle,
 As gladly doon this homicides alle;
 405 That in await ligen to mordre² men.
 O false mordroure, lurking in thy den!
 O newe Scariot!³ Newe Geniloun!
 False dissimilour!⁶ O Greck Sinoun,⁴ dissembler
 That broughtest Troye al outrelly⁶ to sorwe!
 410 O Chauntecleer, accused be that morwe⁶ utterly morning

5. The rhetorical time-telling is perhaps burlesque; it can be read as yielding the date April 3, though May 3 seems intended from lines 374–75: on May 3 the sun would have passed some twenty degrees through Taurus (the Bull), the second sign of the zodiac; the sun would be forty degrees from the horizon at 9 o'clock in the morning.

6. Has climbed.

7. Indisputable fact.

8. Romances of the courteous knight Lancelot of the Lake were very popular.

9. Fox with black markings.

1. Predestined by divine planning.

2. That lie in ambush to murder.

3. Judas Iscariot. "Geniloun" is Ganelon, who betrayed Roland to the Saracens (in the medieval French epic The Song of Roland).

4. Sinon, who persuaded the Trojans to take the Greeks' wooden horse into their city—with, of course, the result that the city was destroyed.

few

That thou into the yerd flaugh¹ fro the bernes!
 Thou were ful wel ywarned by thy dremes
 That thilke day was perilous to thee;
 But what that God forwoot² moot³ needes be, foreknows / must
 After⁴ the opinion of certain clerkes:
 Witnesse on him that any parfit clerk is
 That in scole is greet altercacioun
 In this matere, and greet disputoun,
 And hath been of an hundred thousand men.

disputation

sift / husks

foreknowledge

foreknew knowledge dreamed

don't know

sport

guess

sand

lies in / noble

butterfly

5. St. Augustine, Boethius (6th-century Roman philosopher, whose Consolation of Philosophy was translated by Chaucer), and Thomas Bradwardine (Archbishop of Canterbury, d. 1349) were all concerned with the interrelationship between man's free will and God's foreknowledge.
 6. Constrains me necessarily.
 7. Boethius, "conditional necessity" permitted a large measure of free will.
 8. I.e., baneful.
 9. Supposed author of a bestial, a book of moralized zoology describing both natural and supernatural animals (including mermaids).

That thou into the yerd flaugh¹ fro the bernes!
 Thou were ful wel ywarned by thy dremes
 That thilke day was perilous to thee;
 But what that God forwoot² moot³ needes be, foreknows / must
 After⁴ the opinion of certain clerkes:
 Witnesse on him that any parfit clerk is
 That in scole is greet altercacioun
 In this matere, and greet disputoun,
 And hath been of an hundred thousand men.
 But I ne can nat buite⁵ it to the bren.
 As can the holy doctour Augustin,
 Or Boece, or the bisshop Bradwardin⁶—
 Whether that Goddes worthy forwiting⁷
 Straiñeth me nedely⁸ for to doon a thing
 ("Nedely" clepe I simple necessitee),
 Or elles if free chois be graunted me
 To do that same thing or do it nouht,
 Though God forwoot⁹ it er that I was wroght;
 Or if his wiling¹⁰ straiñeth neveradell,
 But by necessitee condicionel¹¹—
 I wol nat han to do of swich matere:
 My tale is of a cok, as ye may heere,
 That took his conseil of his wif with sorwe,
 To walken in the yerd upon that morwe
 That he hadde met¹² the drem that I you tolde.
 Wommenes counsils been ful ofte colde,
 Wommenes counsil broughte us first to wo,
 And made Adam fro Paradis to go,
 Ther as he was ful merye and wel at ese.
 But for I moot¹³ to whom it mighte displese
 If I counsil of women wolde blame,
 Passe over, for I saide it in my game¹⁴—
 Rede auctours where they trete of swich matere,
 And what they sayn of wommen ye may heere—
 Thise been the cokkes wordes and nat mine:
 I can noon harm of no womman divine.
 Faire in the sond¹⁵ to bathe hire meryly
 Lith¹⁶ Pertelote, and alle hir sustres by,
 Again¹⁷ the sonne, and Chauntecleer so free¹⁸
 Soong¹⁹ merier than the mermaide in the see—
 For Physiologus²⁰ saith sikerly
 How that they singen wel and meryly.
 And so bifel that as he caste his ye
 Among the wortes on a boterflye,²¹

- 455 He was war of this fox that lay ful lowe.
 No thing ne liste him¹ thanne for to croue,
 But cride anon "Cok cok!" and up he sterte,²
 As man that³ was affrayed in his herte—
 For naturrelly a best desireth flec
 Fro his contrarye⁴, if he may it sec,
 Though he neverc erst⁵ hadde seen it with his yē.
 This Chauntecleer, whan he gan him espye,
 He wolde han fled, but that the fox anon
 Saide, "Gentil sire, allas, wher wol ye goon?
 Be ye afraid of me that am youre frend?
 Now certes, I were worse than a fend
 If I to you wolde⁶ harm or vilainye.
 I am nat come youre conseil⁷ for t'espye,
 But trewely the cause of my cominge
 Was only for to herkne how that ye singe:
 For trewely, ye han as merye a stevene⁸
 As any angel hath that is in hevene.
 Therwith ye han in musik more feelinge
 Than hadde Boece,⁹ or any that can singe.
 My lord your fader—God his soule blesse!—
 And eek youre moder, of hir gentillesse,
 Han in myn hous ybecen, to my grette ese.
 "But for men speke of singing, I wol saye,
 So mote I brouke¹⁰ wel mine yē twaye,
 Save ye, I herde nevere man so singe
 As dide youre fader in the morweninge.
 Certes, it was of herte¹¹ al that he soong.
 And for to make his vois the more strong,
 He wolde so paine him¹² that with bothe his yēn
 And stonden on his tiptoon therwithal,
 And strecche forth his nekke long and smal,
 And eek he was of swich discrecion
 That ther nas no man in no region
 That him in song or wisdom mighte passe.
 I have wel rad¹³ in Dauin Burnel the Assē
 Among his vers how that ther was a cok,
 For a prestes sone yaf him a knok¹⁴
 Upon his leg whil he was yong and nice,¹⁵
 He made him for to lese¹⁶ his benefice.²
- foolish lose
- 495
- read
- 490
- sang
- gladly
- gentility
- 475
- voice
- 470
- secrets
- meant
- 465
- 460
- before
- started
1. He wished.
 2. Like one who.
 3. I.e., his natural enemy.
 4. Boethius also wrote a treatise on music.
 5. So might I enjoy the use of.
 6. Heartfelt.
 7. Take pains.
 8. He had to shut his eyes.
 9. Master Brunellus, a discontented donkey, was the hero of a 12th-century satirical poem by Nigel Wireker.
 10. Because a priest's son gave him a knock.
 11. The offended cock neglected to crow so that his master, now grown to man-hood, overslept, missing his ordination and losing his benefice.

As maden alle the hennes in the cloos,⁵⁴⁰
 Whan they hadde scen of Chauntecleer the sighte
 But sovercinly⁴ Dame Pertelote shrighte⁵
 Ful louder than dide Hasdrubales⁶ wif
 Whan that hir housbonde hadde lost his lif,
 And that the Romans hadden brend⁷ Cartage:
 She was so ful of torment and of rage⁸
 That willfully unto the fir she sterte,⁹
 And brende hirselven with a stedefast herte.
 O woful hennes, right so criden ye.
 As, whan that Nero brende the citee
 Of Rome, criden senatours wives
 For that hir housbondes losten alle hir lives:¹⁰
 Withouten gilt this Nero hath hem slain.
 Now wol I turne to my tale again.
 The selv¹¹ widwe and eek hir doughtres two
 Herden thise hennes crye and maken wo,
 And out at dore sterten¹² they anon,
 And soun¹³ the fox toward the grove goon,
 And bar upon his bak the cok away,
 And criden, "Out, barrow," and wailaway,
 Ha, ha, the fox," and after him they ran,
 And eek with staves many another man;
 Ran Colicoure dogge, and Talbot and Cerland,¹⁴
 And Malkin with a distaf in hir hand,
 Ran cow and calf, and eek the verray hogges,
 Sore aferd¹⁵ for berking of the dogges
 And shouting of the men and women eke.
 They romne¹⁶ so hem thoughte hir herte breke;¹⁷
 They yelieden as fecendes doon in helle;
 The dokkes¹⁸ criden as men wolde hem quelle;¹⁹
 The gces for fere-flouen²⁰ over the trees,
 Out of the hive cam the swarm of bees;
 So hidous was the noise, a, benedicite,²¹
 Certes, he Jakke Straw²² and his meince²³
 Ne made nevere shoutes half so shrille
 Whan that they wolden any Fleming kille,
 As thilke day was maad upon the fox:
 Of bras they broughten beemes²⁴ and of box,²⁵ trumpets / boxwood
 Of horn, of boon,²⁶ in whichiche they blew and pouped,²⁷
 And therewithal they skiked²⁸ and they houped —
 It seemed as that hevene shoulde falle.
 Now goode men, I praye you herkeneth alle:
 Lo, how Fortune turneth²⁹ sodeinly reverses, overturns

4. Splendidly.
 5. Hasdrubal was king of Carthage
 6. According to the legend, Nero not only set fire to Rome (in A.D. 64) but also put many senators to death.
 7. Tooted.
 8. Shrieked; "houped": whooped.
 9. One of the leaders of the Peasant's Revolt in 1381, which was partially directed against the Flemings living in London.
 10. Would break.
 11. Tooted.
 12. Shrieked; "houped": whooped.

bless me
company

ducks / kill flew ran frightened

help

leaped saw innocent

burned madness jumped shrieked

yard

The hope and pride eek of hir enemy.
 This cok that lay upon the foxes bak,
 In al his drede unto the fox he spak,
 And saide, "Sire, if that I were as ye,
 Yit sholde I sayn, as wis" God helpe me,
 "Turneth ayain, ye proude cherles alle!
 A verray pestilence upon you falle!
 Now am I come unto this wodes side,
 Maugree your heed,³ the cok shal here abide.
 And as he spak that word, al sodeinly
 The cok brak from his mouth deliverly,
 And hye upon a tree he fleigh⁴ anon.
 And whan the fox sawgh that he was agoon,
 "Allas," quod he, "O Chauntecleer, allas!
 I have to you," quod he, "ydoon trespas,
 In as muche as I made you afeid
 Whan I you hente" and broughte out of the yeerd.
 But sire, I dide it in no wilke" entenc:
 Come down, and I shal telle you what I mente.
 I shal saye sooth to you, God help me so."
 "Nay thanne," quod he, "I shrewe" us bothe two:
 But first I shrewe myself, bothe blood and bones,
 If thou bigile me ofter than ones;
 Thou shalt namore thurgh thy flaterye
 Do" me to singe and winken with myn ye.
 For he that wikketh whan he sholde see,
 Al wilfully, God lat him nevere thee."
 "Nay," quod the fox, "but God give him meschaunce
 That is so undiscreit of governaunce"
 "That jangleth" whan he sholde holde his pees."
 Lo, swich it is for to be recchelees"
 And negligent and truste on flaterye.
 But ye that holden this tale a folye
 As of a fox, or of a cok and hen,
 Take the moralitec, goode men.
 For Saint Paul saith that al that writen is
 To oure doctourne it is ywrit, ywis:⁴
 Take the fruit, and lat the chat be stille.
 Now goode God, if that it be thy wille,
 As saith my lord, so make us alle goode men,
 And bringe us to his hye blisse. Amen.

self-control
 chatters careless thrive cause

curse seized wicked

nimble flew

surely

3. Despite your head—i.e., despite any.
 4. See Romans xv.4.

thing you can do.

- That telleth this tale to us lustily.
 Sire preest," quod he, "artou a vicary,^o vicar
 Or arte a Person? Say sooth, by thy fay.^o faith
 Be what thou be, ne breek^o thou nat oure play, break
 25 For every man save thou hath told his tale.
 Unbokele and shew us what is in thy male!^o bag
 For trewely, me thinketh by thy cheere^o expression
 Thou sholdest knitte up wel a greet matere.
 Tel us a fable anoon, for cokkes bones!"
 30 This Person answerde al atones,⁶
 "Thou getest fable noon ytold for me,
 For Paul, that writeth unto Timothee,
 Repreveth^o hem that waiven soothfastnesse,⁷ reproves
 And tellen fables and swich wrecchednessc.
 35 Why sholde I sowen draf^o out of my fest,^o chaff / fist
 When I may sowen whete if that me lest?⁸
 For which I saye that if you list to heere
 Moralitee and vertuous matere,
 And thanne that ye wol yive me audience,
 40 I wol ful fain,^o at Cristes reverence, gladly
 Do you plesance lefevel^o as I can. lawful
 But trusteth wel, I am a southren man:
 I can nat geeste Rum-Ram-Ruf by lettre⁹—
 Ne, God woot, rym holde^o I but litel better. consider
 45 And therfore, if you list, I wol nat glose;¹
 I wol you telle a merye tale in prose,
 To knitte up al this feeste and make an ende.
 And Jesu for his grace wit me sende
 To shewe you the way in this viage^o journey
 50 Of thilke parfit glorious pilgrimage
 That highte Jerusalem celestial.
 And if ye vouche sauf, anoon I shal
 Biginne upon my tale, for which I praye
 Telle youre avis.^o I can no better saye. opinion
 55 But nathelees, this meditacioun
 I putte it ay under correccioun
 Of clerkes, for I am nat textuel:²
 I take but the sentence,^o trusteth wel. meaning
 Therfore I make protestacioun^o public acknowledgment
 60 That I wol stonde to correccioun."
 Upon this word we han assented soone,
 For, as it seemed, it was for to doone
 To enden in som vertuous sentence,^o doctrine
 And for to yive him space and audience;
 65 And bede³ oure Host he sholde to him saye
 That alle we to telle his tale him praye.

6. Immediately.

7. Depart from truth. See I Timothy i.4.

8. It pleases me.

9. I.e., I cannot tell stories in the alliterative measure (without rhyme):

this form of poetry was not common in southeastern England.

1. I.e., speak in order to please.

2. Literal, faithful to the letter.

3. I.e., we bade.

Oure Hoste hadde the wordes for us alle:
 "Sire preest," quod he, "now faire you bifalle:
 Telleth," quod he, "yours meditacioun.

70 But hasteth you; the sonne wol adown.

Beeth fructuous,^o and that in litel space,^o fruitful / time

And to do wel God sende you his grace.

Saye what you list, and we wol gladly heere."

And with that word he saide in this manere.

Chaucer's Retraction

Now praye I to hem alle that herkne this litel tretis⁸ or rede, that if ther be any thing in it that liketh⁹ hem, that therof they thanken oure Lord Jesu Crist, of whom proceedeth al wit¹ and al goodnesse. And if ther be any thing that displese him, I praye hem also that they arrette it to the defaute of myn unconning,² and nat to my wil, that wolde ful fain have said bettre if I hadde had conning. For oure book saith, "Al that is writen is writen for oure doctrine,"³ and that is myn entente. Wherefore I biseeke⁴ you mekely, for the mercy of God, that ye praye for me that Crist have mercy on me and foryive me my giltes, and namely⁵ of my translacions and enditinges of worldly vanitees, the whiche I revoke in my retracions: as is the Book of Troilus; the Book also of Fame; the Book of the Five and Twenty Ladies;⁶ the Book of the Duchesse; the Book of Saint Valentines Day of the Parlement of Briddes; the Tales of Canterbury, thilke that sounen into⁷ sinne; the Book of the Leon;⁸ and many another book, if they were in my remembrance, and many a song and many a lecherous lay: that Crist for his grcte mercy foryive me the sinne. But of the translacion of Boece⁹ De Consolacione, and othere bookes of legendes of saintes, and omelies,¹ and moralitee, and devocion, that thanke I oure Lord Jesu Crist and his blisful Moder and alle the saintes of hevene, biseeking hem that they from hennes² forth unto my lives ende sende me grace to biwail my giltes and to studye to the salvacion of my soule, and graunte me grace of verray penitence, confession, and satisfaccion to doon in this present lif, thurgh the benigne grace of him that is king of kinges and preest over alle preestes, that boughte³ us with the precious blood of his herte, so that I may been oon of hem at the day of doom that shulle be saved. *Qui cum patre et Spiritu Sancto vivis et regnas Deus per omnia saecula.*⁴
 Amen. 1386-1400

8. Hear this little treatise.

9. Pleases.

1. Understanding.

2. Ascribe it to the defect of my lack of skill.

3. Romans xv.4.

4. Beseech.

5. Especially. "Enditinges": compositions.

6. I.e., the Legend of Good Women.

7. Those that tend toward.

8. The Book of the Lion has not been preserved.

9. Boethius.

1. Homilies.

2. Hence.

3. Redeemed.

4. Who with the Father and the Holy Spirit livest and reignest God forever.

LYRICS AND OCCASIONAL VERSE¹To Rosamond²

- Madame, ye been of alle beautee shrine
 As fer as cercled is the mapemounde:³
 For as the crystal glorious ye shine,
 And like ruby been youre cheekes rounde.
 5 Therwith ye been so merye and so jocounde
 That at a revel whan that I see you daunce
 It is an oinement unto my wounde,
 Though ye to me ne do no daliaunce.⁴
- For though I weepe of teres ful a tine,⁵ tub
 10 Yit may that wo myn herte nat confounde;
 Youre semy⁶ vois, that ye so smale outtwine,⁵ small
 Maketh my thought in joye and blis habounde:⁶ abound
 So curteisly I go with love bounde
 That to myself I saye in my penaunce,⁶
 15 "Suffiseth me to love you, Rosemounde,
 Though ye to me ne do no daliaunce."
- Was nevere pik walwed in galauntine⁷
 As I in love am walwed and vwounde,
 For which ful ofte I of myself divine
 20 That I am trewe Tristam⁸ the secounde;
 My love may not refreide nor affounde;⁹
 I brenne⁹ ay in amorous plesaunce: burn
 Do what you list, I wol youre thral⁹ be founde, slave
 Though ye to me ne do no daliaunce.

1. As a man of accomplishments who was often at court, Chaucer must, like other courtiers, have been called upon to write both occasional verses and lyrics. Of the handful of these shorter poems that have survived, several of the best are included here; they reveal the ways in which Chaucer handled some of the poetic modes and attitudes of his time. These modes—particularly the lyric strain, which seeks expression in a brief form—seem to have been uncongenial to his temperament. Some, in fact, might well be termed "anti-lyrics"; these are the poems where the extreme conventions of the courtly-love lyric become a framework in which Chaucer's irony and indirection may be brought into immediate play. Chaucer's best work, however, is in his longer poems, for irony and indirection are qualities which can be given proper development only if the poet has ample room to work in.

2. This lyric extends the extravagant images of the stylized courtly-love lyric to outrageous lengths: a lover might well weep a flood of tears but would hardly measure them by the tubful (line 9), and he might be overwhelmed with love—but not like a fish buried in sauce (line 17). The general imperturbability of tone contrasts ironically with the grotesque metaphors.

3. I.e., to the farthest circumference of the map of the world.

4. I.e., show me no encouragement.

5. That you so delicately spin out.

6. I.e., pangs of unrequited love.

7. Pike rolled in galantine sauce.

8. The famous lover of Isolt (Iseult, Isolde) in medieval legend, renowned for his constancy.

9. Cool nor chill.

To His Scribe Adam¹

Adam scrivain, ^o if evere it thee bifalle	scribe
Boece ² or Troilus for to writen newe,
Under thy longe lokkes thou moste ³ have the scalle, ^o	scurf
But after my making thou write more trewe, ⁴
5 So ofte a day I moot ^o thy werk renewe,	must
It to correcte, and eek to rubbe and scrape:
And al is thurgh thy negligence and rape. ^o	haste

Complaint to His Purse⁵

To you. my purs, and to noon other wight,
Complaine I, for ye be my lady dere.
I am so sory, now that ye be light,
For certes, but if ⁶ ye make me hevye cheere,
5 Me were as lief ⁷ be laid upon my beere; ^o	bier
For which unto youre mercy thus I crye:
Beeth hevye again, or elles moot ^o I die.	must
Now voucheth sauf this day er it be night
That I of you the blisful soun may heere,
10 Or sec youre colour, lik the sonne bright,
That of yelownesse hadde nevere peere.
Ye be my life, ye be myn hertes stcere, ^o	rudder, guide
Queene of confort and of good compaignye:
Beeth hevye again, or elles moot I die.
15 Ye purs, that been to me my lives light
And saviour, as in this world down here,
Out of this tonne ⁸ helpe me thurgh your might,
Sith that ye wol nat be my tresorere; ^o	disburser
For I am shave as neigh ^o as any frere. ^o	close / friar
20 But yit I praye unto youre curteisye:
Beeth hevye again, or elles moot I die.

1. This jeu d'esprit, called forth by the inefficiency of his amanuensis, is written in the verse form of Chaucer's great poem Troilus and Criseide.

2. I.e., Chaucer's translation of Boethius' De Consolatione. "Troilus"; Troilus and Criseide.

3. I.e., may you.

4. Unless you write more accurately what I've composed.

5. In this variation on the courtly-love lyric the conventional language of love is both used and misused to express love of cash. Ladies, like coins, should be golden, and like purses they should not be "light" (i.e., fickle). On the other hand, they should not be heavy, as purses should be. The poem is in the characteristic three-stanza ballade form, with the usual "envoy" addressed to a noble patron. In this case the patron apparently heard the complaint, for, three days after his accession (in 1399), King Henry IV. renewed and increased the pension Chaucer had received from Richard II.

6. Unless.

7. I'd just as soon.

8. Tun, meaning "predicament."

Envoy to Henry IV

O conquerour of Brutus Albion,⁹
 Which that by line and free eleccioun
 Been verrey king, this song to you I sende:
 25 And ye, that mowen^o alle oure harmes amende, may
 Have minde upon my supplicacioun.

Merciless Beauty¹

1

Youre yēn two wol slee^o me sodeinly: slay
 I may the beautee of hem nat sustene,^o withstand
 So woundeth it thurghout myn herte keene.^o keenly

And but^o youre word wol helen hastily unless 5 Myn hertes wounde, whil that it is greene,²
 Yourē yēn two wol slee me sodeinly:
 I may the beautee of hem nat sustene.

Upon my trouthe, I saye you faithfully
 That ye been of my lif and deeth the queene,
 10 For with my deeth the trouthe shal be scene.
 Yourē yēn two wol slee me sodeinly:
 I may the beautee of hem nat sustene,
 So woundeth it thurghout myn herte keene.

2

So hath youre beautee fro youre herte chaced
 15 Pitee, that me ne availeth nought to plaine:^o complain
 For Daunger halt³ youre mercy in his chaine.

Gilteles my deeth thus han ye me purchaced;^o procured
 I saye you sooth, me needeth nought to feine:^o dissemble
 So hath youre beautee fro youre herte chaced
 20 Pitee, that me ne availeth nought to plaine.

Allas, that nature hath in you compaced^o enclosed
 So greet beautee that no man may attaine
 To mercy, though he sterve^o for the paine. die
 So hath youre beautee fro youre herte chaced

9. Britain (Albion) was supposed to have been founded by Brutus, the grandson of Aeneas, the founder of Rome.

1. The first two sections of this poem employ the typical imagery and extravagant emotion of courtly-love lyrics—the power of the lady's eyes to slay the lover, for instance, and the struggle between her native pity and her "daunger" (haughtiness). But it ends where a real lyric could never end: the poet's self-congratulation, at the failure of his affair, on his unimpaired health.

2. I.e., fresh.

3. Haughtiness holds.

- 25 Pitee, that me ne availleth nought to plaine:
For Daunger halt youre mercy in his chaine.

Sin I fro Love escaped am so fat,
I nevere thenke³ to been in his prison lene: intend
Sin I am free, I counte him nat a bene.⁴

- 30 He may answer and saye right this and that;
I do no fors,⁵ I speke right as I mene:
Sin I fro Love escaped am so fat,
I nevere thenke to been in his prison lene.

- Love hath my name ystrike⁶ out of his sclat,⁷ struck / slate
35 And he is strike out of my bookes clene
For everemo; ther is noon other mene.⁸ solution
Sin I fro Love escaped am so fat,
I nevere thenke to been in his prison lene:
Sin I am free, I counte him nat a bene:

Gentilesse⁶

- The firste fader and findere⁹ of gentilesse, founder
What⁹ man desireth gentil for to be whatever
Moste folwe his traas,⁹ and alle his wittes dresse⁷ path
Vertu to sue,⁹ and vices for to flee: follow
5 For unto vertu longeth⁹ dignitee, belongs
And nought the revers, sauflly⁹ dar I deeme, safely
Al were he⁸ mitre, crowne, or diademe.

- This firste stok was ground of rightwisnesse,⁹ righteousness
Trewe of his word, sobre, pietous,⁹ and free,
10 Clene of his gost,⁹ and loved businesse spirit
Against the vice of slouth,⁹ in honestee; sloth
And but his heir love vertu as dide he;
He is nat gentil, though he riche⁹ seeme, noble
Al were he mitre, crowne, or diademe.

- 15 Vice may wel be heir to old richesse,
But ther may no man, as ye may wel see,
Biquethe his heir his vertuous noblesse:
That is appropred⁹ unto no degree exclusively assigned

4. I don't consider him worth a bean.

5. I don't care.

6. The virtue of "gentilesse" combined a courtesy of manner with a courtesy of mind. That it is not the inevitable adjunct of aristocratic birth (though most appropriate to it) was a medieval commonplace, to which Chaucer here gives succinct—if conventional—expression. It is important to observe, however, that the moral democracy implied by this doctrine was never transferred by the Middle Ages to the political or even the social realm.

7. I.e., must follow his (the first-father's) path and dispose all his (own) wits.

8. Even if he wear.

9. Merciful; "free": generous.

But to the firste fader in majestee,
 20 That maketh his heir him that wol him queme,^o please
 Al were he mitre, crowne, or diademe.

Truth¹

Flee fro the prees^o and dwelle with soothfastnesse; crowd
 Suffise unto^o thy thing, though it be smal; be content with
 For hoord hath² hate, and climbing tikelnesse;^o insecurity
 Prees hath envye, and wele^o blent^o overal. prosperity / blinds
 5 Savoure^o no more than thee bihoove shal; relish
 Rule wel thyself that other folk canst rede:^o advise
 And Trouthe shal deliver³, it is no drede.^o doubt

Tempest thee nought al crooked to redresse⁴
 In trust of hire⁵ that turneth as a bal;
 10 Muche wele stant in litel businesse;⁶
 Be war therfore to spurne ayains an al.⁷
 Strive nat as dooth the crokke^o with the wal. pot
 Daunte^o thyself that dauntest otheres deede: master
 And Trouthe shal deliver³, it is no drede.

15 That thee is sent, receive in buxomnesse;^o obedience
 The wrastling for the world axeth^o a fal; asks for
 Here is noon hoom, here nis but wilderness:
 Forth, pilgrim, forth! Forth, beest, out of thy stall!
 Know thy countree, looke up, thank God of al.
 20 Hold the heigh way and lat thy gost^o thee lede: spirit
 And Trouthe shal deliver³, it is no drede.

Therefore, thou Vache,⁸ leve thyn olde wrecchednesse
 Unto the world; leve⁹ now to be thral.
 Crye him mercy that of his heigh goodnesse
 25 Made thee of nought, and in especial
 Draw unto him, and pray in general,
 For thee and eek for othere, havenelich meede:^o reward
 And Trouthe shal deliver³, it is no drede.

1. Taking as his theme Christ's words to his disciples (in John viii.32), "And ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free," Chaucer plays upon the triple meaning that the Middle English word "trouthe" seems to have had for him: the religious truth of Christianity, the moral virtue of integrity, and the philosophical idea of reality. By maintaining one's faith and one's integrity, one rises superior to the vicissitudes of this world and comes eventually to know reality—which is not, however, of this world.

2. Hoarding causes.

3. I.e., truth shall make you free.

4. Do not disturb yourself to straighten all that's crooked.

5. Fortune, who turns like a ball in that she is always presenting a different aspect to men.

6. Peace of mind stands in little anxiety.

7. I.e. to kick against the pricks.

8. Probably Sir Philip de la Vache, with a pun on the French for "cow."

9. I.e. cease.

SIR ORFEO

(ca. 1300)

Sir Orfeo is a reworking of the classical myth of the great musician Orpheus and his wife Eurydice. According to Ovid's Metamorphoses, Eurydice died of a snake-bite at her wedding and went to Hades, the place of the dead. Orpheus undertook to follow her there, and having come before Pluto and Proserpina, the king and queen of Hades, he so pleased them with his music that they granted Eurydice's release—on the condition, however, that she should follow behind Orpheus as they left Hades and that he should not look back at her. But Orpheus did look back, and Eurydice disappeared into Hades. Ovid's stories were told and retold during the Middle Ages, and frequently the teller altered the plot to suit his own purposes—in her tale the Wife of Bath (lines 958ff.) substitutes Midas' wife for his barber as the discoverer of his asses' ears. The poet of Sir Orfeo has given the story a happy ending and has replaced its alien classical elements with familiar elements of medieval folklore. Hades has become the land of Fairye, the medieval otherworld, inhabited by supernatural creatures who seem human in most respects but who exist under laws incomprehensible to ordinary human beings. There is no rational explanation of why the king of Fairye should seize Dame Heurodis (Eurydice), except that by going to sleep under an impe-tree (a grafted fruit-tree), she unwittingly violated a taboo and put herself in his power. In folklore trees are, of course, often given sinister properties: in lines 885 ff. of her tale the Wife of Bath comments that incubi once resided under trees, and in The Faerie Queene l.ii.30 the Redcross Knight has a frightening experience with a tree he is sitting under. In the Otherworld Dame Heurodis continues to sleep under a tree—apparently a replica of the one in her own garden.

That the poem was the product of a minstrel seems certain because of the emphasis laid upon the value of music. Orfeo is an excellent harper who welcomes all good harpers to his court. When he becomes a hermit, he keeps his harp near him and plays on it to solace himself. The animals and birds crowd around him in delight—as they did with Orpheus—and like the original Orpheus he frees his wife by his music. When he returns to his own kingdom it is by his harp and his harping that he is identified. Even Orfeo's steward appreciates music: in most medieval romances stewards are pictured as wicked, for they were the court officers responsible for offering or withholding hospitality for minstrels, and apparently they often withheld it. With unusual tact, the poet depicts a good steward who, partly because of his courtesy to harpers, becomes king after Orfeo's death.

The poem was probably translated from a French romance of the kind called a Breton lay. As the name implies, this genre of romance had its origin in Brittany, a place noted for its minstrelsy. Other surviving lays share with Sir Orfeo a plot involving the supernatural, wedded or romantic love, and a rash promise; they also share the poem's stylistic simplicity, brevity, and a generally optimistic spirit. Chaucer's Franklin's Tale imitates the form, and it is probable that his model was Sir Orfeo, whose opening lines the Franklin seems to be echoing in his own story. The English translation was probably made before 1300, but it has survived in only three manuscripts of later date. Some scholars believe that the best of these, the Auchinleck manuscript, may once have been read by Chaucer. Only the Auchinleck manuscript makes the interesting identification of Traciens (Thrace) with Winchester: some English minstrel poet obviously adapted the poem to a performance at Winchester, which had, indeed, in Old English times been the seat of a kingdom. (It was probably the same poet who, fractionally learned, names King Pluto and King Juno among Orfeo's ancestors.)

The text presented here is based on the Auchinleck manuscript, though the spelling has been normalized and readings from the other manuscripts adopted where they seem better than Auchinleck's. In view of the large amount of evident corruption in all three manuscripts, the editor has made a number of conjectural emendations. The original metrical form was probably octosyllabic couplets with alternating stress, but what has come down to us are loose four-stressed couplets. As in Chaucer, there are many "headless" lines, where the stress falls on the first syllable of the line, even though the syllable is not a rhetorically important one; and also as in Chaucer, while final e is frequently used to achieve an unstressed syllable, it is equally often ignored.

Sir Orfeo

- We reden ofte and finden ywrite—
 As thise clerkes doon° us wite°— cause / to learn
 The layes that been of harping¹
 Been yfounde° of freely° thing° composed / pleasant
 5 Some been of werre° and some of wo,
 And some of joye and mirthe also,
 And some of trecherye and of gile;
 And some of happes° that fellen° while° events / occurred / once
 And some of bourdes° and ribaudye°, jokes / ribaldry
 10 And manye been of fairye.²
 Of alle thing that men may see,
 Most of love forsoothe they be.
 In Britain° thise layes been wrought,
 First yfounde° and forth ybrought. Brittany
 15 Of aventures that felle° by dayes³ composed
 The Britons° therof maden layes:
 When they mighte owher° yheere° occurred
 Of any merveiles that ther were, Bretons
 They tooken hem hir harpes with game°, anywhere / hear
 20 Maden layes and yaf° hem name. pleasure
 Of aventures that han bifalle gave
 I can some telle, but nought alle.
 Herkneth, lordinges° that been trewe, gentlemen
 I wol you telle of Sir Orfewe.
 25 Orfeo was a riche° king, noble

1. I.e., composed to be sung to the harp.

2. Fairyland, and, more commonly, the other-world and its supernatural inhabitants.

3. Once.

- In Engelond an heigh lording,
 A stalworth° man and hardy bo°,
 Large° and curteis° he was also.
 His fader was come of King Pluto,
 30 And his moder of King Juno,
 That somtime were as goddes yholde°
 For aventures that they dide and tolde.
 This king sojourned in Traciens°
 That is a citee of noble defens°
 35 (For Winchester was cleped° tho° Traciens withouten no°).
 Orfeo most of any thing
 Loved the glee° of harping:
 Siker° was every good harpour
 40 Of him to have muche honour.
 Himself he lerned for to harpe,
 And laide° theron his wittes sharpe;°
 He lerned so ther nothing was
 A better harpour in no plas°.
 45 In al the world was no man bore°
 That ones° Orfeo sat bifore,
 And° he mighte of his harping heere,
 But he sholde thinke that he were
 In oon of the joyes of Paradis,
 50 Swich melodye in his harping is.
 Orfeo hadde a queene of pris°
 That was ycleped° Dame Heurodis,
 The fairest lady for the° nones°
 That mighte goon° on body and bones,
 55 Ful of love and of goodnesse—
 But no man may telle hir fairnesse.
 Bifel so, the comsing° of May,
 When merye and hot is the day,
 And away been winter showres,
 60 And every feeld is ful of flowres,
 And blosme breme° on every bough
 Overal° wexeth° merye ynough,
 This eeche° queene Dame Heurodis
 Took with hire two maides of pris°
 65 And wente in the undertide°
 To playe in an orchard-side,
 To see the flowres sprede° and springe
 And to heere the fowles singe.
 They setten hem down alle three 70 Faire° under an impe-tree;°
 And wel soone this faire queene
 Fel on sleepe upon the greene.
 The maidens durste hire not awake,
 But lete hire lie and reste take.
 75 So she slepte til afternoon
 That undertide was al ydoon°.

valiant / both generous / courteous

considered

Thrace fortification called / then denial

music certain applied / keenly

*place born once
if*

excellence named that / matter walk

beginning

glorious everywhere / grows same excellence forenoon

open

fairly / grafted fruit tree passed

- But as soone as she gan wake
 She cried and loothly bere° gan make: outcry
 She frotte° hir hondes and hir feet tore at 80 And cracched° hir visage—it bledde weet;° scratched / wet
 Hir riche robe she al torit,° tears apart
 And was raved° out of her wit. ravished
 The two maidenés hire beside
 Ne durste with hire no leng° abide, longer
 85 But runne to the palais right
 And tolde bothe squier and knight
 That hir queene awede° wolde, go mad
 And bad hem go and hire atholde.° restrain Knightes runne and ladies also,
 90 Damiseles sixty and mo,° more
 In th' orchard to the queene they come,
 And hire up in armes nome,° took
 And broughte hire to bed at laste,
 And heelde hire there fine° faste. very 95 But evere she heeld° in oo° cry, continued / one
 And wolde uppe° and awy.° get up / go away
 Whan the king herde that tiding
 Nevere him nas worse for no thing:
 Orfeo cam with knightes tene° ten
 100 To chambre right bfore the queene,
 And looked and saide with greet° pitee, great
 "O leve° lif, what aileth thee?— dear
 That evere yit hast been so stille,
 And now thou gredest° wonder shille.° cry out / shrilly
 105 Thy body that was so whit ycore° excellent
 With thine nailes is all totore.° torn Allas, thy rode° that was so reed° complexion / red
 Is as wan as thou were deed.° dead
 And also thy fingers smale
 110 Been al bloody and al pale.
 Allas, thy lovesome yën two Looketh so° man dooth on his fo. as
 A, dame, ich° biseeche mercy— I
 Lete been al this reweful° cry, pitiful 115 And tel me what° thee is and how, what the matter with
 And what thing may thee helpe now." then
 Tho° lay she stille at the laste, very / hard
 And gan to weepe swithe° faste,°
 And saide thus the king unto:
 120 "Allas, my lord Sir Orfeo,
 Sitthen° we first togider were since
 Ones wrothe° nevere we nere, angry
 But evere ich have yloved thee
 As my lif, and so thou me.
 125 But now we mote° deele° atwo— must / separate Do thy best, for I moot° go." must
 "Allas," quath he, "forlorn ich am!

- Whider wilt thou go and to wham?° whom
 Whider thou goost ich wil with thee,
 130 And whider I go thou shalt with me."
 "Nay, nay, sire, that nought nis.⁴
 Ich wil thee telle al how it is:
 As ich lay this undertide° forenoon
 And slepte under oure orchard-side,
 135 Ther come to me two faire knightes,
 Wel y-armed al to rightes,
 And bad me comen on hying° in haste
 And speke with hir lord the king;
 And ich answerede at° wordes bolde in 140 That I ne durste nought ne I nolde.° would not
 They prikked again as they mighte drive.⁵
 Tho° cam hir king also blive° then / straightway
 With an hundred knightes and mo,
 And damiseles an hundred also,
 145 Alle on snow-white steedes;
 As white as milk were hir weedes:° clothes
 I ne seigh° nevere yit bfore saw
 So faire creatures ycore.° splendid
 The king hadde a crown on his heed:° head
 150 It nas of silver n'of gold reed,° red
 But it was of a precious stoon;
 As brighte as the sonne it shoon.
 And as soone as he to me cam,
 Wolde ich, nolde ich, he me nam° took
 155 And made me with him to ride
 Upon a palfrey him biside,
 And broughte me to his palais
 Wel attired° in eech a ways,° equipped / way
 And shewed me castels and towrs,
 160 Riveres, forestes, frith° with flowres, meadow
 And his riche steedes eechoon,
 And sitthen° broughte me again hoom afterwards
 Into oure owene orche-yard,° orchard
 And saide to me thus afterward,
 165 'Looke tomorwe that thou be Right here under this impe-tree,
 And thanne thou shalt with us go,
 And live with us everemo.° evermore
 And if thou makest us ylet,° resistance
 170 Where° thou be, thou worst° yfet.° wherever / shall be / fetched
 And al totore° thy limes al torn apart
 That no thing thee helpe shal.
 And though thou beest so totorn,
 Yit thou worst° with us yborn.'""° shall be / carried off

4. I.e., that's no use.

5. I.e., they rode as fast as they could.

- 175 When king Orfeo herde this cas,^o circumstance
 "O, wee!"^o quath he, "allas, allas!
 Lever me were to lete^o my lif woe
 Than thus to lese^o the queene my wif."
 He asked conseil at^o eech a man, leave
 But no man him helpe can. lose
 Amorwe^o the undertide is come, from
 And Orfeo hath his armes ynome,^o next day
 And wel ten hundred knightes with him, taken
 Eech y-armed, stout and grim.
 185 And with the queene wenten he^o they
 Right unto that impe-tree.
 They made sheltrom^o in eech a side, military formation
 And saide they wolde ther abide
 And die there everichoon,
 190 Er the queene sholde from hem goon.
 And yit amiddes hem ful right
 The queene was away ytwight,^o snatched
 With^o fairye forth ynome:^o by / taken
 Men wiste nevere wher she was bicom.⁶
 195 Tho^o was ther crying, weep and wo; then
 The king into his chambre is go
 And ofte swooned upon the stoon,^o floor
 And made swich dool and swich moon⁷
 That nye^o his lif was yspent^o— nearly / finished 200 Ther was noon amendement.^o remedy
 He clepte^o togider his barouns, called
 Eerles, lordes of renouns,^o great names
 And whan they alle ycomen were,
 "Lordinges," he saide, "bifor you here
 205 Ich ordaine myn heigh steward
 To wite^o my kingdom afterward;
 In my stede been he shal
 To keepe my londes overal.^o keep
 For now I have my queene ylore,^o everywhere
 210 The faireste lady that evere was bore,^o lost
 Nevere eft^o I nil^o no womman see;
 In wilderness now wil ich tee^o born
 And live ther for everemore,
 With wilde beestes in holtes^o hore.^o again / will not 215 And whan ye wite^o that I be spent,^o go
 Make you than a parlement
 And chese^o you^o a newe king: woods / gray
 Now dooth youre best with al my thing."
 Tho^o was ther weeping in the halle, learn / dead
 220 And greet^o cry among hem alle;
 Unnethe^o mighte olde or yong choose / for yourselves
then great scarcely

6. No one knew what had become of her.

7. And made such lamentation and such complaint.

- For weeping speke a word with tonge.
 They kneeled alle adown in fere°
 And prayede him if his wille were,
 225 That he ne sholde from hem go.
 "Do way," quath he, "it shal be so."
 Al his kingdom he forsook;
 But° a sclavin° on him he took:
 He hadde no kirtel° ne noon hood,
 230 Shert ne yit noon other good.
 But his harp he took algate,°
 And dide him barefoot out at yate:°
 No man moste° with him go.
 O way,° what° ther was weep and wo,
 235 Whan he that hadde been king with crown
 Went so poorelich out of town.
 Thruh the wode° and over heeth
 Into the wilderness he geeth.°
 Nothing he fint° that him is aise,°
 240 But evere he liveth in greet malaise.
 He that hadde wered° the fowe and gris,⁸
 And on bed the purper° bis,°
 Now on harde heeth he lith,°
 With leves and grasse he him writh.°
 245 He that hadde had castels and towres,
 Rivere, foreest, frith° with flowres,
 Now though it ginne snowe and freese,
 This king moot° make his bed in meese.°
 He that hadde had knightes of pris,°
 250 Bifore him kneeling and ladis,
 Now seeth he nothing that him liketh,°
 But wilde wormes° by him striketh.°
 He that hadde yhad plentee
 Of mete and drinke, of eech daintee,
 255 Now may he alday° digge and wrote°
 Er he finde his fille of roote.
 In somer he liveth by wilde fruit
 And berien° but goode lite;⁹
 In winter may he nothing finde
 260 But roote, grasses, and the rinde.°
 Al his body away was dwined°
 For misaise, and al toched.°
 Lord, who may telle of the sore
 This king suffered ten yeer and more?
 265 His heer of his beerd, blak and rowe,°
 To his girdel-stede° was growe.
 His harp wheron was al his glee
 He hidde in an holwe tree,
 And whan the weder was cleer and bright,

together

only / pilgrim's cloak short coatat any rate gate must alas / how wood goes finds / easyworn purple / linen lies covers

meadow

must / moss renownpleases snakes / glide

constantly / scrounge berries

bark wasted scarredrugged waist

8. White and gray fur; i.e., royal ermine. 9. Little good.

- 270 He took his harp to him wel right,
 And harped at his owene wille:°
 In al the woode the soun gan shille,°
 That wilde beestes that ther beeth
 For joy abouten him they teeth;°
 275 And alle the fowles that ther were Come and sete on eech a brere°
 To here his harping afine,°
 So muche melodye was therine:
 When he his harping lete° wolde,
 280 No beest by him abide nolde.
 Ofte he mighte see him bisides
 In the hote undertides°
 The king of fairy with his route°
 Come to hunte him al aboute
 285 With dinne, cry, and with blowing,
 And houndes also with him berking.
 But no beeste they ne nome°
 Ne nevere he niste wher they bicomel.¹
 And otherwhile he mighte see,
 290 As a greet oost° by him tee,°
 Wel atourned° ten hundred knightes,
 Eech y-armed to his rightes,°
 Of countenance stout and fiers,°
 With manye displayed° baners,
 295 And eech his swerd ydrawe holde,
 But nevere he niste° wher they wolde,
 And somwhile he seigh° other thing:
 Knightes and ladies come dauncing,
 In quainte° atir, degisely,°
 300 Quainte pas° and softly.
 Tabours° and trumpes yede° him by,
 And al manere minstracy.°
 And on a day he seigh° beside
 Sixty ladies on horse ride,
 305 Gentil and jolif° as brid° on ris°—
 Nought oo man amonges hem nis.
 And eech a faucon on hond beer,°
 And riden on hawking by river.
 Of game they founde wel good haunt,°
 310 Maulardes,° hairoun,° and corneraunt.
 The fowles of° the water ariseth;
 The faucons hem wel deviseth:°
 Eech faucon his preye slough.°
 That seigh° Orfeo and lough:°
 315 “Parfay!” quath he, “ther is fair game!
 Thider ich wil,° by Goddes name.
 Ich was ywon° swich° werk to see.”

pleasure
resound

draw briar to the end

leave off

mornings company

took host / passed equipped fittingly fierce unfurled

knew not saw

elegant / wonderfully step drums / went minstrelsy saw

pretty / bird / bough

hore

plenty mallards / herons from descry slew

saw / laughed
by faith will go accustomed / such

1. Nor did he ever learn what happened to them.

- He aroos and thider gan tee.^o draw
 To a lady he was ycome,
 320 Biheeld, and hath wel undernome,^o understood
 And seeth by al thing that it is
 His owene queene Dame Heurodis, Yerne^o biheeld hire and she him eke,^o eagerly / also
 But neither to other a word ne speke.
 325 For misaise that she on him seigh^o saw
 That hadde been so riche and heigh,
 The teres felle out of hir yē.
 The othere ladies this ysye^o saw
 And maked hire away to ride:
 330 She moste^o with him no lenger^o abide. must / longer
 "Allas," quath he, "now me is wo.
 Why nil^o deeth now me nought slo?^o will not / slay
 Allas, wrecche,^o that I ne mighte wretched one
 Die now after this sighte.
 335 Allas, too longe last^o my lif lasts
 Whan I ne dar nought to my wif—
 Ne she to me—oo word ne speke.
 Allas, why nil myn herte breke?
 Parfay,"^o quath he, "tide what bitide, by faith
 340 Whider so thise ladies ride
 The selve^o waye ich wil strecche:^o same / go
 Of lif ne deeth me nothing recche."^o care
 His sclavin^o he dide on also spak^o cloak / at once
 And heeng^o his harp upon his bak, hung
 345 And hadde wel good wil to goon:
 He ne spared neither stub ne stoon.²
 In at a roche^o the ladies rideth rock, cave
 And he after and nought abideth.
 Whan he was in the roche ago
 350 Wel three mile other^o mo, or
 He cam into a fair coundrey,
 As bright so^o sonne on somers day, as Smoothe and plain^o and alle greene: flat
 Hil ne dale nas ther noon seene.
 355 Amidde the lond a castel he seigh,^o saw
 Riche and real^o and wonder heigh. royal
 Al the utemoste^o wal outmost
 Was cleer^o and shined as crystal. bright
 An hundred towres ther were aboute,
 360 Degiseliche,^o and batailed³ stoute. wonderful
 The butres^o cam out of the diche buttress
 Of reed gold y-arched riche.⁴
 The vousour^o was anourned^o al vaulting / adorned

2. I.e., neither stump nor stone prevented him.

3. I.e., furnished with battlements.

4. I.e., made of red gold that arched splendidly: gold was commonly described as red in Middle English.

- Of cech manere divers aumal.^o enamel
 365 Within ther were wide wones,^o halls
 And alle were fulle of precious stones.
 The worste pilar on to biholde
 Al it was of burnist golde.
 Al that lond was evere light,
 370 For when it sholde be ther^o and night dark
 The riche stones lighte gonne⁵
 As brighte as dooth at noon the sonne.
 No man may telle ne thinke in thought
 The riche werk that ther was wrought.
 375 By alle thing him thinkth it is
 The proude court of Paradis.
 In this castel the ladies alighte:
 He wolde in after, if he mighte.
 Orfeo knokketh at the yate:^o gate
 380 The porter was redy therate
 And asked what he wolde have ydo.^o done
 "Parfay,^o ich am a minstrel, lo,
 To solace^o thy lord with my glee by faith
 If⁶ his sweete wille be." delight
 385 The porter undide the gate anoon
 And lete him into the castel goon.
 Than he gan looke aboute al
 And seigh,^o lying within the wal, saw
 Of folk that ther were thider ybrought,
 390 And thoughte^o dede,^o and nere nought:⁷ seemed / dead
 Some stooode withouten hade,^o head
 And some none armes hade,
 And some thurgh the body hadde wounde,
 And some laye woode^o ybounde; mad
 395 And some armed on horse sete,
 And some astrangled as they ete,
 And some were in watre adreint,^o drowned
 And some with fire al forshreint,^o shriveled
 Wives ther laye on child-bedde,
 400 Some dede and some awedde.^o driven mad
 And wonder fele^o ther laye bisides many Right as they slepte hir undertides.^o forenoons
 Each was thus in this world ynome,^o taken
 With^o fairye thider ycome. by force of 405 Ther he seigh his owene wif,
 Dame Heurodis, his leve^o lif, dear
 Sleepe under an impe-tree:
 By hir clothes he knew it was she.
 Whan he hadde seen thise mervailles alle
 410 He wente into the kinges halle.

5. Did light it.

6. If it.

7. Were not.

8. I.e., an alcove.

Than seigh he ther a seemly sighte:

A tabernacle⁸ wel ydight°—

arrayed

Hir maister king therinne sete,

And hir queene fair and sweete.

- 415 Hir crownes, hir clothes shoon so brighte
That unnethe° he biholde hem mighte.

with difficulty

Whan he hadde seen al this thing,

He kneeled adoun bifor the king:

“O lord,” he saide, “if thy wil were,

- 420 My minstracye thou sholdest yheere.”°
The king answerede, “What man art thou
That art hider ycomen now?
Ich, ne noon that is with me,
Ne sente never after thee.

hear

- 425 Sith° that ich here regne° gan
I ne foond° nevere so hardy man
That hider to us durste wende
But° that ich him wolde ofsende.”° since / reign

found

“Lord,” quath he, “ye trowe° wel

unless / send for may believe

- 430 I nam but a poore minstrel,
And, sire, it is the maner of us
To seeche many a lordes hous.
And theigh° we not welcome be,
Yit we mote° profere forth oure glee.”° though

must / music

- 435 Bifor the king he sat adoun
And took his harp so merye of soun,
And tempreth° it as he wel can.
And blisful notes he ther gan
That alle that in the palais were tunes

- 440 Come to him for to heere,
And lieth adoun to his feete,
Hem thinkth his melodye so sweete.
The king herkneth and sit° ful stille:
To heere his glee he hath good wille.

sits

- 445 Good bourde° he hadde of his glee:
The riche queene also hadde she.

entertainment

Whan he hadde stint° of his harping, ceased

Then saide to him the riche king,

“Minstrel, me liketh wel thy glee.

- 450 Now aske of me what it may be—Largeliche° ich wil thee paye.

generously

Now speke and thou might it assaye.”

“Sire,” he saide, “ich praye thee

That thou woldest yive me

- 455 The eeche° lady, bright on blee°,
That sleepeth under the impe-tree.”

very / of hue

“Nay,” quath the king, “that nought nere:°

A sory couple of you it were;

9. I.e., that wouldn't do.

8. I.e., an alcove.

- For thou art lene,^o rowe,^o and blak,
 460 And she is lovesom; withoute lak.^o
 A loothly thing it were forthy^o
 To seen hire in thy compaigny.”
 “O sire,” he saide, “gentil king,
 Yit were it a wel fouler thing
 465 To heere a lesing^o of thy mouthe.
 So, sire, as ye saide nouthe^o
 What ich wolde aske, have I wolde,
 A kinges word moot^o needes be holde.”
 “Thou sayest sooth,” the king saide than,
 470 “And sith^o I am a trewe man,
 I wol wel that it be so:
 Taak hire by the hond and go.
 Of hire ich wol that thou be blithe.”
 He kneeled adown and thanked him swithe;^o
 475 His wif he took by the hond
 And dide him swithe out of that lond,
 And wente^o him out of that thede:^o
 Right as he cam the way he yede.^o
 So longe he hath the way ynome^o
 480 To Winchester he is ycome,
 That somtime was his owene citee,
 But no man knew that it was he.
 No forther than the townes ende.
 For knoweleche¹ he durste wende.
 485 But in a beggeres bild^o ful narwe^o
 Ther he hath take his herbarwe^o
 (To him and to his owene wife),
 As a minstrel of poore lif,
 And asked tidinges of that lond,
 490 And who the kingdom heeld in hond.
 The poore begger in his cote^o
 Tolde him everich^o a grote^o—
 How hir queene was stole awy,^o
 Ten yeer goon, with^o fairy.
 495 And how hir king in exile yede^o
 But no man wiste^o in which thede;^o
 And how the steward the lond gan holde,
 And othere many thinges him tolde.
 Amorwe ayain the noon-tide²
 500 He maked his wif ther abide,
 And beggeres clothes he borwed anoon,^o
 And heeng^o his harp his rigge^o upon,
 And wente him into that citee,
 That men mighte him biholde and see.
 505 Bothe eerles and barouns bolde,
 Burgeis^o and ladies him gan biholde:

lean / rough blemish therefore lie now

must since quickly

turned / country went taken

house / small lodging

hovel every / bit away

by went knew / country

straightaway hung / back

burgesses

1. I.e., for fear of being recognized.

2. In the morning towards noontime.

- "Lord," they saide, "swich° a man!
 How longe the heer° him hangeth upon!
 Lo, how his beard hangeth to his knee!
 510 He is yclungen° also° a tree!" such hair
 And as he yede° in the streete,
 With his steward he gan meete.
 And loude he sette him on a cry,
 "Sir steward," he saide, "grant mercy!
 515 Ich am an harpoure of hethenesse:° withered / as walked
 Help me now in this distresse."
 The steward saide, "Com with me, com:
 Of that I have thou shalt have som.
 Eech harpoure is welcome me to 520 For my lordes love, Sir Orfeo."
 Anoon they wente into the halle,
 The steward and the lordes alle.
 The steward wessh° and wente to mete, washed
 And manye lordes by him sete.
 525 Ther were trumpours° and tabourers,° trumpeters / drummers
 Harpours fele,° and crouders:° many / fiddlers
 Muche melodye they maked alle.
 And Orfeo sat stille in halle.
 And herkneþ; whan they been al stille,
 530 He took his harp and tempered° shille°— played / loudly
 The blisfullest notes he harped there
 That evere man yherde with ere.
 Eech man liked wel his glee.
 The steward looked and gan ysee,
 535 And the harp knew also blive.° right away
 "Minstrel," he saide, "so mote° thou thrive,
 Where haddest thou this harp and how?
 I praye that thou me telle now."
 "Lord," quath he, "in uncouth° thede,° strange / country
 540 Thurgh a forest as I yede,° walked
 I foond° lying in a dale found
 A man with° lions totorn° smale, by / torn to bits
 And wolves him frette° with teeth so sharp. bit
 By him I foond this eeche° harp very 545 Wel ten yeer it is ago."
 "O," quath the steward, "now me is wo!
 That was my lord Sir Orfeo.
 Allas, wrecche, what shal I do
 That have swich° a lord ylore?° such / lost
 550 A, way,° that evere ich was ybore° woe / born
 That him was so harde grace y-yarked,° ordained
 And so vile deeth ymarked."° appointed
 Adown he fel aswoone to grounde.
 His barouns him tooke up that stounde° time
 555 And telleth him how that it geeth:° goes

yet exasperatingly reasonable, it suddenly seems to become slightly unreal, as if, the Green Knight insultingly implies, its reputation were founded more on fiction than on fact—as if the poets that celebrated it had been working harder to enhance its glory than the knights themselves. In any case, the court is to receive a testing, which is naturally entrusted to the most courteous and valiant knight of the Round Table (in this most English of Arthurian romances Gawain has not been replaced as the best of knights by the continental-born Lancelot).

Once Gawain has set out to keep his promise to the Green Knight, his humiliation—and by inference that of the court—begins: in describing Gawain's adventures the poet, for all his epic enhancement and overt praise for the hero, actually tells a tale of his increasing helplessness. First of all Gawain's courtesy fails him—not, to be sure, in the sense that he relinquishes it, but in the sense that it involves him in a profoundly embarrassing and dangerous situation with the lady: it results in trouble instead of the serenity that courtesy, as the diplomat's virtue, is supposed to procure. Then the second of his great virtues, his martial prowess, is denied to him by the promise he has made not to defend himself against the Green Knight's return stroke. Thus betrayed by or cut off from the two qualities that he supposes to have made him the splendid knight people think him to be, he also, with very human lack of logic, momentarily cuts himself off from the power that has actually permitted those qualities to flourish in him. For when the pressures increase, St. Mary's knight, no longer able to rely on himself, relies not on St. Mary but on a belt of supposed magical powers, which he must accept from the lady with ignominy and hide from her lord with dishonesty. When the Green Knight spares his life there is revealed to Gawain his own real impoverishment, the complete incapacity of the greatest of Arthur's knights to help himself. He has found that without God's grace the virtues which he has made particularly his own are of no use to him—that, indeed, he no longer possesses them. The poem ends happily; but the baldric that the courtiers wear in honor of Gawain's adventure is a reminder that what God asks of men is not primarily courtly or martial prowess, but a humble and a contrite heart.

This didactic point is made with a most Chaucer-like indirection, a fine irony that strips Gawain of his pretensions but leaves him his charm and shows him sympathy for the really quite unfair nature of his predicament—and which also enjoys, and makes the reader enjoy, the embarrassment the hero is made to suffer. Sir Gawain is one of the latest and certainly the best of the Middle English romances; yet its greatness lies in the fact that, without ever ceasing to be a romance, a fiction full of the most exquisite comic touches, it is something much larger, one of the really significant literary achievements of the Middle Ages.

Sir Gawain and the Green Knight¹

Part I

Since the siege and the assault was ceased at Troy,
The walls breached and burnt down to brands and ashes,
The knight that had knotted the nets of deceit
Was impeached for his perfidy, proven most true,²
It was high-born Aeneas and his haughty race
That since prevailed over provinces, and proudly reigned
Over well-nigh all the wealth of the West Isles.³
Great Romulus ⁴ to Rome repairs in haste;
With boast and with bravery builds he that city
And names it with his own name, that it now bears.
Ticius ⁵ to Tuscany, and towers raises,
Langobard in Lombardy lays out homes,
And far over the French Sea, Felix Brutus ⁶
On many broad hills and high Britain he sets, most fair.

Where war and wrack and wonder
By shifts have sojourned there,
And bliss by turns with blunder
In that land's lot had share.

And since this Britain was built by this baron great,
Bold boys bred there, in broils delighting,
That did in their day many a deed most dire.
More marvels have happened in this merry land
Than in any other I know, since that olden time,
But of those that here built, of British kings,
King Arthur was counted most courteous of all,
Wherefore an adventure I aim to unfold,
That a marvel of might some men think it,
And one unmatched among Arthur's wonders.
If you will listen to my lay but a little while,
As I heard it in hall, I shall hasten to tell anew.

As it was fashioned featly
In tale of derring-do,
And linked in measures meetly
By letters tried and true.

1. The Modern English translation is by Marie Borroff (1967), who has reproduced the alliterative meter of the original as well as the "bob and wheel," the five-line rhyming group that concludes each of the long irregular stanzas.

2. The treacherous knight is either Aeneas himself or Antenor, both of whom were, according to medieval tradition, traitors to their city Troy; but Aeneas was actually tried ("impeached") by the Greeks for his refusal to hand over to them his sister Polyxena.

3. Perhaps western Europe.

4. The legendary founder of Rome is here given Trojan ancestry, like Aeneas.

5. Not otherwise known. "Langobard" was the reputed founder of Lombardy.

6. Great-grandson of Aeneas and legendary founder of Britain; not elsewhere given the name Felix (Latin "happy").

This king lay at Camelot ⁷ at Christmastide;
 Many good knights and gay his guests were there,
 Arrayed of the Round Table ⁸ rightful brothers,
 With feasting and fellowship and carefree mirth. 40
 There true men contended in tournaments many,
 Joined there in jousting these gentle knights,
 Then came to the court for carol-dancing,
 For the feast was in force full fifteen days,
 With all the meat and the mirth that men could devise, 45
 Such gaiety and glee, glorious to hear,
 Brave din by day, dancing by night.
 High were their hearts in halls and chambers,
 These lords and these ladies, for life was sweet.
 In peerless pleasures passed they their days, 50
 The most noble knights known under Christ,
 And the loveliest ladies that lived on earth ever,
 And he the comeliest king, that that court holds,
 For all this fair folk in their first age were still. 55

Happiest of mortal kind,
 King noblest famed of will;
 You would now go far to find
 So hardy a host on hill.

While the New Year was new, but yesternight come, 60
 This fair folk at feast two-fold was served,
 When the king and his company were come in together,
 The chanting in chapel achieved and ended.
 Clerics and all the court acclaimed the glad season,
 Cried Noel anew, good news to men; 65
 Then gallants gather gaily, hand-gifts to make,
 Called them out clearly, claimed them by hand,
 Bickered long and busily about those gifts.
 Ladies laughed aloud, though losers they were,
 And he that won was not angered, as well you will know.⁹ 70
 All this mirth they made until meat was served;
 When they had washed them worthily, they went to their seats,
 The best seated above, as best it beseemed,
 Guenevere the goodly queen gay in the midst
 On a dais well-decked and duly arrayed 75
 With costly silk curtains, a canopy over,
 Of Toulouse and Turkestan tapestries rich,
 All brodered and bordered with the best gems
 Ever brought into Britain, with bright pennies to pay. 80

7. Capital of Arthur's kingdom, presumably located in southwest England or southern Wales.

8. According to legend, Merlin made the Round Table after a dispute broke out among Arthur's knights about precedence: it seated 100 knights. The table described in the poem is not round.

9. The dispensing of New Year's gifts seems to have involved kissing.

Fair queen, without a flaw,
 She glanced with eyes of grey.
 A seemlier that once he saw,
 In truth, no man could say.

But Arthur would not eat till all were served; 85
 So light was his lordly heart, and a little boyish;
 His life he liked lively—the less he cared
 To be lying for long, or long to sit,
 So busy his young blood, his brain so wild.
 And also a point of pride pricked him in heart, 90
 For he nobly had willed, he would never eat
 On so high a holiday, till he had heard first
 Of some fair feat or fray some far-borne tale,
 Of some marvel of might, that he might trust,
 By champions of chivalry achieved in arms, 95
 Or some suppliant came seeking some single knight
 To join with him in jousting, in jeopardy each
 To lay life for life, and leave it to fortune
 To afford him on field fair hap or other.
 Such is the king's custom, when his court he holds 100
 At each far-famed feast amid his fair host so dear.

The stout king stands in state
 Till a wonder shall appear;
 He leads, with heart elate, 105
 High mirth in the New Year.

So he stands there in state, the stout young king,
 Talking before the high table¹ of trifles fair.
 There Gawain the good knight by Guenevere sits,
 With Agravain à la dure main on her other side, 110
 Both knights of renown, and nephews of the king.
 Bishop Baldwin above begins the table,
 And Yvain, son of Urien, ate with him there.
 These few with the fair queen were fittingly served;
 At the side-tables sat many stalwart knights. 115
 Then the first course comes, with clamor of trumpets
 That were bravely bedecked with bannerets bright,
 With noise of new drums and the noble pipes.
 Wild were the warbles that wakened that day
 In strains that stirred many strong men's hearts. 120
 There dainties were dealt out, dishes rare,
 Choice fare to choose, on chargers so many
 That scarce was there space to set before the people
 The service of silver, with sundry meats, on cloth. 125

Each fair guest freely there
 Partakes, and nothing loth;

1. The high table is on a dais; the side and run along the walls at a right angle tables (line 115) are on the main floor with the high table.

Twelve dishes before each pair;
Good beer and bright wine both.

Of the service itself I need say no more, 130
For well you will know no tittle was wanting.
Another noise and a new was well-nigh at hand,
That the lord might have leave his life to nourish;
For scarce were the sweet strains still in the hall,
And the first course come to that company fair, 135
There hurtles in at the hall-door an unknown rider,
Onc the greatest on ground in growth of his frame:
From broad neck to buttocks so bulky and thick,
And his loins and his legs so long and so great,
Half a giant on earth I hold him to be, 140
But believe him no less than the largest of men,
And that the seemliest in his stature to see, as he rides,
For in back and in breast though his body was grim,
His waist in its width was worthily small,
And formed with every feature in fair accord 145 was he.

Great wonder grew in hall
At his huc most strange to see,
For man and gear and all
Were green as green could be. 150

And in guise all of green, the gear and the man:
A coat cut close, that clung to his sides,
And a mantle to match, made with a lining
Of furs cut and fitted—the fabric was noble,
Embellished all with ermine, and his hood beside, 155
That was loosed from his locks, and laid on his shoulders.
With trim hose and tight, the same tint of green,
His great calves were girt, and gold spurs under
He bore on silk bands that embellished his heels,
And footgear well-fashioned, for riding most fit. 160
And all his vesture verily was verdant green;
Both the bosses on his belt and other bright gems
That were richly ranged on his raiment noble
About himself and his saddle, set upon silk,
That to tell half the trifles would tax my wits, 165
The butterflies and birds embroidered thereon
In green of the gavest, with many a gold thread.
The pendants of the breast-band, the princely crupper,
And the bars of the bit were brightly enameled;
The stout stirrups were green, that steadied his feet, 170
And the bows of the saddle and the side-panels both,
That gleamed all and glinted with green gems about.
The steed he bestrides of that same green so bright.

A green horse great and thick; 175
A headstrong steed of might;

In broidered bridle quick,
Mount matched man aright.

Gay was this goodly man in guise all of green,
And the hair of his head to his horse suited; 180
Fair flowing tresses enfold his shoulders;
A beard big as a bush on his breast hangs,
That with his heavy hair, that from his head falls,
Was evened all about above both his elbows,
That half his arms thereunder were hid in the fashion 185
Of a king's cap-à-dos,² that covers his throat.
The mane of that mighty horse much to it like,
Well curled and becombed, and cunningly knotted
With filaments of fine gold amid the fair green,
Here a strand of the hair, here one of gold; 190
His tail and his foretop twin in their hue,
And bound both with a band of a bright green
That was decked adown the dock with dazzling stones
And tied tight at the top with a triple knot
Where many bells well burnished rang bright and clear. 195
Such a mount in his might, nor man on him riding,
None had seen, I dare swear, with sight in that hall so grand.

As lightning quick and light
He looked to all at hand; 200
It seemed that no man might
His deadly dints withstand.

Yet had he no helm, nor hauberk neither,
Nor plate, nor appurtenance appending to arms,
Nor shaft pointed sharp, nor shield for defense, 205
But in his one hand he had a holly bob
That is goodliest in green when groves are bare,
And an ax in his other, a huge and immense,
A wicked piece of work in words to expound:
The head on its haft was an ell long; 210
The spike of green steel, resplendent with gold;
The blade burnished bright, with a broad edge,
As well shaped to shear as a sharp razor;
Stout was the stave in the strong man's gripe,
That was wound all with iron to the weapon's end, 215
With engravings in green of goodliest work.
A lace lightly about, that led to a knot,
Was looped in by lengths along the fair haft,
And tassels thereto attached in a row,
With buttons of bright green, brave to behold. 220
This horseman hurtles in, and the hall enters;

2. The word capados occurs in this form in Middle English only in Gawain, here and in line 572. The translator has interpreted it, as the poet apparently did also, as cap-à-dos—i.e., a garment covering its wearer "from head to back," on the model of cap-à-pie, "from head to foot," referring to armor.

Riding to the high dais, recked he no danger;
Not a greeting he gave as the guests he o'erlooked,
Nor wasted his words, but "Where is," he said,
"The captain of this crowd? Keenly I wish To see that sire with sight, and to himself say my say." 225

He swaggered all about
To scan the host so gay;
He halted, as if in doubt
Who in that hall held sway. 230

There were stares on all sides as the stranger spoke,
For much did they marvel what it might mean
That a horseman and a horse should have such a hue,
Grow green as the grass, and greener, it seemed, 235
Than green fused on gold more glorious by far.
All the onlookers eyed him, and edged nearer,
And awaited in wonder what he would do,
For many sights had they seen, but such a one never,
So that phantom and faerie the folk there deemed it, 240
Therefore chary of answer was many a champion bold,
And stunned at his strong words stone-still they sat
In a swooning silence in the stately hall.
As all were slipped into sleep, so slackened their speech apace. 245

Not all, I think, for dread,
But some of courteous grace
Let him who was their head
Be spokesman in that place.

Then Arthur before the high dais that entrance beholds, 250
And hailed him, as behooved, for he had no fear,
And said "Fellow, in faith you have found fair welcome;
The head of this hostelry Arthur am I;
Leap lightly down, and linger, I pray,
And the tale of your intent you shall tell us after." 255
"Nay, so help me," said the other, "He that on high sits,
To tarry here any time, 'twas not mine errand;
But as the praise of you, prince, is puffed up so high,
And your court and your company are counted the best,
Stoutest under steel-gear on steeds to ride, 260
Worthiest of their works the wide world over,
And peerless to prove in passages of arms,
And courtesy here is carried to its height,
And so at this season I have sought you out.
You may be certain by the branch that I bear in hand 265
That I pass here in peace, and would part friends,
For had I come to this court on combat bent,
I have a hauberk at home, and a helm beside,
A shield and a sharp spear, shining bright,

And other weapons to wield, I ween well, to boot, 270
 But as I willed no war, I wore no metal.
 But if you be so bold as all men believe,
 You will graciously grant the game that I ask
 by right."

Arthur answer gave 275
 And said, "Sir courteous knight,
 If contest here you crave,
 You shall not fail to fight."

"Nay, to fight, in good faith, is far from my thought;
 There are about on these benches but beardless children, 280
 Were I here in full arms on a haughty steed,
 For measured against mine, their might is puny.
 And so I call in this court for a Christmas game,
 For 'tis Yule and New Year, and many young bloods about;
 If any in this house such hardihood claims, 285
 Be so bold in his blood, his brain so wild,
 As stoutly to strike one stroke for another,
 I shall give him as my gift this gisarme noble,
 This ax, that is heavy enough, to handle as he likes,
 And I shall bide the first blow, as bare as I sit. 290
 If there be one so wilful my words to assay,
 Let him leap hither lightly, lay hold of this weapon;
 I quitclaim it forever, keep it as his own,
 And I shall stand him a stroke, steady on this floor,
 So you grant me the guerdon to give him another, 295
 sans blame.

In a twelvemonth and a day
 He shall have of me the same;
 Now be it seen straightway
 Who dares take up the game." 300

If he astonished them at first, stiller were then
 All that household in hall, the high and the low;
 The stranger on his green steed stirred in the saddle,
 And roisterously his red eyes he rolled all about,
 Bent his bristling brows, that were bright green, 305
 Wagged his beard as he watched who would arise.
 When the court kept its counsel he coughed aloud,
 And cleared his throat coolly, the clearer to speak:
 "What, is this Arthur's house," said that horseman then,
 "Whose fame is so fair in far realms and wide? 310
 Where is now your arrogance and your awesome deeds,
 Your valor and your victories and your vaunting words?
 Now are the revel and renown of the Round Table
 Overwhelmed with a word of one man's speech,
 For all cower and quake, and no cut felt!" 315
 With this he laughs so loud that the lord grieved;
 The blood for sheer shame shot to his face,
 and pride.

With rage his face flushed red,
And so did all beside. 320
Then the king as bold man bred
Toward the stranger took a stride.

And said "Sir, now we see you will say but folly,
Which whoso has sought, it suits that he find.
No guest here is aghast of your great words. 325
Give to me your gisarme, in God's own name,
And the boon you have begged shall straight be granted."
He leaps to him lightly, lays hold of his weapon;
The green fellow on foot fiercely alights.
Now has Arthur his ax, and the haft grips, 330
And sternly stirs it about, on striking bent.
The stranger before him stood there erect,
Higher than any in the house by a head and more;
With stern look as he stood, he stroked his beard,
And with undaunted countenance drew down his coat, 335
No more moved nor dismayed for his mighty dints
Than any bold man on bench had brought him a drink of wine.

Gawain by Guenevere
Toward the king doth now incline: 340
"I beseech, before all here,
That this melee may be mine."

"Would you grant me the grace," said Gawain to the king,
"To be gone from this bench and stand by you there,
If I without discourtesy might quit this board, 345
And if my liege lady misliked it not,
I would come to your counsel before your court noble.
For I find it not fit, as in faith it is known,
When such a boon is begged before all these knights,
Though you be tempted thereto, to take it on yourself 350
While so bold men about upon benches sit,
That no host under heaven is hardier of will,
Nor better brothers-in-arms where battle is joined;
I am the weakest, well I know, and of wit feeblest;
And the loss of my life would be least of any; 355
That I have you for uncle is my only praise;
My body, but for your blood, is barren of worth;
And for that this folly befits not a king,
And 'tis I that have asked it, it ought to be mine,
And if my claim be not comely let all this court judge, 360
in sight."

The court assays the claim,
And in counsel all unite
To give Gawain the game
And release the king outright. 365

Then the king called the knight to come to his side,

And he rose up readily, and reached him with speed,
 Bows low to his lord, lays hold of the weapon,
 And he releases it lightly, and lifts up his hand,
 And gives him God's blessing, and graciously prays 370
 That his heart and his hand may be hardy both.

"Keep, cousin," said the king, "what you cut with this day,
 And if you rule it aright, then readily, I know,
 You shall stand the stroke it will strike after."
 Gawain goes to the guest with gisarme in hand, 375
 And boldly he bides there, abashed not a whit.

Then hails he Sir Gawain, the horseman in green:
 "Recount we our contract, ere you come further.
 First I ask and adjure you, how you are called
 That you tell me true, so that trust it I may." 380

"In good faith," said the good knight, "Gawain am I
 Whose buffet befalls you, whate'er betide after,
 And at this time twelvemonth take from you another
 With what weapon you will, and with no man else 385 alive."

The other nods assent:
 "Sir Gawain, as I may thrive,
 I am wondrous well content
 That you this dint shall drive."

"Sir Gawain," said the Green Knight, "By God, I rejoice 390
 That your fist shall fetch this favor I seek,
 And you have readily rehearsed, and in right terms,
 Each clause of my covenant with the king your lord,
 Save that you shall assure me, sir, upon oath,
 That you shall seek me yourself, wheresoever you deem 395
 My lodgings may lie, and look for such wages
 As you have offered me here before all this host."

"What is the way there?" said Gawain, "Where do you dwell?
 I heard never of your house, by Him that made me,
 Nor I know you not, knight, your name nor your court. 400
 But tell me truly thereof, and teach me your name,
 And I shall fare forth to find you, so far as I may,
 And this I say in good certain, and swear upon oath."

"That is enough in New Year, you need say no more,"
 Said the knight in the green to Gawain the noble, 405
 "If I tell you true, when I have taken your knock,
 And if you handily have hit, you shall hear straightway
 Of my house and my home and my own name;
 Then follow in my footsteps by faithful accord.
 And if I spend no speech, you shall speed the better: 410
 You can feast with your friends, nor further trace my tracks.

Now hold your grim tool steady
 And show us how it hacks."

"Gladly, sir; all ready," 415
 Says Gawain; he strokes the ax.

The Green Knight upon ground girds him with care:
Bows a bit with his head, and bares his flesh:
His long lovely locks he laid over his crown,
Let the naked nape for the need be shown. 420
Gawain grips to his ax and gathers it aloft—
The left foot on the floor before him he set—
Brought it down deftly upon the bare neck,
That the shock of the sharp blow shivered the bones
And cut the flesh cleanly and clove it in twain, 425
That the blade of bright steel bit into the ground.
The head was hewn off and fell to the floor;
Many found it at their feet, as forth it rolled;
The blood gushed from the body, bright on the green,
Yet fell not the fellow, nor faltered a whit, 430
But stoutly he starts forth upon stiff shanks,
And as all stood staring he stretched forth his hand,
Laid hold of his head and heaved it aloft,
Then goes to the green steed, grasps the bridle,
Steps into the stirrup, bestrides his mount, 435
And his head by the hair in his hand holds,
And as steady he sits in the stately saddle
As he had met with no mishap, nor missing were his head.

His bulk about he haled,
That fearsome body that bled; 440
There were many in the court that quailed
Before all his say was said.

For the head in his hand he holds right up;
Toward the first on the dais directs he the face, 445
And it lifted up its lids, and looked with wide eyes,
And said as much with its mouth as now you may hear:
“Sir Gawain, forget not to go as agreed,
And cease not to seek till me, sir, you find,
As you promised in the presence of these proud knights.
To the Green Chapel come, I charge you, to take 450
Such a dint as you have dealt—you have well deserved
That your neck should have a knock on New Year’s morn.
The Knight of the Green Chapel I am well-known to many,
Wherefore you cannot fail to find me at last; 455
Therefore come, or be counted a recreant knight.”
With a roisterous rush he flings round the reins,
Hurtles out at the hall-door, his head in his hand,
That the flint-fire flew from the flashing hooves.
Which way he went, not one of them knew 460
Nor whence he was come in the wide world so fair.

The king and Gawain gay
Make game of the Green Knight there,
Yet all who saw it say 465
’Twas a wonder past compare.

Though high-born Arthur at heart had wonder,
He let no sign be seen, but said aloud
To the comely queen, with courteous speech,
“Dear dame, on this day dismay you no whit;
Such crafts are becoming at Christmastide,
Laughing at interludes, light songs and mirth,
Amid dancing of damsels with doughty knights.
Nevertheless of my meat now let me partake,
For I have met with a marvel, I may not deny.”
He glanced at Sir Gawain, and gaily he said,
“Now, sir, hang up your ax, that has hewn enough,”
And over the high dais it was hung on the wall
That men in amazement might on it look,
And tell in true terms the tale of the wonder.
Then they turned toward the table, these two together,
The good king and Gawain, and made great feast,
With all dainties double, dishes rare,
With all manner of meat and minstrelsy both,
Such happiness wholly had they that day in hold.
Now take care, Sir Gawain,
That your courage wax not cold
When you must turn again
To your enterprise foretold.

Part II

This adventure had Arthur of handsels first
 When young was the year, for he yearned to hear tales;
 Though they wanted for words when they went to sup,
 Now are fierce deeds to follow, their fists stuffed full.
 Gawain was glad to begin those games in hall,
 But if the end be harsher, hold it no wonder,
 For though men are merry in mind after much drink,
 A year passes apace, and proves ever new:
 First things and final conform but seldom.
 And so this Yule to the young year yielded place,
 And each season ensued at its set time;
 After Christmas there came the cold cheer of Lent,
 When with fish and plainer fare our flesh we reprove;
 But then the world's weather with winter contends:
 The keen cold lessens, the low clouds lift;
 Fresh falls the rain in fostering showers
 On the face of the fields; flowers appear.
 The ground and the groves wear gowns of green;
 Birds build their nests, and blithely sing
 That solace of all sorrow with summer comes ere long.
 And blossoms day by day

Bloom rich and rife in throng;
Then every grove so gay
Of the greenwood rings with song. 515

And then the season of summer with the soft winds,
When Zephyr sighs low over seeds and shoots;
Glad is the green plant growing abroad,
When the dew at dawn drops from the leaves,
To get a gracious glance from the golden sun. 520
But harvest with harsher winds follows hard after,
Warns him to ripen well ere winter comes;
Drives forth the dust in the droughty season,
From the face of the fields to fly high in air.
Wroth winds in the welkin wrestle with the sun, 525
The leaves launch from the linden and light on the ground,
And the grass turns to gray, that once grew green.
Then all ripens and rots that rose up at first,
And so the year moves on in yesterdays many,
And winter once more, by the world's law, 530 draws nigh.

At Michaelmas³ the moon
Hangs wintry pale in sky;
Sir Gawain girds him soon
For travails yet to try. 535

Till All-Hallows' Day⁴ with Arthur he dwells,
And he held a high feast to honor that knight
With great revels and rich, of the Round Table.
Then ladies lovely and lords debonair
With sorrow for Sir Gawain were sore at heart; 540
Yet they covered their care with countenance glad:
Many a mournful man made mirth for his sake.
So after supper soberly he speaks to his uncle
Of the hard hour at hand, and openly says,
"Now, liege lord of my life, my leave I take; 545
The terms of this task too well you know—
To count the cost over concerns me nothing.
But I am bound forth betimes to bear a stroke
From the grim man in green, as God may direct."
Then the first and foremost came forth in throng: 550
Yvain and Eric and others of note,
Sir Dodinal le Sauvage, the Duke of Clarence,
Lionel and Lancelot and Lucan the good,
Sir Bors and Sir Bedivere, big men both,
And many manly knights more, with Mador de la Porte. 555
All this courtly company comes to the king
To counsel their comrade, with care in their hearts;
There was much secret sorrow suffered that day
That one so good as Gawain must go in such wise

3. September 29.

4. All Saints' Day, November 1.

To bear a bitter blow, and his bright sword lay by. 560
 He said, "Why should I tarry?"
 And smiled with tranquil eye;
 "In destinies sad or merry,
 True men can but try." 565

He dwelt there all that day, and dressed in the morning;
 Asked early for his arms, and all were brought.
 First a carpet of rare cost was cast on the floor
 Where much goodly gear gleamed golden bright;
 He takes his place promptly and picks up the steel, 570
 Attired in a tight coat of Turkestan silk
 And a kingly cap-à-dos, closed at the throat,
 That was lavishly lined with a lustrous fur.
 Then they set the steel shoes on his sturdy feet
 And clad his calves about with comely greaves, 575
 And plate well-polished protected his knees,
 Affixed with fastenings of the finest gold.
 Fair cuisses enclosed, that were cunningly wrought,
 His thick-thewed thighs, with thongs bound fast,
 And massy chain-mail of many a steel ring 580
 He bore on his body, above the best cloth,
 With brace burnished bright upon both his arms,
 Good couters and gay, and gloves of plate,
 And all the goodly gear to grace him well that tide. 585
 His surcoat blazoned bold;
 Sharp spurs to prick with pride;
 And a brave silk band to hold
 The broadsword at his side.

When he had on his arms, his harness was rich, 590
 The least latchet or loop laden with gold;
 So armored as he was, he heard a mass,
 Honored God humbly at the high altar.
 Then he comes to the king and his comrades-in-arms,
 Takes his leave at last of lords and ladies, 595
 And they clasped and kissed him, commending him to Christ.
 By then Gringolet was girt with a great saddle
 That was gaily agleam with fine gilt fringe,
 New-furbished for the need with nail-heads bright;
 The bridle and the bars bedecked all with gold; 600
 The breast-plate, the saddlebow, the side-panels both,
 The caparison and the crupper accorded in hue,
 And all ranged on the red the resplendent studs
 That glittered and glowed like the glorious sun.
 His helm now he holds up and hastily kisses, 605
 Well-closed with iron clinches, and cushioned within;

It was high on his head, with a hasp behind,
 And a covering of cloth to encase the visor,
 All bound and embroidered with the best gems
 On broad bands of silk, and bordered with birds, 610
 Parrots and popinjays preening their wings,
 Lovebirds and love-knots as lavishly wrought
 As many women had worked seven winters thereon, entire.

The diadem costlier yet 615
 That crowned that comely sire,
 With diamonds richly set,
 That flashed as if on fire.

Then they showed forth the shield, that shone all red,
 With the pentangle ⁵ portrayed in purest gold. 620
 About his broad neck by the baldric he casts it,
 That was meet for the man, and matched him well.
 And why the pentangle is proper to that peerless prince
 I intend now to tell, though detain me it must.
 It is a sign by Solomon sagely devised 625
 To be a token of truth, by its title of old,
 For it is a figure formed of five points,
 And each line is linked and locked with the next
 For ever and ever, and hence it is called
 In all England, as I hear, the endless knot. 630
 And well may he wear it on his worthy arms,
 For ever faithful five-fold in five-fold fashion
 Was Gawain in good works, as gold unalloyed, Devoid of all villainy, with virtues adorned
 in sight. 635

On shield and coat in view
 He bore that emblem bright,
 As to his word most true
 And in speech most courteous knight.

And first, he was faultless in his five senses, 640
 Nor found ever to fail in his five fingers,
 And all his fealty was fixed upon the five wounds
 That Christ got on the cross, as the creed tells;
 And wherever this man in melee took part,
 His one thought was of this, past all things else, 645
 That all his force was founded on the five joys ⁶
 That the high Queen of heaven had in her child.
 And therefore, as I find, he fittingly had
 On the inner part of his shield her image portrayed,
 That when his look on it lighted, he never lost heart. 650
 The fifth of the five fives followed by this knight

5. A five-pointed star, formed by five lines which are drawn without lifting the pencil from the paper, supposed to have mystical significance; as Solomon's sign (line 625) it was enclosed in a circle.

6. The Annunciation, Nativity, Resurrection, Ascension, and Assumption.

Were beneficence boundless and brotherly love
 And pure mind and manners, that none might impeach,
 And compassion most precious—these peerless five
 Were forged and made fast in him, foremost of men. 655
 Now all these five fives were confirmed in this knight,
 And each linked in other, that end there was none,
 And fixed to five points, whose force never failed,
 Nor assembled all on a side, nor asunder either,
 Nor anywhere at an end, but whole and entire 660
 However the pattern proceeded or played out its course.
 And so on his shining shield shaped was the knot
 Royally in red gold against red gules,
 That is the peerless pentangle, prized of old in lore. 665

Now armed is Gawain gay,
 And bears his lance before,
 And soberly said good day,
 He thought forevermore.

He struck his steed with the spurs and sped on his way
 So fast that the flint-fire flashed from the stones.
 When they saw him set forth they were sore aggrieved,
 And all sighed softly, and said to each other,
 Fearing for their fellow, "Ill fortune it is
 That you, man, must be marred, that most are worthy! 675
 His equal on this earth can hardly be found;
 To have dealt more discreetly had done less harm,
 And have dubbed him a duke, with all due honor.
 A great leader of lords he was like to become,
 And better so to have been than battered to bits, 680
 Beheaded by an elf-man,⁷ for empty pride!
 Who would credit that a king could be counseled so,
 And caught in a cavil in a Christmas game?"
 Many were the warm tears they wept from their eyes
 When goodly Sir Gawain was gone from the court 685
 that day.

No longer he abode,
 But speedily went his way
 Over many a wandering road,
 As I heard my author say. 690

Now he rides in his array through the realm of Logres,⁸
 Sir Gawain, God knows, though it gave him small joy!
 All alone must he lodge through many a long night
 Where the food that he fancied was far from his plate;
 He had no mate but his mount, over mountain and plain, 695
 Nor man to say his mind to but almighty God,
 Till he had wandered well-nigh into North Wales.
 All the islands of Anglesey he holds on his left,

7. Supernatural being.

8. One of the names for Arthur's kingdom.

And follows, as he fares, the fords by the coast,
Comes over at Holy Head, and enters next 700
The Wilderness of Wirral⁹—few were within
That had great good will toward God or man.
And earnestly he asked of each mortal he met
If he had ever heard aught of a knight all green,
Or of a Green Chapel, on ground thereabouts, 705
And all said the same, and solemnly swore
They saw no such knight all solely green in hue.

Over country wild and strange
The knight sets off anew; 710
Often his course must change
Ere the Chapel comes in view.

Many a cliff must he climb in country wild;
Far off from all his friends, forlorn must he ride;
At each strand or stream where the stalwart passed 715
'Twere a marvel if he met not some monstrous foe,
And that so fierce and forbidding that fight he must.
So many were the wonders he wandered among
That to tell but the tenth part would tax my wits.
Now with serpents he wars, now with savage wolves, 720
Now with wild men of the woods, that watched from the rocks,
Both with bulls and with bears, and with boars besides,
And giants that came gibbering from the jagged steep.
Had he not borne himself bravely, and been on God's side,
He had met with many mishaps and mortal harms. 725
And if the wars were unwelcome, the winter was worse,
When the cold clear rains rushed from the clouds
And froze before they could fall to the frosty earth.
Near slain by the sleet he sleeps in his irons
More nights than enough, among naked rocks, 730
Where clattering from the crest the cold stream ran
And hung in hard icicles high overhead.
Thus in peril and pain and predicaments dire
He rides across country till Christmas Eve, our knight. 735

And at that holy tide
He prays with all his might
That Mary may be his guide
Till a dwelling comes in sight.

By a mountain next morning he makes his way 740
Into a forest fastness, fearsome and wild;
High hills on either hand, with hoar woods below,
Oaks old and huge by the hundred together.
The hazel and the hawthorn were all intertwined

9. Gawain went from Camelot north to the northern coast of Wales, opposite the islands of Anglesey; there he turned east across the Dee to the forest of Wirral in Cheshire.

With rough raveled moss, that raggedly hung, 745
 With many birds unblithe upon bare twigs
 That peeped most piteously for pain of the cold.
 The good knight on Gringolet glides thereunder
 Through many a marsh and mire, a man all alone;
 He feared for his default, should he fail to see 750
 The service of that Sire that on that same night
 Was born of a bright maid, to bring us His peace.
 And therefore sighing he said, "I beseech of Thee, Lord,
 And Mary, thou mildest mother so dear,
 Some harborage where haply I might hear mass 755
 And Thy matins tomorrow—meekly I ask it,
 And thereto proffer and pray my pater and ave and creed."

He said his prayer with sighs,
 Lamenting his misdeed; 760
 He crosses himself, and cries
 On Christ in his great need.

No sooner had Sir Gawain signed himself thrice
 Than he was ware, in the wood, of a wondrous dwelling,
 Within a moat, on a mound, bright amid boughs 765
 Of many a tree great of girth that grew by the water—
 A castle as comely as a knight could own,
 On grounds fair and green, in a goodly park
 With a palisade of palings planted about
 For two miles and more, round many a fair tree. 770
 The stout knight stared at that stronghold great
 As it shimmered and shone amid shining leaves,
 Then with helmet in hand he offers his thanks
 To Jesus and Saint Julian,¹ that are gentle both,
 That in courteous accord had inclined to his prayer; 775
 "Now fair harbor," said he, "I humbly beseech!"
 Then he pricks his proud steed with the plated spurs,
 And by chance he has chosen the chief path
 That brought the bold knight to the bridge's end in haste. 780

The bridge hung high in air;
 The gates were bolted fast;
 The walls well-framed to bear
 The fury of the blast.

The man on his mount remained on the bank 785
 Of the deep double moat that defended the place.
 The wall went in the water wondrous deep,
 And a long way aloft it loomed overhead.
 It was built of stone blocks to the battlements' height,
 With corbels under cornices in comeliest style; 790
 Watch-towers trusty protected the gate,

1. Patron saint of hospitality.

With many a lean loophole, to look from within:
A better-made barbican the knight beheld never.
And behind it there loomed a great hall and fair:
Turrets rising in tiers, with tines ² at their tops, 795
Spires set beside them, splendidly long,
With finials ³ well-fashioned, as filigree fine.
Chalk-white chimneys over chambers high
Gleamed in gay array upon gables and roofs;
The pinnacles in panoply, pointing in air, 800
So vied there for his view that verily it seemed
A castle cut of paper for a king's feast.
The good knight on Gringolet thought it great luck
If he could but contrive to come there within
To keep the Christmas feast in that castle fair 805 and bright.

There answered to his call
A porter most polite;
From his station on the wall
He greets the errant knight.

"Good sir," said Gawain, "Wouldst go to inquire
 If your lord would allow me to lodge here a space?"
 "Peter!" said the porter, "For my part, I think
 So noble a knight will not want for a welcome!"
 Then he bustles off briskly, and comes back straight,
 And many servants beside, to receive him the better.
 They let down the drawbridge and duly went forth
 And kneeled down on their knees on the naked earth
 To welcome this warrior as best they were able.
 They proffered him passage—the portals stood wide—
 And he beckoned them to rise, and rode over the bridge.
 Men steadied his saddle as he stepped to the ground,
 And there stabled his steed many stalwart folk.
 Now come the knights and the noble squires
 To bring him with bliss into the bright hall.
 When his high helm was off, there hied forth a throng
 Of attendants to take it, and see to its care;
 They bore away his brand and his blazoned shield;
 Then graciously he greeted those gallants each one,
 And many a noble drew near, to do the knight honor.
 All in his armor into hall he was led,
 Where fire on a fair hearth fiercely blazed.
 And soon the lord himself descends from his chamber
 To meet with good manners the man on his floor.
 He said, "To this house you are heartily welcome:
 What is here is wholly yours, to have in your power and sway."

"Many thanks," said Sir Gawain;
"May Christ your pains repay!"

2. Spikes.

3. Gable ornaments.

The two embrace amain
As men well met that day. 840

Gawain gazed on the host that greeted him there,
And a lusty fellow he looked, the lord of that place:
A man of massive mold, and of middle age;
Broad, bright was his beard, of a beaver's hue, 845
Strong, steady his stance, upon stalwart shanks,
His face fierce as fire, fair-spoken withal,
And well-suited he seemed in Sir Gawain's sight
To be a master of men in a mighty keep.

They pass into a parlor, where promptly the host
Has a servant assigned him to see to his needs, 850
And there came upon his call many courteous folk
That brought him to a bower where bedding was noble,
With heavy silk hangings hemmed all in gold,

Coverlets and counterpanes curiously wrought, 855
A canopy over the couch, clad all with fur,
Curtains running on cords, caught to gold rings,
Woven rugs on the walls of eastern work,
And the floor, under foot, well-furnished with the same.
With light talk and laughter they loosed from him then 860
His war-dress of weight and his worthy clothes.

Robes richly wrought they brought him right soon,
To change there in chamber and choose what he would.
When he had found one he fancied, and flung it about,
Well-fashioned for his frame, with flowing skirts, 865
His face fair and fresh as the flowers of spring,
All the good folk agreed, that gazed on him then,
His limbs arrayed royally in radiant hues,
That so comely a mortal never Christ made as he. 870

Whatever his place of birth,
It seemed he well might be Without a peer on earth
In martial rivalry.

A couch before the fire, where fresh coals burned, 875
They spread for Sir Gawain splendidly now
With quilts quaintly stitched, and cushions beside,
And then a costly cloak they cast on his shoulders
Of bright silk, embroidered on borders and hems,
With furs of the finest well-furnished within, 880
And bound about with ermine, both mantle and hood;
And he sat at that fireside in sumptuous estate
And warmed himself well, and soon he waxed merry.
Then attendants set a table upon trestles broad,
And lustrous white linen they laid thereupon, 885
A saltcellar of silver, spoons of the same.
He washed himself well and went to his place,
Men set his fare before him in fashion most fit.

There were soups of all sorts, seasoned with skill,
Double-sized servings, and sundry fish, 890
Some baked, some breaded, some broiled on the coals,
Some simmered, some in stews, steaming with spice,
And with sauces to sup. that suited his taste.
He confesses it a feast with free words and fair;
They requite him as kindly with courteous jests, 895
 well-spiced.

“Tonight you fast ⁴ and pray;
Tomorrow we’ll see you fed.”
The knight grows wondrous gay
As the wine goes to his head.

Then at times and by turns, as at table he sat,
They questioned him quietly, with queries discreet,
And he courteously confessed that he comes from the court,
And owns him of the brotherhood of high-famed Arthur,
The right royal ruler of the Round Table,
And the guest by their fireside is Gawain himself,
Who has happened on their house at that holy feast.
When the name of the knight was made known to the lord,
Then loudly he laughed, so elated he was,
And the men in that household made haste with joy
To appear in his presence promptly that day,
That of courage ever-constant, and customs pure,
Is pattern and paragon, and praised without end:
Of all knights on earth most honored is he.
Each said solemnly aside to his brother,
"Now displays of deportment shall dazzle our eyes
And the polished pearls of impeccable speech;
The high art of eloquence is ours to pursue
Since the father of fine manners is found in our midst.
Great is God's grace, and goodly indeed,
That a guest such as Gawain he guides to us here
When men sit and sing of their Savior's birth in view.

With command of manners pure
He shall each heart imbue;
Who shares his converse, sure,
Shall learn love's language true."

When the knight had done dining and duly arose,
The dark was drawing on; the day nigh ended.
Chaplains in chapels and churches about
Rang the bells aright, reminding all men
Of the holy evensong of the high feast.
The lord attends alone; his fair lady sits
In a comely closet, secluded from sight.
Gawain in gay attire goes thither soon;

4. Gawain is said to be "fasting" because the meal, though elaborate, consisted only of fish dishes, appropriate to a fasting day.

The lord catches his coat, and calls him by name,
 And has him sit beside him, and says in good faith
 No guest on God's earth would he gladlier greet.
 For that Gawain thanked him; the two then embraced
 And sat together soberly the service through. 940
 Then the lady, that longed to look on the knight,
 Came forth from her closet with her comely maids.
 The fair hues of her flesh, her face and her hair
 And her body and her bearing were beyond praise,
 And excelled the queen herself, as Sir Gawain thought. 945
 He goes forth to greet her with gracious intent;
 Another lady led her by the left hand
 That was older than she—an ancient, it seemed,
 And held in high honor by all men about.
 But unlike to look upon, those ladies were, 950
 For if the one was fresh, the other was faded:
 Bedecked in bright red was the body of one;
 Flesh hung in folds on the face of the other;
 On one a high headdress, hung all with pearls;
 Her bright throat and bosom fair to behold, 955
 Fresh as the first snow fallen upon hills;
 A wimple the other one wore round her throat;
 Her swart chin well swaddled, swathed all in white;
 Her forehead enfolded in flounces of silk
 That framed a fair fillet, of fashion ornate, 960
 And nothing bare beneath save the black brows,
 The two eyes and the nose, the naked lips,
 And they unsightly to see, and sorrily bleared.
 A beldame, by God, she may well be deemed,
 of pride! 965
 She was short and thick of waist,
 Her buttocks round and wide;
 More toothsome, to his taste,
 Was the beauty by her side.

When Gawain had gazed on that gay lady, 970
 With leave of her lord, he politely approached;
 To the elder in homage he humbly bows;
 The lovelier he salutes with a light embrace.
 He claims a comely kiss, and courteously he speaks;
 They welcome him warmly, and straightway he asks 975
 To be received as their servant, if they so desire.
 They take him between them; with talking they bring him
 Beside a bright fire: bade then that spices
 Be freely fetched forth, to refresh them the better,
 And the good wine therewith, to warm their hearts. 980
 The lord leaps about in light-hearted mood;
 Contrives entertainments and timely sports;
 Takes his hood from his head and hangs it on a spear,
 And offers him openly the honor thereof
 Who should promote the most mirth at that Christmas feast; 985

"And I shall try for it, trust me—contend with the best, Ere I go without my headgear by grace of my friends!"
Thus with light talk and laughter the lord makes merry
To gladden the guest he had greeted in hall
that day.

990

At the last he called for light
The company to convey;
Gawain says goodnight
And retires to bed straightway.

On the morn when each man is mindful in heart
That God's son was sent down to suffer our death,
No household but is blithe for His blessed sake;
So was it there on that day, with many delights.
Both at larger meals and less they were lavishly served
By doughty lads on dais, with delicate fare;
The old ancient lady, highest she sits;
The lord at her left hand leaned, as I hear;
Sir Gawain in the center, beside the gay lady,
Where the food was brought first to that festive board,
And thence throughout the hall, as they held most fit,
To each man was offered in order of rank.

995

There was meat, there was mirth, there was much joy,
That to tell all the tale would tax my wits,
Though I pained me, perchance, to paint it with care;
But yet I know that our knight and the noble lady
Were accorded so closely in company there,
With the seemly solace of their secret words,
With speeches well-spiced, spotless and pure,
That each prince's pastime their pleasures far outshone.

1000

1005

1010

1015

Sweet pipes beguile their cares,
And the trumpet of martial tone;
Each tends his affairs
And those two tend their own.

That day and all the next, their disport was noble,
And the third day, I think, pleased them no less;
The joys of St. John's Day⁵ were justly praised,
And were the last of their like for those lords and ladies;
Then guests were to go in the gray morning,
Wherefore they whiled the night away with wine and with mirth,

1020

1025

Moved to the measures of many a blithe carol;
At last, when it was late, took leave of each other,
Each one of those worthies, to wend his way.
Gawain bids goodbye to his goodly host
Who brings him to his chamber, the chimney beside,
And detains him in talk, and tenders his thanks
And holds it an honor to him and his people

1030

That he has harbored in his house at that holy time
And embellished his abode with his inborn grace.

"As long as I may live, my luck is the better
That Gawain was my guest at God's own feast!" 1035

"Noble sir," said the knight, "I cannot but think
All the honor is your own—may heaven requite it!
And your man to command I account myself here
As I am bound and beholden, and shall be, come what may." 1040

The lord with all his might
Entreats his guest to stay;
Brief answer makes the knight:
Next morning he must away. 1045

Then the lord of that land politely inquired
What dire affair had forced him, at that festive time,
So far from the king's court to fare forth alone
Ere the holidays wholly had ended in hall.

"In good faith," said Gawain, "you have guessed the truth:
On a high errand and urgent I hastened away, 1050

For I am summoned by myself to seek for a place—
I would I knew whither, or where it might be!

Far rather would I find it before the New Year
Than own the land of Logres, so help me our Lord! 1055

Wherefore, sir, in friendship this favor I ask,
That you say in sober earnest, if something you know
Of the Green Chapel, on ground far or near,
Or the lone knight that lives there, of like hue of green.

A certain day was set by assent of us both
To meet at that landmark, if I might last, 1060

And from now to the New Year is nothing too long,
And I would greet the Green Knight there, would God but allow,
More gladly, by God's Son, than gain the world's wealth!
And I must set forth to search, as soon as I may; 1065

To be about the business I have but three days
And would as soon sink down dead as desist from my errand."

Then smiling said the lord, "Your search, sir, is done,
For we shall see you to that site by the set time.

Let Gawain grieve no more over the Green Chapel; 1070

You shall be in your own bed, in blissful ease,
All the forenoon, and fare forth the first of the year,
And make the goal by midmorn, to mind your affairs,
no fear!

Tarry till the fourth day
And ride on the first of the year.
We shall set you on your way;
It is not two miles from here." 1075

Then Gawain was glad, and gleefully he laughed:

"Now I thank you for this, past all things else! 1080

Now my goal is here at hand! With a glad heart I shall Both tarry, and undertake any task you devise."

Then the host seized his arm and seated him there;

Let the ladies be brought, to delight them the better,

And in fellowship fair by the fireside they sit; 1085

So gay waxed the good host, so giddy his words,

All waited in wonder what next he would say.

Then he stares on the stout knight, and sternly he speaks:

"You have bound yourself boldly my bidding to do—

Will you stand by that boast, and obey me this once?" 1090

"I shall do so indeed," said the doughty knight;

"While I lie in your lodging, your laws will I follow."

"As you have had," said the host, "many hardships abroad

And little sleep of late, you are lacking, I judge.

Both in nourishment needful and nightly rest; 1095

You shall lie abed late in your lofty chamber

Tomorrow until mass, and meet then to dine

When you will, with my wife, who will sit by your side

And talk with you at table, the better to cheer

our guest. 1100

A-hunting I will go

While you lie late and rest."

The knight, inclining low,

Assents to each behest.

"And Gawain," said the good host, "agree now to this: 1105

Whatever I win in the woods I will give you at eve,

And all you have earned you must offer to me;

Swear now, sweet friend, to swap as I say,

Whether hands, in the end, be empty or better."

"By God," said Sir Gawain, "I grant it forthwith! IIIIO

If you find the game good, I shall gladly take part."

"Let the bright wine be brought, and our bargain is done,"

Said the lord of that land—the two laughed together.

Then they drank and they dallied and doffed all constraint,

These lords and these ladies, as late as they chose, 1115

And then with gaiety and gallantries and graceful adieux

They talked in low tones, and tarried at parting.

With compliments comely they kiss at the last;

There were brisk lads about with blazing torches

To see them safe to bed, for soft repose long due.

Their covenants, yet awhile,

They repeat, and pledge anew;

That lord could well beguile

Men's hearts, with mirth in view. 1125

Part III

Long before daylight they left their beds;
 Guests that wished to go gave word to their grooms,
 And they set about briskly to bind on saddles,
 Tend to their tackle, tie up trunks.
 The proud lords appear, appareled to ride, 1130
 Leap lightly astride, lay hold of their bridles,
 Each one on his way to his worthy house.
 The liege lord of the land was not the last
 Arrayed there to ride, with retainers many;
 He had a bite to eat when he had heard mass; 1135
 With horn to the hills he hastens amain.
 By the dawn of that day over the dim earth,
 Master and men were mounted and ready.
 Then they harnessed in couples the keen-scented hounds,
 Cast wide the kennel-door and called them forth, 1140
 Blew upon their bugles bold blasts three;
 The dogs began to bay with a deafening din,
 And they quieted them quickly and called them to heel,
 A hundred brave huntsmen, as I have heard tell,
 together. 1145

Men at stations meet;
 From the hounds they slip the tether;
 The echoing horns repeat,
 Clear in the merry weather.

At the clamor of the quest, the quarry trembled;
 Deer dashed through the dale, dazed with dread; 1150
 Hastened to the high ground, only to be Turned back by the beaters, who boldly shouted.
 They harmed not the harts, with their high heads,
 Let the bucks go by, with their broad antlers, 1155
 For it was counted a crime, in the close season,
 If a man of that demesne should molest the male deer.
 The hinds were headed up, with "Hey!" and "Ware!"
 The does with great din were driven to the valleys.
 Then you were ware, as they went, of the whistling of arrows; 1160
 At each bend under boughs the bright shafts flew
 That tore the tawny hide with their tapered heads.
 Ah! they bray and they bleed, on banks they die,
 And ever the pack pell-mell comes panting behind;
 Hunters with shrill horns hot on their heels— 1165
 Like the cracking of cliffs their cries resounded.
 What game got away from the gallant archers
 Was promptly picked off at the posts below
 When they were harried on the heights and herded to the streams:
 The watchers were so wary at the waiting-stations, 1170
 And the greyhounds so huge, that eagerly snatched,
 And finished them off as fast as folk could see
 with sight.

The lord, now here, now there,

Spurs forth in sheer delight. 1175
And drives, with pleasures rare,
The day to the dark night.

So the lord in the linden-wood leads the hunt
And Gawain the good knight in gay bed lies,
Lingered late alone, till daylight gleamed, 1180
Under coverlet costly, curtained about.

And as he slips into slumber, slyly there comes
A little din at his door, and the latch lifted,
And he holds up his heavy head out of the clothes;
A corner of the curtain he caught back a little 1185
And waited there warily, to see what befell.

Lo! it was the lady, loveliest to behold,
That drew the door behind her deftly and still
And was bound for his bed—abashed was the knight,
And laid his head low again in likeness of sleep; 1190
And she stepped stealthily, and stole to his bed,

Cast aside the curtain and came within,
And set herself softly on the bedside there,
And lingered at her leisure, to look on his waking.

The fair knight lay feigning for a long while, 1195
Conning in his conscience what his case might Mean or amount to—a marvel he thought it.
But yet he said within himself, "More seemly it were
To try her intent by talking a little."

So he started and stretched, as startled from sleep, 1200
Lifts wide his lids in likeness of wonder,
And signs himself swiftly, as safer to be,
with art.

Sweetly does she speak
And kindling glances dart, 1205
Blent white and red on cheek
And laughing lips apart.

"Good morning, Sir Gawain," said that gay lady,
"A slack sleeper you are, to let one slip in!
Now you are taken in a trice—a truce we must make, 1210
Or I shall bind you in your bed, of that be assured."
Thus laughing lightly that lady jested.

"Good morning, good lady," said Gawain the blithe,
"Be it with me as you will; I am well content!
For I surrender myself, and sue for your grace, 1215
And that is best, I believe, and behooves me now."

Thus jested in answer that gentle knight.
"But if, lovely lady, you misliked it not,
And were pleased to permit your prisoner to rise,
I should quit this couch and accoutre me better, 1220
And be clad in more comfort for converse here."

"Nay, not so, sweet sir," said the smiling lady;
"You shall not rise from your bed: I direct you better:
I shall hem and hold you on either hand,

And keep company awhile with my captive knight. 1225
For as certain as I sit here, Sir Gawain you are,
Whom all the world worships, whereso you ride;
Your honor, your courtesy are highest acclaimed
By lords and by ladies, by all living men;
And lo! we are alone here, and left to ourselves: 1230
My lord and his liegemen are long departed,
The household asleep, my handmaids too,
The door drawn, and held by a well-driven bolt,
And since I have in this house him whom all love,
I shall while the time away with mirthful speech 1235 at will.

My body is here at hand,
Your each wish to fulfill;
Your servant to command
I am, and shall be still."

"In good faith," said Gawain, "my gain is the greater,
 Though I am not he of whom you have heard;
 To arrive at such reverence as you recount here
 I am one all unworthy, and well do I know it.
 By heaven, I would hold me the happiest of men
 If by word or by work I once might aspire
 To the prize of your praise—'twere a pure joy!"
 "In good faith, Sir Gawain," said that gay lady,
 "The well-proven prowess that pleases all others,
 Did I scant or scout it, 'twere scarce becoming.
 But there are ladies, believe me, that had liefer far
 Have thee here in their hold, as I have today,
 To pass an hour in pastime with pleasant words,
 Assuage all their sorrows and solace their hearts,
 Than much of the goodly gems and gold they possess.
 But laud be to the Lord of the lofty skies,
 For here in my hands all hearts' desire doth lie."

Great welcome got he there
From the lady who sat him by;
With fitting speech and fair
The good knight makes reply.

"Madame," said the merry man, "Mary reward you!
 For in good faith, I find your beneficence noble.
 And the fame of fair deeds runs far and wide,
 But the praise you report pertains not to me,
 But comes of your courtesy and kindness of heart."
 "By the high Queen of heaven" (said she) "I count it not so,
 For were I worth all the women in this world alive,
 And all wealth and all worship were in my hands,
 And I should hunt high and low, a husband to take,
 For the nurture I have noted in thee, knight, here,
 The comeliness and courtesies and courtly mirth—
 And so I had ever heard, and now hold it true—

No other on this earth should have me for wife." 1275
 "You are bound to a better man," the bold knight said,
 "Yet I prize the praise you have proffered me here,
 And soberly your servant, my sovereign I hold you,
 And acknowledge me your knight, in the name of Christ."
 So they talked of this and that until 'twas nigh noon, 1280
 And ever the lady languishing in likeness of love.
 With feat words and fair he framed his defense,
 For were she never so winsome, the warrior had
 The less will to woo, for the wound that his bane must be. 1285

He must bear the blinding blow,
 For such is fate's decree;
 The lady asks leave to go;
 He grants it full and free.

Then she gaily said goodbye, and glanced at him, laughing, 1290
 And as she stood, she astonished him with a stern speech:
 "Now may the Giver of all good words these glad hours repay!
 But our guest is not Gawain—forgot is that thought."
 "How so?" said the other, and asks in some haste,
 For he feared he had been at fault in the forms of his speech. 1295
 But she held up her hand, and made answer thus:
 "So good a knight as Gawain is given out to be,
 And the model of fair demeanor and manners pure,
 Had he lain so long at a lady's side,
 Would have claimed a kiss, by his courtesy, 1300
 Through some touch or trick of phrase at some tale's end."
 Said Gawain, "Good lady, I grant it at once!
 I shall kiss at your command, as becomes a knight,
 And more, lest you mislike, so let be, I pray."
 With that she turns toward him, takes him in her arms, 1305
 Leans down her lovely head, and lo! he is kissed.
 They commend each other to Christ with comely words,
 He sees her forth safely, in silence they part,
 And then he lies no later in his lofty bed,
 But calls to his chamberlain, chooses his clothes, 1310
 Goes in those garments gladly to mass,
 Then takes his way to table, where attendants wait,
 And made merry all day, till the moon rose
 in view

Was never knight beset 1315
 'Twixt worthier ladies two:
 The crone and the coquette;
 Fair pastimes they pursue.

And the lord of the land rides late and long,
 Hunting the barren hind over the broad heath. 1320
 He had slain such a sum, when the sun sank low,
 Of does and other deer, as would dizzy one's wits.
 Then they trooped in together in triumph at last,
 And the count of the quarry quickly they take.

The lords lent a hand with their liegemen many, 1325
 Picked out the plumpest and put them together
 And duly dressed the deer, as the deed requires.
 Some were assigned the assay of the fat:
 Two fingers'-width fully they found on the leanest.
 Then they slit the slot open and searched out the paunch, 1330
 Trimmed it with trencher-knives and tied it up tight.
 They flaycd the fair hide from the legs and trunk,
 Then broke open the belly and laid bare the bowels,
 Deftly detaching and drawing them forth.
 And next at the neck they neatly parted 1335
 The weasand ⁶ from the windpipe, and cast away the guts.
 At the shoulders with sharp blades they showed their skill,
 Boning them from bencath, lest the sides be marred;
 They breached the broad breast and broke it in twain,
 And again at the gullet they begin with their knives, 1340
 Cleave down the carcass clear to the breach;
 Two tender morsels they take from the throat,
 Then round the inner ribs they rid off a layer
 And carve out the kidney-fat, close to the spine,
 Hewing down to the haunch, that all hung together, 1345
 And held it up whole, and hacked it free,
 And this they named the numbles,⁷ that knew such terms of art.

They divide the crotch in two,
 And straightway then they start 1350
 To cut the backbone through
 And cleave the trunk apart.

With hard strokes they hewed off the head and the neck,
 Then swiftly from the sides they severed the chine,
 And the corbie's bone ⁸ they cast on a branch. 1355
 Then they pierced the plump sides, impaled either one
 With the hock of the hind foot, and hung it aloft,
 To each person his portion most proper and fit.
 On a hide of a hind the hounds they fed
 With the liver and the lights,⁹ the leathery paunches, 1360
 And bread soaked in blood well blended therewith.
 High horns and shrill set hounds a-baying,
 Then merrily with their meat they make their way home,
 Blowing on their bugles many a brave blast.
 Ere dark had descended, that doughty band 1365
 Was come within the walls where Gawain waits at leisure.

Bliss and hearth-fire bright
 Await the master's pleasure;
 When the two men met that night, 1370
 Joy surpassed all measure.

6. Esophagus.

7. The other internal organs.

8. A bit of gristle assigned to the ravens

("corbies").

9. Lungs.

Then the host in the hall his household assembles,
With the dames of high degree and their damsels fair.
In the presence of the people, a party he sends
To convey him his venison in view of the knight. 1375

And in high good-humor he hails him then,
Counts over the kill, the cuts on the tallies,
Holds high the hewn ribs, heavy with fat.
"What think you, sir, of this? Have I thriven well?
Have I won with my woodcraft a worthy prize?" 1380

"In good earnest," said Gawain, "this game is the finest
I have seen in seven years in the season of winter."

"And I give it to you, Gawain," said the goodly host,
"For according to our covenant, you claim it as your own."
"That is so," said Sir Gawain, "the same say I: 1385

What I worthily have won within these fair walls,
Herewith I as willingly award it to you."

He embraces his broad neck with both his arms,
And confers on him a kiss in the comeliest style.
"Have here my profit, it proved no better; 1390

Ungrudging do I grant it, were it greater far."
"Such a gift," said the good host, "I gladly accept—

Yet it might be all the better, would you but say
Where you won this same award, by your wits alone."
"That was no part of the pact; press me no further, 1395

For you have had what behooves; all other claims forbear."

With jest and compliment
They conversed, and cast off care;
To the table soon they went; 1400
Fresh dainties wait them there.

And then by the chimney-side they chat at their ease;
The best wine was brought them, and bounteously served;
And after in their jesting they jointly accord
To do on the second day the deeds of the first: 1405

That the two men should trade, betide as it may,
What each had taken in, at eve when they met.

They seal the pact solemnly in sight of the court;
Their cups were filled afresh to confirm the jest;

Then at last they took their leave, for late was the hour, 1410
Each to his own bed hastening away.

Before the barnyard cock had crowed but thrice
The lord had leapt from his rest, his liegemen as well.

Both of mass and their meal they made short work:
By the dim light of dawn they were deep in the woods 1415
away.

With huntsmen and with horns
Over plains they pass that day;
They release, amid the thorns,
Swift hounds that run and bay. 1420

Soon some were on a scent by the side of a marsh;
 When the hounds opened cry, the head of the hunt
 Rallied them with rough words, raised a great noise.
 The hounds that had heard it came hurrying straight
 And followed along with their fellows, forty together. 1425
 Then such a clamor and cry of coursing hounds
 Arose, that the rocks resounded again.
 Hunters exhorted them with horn and with voice;
 Then all in a body bore off together
 Between a mere in the marsh and a menacing crag, 1430
 To a rise where the rock stood rugged and steep,
 And boulders lay about, that blocked their approach.
 Then the company in consort closed on their prey:
 They surrounded the rise and the rocks both,
 For well they were aware that it waited within, 1435
 The beast that the bloodhounds boldly proclaimed.
 Then they beat on the bushes and bade him appear,
 And he made a murderous rush in the midst of them all;
 The best of all boars broke from his cover,
 That had ranged long unrivaled, a renegade old, 1440
 For of tough-brawned boars he was biggest far,
 Most grim when he grunted—then grieved were many,
 For three at the first thrust he threw to the earth,
 And dashed away at once without more damage.
 With "Hi!" "Hi!" and "Hey!" "Hey!" the others followed, 1445
 Had horns at their lips, blew high and clear.
 Merry was the music of men and of hounds
 That were bound after this boar, his bloodthirsty heart to quell.
 Often he stands at bay,
 Then scatters the pack pell-mell;
 He hurts the hounds, and they
 Most dolefully yowl and yell. 1450

Men then with mighty bows moved in to shoot,
 Aimed at him with their arrows and often hit, 1455
 But the points had no power to pierce through his hide,
 And the barbs were brushed aside by his bristly brow;
 Though the shank of the shaft shivered in pieces,
 The head hopped away, wheresoever it struck.
 But when their stubborn strokes had stung him at last, 1460
 Then, foaming in his frenzy, fiercely he charges,
 Hies at them headlong that hindered his flight,
 And many feared for their lives, and fell back a little.
 But the lord on a lively horse leads the chase;
 As a high-mettled huntsman his horn he blows;
 He sounds the assembly and sweeps through the brush, 1465
 Pursuing this wild swine till the sunlight slanted.
 All day with this deed they drive forth the time
 While our lone knight so lovesome lies in his bed,

Sir Gawain safe at home, in silken bower
 so gay. 1470
 The lady, with guile in heart,
 Came carly where he lay;
 She was at him with all her art
 To turn his mind her way. 1475

She comes to the curtain and coyly peeps in;
 Gawain thought it good to greet her at once,
 And she richly repays him with her ready words,
 Settles softly at his side, and suddenly she laughs,
 And with a gracious glance, she begins on him thus: 1480
 "Sir, if you be Gawain, it seems a great wonder—
 A man so well-meaning, and mannerly disposed,
 And cannot act in company as courtesy bids,
 And if one takes the trouble to teach him, 'tis all in vain.
 That lesson learned lately is lightly forgot, 1485
 Though I painted it as plain as my poor wit allowed."
 "What lesson, dear lady?" he asked all alarmed;
 "I have been much to blame, if your story be true."
 "Yet my counsel was of kissing," came her answer then,
 "Where favor has been found, freely to claim 1490
 As accords with the conduct of courteous knights."
 "My dear," said the doughty man, "dismiss that thought;
 Such freedom, I fear, might offend you much;
 It were rude to request if the right were denied."
 "But none can deny you," said the noble dame, 1495
 "You are stout enough to constrain with strength, if you choose,
 Were any so ungracious as to grudge you aught."
 "By heaven," said he, "you have answered well,
 But threats never throve among those of my land,
 Nor any gift not freely given, good though it be. 1500
 I am yours to command, to kiss when you please;
 You may lay on as you like, and leave off at will."

With this,
 The lady lightly bends
 And graciously gives him a kiss; 1505
 The two converse as friends
 Of true love's trials and bliss.

"I should like, by your leave," said the lovely lady,
 "If it did not annoy you, to know for what cause
 So brisk and so bold a young blood as you, 1510
 And acclaimed for all courtesies becoming a knight—
 And name what knight you will, they are noblest esteemed
 For loyal faith in love, in life as in story;
 For to tell the tribulations of these true hearts,
 Why, 'tis the very title and text of their deeds, 1515
 How bold knights for beauty have braved many a foe,
 Suffered heavy sorrows out of secret love,
 And then valorously avenged them on villainous churls

And made happy ever after the hearts of their ladies.
 And you are the noblest knight known in your time; 1520
 No household under heaven but has heard of your fame,
 And here by your side I have sat for two days
 Yet never has a fair phrase fallen from your lips
 Of the language of love, not one little word!
 And you, that with sweet vows sway women's hearts, 1525
 Should show your winsome ways, and woo a young thing,
 And teach by some tokens the craft of true love.
 How! are you artless, whom all men praise?
 Or do you deem me so dull, or deaf to such words?

Fie! Fie! 1530

In hope of pastimes new
 I have come where none can spy;
 Instruct me a little, do,
 While my husband is not nearby."

"God love you, gracious lady!" said Gawain then; 1535
 "It is a pleasure surpassing, and a peerless joy,
 That one so worthy as you would willingly come
 And take the time and trouble to talk with your knight
 And content you with his company—it comforts my heart.
 But to take to myself the task of telling of love, 1540
 And touch upon its texts, and treat of its themes
 To one that, I know well, wields more power
 In that art, by a half, than a hundred such
 As I am where I live, or am like to become,
 It were folly, fair dame, in the first degree! 1545
 In all that I am able, my aim is to please,
 As in honor behooves me, and am evermore
 Your servant heart and soul, so save me our Lord!"
 Thus she tested his temper and tried many a time,
 Whatever her true intent, to entice him to sin, 1550
 But so fair was his defense that no fault appeared,
 Nor evil on either hand, but only bliss
 they knew.

They linger and laugh awhile;
 She kisses the knight so true, 1555
 Takes leave in comeliest style
 And departs without more ado.

Then he rose from his rest and made ready for mass,
 And then a meal was set and served, in sumptuous style;
 He dallied at home all day with the dear ladies, 1560
 But the lord lingered late at his lusty sport;
 Pursued his sorry swine, that swerved as he fled,
 And bit asunder the backs of the best of his hounds
 When they brought him to bay, till the bowmen appeared
 And soon forced him forth, though he fought for dear life, 1565
 So sharp were the shafts they shot at him there.
 But yet the boldest drew back from his battering head,

Till at last he was so tired he could travel no more,
 But in as much haste as he might, he makes his retreat
 To a rise on rocky ground, by a rushing stream. 1570
 With the bank at his back he scrapes the bare earth,
 The froth foams at his jaws, frightful to see.
 He whets his white tusks—then weary were all
 Those hunters so hardy that hoved round about
 Of aiming from afar, but ever they mistrust 1575 his mood.

He had hurt so many by then
 That none had hardihood
 To be torn by his tusks again,
 That was brainsick, and out for blood. 1580

Till the lord came at last on his lofty steed,
 Beheld him there at bay before all his folk;
 Lightly he leaps down, leaves his courser,
 Bares his bright sword, and boldly advances;
 Straight into the stream he strides towards his foe. 1585
 The wild thing was wary of weapon and man;
 His hackles rose high; so hotly he snorts
 That many watched with alarm, lest the worst befall.
 The boar makes for the man with a mighty bound
 So that he and his hunter came headlong together 1590
 Where the water ran wildest—the worse for the beast,
 For the man, when they first met, marked him with care,
 Sights well the slot, slips in the blade,
 Shoves it home to the hilt, and the heart shattered,
 And he falls in his fury and floats down the water, 1595 ill-spced.

Hounds hasten by the score
 To maul him, hide and head;
 Men drag him in to shore
 And dogs pronounce him dead. 1600

With many a brave blast they boast of their prize,
 All hallooed in high glee, that had their wind;
 The hounds bayed their best, as the bold men bade
 That were charged with chief rank in that chase of renown.
 Then one wise in woodcraft, and worthily skilled, 1605
 Began to dress the boar in becoming style:
 He severs the savage head and sets it aloft,
 Then rends the body roughly right down the spine;
 Takes the bowels from the belly, broils them on coals,
 Blends them well with bread to bestow on the hounds. 1610
 Then he breaks out the brawn in fair broad flitches,
 And the innards to be eaten in order he takes.
 The two sides, attached to each other all whole,
 He suspended from a spar that was springy and tough;
 And so with this swine they set out for home; 1615
 The boar's head was borne before the same man

To his chamber he calls the knight,
And thither they go along.

And there they dallied and drank, and deemed it good sport
To enact their play anew on New Year's Eve,
But Gawain asked again to go on the morrow, 1670
For the time until his tryst was not two days.
The host hindered that, and urged him to stay,
And said, "On my honor, my oath here I take
That you shall get to the Green Chapel to begin your chores
By dawn on New Year's Day, if you so desire. 1675
Wherefore lie at your leisure in your lofty bed,
And I shall hunt hereabouts, and hold to our terms,
And we shall trade winnings when once more we meet,
For I have tested you twice, and true have I found you;
Now think this tomorrow: the third pays for all; 1680
Be we merry while we may, and mindful of joy,
For heaviness of heart can be had for the asking."
This is gravely agreed on and Gawain will stay.
They drink a last draught and with torches depart to rest. 1685

To bed Sir Gawain went;
His sleep was of the best;
The lord, on his craft intent,
Was early up and dressed.

After mass, with his men, a morsel he takes; 1690
Clear and crisp the morning; he calls for his mount;
The folk that were to follow him afield that day
Were high astride their horses before the hall gates.
Wondrous fair were the fields, for the frost was light;
The sun rises red amid radiant clouds, 1695
Sails into the sky, and sends forth his beams.
They let loose the hounds by a leafy wood;
The rocks all around re-echo to their horns;
Soon some have set off in pursuit of the fox,
Cast about with craft for a clearer scent; 1700
A young dog vaps, and is yelled at in turn;
His fellows fall to sniffing, and follow his lead,
Running in a rabble on the right track,
And he scampers all before; they discover him soon,
And when they see him with sight they pursue him the faster, 1705
Railing at him rudely with a wrathful din.
Often he reverses over rough terrain,
Or loops back to listen in the lee of a hedge;
At last, by a little ditch, he leaps over the brush,
Comes into a clearing at a cautious pace, 1710
Then he thought through his wiles to have thrown off the hounds
Till he was ware, as he went, of a waiting-station
Where three athwart his path threatened him at once, all gray.

Quick as a flash he wheels 1715
 And darts off in dismay;
 With hard luck at his heels
 He is off to the wood away.

Then it was heaven on earth to hark to the hounds
 When they had come on their quarry, coursing together! 1720
 Such harsh cries and howls they hurled at his head
 As all the cliffs with a crash had come down at once.
 Here he was hailed, when huntsmen met him;
 Yonder they yelled at him, yapping and snarling;
 There they cried "Thief!" and threatened his life, 1725
 And ever the harriers at his heels, that he had no rest.
 Often he was menaced when he made for the open,
 And often rushed in again, for Reynard was wily;
 And so he leads them a merry chase, the lord and his men,
 In this manner on the mountains, till midday or near, 1740
 While our hero lies at home in wholesome sleep
 Within the comely curtains on the cold morning.
 But the lady, as love would allow her no rest,
 And pursuing ever the purpose that pricked her heart,
 Was awake with the dawn, and went to his chamber 1735
 In a fair flowing mantle that fell to the earth,
 All edged and embellished with ermines fine;
 No hood on her head, but heavy with gems
 Were her fillet and the fret ¹ that confined her tresses;
 Her face and her fair throat freely displayed; 1730
 Her bosom all but bare, and her back as well.
 She comes in at the chamber-door, and closes it with care,
 Throws wide a window—then waits no longer,
 But hails him thus airily with her artful words,
 with cheer: 1745
 "Ah, man, how can you sleep?
 The morning is so clear!"
 Though dreams have drowned him deep,
 He cannot choose but hear.

Deep in his dreams he darkly mutters 1750
 As a man may that mourns, with many grim thoughts
 Of that day when destiny shall deal him his doom
 When he greets his grim host at the Green Chapel
 And must bow to his buffet, bating all strife.
 But when he sees her at his side he summons his wits, 1755
 Breaks from the black dreams, and blithely answers.
 That lovely lady comes laughing sweet,
 Sinks down at his side, and salutes him with a kiss.
 He accords her fair welcome in courtliest style;
 He sees her so glorious, so gaily attired, 1760
 So faultless her features, so fair and so bright,

1. Ornamental net.

His heart swelled swiftly with surging joys.
They melt into mirth with many a fond smile,
And there was bliss beyond telling between those two,
at height.

Good were their words of greeting;
Each joyed in other's sight;
Great peril attends that meeting
Should Mary forget her knight.

For that high-born beauty so hemmed him about,
Made so plain her meaning, the man must needs
Either take her tendered love or distastefully refuse.
His courtesy concerned him, lest crass he appear,
But more his soul's mischief, should he commit sin
And belie his loyal oath to the lord of that house.
"God forbid!" said the bold knight, "That shall not befall!"

"God forbid!" said the bold knight, "That shall not befall!"
With a little fond laughter he lightly let pass
All the words of special weight that were sped his way;

"I find you much at fault," the fair one said,
 "Who can be cold toward a creature so close by your side,
 Of all women in this world most wounded in heart,
 Unless you have a sweetheart, one you hold dearer,
 And allegiance to that lady so loyally knit
 That you will never love another, as now I believe.

And, sir, if it be so, then say it, I beg you;
By all your heart holds dear, hide it no longer with guile."

"Lady, by Saint John,"
He answers with a smile,
"Lover have I none,
Nor will have, yet awhile."

“Those words,” said the woman, “are the worst of all,
But I have had my answer, and hard do I find it!
Kiss me now kindly: I can but go hence
To lament my life long like a maid lovelorn.”

She inclines her head quickly and kisses the knight,
Then straightens with a sigh, and says as she stands,
“Now, dear, ere I depart, do me this pleasure:
Give me some little gift, your glove or the like,
That I may think on you, man, and mourn the less.”

“Now by heaven,” said he, “I wish I had here
My most precious possession, to put it in your hands,
For your deeds, beyond doubt, have often deserved
A repayment far passing my power to bestow.

But a love-token, lady, were of little avail;
It is not to your honor to have at this time
A glove as a guerdon from Gawain's hand,
And I am here on an errand in unknown realms
And have no bearers with baggage with becoming gifts,
Which distresses me, madame, for your dear sake.

A man must keep within his compass: account it neither grief nor slight."

"Nay, noblest knight alive,"

Said that beauty of body white,

"Though you be loath to give,

Yet you shall take, by right."

1815

She reached out a rich ring, wrought all of gold,
With a splendid stone displayed on the band
That flashed before his eyes like a fiery sun;
It was worth a king's wealth, you may well believe.

1820

But he waved it away with these ready words:

"Before God, good lady, I forego all gifts;

None have I to offer, nor any will I take."

And she urged it on him eagerly, and ever he refused,

And vowed in very earnest, prevail she would not.

1825

And she sad to find it so, and said to him then,

"If my ring is refused for its rich cost—

You would not be my debtor for so dear a thing—

I shall give you my girdle; you gain less thereby."

She released a knot lightly, and loosened a belt

1830

That was caught about her kirtle, the bright cloak beneath,

Of a gay green silk, with gold overwrought,

And the borders all bound with embroidery fine,

And this she presses upon him, and pleads with a smile,

Unworthy though it were, that it would not be scorned.

1835

But the man still maintains that he means to accept

Neither gold nor any gift, till by God's grace

The fate that lay before him was fully achieved.

"And be not offended, fair lady, I beg,

And give over your offer, for ever I must 1840 decline.

I am grateful for favor shown

Past all deserts of mine,

And ever shall be your own

True servant, rain or shine."

1845

"Now does my present displease you," she promptly inquired,

"Because it seems in your sight so simple a thing?

And belike, as it is little, it is less to praise,

But if the virtue that invests it were verily known,

It would be held, I hope, in higher esteem.

1850

For the man that possesses this piece of silk,

If he bore it on his body, belted about,

There is no hand under heaven that could hew him down,

For he could not be killed by any craft on earth."

Then the man began to muse, and mainly he thought

1855

It was a pearl for his plight, the peril to come

When he gains the Green Chapel to get his reward:

Could he escape unscathed, the scheme were noble!

Then he bore with her words and withstood them no more,

And she repeated her petition and pleaded anew, 1860
 And he granted it, and gladly she gave him the belt,
 And besought him for her sake to conceal it well,
 Lest the noble lord should know—and the knight agrees
 That not a soul save themselves shall see it thenceforth
 with sight. 1865

He thanked her with fervent heart,
 As often as ever he might;
 Three times, before they part,
 She has kissed the stalwart knight.

Then the lady took her leave, and left him there, 1870
 For more mirth with that man she might not have.
 When she was gone, Sir Gawain got from his bed,
 Arose and arrayed him in his rich attire;
 Tucked away the token the temptress had left,
 Laid it reliably where he looked for it after. 1875

And then with good cheer to the chapel he goes,
 Approached a priest in private, and prayed to be taught
 To lead a better life and lift up his mind,
 Lest he be among the lost when he must leave this world.
 And shamefaced at shrift he showed his misdeeds 1880
 From the largest to the least, and asked the Lord's mercy,
 And called on his confessor to cleanse his soul,
 And he absolved him of his sins as safe and as clean
 As if the dread Day of Judgment should dawn on the morrow.
 And then he made merry amid the fine ladies 1885
 With deft-footed dances and dalliance light,
 As never until now, while the afternoon wore
 away.

He delighted all around him,
 And all agreed, that day, 1890
 They never before had found him
 So gracious and so gay.

Now peaceful be his pasture, and love play him fair!
 The host is on horseback, hunting afield;
 He has finished off this fox that he followed so long: 1895
 As he leapt a low hedge to look for the villain
 Where he heard all the hounds in hot pursuit,
 Reynard comes racing out of a rough thicket,
 And all the rabble in a rush, right at his heels.
 The man beholds the beast, and bides his time, 1900
 And bares his bright sword, and brings it down hard,
 And he blenches from the blade, and backward he starts;
 A hound hurries up and hinders that move,
 And before the horse's feet they fell on him at once
 And ripped the rascal's throat with a wrathful din. 1905
 The lord soon alighted and lifted him free,
 Swiftly snatched him up from the snapping jaws,
 Holds him over his head, halloos with a will,

And the dogs bayed the dirge, that had done him to death.
 Hunters hastened thither with horns at their lips, 1910
 Sounding the assembly till they saw him at last.
 When that comely company was come in together,
 All that bore bugles blew them at once,
 And the others all hallooed, that had no horns.
 It was the merriest medley that ever a man heard, 1915
 The racket that they raised for Sir Reynard's soul that died.

 Their hounds they praised and fed,
 Fondling their heads with pride,
 And they took Reynard the Red 1920
 And stripped away his hide.

And then they headed homeward, for evening had come,
 Blowing many a blast on their bugles bright.
 The lord at long last alights at his house,
 Finds fire on the hearth where the fair knight waits, 1925
 Sir Gawain the good, that was glad in heart.
 With the ladies, that loved him, he lingered at ease;
 He wore a rich robe of blue, that reached to the earth
 And a surcoat lined softly with sumptuous furs;
 A hood of the same hue hung on his shoulders; 1930
 With bands of bright ermine embellished were both.
 He comes to meet the man amid all the folk,
 And greets him good-humoredly, and gaily he says,
 "I shall follow forthwith the form of our pledge
 That we framed to good effect amid fresh-filled cups." 1935
 He clasps him accordingly and kisses him thrice,
 As amiably and as earnestly as ever he could.
 "By heaven," said the host, "you have had some luck Since you took up this trade, if the terms were good."
 "Never trouble about the terms," he returned at once, 1940
 "Since all that I owe here is openly paid."
 "Marry!" said the other man, "mine is much less,
 For I have hunted all day, and nought have I got
 But this foul fox pelt, the fiend take the goods!
 Which but poorly repays those precious things 1945
 That you have cordially conferred, those kisses three so good."

 "Enough!" said Sir Gawain;
 "I thank you, by the rood!"
 And how the fox was slain 1950
 He told him, as they stood.

With minstrelsy and mirth, with all manner of meats,
 They made as much merriment as any men might (Amid laughing of ladies and light hearted girls;
 So gay grew Sir Gawain and the goodly host) 1955
 Unless they had been besotted, or brainless fools.
 The knight joined in jesting with that joyous folk,

Until at last it was late; ere long they must part,
 And be off to their beds, as behooved them each one.
 Then politely his leave of the lord of the house
 Our noble knight takes, and renews his thanks: 1960
 "The courtesies countless accorded me here,
 Your kindness at this Christmas, may heaven's King repay!
 Henceforth, if you will have me, I hold you my liege,
 And so, as I have said, I must set forth tomorrow, 1965
 If I may take some trusty man to teach, as you promised,
 The way to the Green Chapel, that as God allows
 I shall see my fate fulfilled on the first of the year."
 "In good faith," said the good man, "with a good will Every promise on my part shall be fully performed." 1970
 He assigns him a servant to set him on the path,
 To see him safe and sound over the snowy hills,
 To follow the fastest way through forest green and grove.
 Gawain thanks him again, 1975
 So kind his favors prove,
 And of the ladies then
 He takes his leave, with love.

Courteously he kissed them, with care in his heart,
 And often wished them well, with warmest thanks, 1980
 Which they for their part were prompt to repay.
 They commend him to Christ with disconsolate sighs;
 And then in that hall with the household he parts—
 Each man that he met, he remembered to thank
 For his deeds of devotion and diligent pains, 1985
 And the trouble he had taken to tend to his needs;
 And each one as woeful, that watched him depart,
 As he had lived with him loyally all his life long.
 By lads bearing lights he was led to his chamber
 And blithely brought to his bed, to be at his rest. 1990
 How soundly he slept, I presume not to say,
 For there were matters of moment his thoughts might well pursue.
 Let him lie and wait;
 He has little more to do, 1995
 Then listen, while I relate
 How they kept their rendezvous.

Part IV

Now the New Year draws near, and the night passes,
 The day dispels the dark, by the Lord's decree;
 But wild weather awoke in the world without: 2000
 The clouds in the cold sky cast down their snow
 With great gusts from the north, grievous to bear.
 Sleet showered aslant upon shivering beasts;

The wind warbled wild as it whipped from aloft,
 And drove the drifts deep in the dales below. 2005
 Long and well he listens, that lies in his bed;
 Though he lifts not his eyelids, little he sleeps;
 Each crow of the cock he counts without fail.
 Radily from his rest he rose before dawn,
 For a lamp had been left him, that lighted his chamber. 2010
 He called to his chamberlain, who quickly appeared,
 And bade him get him his gear, and gird his good steed,
 And he sets about briskly to bring in his arms,
 And makes ready his master in manner most fit.
 First he clad him in his clothes, to keep out the cold, 2015
 And then his other harness, made handsome anew,
 His plate-armor of proof, polished with pains,
 The rings of his rich mail rid of their rust,
 And all was fresh as at first, and for this he gave thanks indeed. 2020

With pride he wears each piece,
 New-furbished for his need:
 No gayer from here to Greece;
 He bids them bring his steed.

In his richest raiment he robed himself then: 2025
 His crested coat-armor, close-stitched with craft,
 With stones of strange virtue on silk velvet set;
 All bound with embroidery on borders and seams
 And lined warmly and well with furs of the best.
 Yet he left not his love-gift, the lady's girdle; 2030
 Gawain, for his own good, forgot not that:
 When the bright sword was belted and bound on his haunches,
 Then twice with that token he twined him about.
 Sweetly did he swathe him in that swatch of silk,
 That girdle of green so goodly to see, 2035
 That against the gay red showed gorgeous bright.
 Yet he wore not for its wealth that wondrous girdle,
 Nor pride in its pendants, though polished they were,
 Though glittering gold gleamed at the tips,
 But to keep himself safe when consent he must 2040
 To endure a deadly dint, and all defense denied.

And now the bold knight came
 Into the courtyard wide;
 That folk of worthy fame 2045
 He thanks on every side.

Then was Gringolet girt, that was great and huge,
 And had sojourned safe and sound, and savored his fare;
 He pawed the earth in his pride, that princely steed.
 The good knight draws near him and notes well his look, 2050
 And says sagely to himself, and soberly swears,
 "Here is a household in hall that upholds the right!

The man that maintains it, may happiness be his!
Likewise the dear lady, may love betide her!
If thus they in charity cherish a guest 2055
That are honored here on earth, may they have His reward
That reigns high in heaven—and also you all;
And were I to live in this land but a little while,
I should willingly reward you, and well, if I might.”
Then he steps into the stirrup and bestrides his mount; 2060
His shield is shown forth; on his shoulder he casts it;
Strikes the side of his steed with his steel spurs,
And he starts across the stones, nor stands any longer to prance.
On horseback was the swain 2065
That bore his spear and lance;
“May Christ this house maintain
And guard it from mischance!”

The bridge was brought down, and the broad gates
Unbarred and carried back upon both sides; 2070
He commended him to Christ, and crossed over the planks;
Praised the noble porter, who prayed on his knees
That God save Sir Gawain, and bade him good day,
And went on his way alone with the man
That was to lead him ere long to that luckless place 2075
Where the dolorous dint must be dealt him at last.
Under bare boughs they ride, where steep banks rise,
Over high cliffs they climb, where cold snow clings;
The heavens held aloof, but heavy thereunder
Mist mantled the moors, moved on the slopes. 2080
Each hill had a hat, a huge cape of cloud;
Brooks bubbled and broke over broken rocks,
Flashing in freshets that waterfalls fed.
Roundabout was the road that ran through the wood
Till the sun at that season was soon to rise, 2085
that day.
They were on a hilltop high;
The white snow round them lay;
The man that rode nearby
Now bade his master stay. 2090

“For I have seen you here safe at the set time,
And now you are not far from that notable place
That you have sought for so long with such special pains.
But this I say for certain, since I know you, sir knight,
And have your good at heart, and hold you dear— 2095
Would you heed well my words, it were worth your while—
You are rushing into risks that you reck not of:
There is a villain in yon valley, the veriest on earth,
For he is rugged and rude, and ready with his fists,
And most immense in his mold of mortals alive, 2100
And his body bigger than the best four

That are in Arthur's house, Hector ² or any.
 He gets his grim way at the Green Chapel;
 None passes by that place so proud in his arms
 That he does not dash him down with his deadly blows, 2105
 For he is heartless wholly, and heedless of right,
 For be it chaplain or churl that by the Chapel rides,
 Monk or mass-priest or any man else,
 He would as soon strike him dead as stand on two feet.
 Wherefore I say, just as certain as you sit there astride, 2110
 You cannot but be killed, if his counsel holds,
 For he would trounce you in a trice, had you twenty lives for sale.

He has lived long in this land
 And dealt out deadly bale; 2115
 Against his heavy hand
 Your power cannot prevail.

"And so, good Sir Gawain, let the grim man be;
 Go off by some other road, in God's own name!
 Leave by some other land, for the love of Christ, 2120
 And I shall get me home again, and give you my word
 That I shall swear by God's self and the saints above,
 By heaven and by my halidom ³ and other oaths more,
 To conceal this day's deed, nor say to a soul
 That ever you fled for fear from any that I knew." 2125
 "Many thanks!" said the other man—and demurring he speaks—
 "Fair fortune befall you for your friendly words!
 And conceal this day's deed I doubt not you would,
 But though you never told the tale, if I turned back now,
 Forsook this place for fear, and fled, as you say, 2130
 I were a caitiff coward; I could not be excused.
 But I must to the Chapel to chance my luck
 And say to that same man such words as I please, Befall what may befall through Fortune's will or whim. 2135

Though he be a quarrelsome knave
 With a cudgel great and grim,
 The Lord is strong to save:
 His servants trust in Him."

"Marry," said the man, "since you tell me so much, 2140
 And I see you are set to seek your own harm,
 If you crave a quick death, let me keep you no longer!
 Put your helm on your head, your hand on your lance,
 And ride the narrow road down yon rocky slope
 Till it brings you to the bottom of the broad valley. 2145
 Then look a little ahead, on your left hand,
 And you will soon see before you that self-same Chapel,
 And the man of great might that is master there.

2. Either the Trojan hero or one of Arthur's knights.

3. Holiness or, more likely, patron saints.

Now goodbye in God's name, Gawain the noble!
For all the world's wealth I would not stay here, 2150
Or go with you in this wood one footstep further!"
He tarried no more to talk, but turned his bridle,
Hit his horse with his heels as hard as he might,
Leaves the knight alone, and off like the wind goes leaping. 2155

"By God," said Gawain then,
"I shall not give way to weeping;
God's will be done, amen!
I commend me to His keeping."

He puts his heels to his horse, and picks up the path;
Goes in beside a grove where the ground is steep, 2160
Rides down the rough slope right to the valley;
And then he looked a little about him—the landscape was wild,
And not a soul to be seen, nor sign of a dwelling,
But high banks on either hand hemmed it about, 2165
With many a ragged rock and rough-hewn crag;
The skies seemed scored by the scowling peaks.
Then he halted his horse, and hove there a space,
And sought on every side for a sight of the Chapel,
But no such place appeared, which puzzled him sore, 2170
Yet he saw some way off what seemed like a mound,
A hillock high and broad, hard by the water,
Where the stream fell in foam down the face of the steep
And bubbled as if it boiled on its bed below.
The knight urges his horse, and heads for the knoll; 2175
Leaps lightly to earth; loops well the rein
Of his steed to a stout branch, and stations him there.
He strides straight to the mound, and strolls all about,
Much wondering what it was, but no whit the wiser;
It had a hole at one end, and on either side, 2180
And was covered with coarse grass in clumps all without,
And hollow all within, like some old cave,
Or a crevice of an old crag—he could not discern aright.

"Can this be the Chapel Green?
Alack!" said the man, "Here might 2185
The devil himself be seen
Saying matins at black midnight!"

"Now by heaven," said he, "it is bleak hereabouts;
This prayer-house is hideous, half-covered with grass! 2190
Well may the grim man mantled in green
Hold here his orisons, in hell's own style!
Now I feel it is the Fiend, in my five wits,
That has tempted me to this tryst, to take my life;
This is a Chapel of mischance, may the mischief take it!
As accursed a country church as I came upon ever!" 2195

With his helm on his head, his lance in his hand,
 He stalks toward the steep wall of that strange house.
 Then he heard, on the hill, behind a hard rock,
 Beyond the brook, from the bank, a most barbarous din:
 Lord! it clattered in the cliff fit to cleave it in two,
 As one upon a grindstone ground a great scythe!
 Lord! it whirled like a mill-wheel whirling about!
 Lord! it echoed loud and long, lamentable to hear!
 Then "By heaven," said the bold knight, "That business up there

2200

2205

Is arranged for my arrival, or else I am much misled.

Let God work! Ah me!
 All hope of help has fled!
 Forfeit my life may be
 But noise I do not dread."

2210

Then he listened no longer, but loudly he called,
 "Who has power in this place, high parley to hold?
 For none greets Sir Gawain, or gives him good day;
 If any would a word with him, let him walk forth
 And speak now or never, to speed his affairs."
 "Abide," said one on the bank above over his head,
 "And what I promised you once shall straightway be given."
 Yet he stayed not his grindstone, nor stinted its noise,
 But worked awhile at his whetting before he would rest,
 And then he comes around a crag, from a cave in the rocks,
 Hurling out of hiding with a hateful weapon,
 A Danish ⁴ ax devised for that day's deed,
 With a broad blade and bright, bent in a curve,
 Filed to a fine edge—four feet it measured
 By the length of the lace that was looped round the haft.
 And in form as at first, the fellow all green,
 His lordly face and his legs, his locks and his beard,
 Save that firm upon two feet forward he strides,
 Sets a hand on the ax-head, the haft to the earth;
 When he came to the cold stream, and cared not to wade,
 He vaults over on his ax, and advances amain
 On a broad bank of snow, overbearing and brisk of mood.

2215

2220

2225

2230

Little did the knight incline
 When face to face they stood;
 Said the other man, "Friend mine,
 It seems your word holds good!"

2235

"God love you, Sir Gawain!" said the Green Knight then,
 "And well met this morning, man, at my place!
 And you have followed me faithfully and found me betimes,
 And on the business between us we both are agreed:

2240

4. I.e., long-bladed.

Twelve months ago today you took what was yours,
And you at this New Year must yield me the same.
And we have met in these mountains, remote from all eyes: 2245
There is none here to halt us or hinder our sport;
Unhasp your high helm, and have here your wages;
Make no more demur than I did myself
When you hacked off my head with one hard blow."
"No, by God," said Sir Gawain, "that granted me life, 2250
I shall grudge not the guerdon, grim though it prove;
Bestow but one stroke, and I shall stand still,
And you may lay on as you like till the last of my part be paid."

He proffered, with good grace, 2255
His bare neck to the blade,
And feigned a cheerful face:
He scorned to seem afraid.

Then the grim man in green gathers his strength,
Heaves high the heavy ax to hit him the blow. 2260
With all the force in his frame he fetches it aloft,
With a grimace as grim as he would grind him to bits;
Had the blow he bestowed been as big as he threatened,
A good knight and gallant had gone to his grave.
But Gawain at the great ax glanced up aside 2265
As down it descended with death-dealing force,
And his shoulders shrank a little from the sharp iron.
Abruptly the brawny man breaks off the stroke,
And then reproved with proud words that prince among knights.
"You are not Gawain the glorious," the green man said, 2270
"That never fell back on field in the face of the foe,
And now you flee for fear, and have felt no harm:
Such news of that knight I never heard yet!
I moved not a muscle when you made to strike,
Nor caviled at the cut in King Arthur's house; 2275
My head fell to my feet, yet steadfast I stood,
And you, all unharmed, are wholly dismayed—
Wherefore the better man I, by all odds,
must be."

Said Gawain, "Strike once more; 2280
I shall neither flinch nor flee;
But if my head falls to the floor
There is no mending me!"

"But go on, man, in God's name, and get to the point!
Deliver me my destiny, and do it out of hand, 2285
For I shall stand to the stroke and stir not an inch Till your ax has hit home—on my honor I swear it!"
"Have at thee then!" said the other, and heaves it aloft,
And glares down as grimly as he had gone mad.
He made a mighty feint, but marred not his hide; 2290

Withdrew the ax adroitly before it did damage.
 Gawain gave no ground, nor glanced up aside,
 But stood still as a stone, or else a stout stump
 That is held in hard earth by a hundred roots.
 Then merrily does he mock him, the man all in green: 2295
 "So now you have your nerve again, I needs must strike;
 Uphold the high knighthood that Arthur bestowed,
 And keep your neck-bone clear, if this cut allows!"
 Then was Gawain gripped with rage, and grimly he said,
 "Why, thrash away, tyrant, I tire of your threats; 2300
You make such a scene, you must frighten yourself.
 Said the green fellow, "In faith, so fiercely you speak
 That I shall finish this affair, nor further grace allow."

He stands prepared to strike 2305
 And scowls with both lip and brow;
 No marvel if the man mislike
 Who can hope no rescue now.

He gathered up the grim ax and guided it well:
 Let the barb at the blade's end brush the bare throat; 2310
 He hammered down hard, yet harmed him no whit
 Save a scratch on one side, that severed the skin;
 The end of the hooked edge entered the flesh,
 And a little blood lightly leapt to the earth.
 And when the man beheld his own blood bright on the snow, 2315
 He sprang a spear's length with feet spread wide,
 Seized his high helm, and set it on his head,
 Shoved before his shoulders the shield at his back,
 Bares his trusty blade, and boldly he speaks—
 Not since he was a babe born of his mother 2320
 Was he once in this world one-half so blithe—
 "Have done with your hacking—harry me no more!
 I have borne, as behooved, one blow in this place;
 If you make another move I shall meet it midway
 And promptly. I promise you, pay back each blow 2325 with brand.

One stroke acquits me here;
 So did our covenant stand
 In Arthur's court last year—
 Wherefore, sir, hold your hand!" 2330

He lowers the long ax and leans on it there,
 Sets his arms on the head, the haft on the earth,
 And beholds the bold knight that bides there afoot,
 How he faces him fearless, fierce in full arms,
 And plies him with proud words—it pleases him well. 2335
 Then once again gaily to Gawain he calls,
 And in a loud voice and lusty, delivers these words:
 "Bold fellow, on this field your anger forbear!

No man has made demands here in manner uncouth,
Nor done, save as duly determined at court. 2340
I owed you a hit and you have it; be happy therewith!
The rest of my rights here I freely resign.
Had I been a bit busier, a buffet, perhaps,
I could have dealt more directly, and done you some harm.
First I flourished with a feint, in frolicsome mood, 2345
And left your hide unhurt—and here I did well
By the fair terms we fixed on the first night;
And fully and faithfully you followed accord:
Gave over all your gains as a good man should.
A second feint, sir, I assigned for the morning 2350
You kissed my comely wife—each kiss you restored.
For both of these there behooved but two feigned blows
by right.

True men pay what they owe;
No danger then in sight. 2355
You failed at the third throw,
So take my tap, sir knight.

“For that is my belt about you, that same braided girdle,
My wife it was that wore it; I know well the tale,
And the count of your kisses and your conduct too, 2360
And the wooing of my wife—it was all my scheme!
She made trial of a man most faultless by far
Of all that ever walked over the wide earth;
As pearls to white peas, more precious and prized,
So is Gawain, in good faith, to other gay knights. 2365
Yet you lacked, sir, a little in loyalty there,
But the cause was not cunning, nor courtship either,
But that you loved your own life; the less, then, to blame.”
The other stout knight in a study stood a long while,
So gripped with grim rage that his great heart shook. 2370
All the blood of his body burned in his face
As he shrank back in shame from the man’s sharp speech.
The first words that fell from the fair knight’s lips:
“Accursed be a cowardly and covetous heart!
In you is villainy and vice, and virtue laid low!” 2375
Then he grasps the green girdle and lets go the knot,
Hands it over in haste, and hotly he says:
“Behold there my falsehood, ill hap betide it!
Your cut taught me cowardice, care for my life,
And coveting came after, contrary both 2380
To largesse and loyalty belonging to knights.
Now am I faulty and false, that fearful was ever
Of disloyalty and lies, bad luck to them both!
and greed.

I confess, knight, in this place, 2385
Most dire is my misdeed;
Let me gain back your good grace,
And thereafter I shall take heed.”

Then the other laughed aloud, and lightly he said,
 "Such harm as I have had, I hold it quite healed. 2390
 You are so fully confessed, your failings made known,
 And bear the plain penance of the point of my blade,
 I hold you polished as a pearl, as pure and as bright
 As you had lived free of fault since first you were born.
 And I give you, sir, this girdle that is gold-hemmed 2395
 And green as my garments, that, Gawain, you may
 Be mindful of this meeting when you mingle in throng
 With nobles of renown—and known by this token
 How it chanced at the Green Chapel, to chivalrous knights.
 And you shall in this New Year come yet again 2400
 And we shall finish out our feast in my fair hall,
 with cheer."

He urged the knight to stay,
 And said, "With my wife so dear
 We shall see you friends this day, 2405
 Whose enmity touched you near."

"Indeed," said the doughty knight, and doffed his high helm,
 And held it in his hands as he offered his thanks,
 "I have lingered long enough—may good luck be yours,
 And He reward you well that all worship bestows! 2410
 And commend me to that comely one, your courteous wife,
 Both herself and that other, my honoured ladies,
 That have trapped their true knight in their trammels so quaint.
 But if a dullard should dote, deem it no wonder,
 And through the wiles of a woman be wooed into sorrow, 2415
 For so was Adam by one, when the world began,
 And Solomon by many more, and Samson the mighty—
 Delilah was his doom, and David thereafter
 Was beguiled by Bathsheba, and bore much distress;
 Now these were vexed by their devices—'twere a very joy 2420
 Could one but learn to love, and believe them not.
 For these were proud princes, most prosperous of old,
 Past all lovers lucky, that languished under heaven,
 bemused.

And one and all fell prey 2425
 To women that they had used;
 If I be led astray,
 Methinks I may be excused.

"But your girdle, God love you! I gladly shall take
 And be pleased to possess, not for the pure gold, 2430
 Nor the bright belt itself, nor the beauteous pendants,
 Nor for wealth, nor worldly state, nor workmanship fine,
 But a sign of excess it shall seem oftentimes
 When I ride in renown, and remember with shame
 The faults and the frailty of the flesh perverse, 2435
 How its tenderness entices the foul taint of sin;
 And so when praise and high prowess have pleased my heart,
 A look at this love-lace will lower my pride.

But one thing would I learn, if you were not loath,
 Since you are lord of yonder land where I have long sojourned 2440
 With honor in your house—may you have His reward
 That upholds all the heavens, highest on throne!
 How runs your right name?—and let the rest go.”
 “That shall I give you gladly,” said the Green Knight then;
 “Bercilak de Hautdesert this barony I hold, 2445
 Through the might of Morgan le Faye,⁵ that lodges at my house,
 By subtleties of science and sorcerers’ arts,
 The mistress of Merlin,⁶ she has caught many a man,
 For sweet love in secret she shared sometime
 With that wizard, that knows well each one of your knights 2450 and you.

Morgan the Goddess, she,
 So styled by title true;
 None holds so high degree
 That her arts cannot subdue. 2455

“She guided me in this guise to your glorious hall,
 To assay, if such it were, the surfeit of pride
 That is rumored of the retinue of the Round Table.
 She put this shape upon me to puzzle your wits,
 To afflict the fair queen, and frighten her to death 2460
 With awe of that elvish man that eerily spoke
 With his head in his hand before the high table.
 She was with my wife at home, that old withered lady,
 Your own aunt ⁷ is she, Arthur’s half-sister,
 The Duchess’ daughter of Tintagel, that dear King Uther 2465
 Got Arthur on after, that honored is now.
 And therefore, good friend, come feast with your aunt;
 Make merry in my house; my men hold you dear,
 And I wish you as well, sir, with all my heart,
 As any mortal man, for your matchless faith.” 2470
 But the knight said him nay, that he might by no means.
 They clasped then and kissed, and commended each other
 To the Prince of Paradise, and parted with one assent.

Gawain sets out anew; 2475
 Toward the court his course is bent;
 And the knight all green in hue,
 Wheresoever he wished, he went.

Wild ways in the world our worthy knight rides
 On Gringolet, that by grace had been granted his life. 2480
 He harbored often in houses, and often abroad,
 And with many valiant adventures verily he met
 That I shall not take time to tell in this story.

5. Arthur’s half-sister, an enchantress who sometimes abetted him, sometimes made trouble for him.

6. The wise magician who had helped Arthur become king.

7. Morgan was the daughter of Igraine, Duchess of Tintagel, and her husband the Duke; Igraine conceived Arthur when his father Uther lay with her through one of Merlin’s trickeries.

The hurt was whole that he had had in his neck,
 And the bright green belt on his body he bore, 2485
 Oblique, like a baldric, bound at his side,
 Below his left shoulder, laced in a knot,
 In betokening of the blame he had borne for his fault;
 And so to court in due course he comes safe and sound.
 Bliss abounded in hall when the high-born heard 2490
 That good Gawain was come; glad tidings they thought it.
 The king kisses the knight, and the queen as well,
 And many a comrade came to clasp him in arms,
 And eagerly they asked, and awesomely he told,
 Confessed all his cares and discomfitures many, 2495
 How it chanced at the Chapel, what cheer made the knight,
 The love of the lady, the green lace at last.
 The nick on his neck he naked displayed
 That he got in his disgrace at the Green Knight's hands, alone. 2500

With rage in heart he speaks,
 And grieves with many a groan;
 The blood burns in his cheeks
 For shame at what must be shown.

"Behold, sir," said he, and handles the belt, 2505
 "This is the blazon of the blemish that I bear on my neck;
 This is the sign of sore loss that I have suffered there
 For the cowardice and coveting that I came to there;
 This is the badge of false faith that I was found in there, 2510
 And I must bear it on my body till I breathe my last.
 For one may keep a deed dark, but undo it no whit,
 For where a fault is made fast, it is fixed evermore."
 The king comforts the knight, and the court all together
 Agree with gay laughter and gracious intent
 That the lords and the ladies belonging to the Table, 2515
 Each brother of that band, a baldric should have,
 A belt borne oblique, of a bright green,
 To be worn with one accord for that worthy's sake.
 So that was taken as a token by the Table Round,
 And he honored that had it, evermore after, 2520
 As the best book of knighthood bids it be known.
 In the old days of Arthur this happening befell;
 The books of Brutus' deeds bear witness thereto
 Since Brutus, the bold knight, embarked for this land
 After the siege ceased at Troy and the city fared 2525 amiss.

Many such, ere we were born,
 Have befallen here, ere this.
 May He that was crowned with thorn
 Bring all men to His bliss! Amen. 2530

Hony Soyt Qui Mal Pense ⁸

8. "Shame be to the man who has evil in his mind." This is the motto of the Order of the Garter, founded ca. 1350:

apparently a copyist of the poem associated this order with the one founded to honor Gawain.

PEARL

(ca. 1375-1400)

Pearl is preserved in the same manuscript as Sir Gawain and the Green Knight and is generally believed to have been written by the same poet. Like Piers Plowman, it is a dream vision concerning love and, again like Piers Plowman, it purports to be written by a Dreamer who needs to learn in his heart Christian truths that he already knows in his head. In Pearl the narrator's grief for the loss of a jewel is so extravagant as to suggest that the pearl he speaks of must stand for something more irreplaceable than a mere ornament. Yet it is only gradually that we come to realize that the pearl-bedecked maiden he meets in his dream is the thing he has lost, and that on earth she was his infant daughter—the adult form in which he sees her is of course “spiritual.” It is her mission to explain to him that his grief for her death is not only extravagant but according to Christian principles wrong, for she has become a Bride of the Lamb of God in a heaven whose physical characteristics are those of the New Jerusalem described by St. John in the Book of Revelation. She resolves the Dreamer's doubts about infant salvation—whether those who die in infancy can attain heaven—which apparently increased his grief for her death. But it is not without a struggle—and some impatience—that she manages to do this, for the Dreamer remains stubbornly earth-bound: he cannot easily accept the fact that his daughter has become so exalted in heaven, and fears that she has misbehaved, pushing herself forward too aggressively. He has trouble comprehending the paradox that in heaven varying degrees of honor and total equality exist simultaneously, and one feels that even after his dream he will find it hard to accept in his heart Pearl's doctrine that the pearl he ought to seek is not herself but the one the merchant in Matthew gave all his wealth for—the kingdom of heaven. The vision he is granted at the end of the poem is broken off when he tries to cross the stream that separates him from the Heavenly City because he is eager to rejoin his Pearl, whom he sees among the 144,000 virgins (as described by St. John) before the throne of the Lamb. He awakens from his dream a chastened and perhaps more patient man, who, like Langland's Will, has been taught that he must apprehend more profoundly what he already knew.

Technically the poem imitates a perfectly rounded gem. It consists of twenty sections, all but one of which contain five twelve-line stanzas with the inordinately difficult rhyme scheme abababbcbc, not unexampled in Middle English poetry but never elsewhere attempted in so long a poem. Within the sections, the last word of each stanza is the same (in form if not in meaning) and is repeated in the first line of the following stanza, and this word also appears in the first line of the succeeding section. The chain thus formed is made whole by the fact that the last lines of the poem echo, with expanded meaning, the first: Perfection of form is broken only by Section XV, which contains six instead of five stanzas, so that the poem is not of the round number of 1,200 lines, but of 1,212. Perhaps the poet intentionally broke the pattern because he felt that any jewel of man's making must be imperfect; or perhaps he was responding to the fact that the multiple $12 \times 12 = 144$, and that 144 is a reflection of the 144,000 virgins in the Book of Revelation that provides much of the imaginative stimulus for the poem.

Pearl¹

I

1

Pearl, that a prince is well content
 To give a circle of gold to wear,
 Boldly I say, all orient
 Brought forth none precious like to her;
 So comely in every ornament, 5
 So slender her sides, so smooth they were,
 Ever my mind was bound and bent
 To set her apart without a peer.
 In a garden of herbs I lost my dear;
 Through grass to ground away it shot; 10
 Now, lovesick, the heavy loss I bear
 Of that secret pearl without a spot.

2

Since in that spot it sped from me so,
 Often I watched and wished for that grace
 That once was wont to banish woe 15
 And bless with brightness all my days;
 That clutches my heart in cruel throe
 And causes my blood to rage and race,
 Yet sweeter songs could no man know
 Than silence taught my ear to trace; 20
 And many there came, to think of her face
 With cover of clay so coldly fraught:
 O earth, you mar a gem past praise,
 My secret pearl without a spot.

3

That spot with spice must spring and spread 25
 Where riches rotted in narrow room;
 Blossoms white and blue and red
 Lift now alight in blaze of noon;
 Flower and fruit could never fade
 Where pearl plunged deep in earthen tomb, 30
 For the seed must die to bear the blade
 That the wheat may be brought to harvest home.²

1. The verse translation, which follows the intricate pattern of the original, is by Marie Borroff (1976).

 2. John xii.24.

Good out of good to all and some:
Such a seed could never have come to naught
Nor spice in splendor spare to bloom
From that precious pearl without a spot. 35

4
To that especial spot I hied
And entered that same garden green
In August at a festive tide
When corn is cut with scythe-edge keen. 40
On the mound where pearl went tumbling wide,
Leaf vied with leaf in shade and sheen:
Gillyflower and ginger on every side
And peonies peerless blooming between.
But fairer yet, and all unseen, 45
Was the fragrance that my senses sought;
There, I know, is the dear demesne
Of my precious pearl without a spot.

5
Before that spot with head inclined
I stretched my hand in stark despair; 50
My heart lamented, deaf and blind,
Though reason reconciled my care.
I mourned my pearl so close confined
With thoughts in throng contending there;
Comfort of Christ might come to mind 55
But wretched will would not forbear.
I fell upon that flower-bed fair;
Such odor seized my brain distraught
I slipped into slumber unaware,
On that precious pearl without a spot. 60

II

1
My soul forsook that spot in space
And left my body on earth to bide.
My spirit sped, by God's good grace,
On a quest where marvels multiplied.
I knew not where in the world it was, 65
But I saw I was set where cliffs divide;
A forest flourished in that place
Where many rich rocks might be descried.
The glory that flashed there far and wide
Eye could not credit, nor mind invent; 70
Pure cloth-of-gold were pale beside
Such rich and rare embellishment.

2
Embellished were those hills in view
With crystal cliffs as clear as day
And groves of trees with boles as blue 75

As indigo silks of rich assay;
 The leaves, like silver burnished new,
 Slide rustling rife on every spray;
 As shifts of cloud let sunshine through,
 They shot forth light in shimmering play. 80
 The gravelstones that strewed the way
 Were precious pearls of orient;
 The beams of the sun but blind and gray
 Beside such bright embellishment.

3

Amid those hills embellished bright 85
 My sorrows fled in full retreat;
 Fragrance of fruits with great delight
 Filled me like food that mortals eat.
 Birds of all colors fanned in flight
 Their iridescent pinions fleet, 90
 But lute or lyre, by craft or sleight,
 Could not make music half so sweet,
 For while in time their wings they beat
 In glad accord their voices blent;
 With more of mirth might no man meet 95
 Than hear each brave embellishment.

4

So all embellished was the land
 Where Fortune bears me on my way;
 No tongue is worthy to command
 Fit words those splendors to display. 100
 I walked along with bliss at hand;
 No slope so steep to make me stay;
 The further, the fairer the pear trees stand,
 The spice-plants spread, the blossoms sway,
 And hedgerows run by banks as gay 105
 As glittering golden filament;
 I came to the shore of a waterway:
 Dear God, what brave embellishment!

5

Embellishing those waters deep,
 Banks of pure beryl greet my gaze; 110
 Sweetly the eddies swirl and sweep
 With a rest and a rush in murmuring phrase;
 Stones in the stream their colors steep,
 Gleaming like glass where sunbeam strays,
 As stars, while men of the marshlands sleep, 115
 Flash in winter from frosty space;
 For every one was a gem to praise,
 A sapphire or emerald opulent,
 That seemed to set the pool ablaze,
 So brilliant their embellishment. 120

III

1

Embellished with such wondrous grace
 Were wood and water and shining plain,
 My pleasures multiplied apace,
 Conquered my cares, dispelled my pain.
 By the brink of a river that runs a race 125
 Blissful I walked with busy brain;
 The more I explored that plashy place
 The greater strength did gladness gain.
 As proof of Fortune's purpose plain
 Makes a man's heart to sink or soar, 130
 He whom she plies with bliss or bane
 Of what he draws is dealt still more.

2

More of bliss was there to prize
 Than ever my tongue could testify,
 For earthly heart could not suffice 135
 To sustain one tenth of that pure joy.
 It could not be but Paradise
 Lay beyond those noble banks, thought I,
 And the stream itself seemed a device,
 A mark to know a boundary by. 140
 Those peerless precincts to espy
 I need but gain the further shore;
 But I dared not wade, for the water ran high,
 And longing mastered me more and more.

3

More than ever and ever the more 145
 To cross that river was all my care,
 For lovely though this landscape were,
 What lay beyond was past compare.
 I stared about, scanning the shore
 For a ford to afford me thoroughfare, 150
 But dangers direr than before
 Appeared, the more I wandered there.
 And still it seemed I should not forbear
 For dangers, with delights in store;
 But now was broached a new affair 155
 My mind was moved by, more and more.

4

More marvels now amazed me quite:
 Beyond that stream, strange to behold,
 There rose a cliff of crystal bright
 With resplendent rays all aureoled. 160
 At the foot was seated in plain sight
 A maiden child of mortal mold,

A gracious lady gowned in white;
 I knew her well, I had seen her of old.
 As fine-spun floss of burnished gold, 165
 So shone she, peerless, as of yore;
 I gazed on her with joy untold,
 The longer, I knew her more and more.

5

The more I mused on that fair face,
 The person of that most precious one, 170
 Such gladness grew in my heart by grace
 As little before had been, or none.
 I longed to call across that space
 But found my power of speech had flown;
 To meet her in so strange a place— 175
 Such a sight, in truth, might shock or stun!
 Then raised she up her brow, that shone
 All ivory pale on that far shore,
 That stabbed my heart to look upon
 And ever the longer, more and more. 180

IV

1

More dread diminished my delight;
 I stood stock-still and dared not call.
 With eyes wide open and mouth shut tight
 I hived there tame as hawk in hall.
 Unearthly, I knew, must be that plight; 185
 I dreaded much what might befall,
 Lest she I viewed should vanish quite
 And leave me there to stare and stall.
 That slender one, so smooth, so small,
 Unblemished, void of every vice, 190
 Rose up in robes imperial,
 A precious pearl in pearls of price.

2

Pearls of price in ample store
 Were there to see by grace divine
 As she, approaching, shone on shore
 Like fleurs-de-lys³ to kings condign. 195
 Her surcoat of white linen pure⁴
 Had open sides of fair design,
 And filigree on bands it bore
 Where lavish pearls their luster join, 200
 And lappets large, with double line
 Of pearls set round in that same guise;
 Her gown of that same linen fine,
 And all bedecked with pearls of price.

3. Flower of the iris.

4. See Revelation xix.7-8 (cf. VII., 5.5-6). "Surcoat": outer coat.

3

Her priceless crown with pearls alone	205
Was set, in fashion fit and fair;
High pinnacles upon it shone;
And florets carved with craft and care.
Other headdress had she none
To frame her ivory forehead bare;	210
As earl or duke by royal throne,
So sage she seemed, so grave her air.
About her shoulders fell her hair
Like gold spun fine by artifice,
Whose deepest hue yet had a share	215
Of pallor pure of pearls of price.

4

Pearls of price in rows ornate
On hem, on side, on wristband rest;
No other gem could suit her state
Who was in white so richly dressed.	220
But one pure pearl, a wonder great,
Was set secure upon her breast;
A man might ponder long and late
Ere its full worth were well assessed.
I think no tongue could ever attest	225
A discourteous thought of that device,
So white it was, so wholly blessed,
And proudest placed of pearls of price.

5

In pearls of price she moved at ease
Toward the rim of the river that flowed so free;	230
No gladder man from here to Greece
Than I, that blessed sight to see.
She was nearer my heart than aunt or niece:
So much the more my joy must be;
She proffered parley in sign of peace,	235
Bowed womanlike with bended knee,
Took off her crown of high degree
And bade me welcome with courteous voice;
That I was born O well for me
To greet that girl in pearls of price.	240

V

1

"O pearl," said I, "in pearls of price,
Are you my pearl come back again,
Lost and lamented with desolate sighs
In darkest night, alone and in vain?
Since you slipped to ground where grasses rise	245
I wander pensive, oppressed with pain,
And you in the bliss of Paradise,
Beyond all passion and strife and strain.

What fate removed you from earth's domain
 And left me hapless and heartsick there? 250
 Since parting was set between us twain
 I have been a joyless jeweler."

2

That jewel then with fair gems fraught
 Lifted her face with eyes of gray,
 Set on her crown and stood in thought, 255
 And soberly then I heard her say,
 "Sir, your tale is told for naught,
 To say your pearl has gone away
 That is closed in a coffer so cunningly wrought
 As this same garden green and gay, 260
 And here forever in joy to stay
 Where lack nor loss can never come near;
 Here were a casket fit to display
 A prize for a proper jeweler.

3

"But, jeweler, if your mind is bound 265
 To mourn for a gem in solitude,
 Your care has set you a course unsound,
 And a cause of a moment maddens your mood;
 You lost a rose that grew in the ground:
 A flower that fails and is not renewed, 270
 But such is the coffer closing it round,
 With the worth of a pearl it is now imbued.
 And fate, you say, has robbed you of good,
 That rendered you profit free and clear;
 You blame a blessing misunderstood: 275
 You are no proper jeweler."

4

A jewel to me then was this guest
 And jewels her gentle sayings were.
 "O blissful one," I said, "and best,
 You have healed me wholly of heartache here! 280
 To be excused I make request:
 My pearl was away, I knew not where;
 Now I have found it, now I shall rest,
 And live with it ever, and make good cheer,
 And love the Lord and his laws revere 285
 That brought me the blissful sight of her.
 Let me once cross and behold you near,
 And I am a joyful jeweler!"

5

"Jeweler," said that gem at this,
 "Such mockery comes of mortal pride! 290
 Most ill-advised your answer is
 And errors grave your thoughts misguide.
 Three statements you have made amiss;

Your words from your wit have wandered wide;
 You think me set in this vale of bliss 295
 For so you see me, the brook beside;
 The second, you say you shall abide
 With me in this far country here;
 The third, to cross this deep divide,
 Behooves no joyful jeweler. 300

VI

1

"I hold that jeweler little to praise
 Who believes no more than meets the eye,
 And little courtesy he displays
 Who doubts the word of the Lord on high
 That faithfully pledged your flesh to raise 305
 Though Fortune made it fail and die;
 They twist the sense of his words and ways
 Who believe what they see, and else deny;
 And that is pride and obstinacy
 And ill accords with honest intent, 310
 To think each tale must be a lie
 Except his reason give assent.

2

"Say, do you not, dissenting, strive
 Against God's will that all should uphold?
 Here in this land you mean to live— 315
 You might ask leave to make so bold!
 Nor can you with such ease contrive
 To cross this water deep and cold;
 Your body fair, with senses five,
 Must first sink down in mire and mold, 320
 For in Eden garden, in days of old,
 Our fathers' father his life misspent;
 Each man must suffer a death foretold
 Ere God to this crossing give consent."

3

"Consent," said I, "to that hard fate 325
 And you have cleft my heart in twain.
 That which I lost I found but late—
 And must I now forgo it again?
 Why must I meet it and miss it straight?
 My precious pearl has doubled my pain. 330
 What use is treasure in worldly state
 If a man must lose it and mourn in vain?
 Now little I reck what trials remain,
 What bitter exile and banishment,
 For Fortune is bound to be my bane 335
 And suffer I must by her consent."

4

"Such dire presentiments of distress,"
 Said she, "I cannot comprehend;
 But grief for a loss that matters less
 Makes many miss what might amend. 340
 Better to cross yourself, and bless
 The name of the Lord, whatever he send;
 No good can come of your willfulness;
 Who bears bad luck must learn to bend.
 Though like a stricken doe, my friend, 345
 You plunge and bray, with loud lament,
 This way and that, yet in the end
 As he decrees, you must consent.

5

"Dissent, indict him through the years,
 His step stirs not one inch astray. 350
 No tittle is gained for all your tears,
 Though you should grieve and never be gay.
 Abate your bluster, be not so fierce,
 And seek his grace as soon as you may,
 For prayer has power to bite and pierce 355
 And call compassion into play.
 His mercy can wipe your tears away,
 Redeem your loss, restore content,
 But, grudge or be glad, agree or gainsay,
 All lies with him to give consent." 360

VII

1

Then I assented, answering in dread,
 "Let not my Lord be wrathful here
 Though blindly I rave, with speech ill-spiced;
 Mourning had made me mad, or near.
 As water flows from a fountainhead 365
 I cast myself in his mercy clear;
 Heap no reproaches on my head
 Though I should stray, my dearest dear,
 But speak in charity and good cheer;
 Be merciful, remembering this: 370
 You gave me a heavy grief to bear,
 Who once were ground of all my bliss.

2

"My bliss you have been and bitterest woe;
 The grief was the greater as time ran on;
 Since last I looked for you high and low 375
 I could not tell where my pearl had gone.
 I rejoice in it now as long ago,
 And when we parted we were as one;
 God forbid I should vex you so—

We meet so seldom at any milestone. 380
 Your courtesy is second to none;
 I am of earth, and speak amiss,
 But the mercy of Christ and Mary and John,⁵
 These are the ground of all my bliss.

3
 "I see you set in bliss profound, 385
 And I afflicted, felled by fate;
 And little you care though I am bound
 To suffer harm and hardship great;
 But since we are met upon this ground
 I would beseech, without debate, 390
 That in sober speech you would expound
 The life you lead both early and late.
 Indeed, I am glad that your estate
 Is raised to such honor and worthiness;
 It is my joy to contemplate 395
 And royal road of all my bliss."

4
 "Now bliss befall you!" she replied
 In form and feature that had no peer,
 "And welcome here to walk and bide;
 Such words are grateful to my ear. 400
 Headstrong hearts and arrogant pride,
 I tell you, are wholly detested here;
 My Lord the Lamb is loath to chide,
 For all are meek who behold him near.
 And when in his house you shall appear, 405
 Be wholly devout in humbleness,
 For that delights my Lord so dear
 That is the ground of all my bliss."

5
 "A blissful life I lead, you say;
 You ask in what station I reside; 410
 You know when pearl first slipped away
 I was tender of age, by time untried.
 But my Lord the Lamb whom all obey,
 He took me to him to be his bride,
 Crowned me queen in bliss to stay, 415
 Forever and ever glorified.
 And seized of his heritage far and wide
 Am I, his love, being wholly his;
 His royal rank, his praise, his pride
 Are root and ground of all my bliss." 420

5. St. John the apostle, generally identified in the Middle Ages with the author of the Book of Revelation.

VIII

1

"Oh, blissful one, can this be right?"
 Said I, "Forgive me if I should err;
 Are you the queen of heaven's height
 Whom we in this world must all revere?
 We believe in Mary, a virgin bright, 425
 Who bore to man God's Son so dear;
 Now who could assume her crown, by right,
 But she in some feature fairer were?
 Yet as none is lovely like unto her,
 We call her Phoenix of Araby,⁶ 430
 Sent flawless from the artificer
 As was our Queen of courtesy."

2

"Courteous Queen!" that blithe one said
 Kneeling to ground with upturned face,
 "Matchless Mother, most lovely Maid, 435
 Blesséd beginner of every grace!"
 Then rose she up, and silent stayed,
 And spoke to me across that space:
 "Sir, gifts are gained here, and prizes paid,
 But none on another presumes or preys. 440
 Empress peerless ever to praise
 Of heaven and earth and hell is she,
 Yet puts no man from his rightful place,
 For she is Queen of courtesy.

3

"The court of the kingdom whose crown I bear 445
 Has a property by nature and name:
 Each who gains admittance there
 Is king of that realm, or queen of the same,
 And none would lessen the others' share
 But each one, glad of the others' fame, 450
 Would wish their crowns five times as fair,
 Had they the power of amending them;
 But she who bore Jesu in Bethlehem
 Over all of us here has sovereignty,
 And none of our number carps at that claim, 455
 For she is Queen of courtesy.

4

"By courtesy, so says St. Paul,⁷
 We are members of Christ in joy profound,
 As head, arms, legs, and navel and all
 Are parts of one person hale and sound; 460

6. A mythical Arabian bird of which there was said to be only one, which burned itself alive every five or six centuries and then rose rejuvenated from its ashes.

7. I Corinthians xii.12-21, 26-27.

Likewise each Christian soul I call
 A loyal limb of the Lord renowned;
 Now what dispute could ever befall
 Between two limbs in a body bound?
 Though hand or wrist bear a golden round, 465
 Your head will never the sornier be:
 Just so in love is each of us crowned
 A king or queen by courtesy."

5

"Courtesy, no doubt, there is,
 And charity rife your ranks among; 470
 Yet truly—take it not amiss—
 [I cannot but think your words are wrong.]⁸
 You set yourself too high in this,
 To be crowned a queen, that was so young;
 Why, what more honor might be his 475
 That had lived in hardship late and long
 And suffered pains and penance strong
 To purchase bliss in heaven on high?
 How might he more have thriven in throng
 Than be crowned a king by courtesy? 480

IX

1

"That courtesy too free appears
 If all be true as you portray;
 You lived in our country not two years—
 You could not please the Lord, or pray,
 Or say 'Our Father,' or Creed rehearse— 485
 And crowned a queen the very first day!
 I cannot well believe my ears,
 That God could go so far astray.
 The style of countess, so I would say,
 Were fair enough to attain unto, 490
 Or a lesser rank in heaven's array,
 But a queen! It is beyond your due."

2

"Beyond all due his bounty flows,"
 So answered she in words benign;
 "For all is justice that he does, 495
 And truth is in his each design.
 As the tale in the Gospel of Matthew goes
 In the mass that blesses the bread and wine,
 In parable his words propose
 A likeness to the realm divine.⁹ 500
 A man possessed a vineyard fine—
 So runs the tale in sermon true—

8. This line, omitted from the manu- 9. Matthew xx.1-16.
 script, is supplied by conjecture.

The time was come to tend the vine
By tasks assigned in order due.

3

"The laborers duly gathered round;
The lord rose up by daybreak bright, 505
Sought at the marketplace, and found
Some who would serve his turn aright.
By the same bargain each was bound:
Let a penny a day his pains requite; 510
Then forth they go into his ground
And prune and bind and put things right.
He went back late by morning light,
Found idle fellows not a few;
'Why stand you idle here in sight? 515
Has not this day its service due?'

4

" 'Duly we came ere break of day,'
So answered they in unison;
'The sun has risen and here we stay
And look for labor and yet find none.' 520
'Go to the vine; do what you may,'
So said the lord, 'till day is done;
Promptly at nightfall I shall pay
Such hire as each by right has won.'
So at the vine they labored on, 525
And still the lord, the long day through,
Brought in new workmen one by one
Till dusk approached at season due.

5

"When time was due of evensong,
The sunset but one hour away, 530
He saw there idle men in throng
And had these sober words to say:
'Why stand you idle all day long?'
None had required their help, said they.
'Go to the vine, young men and strong, 535
And do as much there as you may.'
Soon the earth grew dim and gray;
The sun long since had sunk from view;
He summoned them to take their pay;
The day had passed its limit due. 540

X

1

"Duly the lord, at day's decline,
Said to the steward, 'Sir, proceed;
Pay what I owe this folk of mine;
And lest men chide me here, take heed:

Set them all in a single line,
 Give each a penny as agreed; 545
 Start with the last that came to the vine,
 And let the first the last succeed.'
 And then the first began to plead;
 Long had they toiled, they said and swore;
 'These in an hour had done their deed; 550
 It seems to us we should have more.

2

" 'More have we served, who suffered through
 The heat of the day till evening came,
 Than these who stayed but an hour or two, 555
 Yet you allow them equal claim.'
 Then said the lord to one of that crew,
 'Friend, I will not change the game;
 Take your wage and away with you!
 I offered a penny, to all the same; 560
 Why begin to bicker and blame?
 Was not our covenant set of yore?
 Higher than covenant none should aim;
 Why should you then ask for more?

3

" 'More, am I not at liberty 565
 To give my own as I wish to do?
 Or have you lifted an evil eye,
 As I am good, to none untrue?'
 'Thus,' says Christ, 'shall I shift it awry:
 The last shall be the first in the queue, 570
 And the first the last, were he never so spry,
 For many are called, but friends are few.'
 So poor men take their portion too,
 Though late they came and puny they were,
 And though they make but little ado, 575
 The mercy of God is much the more.

4

"More of ladyship here is mine,
 Of life in flower and never to fade,
 Than any man in the world could win
 By right and right alone," she said. 580
 "Although but late I began in the vine—
 I came at evening, as Fortune bade—
 The lord allowed me first in the line
 And then and there I was fully paid.
 There were others came early and later stayed, 585
 Who labored long and sweated sore,
 And still their payment is delayed,
 Shall be, perhaps, for many years more."

5

Then with more discourse I demurred:
 "There seems small reason in this narration:
 God's justice carries across the board
 Or Holy Writ is prevarication!
 In the psalter of David there stands a word
 Admits no cavil or disputation:¹
 'You render to each his just reward,
 O ruler of every dispensation!
 Now he who all day kept his station,
 If you to payment come in before,
 Then the less, the more remuneration,
 And ever alike, the less, the more."

590

595

600

XI

1

"Of more and less," she answered straight,
 "In the Kingdom of God, no risk obtains,
 For each is paid at the selfsame rate
 No matter how little or great his gains.
 No niggard is our chief of state,
 Be it soft or harsh his will ordains;
 His gifts gush forth like a spring in spate
 Or a stream in a gulley that runs in rains.
 His portion is large whose prayers and pains
 Please him who rescues when sinners call.
 No bliss in heaven but he attains:
 The grace of God is enough for all.

605

610

2

"Yet for all that, you stubbornly strive
 To prove I have taken too great a fee;
 You say I, the last to arrive,
 Am not worthy so high degree.
 When was there ever a man alive,
 Were none so pious and pure as he,
 Who by some transgression did not contrive
 To forfeit the bliss of eternity?
 And the older, the oftener the case must be
 That he lapsed into sins both great and small.
 Then mercy and grace must second his plea:
 The grace of God is enough for all.

615

620

3

"But grace enough have the innocent:
 When first they see the light of day
 To the water of baptism they are sent
 And brought to the vine without delay.
 At once the light, its splendor spent,

625

1. Psalms lxii (lxi).12.

Bows down to darkness and decay; 630
 They had done no harm ere home they went;
 From the Master's hands they take their pay.
 Why should he not acknowledge them, pray?
 They were there with the rest, they came at his call—
 Yes, and give them their hire straightway: 635
 The grace of God is enough for all.

4

"It is known well enough, the human race
 Was formed to live in pure delight.
 Our first forefather altered that case
 By an apple of which he took a bite. 640
 We all were damned by that disgrace
 To die in sorrow and desperate plight
 And then in hell to take our place
 And dwell there lost in eternal night.²
 But then there came a remedy right: 645
 Rich blood ran down rood-tree³ tall
 And with it flowed forth water bright:
 The grace of God was enough for all.⁴

5

"Enough for all flowed from that well,
 Blood and water plain to behold: 650
 By the blood our souls were saved from hell
 And the second death decreed of old.⁵
 The water is baptism, truth to tell,
 That followed the spearhead keen and cold,⁶
 Old Adam's deadly guilt to dispel 655
 That swamped us in sins a thousandfold.
 Now all is withdrawn that ever could hold
 Mankind from bliss, since Adam's fall,
 And that was redeemed at a time foretold
 And the grace of God is enough for all. 660

XII

1

"Grace enough that man can have
 Who is penitent, having sinned anew,
 If with sorrow at heart he cry and crave
 And perform the penance that must ensue.
 But by right reason, that cannot rave, 665
 The innocent ever receives his due:
 To punish the guiltless with the knave
 Is a plan God never was party to.
 The guilty, by contrition true,

2. Genesis iii.17-19; Matthew xiii.41-42; Romans v.12.

3. I.e., the Cross.

4. John xix.34; Ephesians i.3-7.

5. Revelation xx.14.

6. I.e., the spear with which Christ was pierced on the Cross (see John xix.34).

Can attain to mercy requisite,
But he that never had guile in view,
The innocent is safe and right. 670

2

"I know right reason in this case
And thereto cite authority:
The righteous man shall see his face 675
And the innocent bear him company.
So in a verse the psalter says,⁷

'Lord, who shall climb your hill on high
Or rest within your holy place?'
And readily then he makes reply: 680

'Hands that did no injury,
Heart that was always pure and light:
There shall his steps be stayed in joy';
The innocent is safe by right.

3

"The righteous also in due time,
He shall approach that noble tor,
Who cozens his neighbor with no crime 685
Nor wastes his life in sin impure.
King Solomon tells in text sublime

Of Wisdom and her honored lore;⁸
By narrow ways she guided him
And lo! God's kingdom lay before. 690

As who should say, 'Yon distant shore—
Win it you may ere fall of night
If you make haste'; but evermore 695
The innocent is safe by right.

4

"Of the righteous man I find report
In the psalter of David, if ever you spied it:⁹
'Call not your servant, Lord, to court,
For judgment is grim if justice guide it.' 700
And when to that seat you must resort
Where each man's case shall be decided,
Claim the right, you may be caught short
By this same proof I have provided.
But he who, scourged and sore derided,
Bled on the cross through mortal spite, 705
Grant that your sentence be decided
By innocence and not by right.

5

"Who reads the Book of rightful fame
May learn of it infallibly 710
How good folk with their children came

7. Psalms xxiv (xxiii).3-4.

8. Wisdom (Apocrypha) x.9-10.

9. Psalms cxliii (cxlii).2.

To Jesus walking in Galilee.¹
 The touch of his hand they sought for them
 For the goodness in him plain to see;
 The disciples banned that deed with blame 715
 And bade the children let him be.
 But Jesus gathered them round his knee
 And of that reprimand made light;
 'Of such is the kingdom of heaven,' said he;
 The innocent is safe by right. 720

XIII

1

"Jesus on his faithful smiled
 And said, 'God's kingdom shall be won
 By him who seeks it as a child,
 For other entry-right is none.'
 Harmless, steadfast, undefiled, 725
 Unsullied bright to gaze upon,
 When such stand knocking, meek and mild,
 Straightway the gate shall be undone.
 There is the endless bliss begun
 That the jeweler sought in earthly estate 730
 And sold all his goods, both woven and spun,
 To purchase a pearl immaculate.²

2

"This immaculate pearl I tell you of,
 The jeweler gave his wealth to gain,
 Is like the realm of heaven above;
 The Father of all things said it plain. 735
 No spot it bears, nor blemish rough,
 But blithe in rondure ever to reign,
 And of righteousness it is prize and proof:
 Lo, here on my breast it long has lain;
 Bestowed by the Lamb so cruelly slain, 740
 His peace to betoken and designate;
 I bid you turn from the world insane
 And purchase your pearl immaculate."

3

"Immaculate pearl whom white pearls crown,
 Who bear," said I, "the pearl of price,
 Who fashioned your form? Who made your gown?
 Oh, he that wrought it was most wise!
 Such beauty in nature never was known;
 Pygmalion³ never painted your eyes, 750
 Nor Aristotle,⁴ of long renown,

1. Mark x.13-16; Luke xviii.15-17.

2. Matthew xiii.45-46.

3. A legendary Greek sculptor (statues in the Middle Ages were usually painted)

4. The Greek philosopher, referred to here because of his work on natural history.

Discoursed of these wondrous properties;
 Your gracious aspect, your angel guise,
 More white than the lily, and delicate:
 What duties high, what dignities
 Are marked by the pearl immaculate?" 755

4

"My immaculate Lamb, my destiny sweet,"
 Said she, "who can all harm repair,
 He made me his mate in marriage meet,
 Though once such a match unfitting were. 760
 When I left your world of rain and sleet
 He called me in joy to join him there:
 'Come hither, my dove without deceit,
 For you are spotless, past compare.'⁵
 He gave me strength, he made me fair, 765
 He crowned me a virgin consecrate,
 And washed in his blood these robes I wear,⁶
 And clad me in pearls immaculate."

5

"Immaculate being, bright as flame,
 In royalties set and sanctified, 770
 Tell me now, what is that Lamb
 That sought you out to become his bride?
 Over all others you pressed your claim
 To live in honor with him allied,
 Yet many a noble and worthy dame 775
 For Christ's dear sake has suffered and died;
 And you have thrust those others aside
 And reserved for yourself that nuptial state,
 Yourself all alone, so big with pride,
 A matchless maid and immaculate?" 780

XIV

1

"Immaculate," came her answer clear,
 "Unblemished am I, my peers among;
 So much I claim with honor here,
 But matchless—there you have it wrong.
 We all are brides of the Lamb so dear, 785
 One hundred and forty-four thousand strong,
 In Apocalypse the words appear
 As John beheld it and told with tongue:⁷
 Thousands on thousands, virgins young,
 He saw on Mount Zion in sacred dream, 790
 Arrayed for the wedding in comely throng
 In the city called New Jerusalem.

5. Song of Solomon iv.7, v.2.
 6. Revelation vii.13-14.

7. Revelation xiv.1.

2

“Of Jerusalem I speak perforce,
To tell his nature and degree,
My jewel dear, my joy’s sole source, 795
My Lamb, my lord, my love, all three.
In the prophet Isaiah we find discourse
Of him and his humility,⁸
Condemned and martyred without remorse
And on false charges of felony, 800
As a sheep to the slaughter led was he,
As a lamb to the shearers meek and tame;
His lips were sealed to all inquiry
When Jews were his judge in Jerusalem.

3

“In Jerusalem my true love died,
Rent by rude hands with pain and woe;
Freely he perished for our pride,
And suffered our doom in mortal throe.⁹
His blessed face, or ever he died,
Was made to bleed by many a blow;¹ 810
For sin he set his power aside
Though never he sinned who suffered so.
For us he was beaten and bowed low
And racked on the rood-tree rough and grim,
And meek as the lamb with fleece of snow 815
He breathed his last in Jerusalem.

4

“In Jerusalem, Jordan, and Galilee,
When John the Baptist preached abroad,
The words with Isaiah well agree
That he said when Jesus before him stood;² 820
He made of him this prophecy:
‘Steadfast as stone, O Lamb of God,
Who takes away the iniquity
That all this world has wrought in blood’;
And he was guiltless and ever good,
Yet bore our sins and atoned for them; 825
O who can reckon his parenthood
Who perished for us in Jerusalem?

5

“In Jerusalem my lover true
Appeared as a lamb of purest white 830
In the eyes of the prophets old and new
For his meek mien and piteous plight.
The third fits well with the other two,
In Revelation written aright;³

8. Isaiah liii.7, 9.

9. Isaiah liii.4-5.

1. Matthew xxvi.67.

2. John i.29.

3. Revelation v.1, 6-7.

Where the saints sat round in retinue 835
 The Apostle saw him throned in light,
 Bearing the book with pages bright
 And the seven seals set round the rim,
 And all hosts trembled at that sight,
 In hell, in earth, and Jerusalem. 840

XV

1

"This Jerusalem Lamb in his array
 Was whiter far than tongue could tell;
 No spot or speck might on him stay,
 His fair rich fleece did so excel. 845
 And so each sinless soul, I say,
 Is a worthy wife with the Lamb to dwell,
 And though he fetch a score each day
 No strife is stirred in our citadel,
 But would each brought four others as well—
 The more the merrier in blessedness! 850
 Our love is increased as our numbers swell,
 And honor more and never the less.

2

"Less of bliss none brings us here
 Who bear the pearl upon our breast;
 No mark of strife could ever appear 855
 Where the precious pearl is worn for crest.
 Our bodies lie on earthen bier,
 And you go grieving, sore distressed,
 But we, with knowledge full and clear,
 See in one death all wrong redressed. 860
 The Lamb has laid our cares to rest;
 We partake of his table in joyfulness;
 Each one's share of bliss is best.
 Nor ever in honor any the less.

3

"Lest less you believe, incline your ear
 To the Book of Revelation true: 865
 'I saw,' says John, 'the Lamb appear
 On the Mount of Sion, all white of hue,
 With a hundred thousand maidens dear
 And forty-four thousand more in view; 870
 On all their foreheads written were
 The name of the Lamb, of his Father too.
 But then in heaven a clamor grew,
 Like waters running in rapid race;
 As thunder crashes in storm-cloud blue, 875
 Such was that sound, and nothing less.

4

“ Nevertheless, though it shouted shrill
 And made the heavens resound again,
 I heard them sing upon that hill
 A new song, a most noble strain; 880
 As harpers touch their harps with skill
 Their voices lifted, full and plain;
 And well they followed with a will
 The phrases of that fair refrain.
 Before his throne who ever shall reign 885
 And the four beasts ranged about the dais ⁵
 And the solemn elders of that domain,
 Great was their song, and grew no less.

5

“ Nevertheless, there was none had might
 Or for all his art might ever aspire 890
 To sing that song, save those in white
 Who follow the Lamb their lord and sire;
 For they are redeemed from earth’s dark night
 As first fruits given to God entire,
 And joined with the Lamb on Sion’s height, 895
 As like himself in speech and attire,
 For never, in deed or heart’s desire,
 Their tongues were touched with untruthfulness;
 And none can sever that sinless choir
 From that master immaculate, nevertheless.’ ” 900

6

“ Never less welcome let me find,”
 Said I, “ for the queries I propose;
 I should not tempt your noble mind
 Whom Christ the Lord to his chamber chose.
 I am of mire and mere mankind, 905
 And you so rich and rare a rose,
 And here to eternal bliss assigned
 Where joy fails not, but forever grows.
 Now, dame, whom simplicity’s self endows,
 I would beseech a favor express, 910
 And though I am rough and rude, God knows,
 Let it be granted nevertheless.

XVI

1

“ Nevertheless, if you can see
 In my request a reason sound,
 Deny not my dejected plea, 915
 But where grace is, let grace abound.
 Have you no hall, no hostelry,

To dwell in and meet in daily round?
 You tell of Jerusalem rich and free
 Where reigned King David the renowned, 920
 But that cannot be near this ground
 But lies in Judea, by reckoning right;
 As you under moon are flawless found,
 Your lodgings should be wholly bright.

2

"These holy virgins in radiant guise, 925
 By thousands thronged in processional—
 That city must be of uncommon size
 That keeps you together, one and all.
 It were not fit such jewels of price
 Should lie unsheltered by roof or wall, 930
 Yet where these river-banks arise
 I see no building large or small.
 Beside this stream celestial
 You linger alone, none else in sight;
 If you have another house or hall,
 Show me that dwelling wholly bright." 935

3

That wholly blissful, that spice heaven-sent, Declared, "In Judea's fair demesne
 The city lies, where the Lamb once went
 To suffer for man death's anguish keen. 940
 The old Jerusalem by that is meant,
 For there the old guilt was canceled clean,
 But the new, in vision prescient,
 John saw sent down from God pristine.⁶
 The spotless Lamb of gracious mien 945
 Has carried us all to that fair site,
 And as in his flock no fleck is seen,
 His hallowed halls are wholly bright.

4

"Two holy cities I figure forth;
 One name suits well with both of these, 950
 Which in the language of your birth
 Is 'City of God,' or 'Sight of Peace.'⁷
 In the one the Lamb brought peace on earth
 Who suffered for our iniquities;
 In the other is peace with heavenly mirth, 955
 And ever to last, and never to cease.
 And to that city in glad release
 From fleshly decay our souls take flight;
 There glory and bliss shall ever increase
 In the household that is wholly bright." 960

6. Revelation xxi.2.

7. Revelation iii.12; Ezekiel xiii.16.

5

“Holy maid compassionate,”
 Said I to that fresh flower and gay,
 “Let me approach those ramparts great
 And see the chamber where you stay.”
 “The Lord forbids,” she answered straight, 965
 “That a stranger in his streets should stray,
 But through the Lamb enthroned in state
 I have won you a sight of it this day.
 Behold it from far off you may,
 But no man’s foot may there alight; 970
 You have no power to walk that way
 Save as a spirit wholly bright.

XVII

1

“This holy city that I may show,
 Walk upwards toward the river’s head,
 And here against you I shall go 975
 Until to a hill your path has led.”
 Then to stir I was not slow,
 But under leafy boughs I sped
 Until from a hill I looked below
 And saw the city, as she had said, 980
 Beyond the stream in splendor spread,
 That brighter than shafts of sunlight shone.
 In Apocalypse it may all be read
 As he set it forth, the apostle John.⁸

2

As John the apostle saw it of old 985
 I saw the city beyond the stream,
 Jerusalem the new and fair to behold,
 Sent down from heaven by power supreme.
 The streets were paved with precious gold,
 As flawless pure as glass a gleam, 990
 Based on bright gems of worth untold,
 Foundation-stones twelvefold in team;
 And set in series without a seam,
 Each level was a single stone,
 As he beheld it in sacred dream 995
 In Apocalypse, the apostle John.

3

As John had named them in writ divine
 Each stone in order by name I knew;
 Jasper was the first in line;
 At the lowest level it came in view; 1000
 Green ingrained I saw it shine.

8. Revelation xxi.10-27; xxii.1-2.

The second was the sapphire blue;
 The clear chalcedony, rare and fine,
 Was third in degree in order due.
 The fourth the emerald green of hue; 1005
 Sardonyx fifth was set thereon;
 The sixth the ruby he saw ensue
 In Apocalypse, the apostle John.

4

To these John joined the chrysolite,
 The seventh in that foundation's face; 1010
 The eighth the beryl clear and white,
 The twin-hued topaz ninth to trace;
 The chrysoprase tenth in order right;
 Jacinth held the eleventh place;
 The twelfth, the amethyst most of might, 1015
 Blent blue and purple in royal blaze.
 The jasper walls above that base
 Like lustrous glass to gaze upon;
 I knew them all by his every phrase
 In Apocalypse, the apostle John. 1020

5

As John had written, so I was ware
 How broad and steep was each great tier;
 As long as broad as high foursquare
 The city towered on twelffold pier.
 The streets like glass in brilliance bare, 1025
 The walls like sheen on parchment sheer;
 The dwellings all with gemstones rare
 Arrayed in radiance far and near.
 The sides of that perimeter
 Twelve thousand furlongs spanned, each one; 1030
 Length, breadth, and height were measured there
 Before his eyes, the apostle John.

XVIII

1

Yet more, John saw on every side
 Three gateways set commensurate,
 So twelve I counted in compass wide, 1035
 The portals rich with precious plate.
 Each gate a pearl of princely pride,
 Unfading, past all earthly fate,
 On which a name was signified
 Of Israel's sons, in order of date, 1040
 That is, by birthright ranked in state,
 The eldest ever the foremost one.
 The streets were alight both early and late;
 They needed neither sun nor moon.

2

Sun and moon were far surpassed;
 The Lord was their lamp eternally,
 The Lamb their lantern ever to last
 Made bright that seat of sovereignty.
 Through roof and wall my looking passed,
 Pure substance hindered not to see;
 There I beheld the throne steadfast
 With the emblems that about it be,
 As John in text gave testimony;
 Upon it sat the Lord triune;⁹
 A river therefrom ran fresh and free,
 More bright by far than sun or moon.

3

Sun nor moon shone never so fair
 As that flood of plenteous waters pure;
 Full it flowed in each thoroughfare;
 No filth or taint its brightness bore.
 Church they had none, nor chapel there,
 House of worship, nor need therefor;
 The Almighty was their place of prayer,
 The Lamb the sacrifice all to restore.
 No lock was set on gate or door
 But evermore open both night and noon;
 None may take refuge on that floor
 Who bears any spot beneath the moon.

4

The moon has in that reign no right;
 Too spotty she is, of body austere;
 And they who dwell there know no night—
 Of what avail her varying sphere?
 And set beside that wondrous light
 That shines upon the waters clear
 The planets would lose their luster quite,
 And the sun itself would pale appear.
 Beside the river are trees that bear
 Twelve fruits of life their boughs upon;
 Twelve times a year they burgeon there
 And renew themselves with every moon.

5

Beneath the moon so much amazed
 No fleshly heart could bear to be
 As by that city on which I gazed,
 Its form so wondrous was to see.
 As a quail that couches, dumb and dazed,
 I stared on that great symmetry;

9. I.e., three in one: the Trinity.

Nor rest nor travail my soul could taste,
 Pure radiance so had ravished me.
 For this I say with certainty:
 Had a man in the body borne that boon,
 No doctor's art, for fame or fee,
 Had saved his life beneath the moon.

1090

XIX

1

As the great moon begins to shine
 While lingers still the light of day,
 So in those ramparts crystalline
 I saw a procession wend its way.
 Without a summons, without a sign,
 The city was full in vast array
 Of maidens in such raiment fine
 As my blissful one had worn that day.
 As she was crowned, so crowned were they;
 Adorned with pearls, in garments white;
 And in like fashion, gleaming gay,
 They bore the pearl of great delight.

1095

1100

2

With great delight, serene and slow,
 They moved through every golden street;
 Thousands on thousands, row on row,
 All in one raiment shining sweet.
 Who gladdest looked, was hard to know;
 The Lamb led on at station meet,
 Seven horns of gold upon his brow,¹
 His robe like pearls with rays replete.
 Soon they approached God's mighty seat;
 Though thick in throng, unhurried quite;
 As maidens at communion meet
 They moved along with great delight.

1105

1110

1115

3

Delight that at his coming grew
 Was greater than my tongue can tell;
 The elders when he came in view
 Prostrate as one before him fell;
 Hosts of angels in retinue
 Cast incense forth of sweetest smell;
 Then all in concert praised anew
 That jewel with whom in joy they dwell.²
 The sound could pierce through the earth to hell
 When the powers of heaven in song unite;
 To share his praises in citadel
 My heart indeed had great delight.

1120

1125

1. Revelation v.6.

2. Revelation v.8, 11-14.

4

Delight and wonder filled me in flood
 To hear all heaven the Lamb acclaim;
 1130 Gladdest he was, most kind and good
 Of any that ever was known to fame.
 His dress so white, so mild his mood,
 His looks so gracious, himself the same;
 But a wound there was, and wide it stood,
 1135 Thrust near his heart with deadly aim.
 Down his white side the red blood came;
 "O God," thought I, "who had such spite?
 A breast should consume with sorrow and shame
 Ere in such deeds it took delight." 1140

5

The Lamb's delight was clearly seen,
 Though a bitter wound he had to bear;
 So glorious was his gaze serene,
 It gladdened all who beheld him there.
 I looked where that host had been,
 1145 How charged with life, how changed they were,
 And then I saw my little queen
 That I thought but now I had stood so near.
 Lord! how she laughed and made good cheer
 Among her friends, who was so white!
 1150 To rush in the river then and there
 I longed with love and great delight.

XX

1

Moved by delight of sight and sound,
 My maddened mind all fate defied.
 I would follow her there, my newly found,
 1155 Beyond the river though she must bide.
 I thought that nothing could turn me round,
 Forestall me, or stop me in mid-stride,
 And wade I would from the nearer ground
 And breast the stream, though I sank and died.
 1160 But soon those thoughts were thrust aside;
 As I made for the river incontinent
 I was summoned away and my wish denied:
 My Prince therewith was not content.

2

It contented him not that I, distraught,
 1165 Should dare the river that rimmed the glade;
 Though reckless I was, and overwrought,
 In a moment's space my steps were stayed.
 For just as I started from the spot
 I was reft of my dream and left dismayed;
 1170 I waked in that same garden-plot,

On that same mound my head was laid.
 I stretched my hand where Pearl had strayed;
 Great fear befell me, and wonderment;
 And, sighing, to myself I said,
 "Let all things be to his content."

1175

3

I was ill content to be dispossessed
 Of the sight of her that had no peer
 Amid those scenes so bright and blessed;
 Such longing seized me, I swooned, or near;
 Then sorrow broke from my burning breast;
 "O honored Pearl," I said, "how dear
 Was your every word and wise behest
 In this true vision vouchsafed me here.
 If you in a garland never sere
 Are set by that Prince all-provident,
 Then happy am I in dungeon drear
 That he with you is well content."

1180

1185

4

Had I but sought to content my Lord
 And taken his gifts without regret,
 And held my place and heeded the word
 Of the noble Pearl so strangely met,
 Drawn heavenward by divine accord
 I had seen and heard more mysteries yet;
 But always men would have and hoard
 And gain the more, the more they get.
 So banished I was, by cares beset,
 From realms eternal untimely sent;
 How madly, Lord, they strive and fret
 Whose acts accord not with your content!

1190

1195

1200

5

To content that Prince and well agree,
 Good Christians can with ease incline,
 For day and night he has proved to be
 A Lord, a God, a friend benign.
 These words came over the mound to me
 As I mourned my Pearl so flawless fine,
 And to God committed her full and free,
 With Christ's dear blessing bestowing mine,
 As in the form of bread and wine
 Is shown us daily in sacrament;
 O may we serve him well, and shine
 As precious pearls to his content.

1205

1210

Amen.

PIERS PLOWMAN

(ca 1372-1389)

The large number of manuscripts in which the Vision of Piers Plowman has been preserved indicates its wide popularity from the end of the 14th century up to the reign of Elizabeth I. Yet celebrated as the poem was, we know little about its origin. It exists in three versions, which scholars refer to as the A, B, and C Texts. The first, about 2,400 lines long, stops at a rather inconclusive point in the action; the second (generally agreed to be the best form of the poem) is a revision of the first plus an extension of more than 4,000 lines; and the third is a revision of the second. The name frequently associated with the poem is William Langland, but who he was and whether he wrote all three versions is not known. The little that can be inferred about him suggests that he came from the west of England and was probably a native of the Malvern Hills area in which the poem is set and where many of the surviving manuscripts were copied. If he wrote all three versions, then his interests and opinions must have changed while he was at work, for the versions differ from one another in many respects; but if more than one poet was involved, then it is extraordinary that all three versions share the same highly individual style and reflect the same curious and interesting poetic personality. Whatever its origin, the poem was avidly read and studied by a great many people. Within four years of the writing of the second version—which scholars have good evidence to date 1377, the year of Edward III's death and Richard II's accession to the throne—it had become so well known that the leaders of the Peasants' Revolt of 1381 used phrases borrowed from it as part of the rhetoric of the rebellion. The poem must therefore have managed to catch the imagination of a number of readers.

Piers Plowman has the form of a dream vision, a common medieval type in which the author presents his story under the guise of having dreamed it. Most dream visions concern romantic love; Piers Plowman also concerns love, but in this instance the love is theological. The dream vision generally involves allegory, not only because one expects from a dream the unrealistic, the fanciful, but also because people have always suspected that dreams relate the truth in a disguised form—that they are natural allegories. Piers Plowman is perhaps the greatest of English allegories, though the reader who expects to find in it the kind of definite and clear statement that allegory makes in the morality Everyman will be disappointed; allegory here is used not so much in order to define the known, as the character "Good Deeds" does in that play, as to explore the unknown, in particular the great spiritual mysteries of Christianity. When handling these the poet's imagination (for convenience let us assume a single poet, Langland) is apt to soar into a mode of expression that stimulates and excites readers' imaginations while, perhaps, bewildering their intellects. Langland's theme is nothing less than the history of Christianity as it unfolds both in the world of the Old and New Testaments and in the life and heart of an individual 14th-century Christian—two seemingly distinct realms between which the poet's allegory moves with dizzying rapidity.

Expanding the genre of dream-vision, Piers Plowman takes the form of a whole series of visions, separated by brief intervals when the narrator is awake. The first passage chosen for translation—the Prologue to the poem—introduces the famous first vision of the Field of Folk. The poet thought of Christianity as properly informing—and reforming—society, and he describes 14th-century English society in terms of its failure to represent an ideal society living in accord with Christian principles: hence the satirical poetry for which Langland is generally noted. Society's failure, of course, is attributable in part to the corruption of the church and churchmen, and whenever he considers clerical and ecclesiastical corruption, he pours out savagely indignant satire. But he is equally angry with the failure of the wealthy laity—untaught by the church to practice charity—to alleviate the sufferings of the poor, and it was probably his preoccupation with the poor that made his poem popular with the rebels of 1381; these, though confused in their motives, were eager to obtain correction of certain social abuses that Langland touches upon. This use of his poem must have horrified him, for despite his interest in social reform, he remains a fundamentally conservative and orthodox thinker: yet his passionate sympathy for the common man—idealized in his titular hero Piers the Plowman—made him seem a radical who felt that true religion was best represented not by the church but by the humblest orders of society. Many persons reading his poem more than a century and a half after it was written (it was first printed in 1550) saw in its Prologue strong historical reasons for the reformation of the church that had been carried out in the intervening years.

After his vision of the Field of Folk in the Prologue, Will the Dreamer is in Passus I ("Passus" is Latin for step, and the word the poet uses for the sections of his poem) approached by Lady Holy Church, who explains to him the fundamental principles of Christianity—with which, presumably, he has been familiar since childhood. But mere knowledge is not enough for him: he must learn by experience and feel in his heart what he learns. Now that he has seen truth in the person of Lady Holy Church, he asks to be shown the false, and Holy Church leaves him to witness the marriage of a suddenly personified False to Lady Meed. Meed, portrayed as an alluring wealthy woman, is an ambiguous allegorical figure: her many rascally followers recognize her as bribery, but Theology considers her the reward God has promised to give to true men, and objects to her proposed marriage to False. As a result of this objection, Meed and False, accompanied by a vast train of dishonest members of society, proceed to London to get legal opinion on the validity of their marriage. The king is warned of their coming and sends officers to arrest Meed: all the remainder of the company runs away. Though under arrest, Meed is warmly welcomed in the royal court, whose functionaries she at once starts to corrupt with money and promises of influence. The king proposes that she marry one of his knights named Conscience, to which she gladly assents; but when Conscience appears, he refuses to marry her, and she and he have a long debate about the true meaning of her name Meed. She tries to describe herself as merely payment for services rendered or things purchased, but Conscience will allow her no licit role in society. He declines to obey the king's command to become reconciled with her, unless Reason advises him to do so. Reason is summoned and, aided by Meed's flagrant attempts to corrupt the king's justice, succeeds in persuading the king and his subjects that Meed must be condemned.

Here the Dreamer awakes for the first time, but after a very short interval he falls asleep again and dreams that Reason preaches a sermon to the entire kingdom. At the end of this, the people confess their sins, an action which Langland describes by personifying the seven deadly sins; each one then relates (to a personified figure Repentance) how he behaves in society. These confessions, constituting much of Passus V of the B text of the poem, display most clearly Langland's social realism.

From The Vision of Piers Plowman¹

From The Prologue [The Field of Folk]

In a summer season when the sun was mild
 I got myself up in garb as though I'd grown into a sheep;
 In the habit of a hermit, unholy of works,²
 I went wide in the world, watching for wonders.
 And on a May morning on Malvern Hills 5
 A marvel befell me—magic it seemed.
 I was wearied from wandering and went to rest
 At the bottom of a broad bank by a brook's side,
 And as I lay lazily looking in the water
 I slid into a slumber, it sounded so soothing. 10
 Then there came to me reclining there a most curious dream,
 That I was in a wilderness—where, I'd no idea.
 But as I looked into the east, up high toward the sun,
 I saw a tower on a hill-top, trimly constructed,
 A deep dale beneath, a dungeon-tower in it, 15
 With deep dark ditches, dreadful to see.
 A fair field full of folk I found between the towers,
 Of people of all positions, the poor and the rich,
 Working and wandering as the world requires.
 Some applied themselves to plowing, played full seldom, 20
 Sowing seeds and setting plants worked full hard;
 Won what wasters destroy with their gluttony.
 And some applied themselves to pride, wore proud garments,
 Came all costumed in costly clothes.
 To prayers and to penance many put themselves, 25
 All for love of our Lord lived hard lives
 In hope to have afterwards heaven's bliss—
 Such as anchorites and hermits that hold to their cells
 And don't care to go cantering about the countryside,
 With some lush livelihood delighting their bodies. 30

1. The translations by the editor of the beginning and end of the Prologue and of two excerpts from Passus V of the B text are based on Piers Plowman: The

B Version, edited by George Kane and E. T. Donaldson (1975).

2. For Langland's opinion of hermits see lines 28–30 immediately below.

And some made themselves merchants—they managed better,
 As it seems to our sight that such men prosper.
 And some make mirths as minstrels can,
 And get gold with their glee,³ guiltless, I think.
 But word-jugglers and jokers, Judas' children,⁴ 35
 Invent fantasies to speak of and make fools of themselves,
 Yet they have whatever wit they need to work if they wanted.
 What Paul preaches of them I don't dare repeat it here:
*Qui loquitur turpiloquim*⁵ is Lucifer's servant.
 Beggars and beadsmen⁶ went about fast 40
 Till both their bellies and their bags were crammed to the brim;
 Staged flytings⁷ for their food, fought over ale.
 In gluttony, God knows, they go to bed
 And rise up with ribaldry, those Robert's boys;⁸ 45
 Sleep and sloth always pursue them.
 Pilgrims and palmers⁹ made pacts with each other
 To seek Saint James¹ and saints at Rome.
 They went along the way with many wise tales,
 And had leave to tell lies all their lives after.
 I saw some that said they'd sought after saints: 50
 In every tale they told their tongues tended to lie
 More than to tell the truth, their talk was such.
 A heap of hermits carrying hooked staffs
 Went off to Walsingham,² with their wenches behind.
 Great long lubbers that don't like to work 55
 Clothed themselves in copes³ to keep distinct from other men,
 And behaved like hermits to have their ease.
 Friars I found there, all the four orders,⁴
 Preaching to the populace for their own paunches' profit,
 Explaining Holy Scripture as seemed best for themselves, 60
 In hope to acquire copes⁵ construed it as they pleased.
 Many of these Masters⁶ may clothe themselves gaily
 For their money and their merchandise march hand in hand.⁷
 Since Charity⁸ has proved a peddler and principally shrives lords
 Many marvels have been meted out within a few years. 65

3. I.e., music.

4. Minstrels who entertain with jokes and fantastic stories are regarded as descendants of Christ's betrayer, Judas.

5. "Who speaks slander": the text is not St. Paul's but expresses the poet's reason for not quoting St. Paul in such a way as to speak maliciously about the minstrels under discussion.

6. Prayer-sayers, i.e., people who offered to pray for the souls of those who gave them alms.

7. Contests in which the participants took turns insulting each other, preferably in verse.

8. I.e., robbers.

9. Virtually professional pilgrims, who took advantage of the hospitality offered pilgrims in order to go on traveling year after year.

1. I.e., his shrine at Compostella, Spain.

2. English town, site of a famous shrine to the Virgin Mary.

3. Monks', friars', and hermits' capes.

4. In Langlands' day there were four orders of friars in England: Franciscans, Dominicans, Carmelites, and Augustinians.

5. I.e., new garments.

6. I.e., Masters of Divinity.

7. The "merchandise" sold by the friars for money is shrift, which by canon law may not be sold.

8. The ideal of the friars, as stated by St. Francis, founder of the Franciscans, was simply love.

Unless Holy Church and friars' orders hold together better
 The worst trouble in the world will well up soon.
 A pardoner⁹ preached there as if he'd a priest's rights,
 Brought out a bull with bishop's seals,
 And said he himself could absolve them all 70
 Of failure to fast, of vows they'd broken.
 Unlearned men believed him and liked his words,
 Came crowding up on knees to kiss his bulls.
 He banged them with his brevet¹ and bleared their eyes,
 And raked in with his parchment-roll rings and brooches. 75
 Thus you give your gold for gluttons' profit,
 And squander it on scoundrels who're schooled as lechers.
 If the bishop were blessed and worth both his ears
 His seal should not be sent out to deceive the people.
 It's not by the bishop's leave that the blackguard preaches; 80
 What's more, the parish priest and the pardoner split the money
 That the poor people of the parish should otherwise have.
 Parsons and parish priests complained to the bishop
 That their parishes were poor since the pestilence-time,²
 Asked for licence and leave to live in London, 85
 And sing masses there for simony, for silver is sweet.³

* * *

Yet there stood scores of men in scarves of silk,⁴
 Law-sergeants⁵ they seemed to be who served at the bar,
 Pledged cases for pennies⁶ and impounded the law,
 And for love of our Lord not once unloosed their lips:
 You might better measure mist on Malvern Hills 215
 Than get a "mum" from their mouths till money is produced.
 Barons and burgesses and bondmen also
 I saw in this assemblage, as you shall hear later;
 Bakers and brewers and butchers aplenty.
 Woolen-weavers and weavers of linen. 220
 Tailors, tinkers, tax-collectors in markets,
 Masons, miners, many other craftsmen.
 Of all kinds of living laborers there leapt forth some,
 Such as diggers of ditches that do their jobs badly
 And dawdle away the long day with "Dieu save dame Emma."^{7 225}

9. An official empowered to pass on from the pope temporal indulgence for the sins of people who contributed to charitable enterprises—a function frequently abused (see Chaucer's Pardoner, General Prologue to the Canterbury Tales, lines 671 ff.). "Bull": papal license.

1. Pardoner's license.

2. Since 1349, England had suffered a number of epidemics of the plague, which had caused famine and depopulated the countryside.

3. Wealthy persons, especially in London, set up foundations to pay priests to sing masses for their souls and those of their relatives. "Simony": abuse of ecclesiastical office; a priest who had charge of a parish was forbidden to exercise any other salaried function in the church.

4. A silk scarf was a lawyer's badge of office.

5. Important lawyers (see the General Prologue to the Canterbury Tales, lines 311 ff.).

6. Pennies were fairly valuable coins in medieval England; "impounded": detained in legal custody.

7. "God save Dame Emma": apparently a popular song.

Cooks and their kitchen-boys cried, "Hot pies, hot!

Good goose and pork! Let's go and dine!"

Taverners told the same tale to them:

"White wine of Alsace and wine of Gascony,

Of the Rhine and of La Rochelle, to wash the roast down."

230

All this I saw sleeping and seven times more.

From Passus V

[THE CONFESSION OF ENVY]

Envy with heavy heart asked for shrift

75

And, grieving for his guilt, began his confession.

He was pale as a sheep's pelt, appeared to have the palsy;

He was clothed in a coarse cloth—I couldn't describe it—

A tabard¹ and a tunic, a knife attached to his side,

80

Like those of a friar's frock were the foresleeves.

Like a leek that had lain long in the sun

So he looked with lean cheeks, louring foully.

His body was so blown up for wrath that he bit his lips

And shook his fist fiercely—he wanted to avenge himself

85

With deeds or with words when he saw his chance.

Every syllable he spat out was of a serpent's tongue;

From chiding and bringing charges was his chief livelihood,

With backbiting and bitter scorn and bearing false witness.

This was all his courtesy wherever he showed himself.

"I'd like to be shriven," said this scoundrel, "if shame

90 would let me.

By God, I'd be gladder that Gib had bad luck

Than if I'd won this week a wey² of Essex cheese.

I have a near neighbor, I've nettled him often

And blamed him behind his back to blacken his name:

95

I've done my best to damage him day after day,

And lied to lords about him to make him lose money,

And turned his friends into his foes with my false tongue.

His good luck and glad lot grieve me greatly.

Between one household and another I often start disputes

100

So that both life and limb are lost for my speech.

When I met in the market the man I most hated

I fondled him affectionately as if I was a friend of his:

He's stronger than I am—I don't dare harm him.

But if I had might and mastery I'd murder him once for all.

105

When I come to kirk³ and kneel before Christ's cross

And ought to pray for the people as the priest teaches,

For pilgrims, for palmers, for all the people after,

Then crouching there I call on Christ to give him sorrow

That took away my tankard and my torn sheet.⁴

1. A loose sleeveless jacket, worn over the tunic.

2. A very large measure.

3. Church.

4. The loss of Envy's tankard and torn sheet, and his fury at it, have not been explained.

Away from the altar I turn my eyes 110
 And see how Heinie has a new coat;
 Then I wish it were mine, and all the web⁵ it came from.
 And when he loses I laugh—that lightens my heart;
 But when he wins I weep and wail the time.
 I condemn men when they do evil, yet I do much worse: 115
 Whoever upbraids me for that, I hate him deadly after.
 I wish that everyone were my servant,
 And if any man has more than I, that angers my heart.
 So I live loveless like a loathsome dog
 So that all my breast is blown up for bitterness of spirit. 120
 For many years I might not eat as a man ought,
 For envy and ill will are hard to digest.
 Is there any sugar or sweet thing to assuage my swelling,
 Or any *diapenidion*⁶ that will drive it from my heart,
 Or any shrift or shame, unless I have my stomach scraped?" 125
 "Yes, readily," said Repentance, directing him to live better;
 "Sorrow for sins is salvation for souls."
 "I am sorry," said Envy. "I'm seldom otherwise,
 And that makes me so miserable, since I may not avenge myself.
 I've been among burgesses⁷ buying at London 130
 And made Backbiting a broker to blame men's wares.
 When he sold and I didn't, then I was ready
 To lie and to lour at my neighbor and belittle his merchandise.
 I will amend this if I may, by might of God almighty.

[THE CONFESSION OF GLUTTONY]

Now Glutton begins to go to shrift
 And takes his way toward the church to tell his sins.
 But Betty the brewer bade him good morning
 And she asked him where he was going.
 "To Holy Church," he said, "to hear mass, 300
 And then I shall be shriven and sin no more."
 "I've good ale, good friend," said she. "Glutton, will you try it?"
 "Have you," he asked, "any hot spices?"
 "I have pepper and peony⁸ and a pound of garlic,
 A farthing-worth of fennel seed⁹ for fasting days." 305
 Then Glutton goes in, and great oaths after.
 Cissy the seamstress was sitting on the bench,
 Wat the warren-keeper and his wife both,
 Tim the tinker and two of his servants,
 Hick the hackneyman and Hugh the needle-seller, 310
 Clarice of Cock's Lane¹ and the clerk of the church,
 Sir Piers of Pridie and Parnel of Flanders,
 Dave the ditch-digger and a dozen others,

5. I.e., bolt.

6. A twist of medicinal sugar.

7. City people.

8. In the Middle Ages, a spice.

9. This herb was apparently considered salubrious to one drinking on an empty stomach.

1. Clarice (and Parnel of the next line) are prostitutes.

A rebeck-player,² a rat-catcher, a street-raker of Cheapside,
 A rope-maker, a redinking, and Rose the dish-vendor, 315
 Godfrey of Garlickhithe and Griffin the Welshman,
 A heap of old clothesmen early in the morning
 Gladly treated Glutton to drinks of good ale.
 Clement the cobbler took the coat off his back
 And put it up as a prize for whoever would play "New Fair."³ 320
 Then Hick the ostler⁴ took off his hood
 And bade Bette the butcher to be on his side.
 Then peddlers were appointed to appraise the goods:
 Clement for his coat should get the hood plus compensation.
 They went to work quickly and whispered together 325
 And appraised these prizes apart by themselves.
 There were heaps of oaths for anyone to hear.
 They couldn't in conscience come to an agreement
 Till Robin the roper was requested to arise
 And named as an umpire so no quarrel should break out. 330
 Then Hick the ostler had the cloak
 In covenant that Clement should have his cup filled
 And have Hick the ostler's hood, and call it a deal;
 The first to regret the agreement should get up at once
 And greet Sir Glutton with a gallon of ale. 335
 There was laughing and louting and "Let go the cup!"
 They began to make bets and bought more rounds,
 And sat so till evensong and sang sometimes,
 Till Glutton had gulped down a gallon and a gill.⁵
 His guts began to grumble like two greedy sows; 340
 He pissed four pints in a Paternoster's length,⁶
 And on the bugle of his backside he blew a fanfare
 So that all that heard that horn held their noses after
 And wished it had been waxed⁷ with a wisp of gorse.
 He had no strength to stand before he had his staff in hand, 345
 And then he made off, moving like a minstrel's bitch,⁸
 Sometimes sideways and sometimes backwards,
 Like some one laying lines to lime⁹ birds with.
 But as he started stepping to the door his sight grew dim;

2. Fiddle-player: "street-raker": a scavenger—hence street-cleaner—of Cheapside, a section of London. What a "redinking" was is not known.

3. "New Fair" was a game in which two participants exchanged items in their possession which were not of equal value and hence involved a cash payment by the player who put up the least valuable object. Clement puts up his cloak, Hick his hood; each chooses an agent to represent him in the evaluation of the objects, which is carried on by peddlers. Hick is represented by Bette, but since the evaluators are unable to agree, Robin is named as an umpire. It is decided that Hick should have Clement's cloak and Clement

Hick's hood, but that Clement should receive a cup of ale as well, or perhaps the money for a cup of ale which he would then share with all the participants. A fine of further ale would be placed on either of the men who grumbled at the exchange.

4. I.e., a stableman.

5. I.e., a quarter-pint.

6. I.e., the time it takes to say the Lord's Prayer.

7. I.e., sealed; "gorse" is a spiny shrub.

8. I.e., a trained dog.

9. Birds were caught by smearing a sticky substance ("lime") on strings laid out on the ground.

He felt for the threshold and fell on the ground. 350
 Clement the cobbler caught him by the waist
 To lift him aloft, and laid him on his knees.
 But Glutton was a large lout and a load to lift.
 And he coughed up a custard in Clement's lap.
 There's no hound so hungry in Hertfordshire 355
 That would dare lap up that leaving, so unlovely the taste.
 With all the woe of this world his wife and his maid
 Brought him to his bed and bundled him in it,
 And after all this excess he had a fit of sloth
 So that he slept Saturday and Sunday till the sun set. 360
 When he was awake and had wiped his eyes,
 The first word he spoke was, "Where is the bowl?"
 His spouse scolded him for his sin and wickedness,
 And right so Repentance rebuked him at that time.
 "As with words and with deeds you've worked evil in your life 365
 Shrive yourself and be ashamed, and show it with your mouth."
 "I, Glutton," he began, "admit I'm guilty of this:
 That I've trespassed with my tongue, I can't tell how often;
 Sworn by God's soul and his sides and 'so God help me!'
 When there was no need for it, nine hundred times; 370
 And overstuffed myself at supper and sometimes at midday
 So that I, Glutton, got rid of it before I'd gone a mile;
 And swilled what might have been saved and dispensed
 to the hungry;
 Overindulgently on feast days I've drunk and eaten both;
 And sometimes sat so long there that I slept and ate at once; 375
 To hear tales in taverns I've taken more drink;
 Fed myself before noon on fasting days."
 "This full confession," said Repentance, "will procure favor for you."
 Then Glutton began to groan and to make great woe
 For his life that he had lived in so loathsome a way, 380
 And vowed he would fast, what for hunger or for thirst:
 "Never shall fish on Friday be fed to my belly
 Till Abstinence my aunt has given me leave,
 And yet I have hated her all my lifetime."

MIDDLE ENGLISH LYRICS

The best of the Middle English lyrics, both religious and secular, seem remarkably fresh despite the fact that in both theme and form they are extremely conventional—at times almost stylized. The song of spring (the French reverdie), the love lyric and love complaint, the celebration of the Virgin Mary, the witty satire of women, the meditation upon Calvary—even the rollicking verse in praise of good food, good drink, and good living—are members of ancient genres, most of which had developed in France

(some of the poems here printed closely parallel French lyrics). The poet's love in Alison is conventional even in her name, which is that of the Wife of Bath and of the heroine of the Miller's Tale, and the poet could have written her praise without ever having loved anything more feminine than books, which contained hundreds of ladies with Alison's charms. The fact that most of them would have been blue-eyed blondes might make love for a black-eyed brunette seem daringly realistic, but conventions set up anti-conventions which become as rigid as their older antitheses. Yet those who feel that such a lyric as Alison is the genuine complaint of a 13th-century English lad are right in their reactions as readers if wrong in fact, for the poem re-creates excellently the excitement of young love—and the time must have been full of young men yearning for black-eyed Alisons.

It is the same with the spring songs. Spring returns in much the same literary terms in poem after poem, year after year, century after century, but the best medieval spring songs also vigorously reproduce the actual excitement of its natural return every March and April. For while every good poet brings something of his own observing to the tradition he is following, the writers of medieval lyrics are especially distinguished for their unself-consciousness and immediacy. Just as there was no consciousness on the part of the medieval man of anachronism—historical differences in time or place—there seems to have been no self-consciousness about his attempts to express himself in poetic terms: convention apparently liberated him, instead of oppressing him in the way it is often supposed to do. It is with perfect naturalness that the poet of Sunset on Calvary relives the scene, standing with the mother Mary beside the cross on which her Son hangs; or the poet of I Sing of a Maiden visualizes the mystery of the Virgin Birth in terms of the most natural of mysteries, the falling dew; or the poet of Adam Lay Bound cheerfully regards Adam's sin and its dire consequences as a kind of childish naughtiness and punishment that had the tremendous effect of bringing Christ to earth. The very simplicity of the poet's attitude achieves the most striking artistic results.

Several of the poems printed here depend on traditions that are no longer alive. The Corpus Christi Carol relies upon the ancient fertility myth of the Fisher King which had been caught up and Christianized in Arthurian legend. I Have a Young Sister is a riddling poem that is reminiscent of the Old English riddles, though its clues, highly suggestive sexual symbols, are of a fully developed sophistication.

It is impossible to date the individual lyrics with any certainty. Perhaps the oldest is the Cuckoo Song, which is probably of the 12th century, and one may guess that the other spring songs are of the late 13th or early 14th; but some of the best of the lyrics (I Sing of a Maiden, Adam Lay Bound) may be of the 15th century. In general, we know only that the poems must be earlier than the manuscripts in which they appear, but because of the fact that an early lyric might have been reworded by a late scribe in such a way as to make it appear late, we can rarely tell by how many years any given lyric preceded the manuscript that records it. The sources of the texts printed here are too diverse to be listed. Spelling has been normalized as in the selections from Chaucer.

Fowls in the Frith

Fowles° in the frith,°	birds / woods
The fisses in the flood,
And I mon waxe wood: ¹
Much sorwe° I walke with	sorrow
5 For beste ² of boon° and blood.	bone

Alison

Bitweene° Merch and Averil,	in the seasons of
When spray biginneth to springe,
The litel fowl hath hire wil°	pleasure
On hire leod ³ to singe.
5 Ich° libbe° in love-longinge	I / live
For semlokest° of alle thinge.	seemliest, fairest
Heo° may me blisse bringe:	she
Ich am in hire baundoun.°	power
An hendy hap ich habbe yhent, ⁴
10 Ichoot° from hevne it is me sent:	I know
From alle ⁵ wommen my love is lent,°	removed
And light° on Alisoun.	lights

On hew° hire heer° is fair ynough,	hue / hair
Hire browe browne, hire yē° blake;	eye
15 With lossum cheere heo on me lough, ⁶
With middel smal and wel ymake.
But° heo me wolle to hire take	Unless
For to been hire owen make,°	mate
Longe to liven ichulle° forsake,	I will
20 And feye° fallen adown.	dead
An hendy hap, etc.

Nightes when I wende° and wake,	turn
Forthy° mine wonges° waxeth wan:	therefore / cheeks
Levedy,° al for thine sake	lady
25 Longinge is ylent me on. ⁷
In world nis noon so witr° man	clever
That al hire bountee° telle can;	excellence
Hire swire° is whitter° than the swan,	neck / whiter
And fairest may° in town.	maid
30 An hendy, etc.

Ich am for wowing° al forwake,°	wooing / worn out from waking
Wery so water in wore. ⁸
Lest any reve me ⁹ my make
Ich habbe y-ycrned yore. ¹

1. Must go mad.

2. Probably "the best," i.e., his lady. The meaning "best" is, however, not impossible.

3. In her language.

4. A gracious chance I have received.

5. I.e., all other.

6. With lovely face she on me smiled.

7. Longing has come upon me.

8. Perhaps "millpond."

9. Deprive me.

1. I have been worrying long since.

- 35 Bettere is tholien° while° sore endure / for a time
 Than mournen evermore.
 Geinest under gore,²
 Herkne to my roun:° song
 An hendy, etc.

My Lief Is Faren in Londe

- My lief is faren in londe³—
 Allas, why is she so?
 And I am so sore bonde° bound
 I may nat come her to.
 5 She hath myn herte in holde
 Wherever she ride or go°— walk
 With trewe love a thousand folde.

Western Wind

Westron wind, when will thou blow?
 The small rain down can rain.
 Christ, that my love were in my arms,
 And I in my bed again.

I Have a Young Sister

- I have a yong suster
 Fer° biyonde the see; far
 Manye be the druries° gifts
 That she sente me.
 5 She sente me the cherye
 Withouten any stoon,° stone
 And so she dide the dove
 Withouten any boon.° bone
 She sente me the brere° briar
 10 Withouten any rinde;° bark
 She bad me love my lemman° mistress
 Withoute longinge.
 How sholde any cherye
 Be withoute stoon?
 15 And how sholde any dove
 Be withoute boon?
 How sholde any brere
 Be withoute rinde?
 How sholde I love my lemman
 20 Withoute longinge?

2. Fairest beneath clothing.

3. My beloved has gone away.

Whan the cherye was a flour,
 Thanne hadde it no stoon;
 Whan the dove was an ey,^o
 Thanne hadde it no boon.

egg

25 Whan the brere was unbred,^o
 Thanne hadde it no rinde;

ungrown

Whan the maiden hath that^o she loveth,
 She is withoute longinge.

what

A Bitter Lullaby

Lullay, lullay, litel child, why wepestou so sore?
 Needes most^o thou weepe, it was y-yarked^o thee

yore⁴

must / destined

Evere to live in sorwe, and siken^o everemore, sigh

As thine eldren dide er this, whil they alives^o wore.^o alive / were

5 Lullay, lullay, litel child, child, lullay, lullow,

Into uncouth^o world ycomen so art thou.

strange

Beestes and thise fowles, the fisshes in the flood,

And eech sheef^o alives; ymaked of boon and blood,

creature

Whan they cometh to the world they dooth himself som

good—

10 Al but the wrecche^o brot^o that is of Adames blood.

wretched / brat

Lullay, lullay, litel child, to care art thou bimet:^o destined

Thou noost nat this worldes wilde before thee is yset.⁵

Child, if it bitideth that thou shalt thrive and thee,^o prosper

Think^o thou were yfostered up thy moder^o knee;

remember / mother's

15 Evere have minde^o in thyn herte of thise thinges three: thought Whennes thou comest, what thou art, and what shal come of thee.

Lullay, lullay, litel child, child, lullay, lullay:

With sorwe thou come into this world, with sorwe thou shalt away.

Ne tristou⁶ to this world, it is thy fulle^o fo:

entire

20 The riche it maketh poore, the poore riche also;

It turneth wo to wele^o and eek wele to wo:

well-being

Ne triste^o no man to this world whil it turneth so.

trust

Lullay, lullay, litel child, the foot is in the whele:⁷

Thou noost⁸ whether it wol turne to wo other to wele.

25 Child, thou art a pilgrim in wikkednesse ybore;^o

born

Thou wandrest in this false world—thou looke thee before:

4. Long since.

5. You don't know that the wild beasts of this world are set before you (i.e., preferred to you).

6. Don't trust.

7. I.e., Fortune's foot is turning the wheel on which all people must ride.

8. Don't know.

- Deeth shal come with a blast out of a wel dim bore° cranny
 Adames kinne down to caste—himself hath do bfore.⁹
 Lullay, lullay, litel child, so wo thee warp° Adam wove
 30 In the land of Paradis through wikkenesse° of wickedness
 Satan.
- Child, thou nart¹ a pilgrim, but an uncouth° gest: unknown
 Thy dayes beeth ytold,° thy journeys beeth ycest° numbered / determined
 Whider thou shalt wenden, north other° est,° or / east
 Deeth thee shal bitide with bitter bale° in brest. pain
 35 Lullay, lullay, litel child, this wo Adam thee wroughte
 Whan he the apple eet, and Eve it him bitoughte.²

The Cuckoo Song

- Sumer is ycomen in,
 Loude sing cuckou!
 Groweth seed and bloweth meed,³
 And springth the wode° now. wood
 5 Sing cuckou!
- Ewe bleteth after lamb,
 Loweth after calve cow,
 Bulloc sterteth,° bucke verteth,° leaps / breaks wind
 Merye sing cuckou!
- 10 Cuckou, cuckou,
 Wel singest thou cuckou:
 Ne swik° thou never now! cease

Tell Me, Wight in the Broom

- "Say me, wight in the broom,° shrub
 What is me for to doon?
 Ich° have the werste bonde° I / husband
 That is in any londe."
- 5 "If thy bonde is ille,° bad
 Hold thy tonge stille."

I Am of Ireland

Ich am of Irlonde,
 And of the holy londe
 Of Irlonde.
 Goode sire, praye ich thee,

9. ? To cast down Adam's kin as Adam himself has previously caused that it should be cast down.

1. Are not.

2. Gave it to him.

3. The meadow blossoms.

- 5 For of° sainte charitee,
Com and dance with me
In Irlonde.

sake of

Sunset on Calvary

Now gooth sunne under wode:⁴
Me reweth,⁵ Marye, thy faire rode.^o
Now gooth sunne under tree:
Me reweth, Marye, thy sone and thee.

face

I Sing of a Maiden

- I sing of a maiden
That is makelees:^o
King of alle kinges
To° her sone she checs.^o
5 He cam also° stille
Ther° his moder° was
As dewe in Aprille
That falleth on the gras.

matchless

as / chose

as

where / mother

- 10 He cam also stille
To his modres bowr
As dewe in Aprille
That falleth on the flowr.

- He cam also stille
Ther his moder lay
15 As dewe in Aprille
That falleth on the spray.

- Moder and maiden
Was nevere noon but she:
Wel may swich° a lady 20 Godes moder be.

such

Adam Lay Bound

- Adam lay ybounden, bounden in a bond,
Four thousand winter thoughte he not too long;
And al was for an apple, an apple that he took,
As clerkes finden writen, writen in hire book.
5 Ne hadde° the apple taken been, the apple taken been,
Ne hadde nevere Oure Lady ybeen hevene Queen.
Blessed be the time that apple taken was:
Therefore we mown° singen Deo Gratias.⁷

may

4. Wood, i.e., the Cross.
5. I pity.

6. Had not.
7. Thanks be to God.

The Corpus Christi Carol

Lully, lullay, lully, lullay,

The faucon^o hath borne my make^o away.

falcon / mate

He bare him up, he bare him down,

He bare him into an orchard brown.

5 In that orchard ther was an hall

That was hanged with purple and pall.^o

black velvet

And in that hall ther was a bed:

It was hanged with gold so red.

And in that bed ther lith^o a knight,

lies

10 His woundes bleeding by day and night.

By that beddes side ther kneeleth a may,^o

maid

And she weepeth both night and day.

And by that beddes side ther standeth a stoon:^o

stone

*Corpus Christi*⁸ writen theron.

8. Body of Christ.

THE SECOND SHEPHERDS' PLAY

(ca. 1425)

The Second Shepherds' Play is the finest example in English of a medieval mystery play. The word "mystery" in this context refers to the spiritual mystery of Christ's redemption of mankind, and mystery plays are dramatizations of incidents of the Old Testament, which foretells that redemption, and of the New, which recounts it. In England the mysteries were generally composed in cycles containing as many as 48 individual plays; a typical cycle would begin with the Creation, continue with the Fall of Man, and proceed through the most significant events of the Old Testament, such as the Flood, to the New Testament, which provided plays on the Nativity, the chief events of Christ's life, the Crucifixion, the Harrowing of Hell (based on sources now deemed apocryphal), and the Last Judgment. This kind of drama had its origin within the very walls of the medieval church, in the liturgical dialogue that had long been a characteristic feature of formal Christian worship. The exchanges between priest and congregation in the celebration of the Mass are essentially dramatic, as are also the exchanges between several sections of the choir in the singing of an anthem. By a natural elaboration of these dialogues, the texts of which are based on Biblical or Apocryphal sources, a church drama came into being—indeed, it ultimately developed so fully that there was no longer room for it within the liturgy; it then had to be presented separately. In England it was given a home in the churchyard, but as it became increasingly secularized and increasingly pervaded by the rough popular humor of medieval minstrelsy, it lost its place even in the churchyard. By the time of their fullest development, the mysteries were acted in the streets of the town.

Despite secularization and separation from the church proper, mystery plays never lost their religious impulse. They were generally performed at the time of one of two great church festivals—Whitsuntide, the week following the seventh Sunday after Easter, or Corpus Christi, a week later—and their performance was one of the important ways in which the unlearned layman of the Middle Ages participated directly in the celebration of his religion. Every trade in urban society had its guild, an organization combining the functions of a modern club, trade union, and religious society, and each of these guilds had its traditional play to perform on the days when the cycles were presented. In certain of the towns each company had a wagon which served as a stage. The wagon would proceed from one strategic point in the town to another, and the play would be performed a number of times on the same day: the spectators gathered at any one strategic point would never be without a play before them, and might see the whole cycle without moving. In other towns, however, the plays were probably acted out in sequence at a single place—an innyard or some other such natural theater.

The Second Shepherds' Play, which was probably played at Wakefield in Yorkshire, is a member of one of the four great cycles of English mysteries that have been preserved in their entirety; from what must have originally been a great number of other cycles we possess only a few individual pieces. The Wakefield cycle has two plays for shepherds; it is the second which is reprinted below. The artistic level of most of the Middle English mysteries is not high: a kind of rough piety, at times mixed with a crude humor, is characteristic of most of them, though there are happy exceptions. The happiest of these are certain of the Wakefield plays, which display a sophisticated artistic intelligence at work beneath the apparent naïveté. This intelligence belonged undoubtedly to one individual, who probably revised traditional plays. His identity is not known, but because of his achievement scholars refer to him as the Wakefield Master. He was probably a highly educated cleric stationed in the vicinity of Wakefield, perhaps a friar of a nearby priory. He appreciated the rough humor and rough piety of the traditional plays, but he also knew how to refine both qualities without appearing to do so, and, more important, he knew how to combine the humorous and the religious so that the former serves the latter rather than detracting from it. In the Second Shepherds' Play, by linking the comic subplot of Mak and Gill with the solemn story of Christ's nativity, the Wakefield Master has produced a dramatic parable of what the Nativity means in Christian history and in Christian hearts. No one will fail to observe the parallelism between the stolen sheep, ludicrously disguised as Mak's latest heir, lying in the cradle, and the real Lamb of God, born in the stable among beasts. A complex of relationships based upon this relationship suggests itself. But perhaps the most important point is that the charity twice shown by the shepherds—in the first instance to the supposed son of Mak and in the second instance to Mak and Gill when they decide to let them off with only the mildest of punishments—is rewarded when they are invited to visit the Christ Child, the embodiment of charity. The bleak beginning of the play, with its series of individual complaints, is ultimately balanced by the optimistic ending, which sees the shepherds once again singing together in harmony.

Characterization in the mystery plays is usually rather slight, except in the case of stereotypes like Noah's stubborn wife or the ranting Herod (both mentioned in Chaucer's Miller's Tale). Mak therefore stands high above the generality and is perhaps the best humorous character outside of Chaucer's works in this period. A braggart of the worst kind, he has something of Falstaff's charm; and he resembles Falstaff also in his grotesque attempts to maintain the last shreds of his dignity when he is caught in a lie. Most readers will be glad that the shepherds do not carry out their threat to have the death penalty invoked for his crime.

The Second Shepherds' Play¹

Dramatis Personae

COLL	GILL
GIB	ANGEL
DAW	MARY
MAK

[A moor.]

[Enter COLL.]

COLL. Lord, what² these weathers are cold, and I am ill happed;
 I am nearhand dold,³ so long have I napped; numb
 My legs they fold,⁴ my fingers are chapped. give way
 It is not as I would, for I am all lapped⁵ wrapped

5

In sorrow:

In storms and tempest,
 Now in the east, now in the west,
 Woe is him has never rest
 Midday nor morrow.

10

But we silly⁶ husbands⁶ that walks on the moor,

poor / farmers

In faith we are nearhands out of the door.³
 No wonder, as it stands, if we be poor,
 For the tilth⁶ of our lands lies fallow as the floor,

arable part know

15

As ye ken.⁶

We are so hammed,
 Fortaxed, and rammed,
 We are made hand-tamed
 With these gentlery-men.⁴

20

Thus they reave us⁵ our rest—Our Lady them wary!⁶ curse
 These men that are lord-fest,⁶ they cause the plow tarry.

1. The text is based on that given by A. W. Pollard in The Towneley Plays (1897), but has been freely edited. Spelling has been normalized except where rhyme makes changes impossible. Since the original text has no indications of scenes and only four stage directions, written in Latin, appropriate scenes of action and additional stage directions have been added; the four original stage directions are identified in the footnotes.

2. How; "ill happed": badly covered.

3. I.e., homeless.

4. We are so hamstrung, overtaxed, and beaten down (that) we are made slaves by these highborn men. Coll is complaining of the peasant's hard lot, at the mercy of the agents of the Crown and of the wealthy landholders.

5. Deprive us of.

6. Attached to lords.

That men say is for the best, we find it contrary.
Thus are husbands oppressed in point to miscarry.⁷

On live

Thus hold they us under,
25 Thus they bring us in blunder,^o trouble
It were a great wonder
And^o ever should we thrive. if

There shall come a swain as proud as a po:^o peacock
He must borrow my wain,^o my plow also; wagon
30 Then I am full fain^o to grant ere he go. glad

Thus live we in pain, anger, and woe,

By night and by day.

He must have if he lang^o it, wants

If I should forgang it:⁸

35 I were better be hanged

Than once say him nay.⁹

For may he get a paint-sleeve¹ or a brooch nowadays,

Woe is him that him grieve or once again-says.^o gainsays

Dare no man him reprieve, what mastery he maes.²

40 And yet may no man lieve^o one word that he says, believe
No letter.

He can make purveyance³

With boast and bragance,^o

And all is through maintenance^o bragging

45 Of men that are greater. protection

It does me good, as I walk thus by mine one,^o self

Of this world for to talk in manner of moan.

To my sheep will I stalk, and hearken anon,

There abide on a balk,^o or sit on a stone, grassy mound

50 Full soon;

For I trow,^o pardie,^o think / by God

True men if they be,

We get more company

Ere it be noon.

[Enter GIB, who at first does not see COLL.]

55 GIB. Benste and Dominus,⁴ what may this bemean?^o mean

Why fares this world thus? Such have we not seen.

Lord, these winds are spiteous^o and the weathers full keen

And the frosts so hideous they water mine ecn,^o cruel

No lie. eyes

60 Now in dry, now in wet,

7. To the point of ruin. "On live": in life.

8. Even if I have to do without it.

9. In the manuscript, this stanza follows the next.

1. Embroidered sleeve (i.e., sign of authority).

2. No one dares to reprove him, no matter what force he uses.

3. Requisition (of private property).

4. Bless us and Lord.

Now in snow, now in sleet,
 When my shoon° freeze to my feet shoes
 It is not all easy.

But as far as I ken,° or yet as I go,° see / walk
 65 We silly wedmen dree mickle woe;⁵
 We have sorrow then and then⁶—it falls oft so.
 Silly Capple,⁷ our hen, both to and fro
 She cackles;
 But begin she to croak,
 70 To groan or to cluck,
 Woe is him our cock,
 For he is in the shackles.

These men that are wed have not all their will:
 When they are full hard stead⁸ they sigh full still;
 75 God wot° they are led full hard and full ill; knows
 In bower nor in bed they say nought theretill.° thereagainst
 This tide° time
 My part have I fun;° found, learned
 I know my lesson:
 80 Woe is him that is bun,° bound
 For he must abide.

But now late in our lives—a marvel to me,
 That I think my heart rives° such wonders to see; splits
 What that destiny drives it should so be⁹—
 85 Some men will have two wives, and some men three In store.
 Some are woe¹ that has any,
 But so far can° I, know
 Woe is him that has many,
 90 For he feels sore.

But young men a-woeing, for God that you bought,° redeemed
 Be well ware of wedding and think in your thought:
 “Had I wist”° is a thing, it serves of nought. known
 Mickle° still° mourning has wedding home brought, much / continual
 95 And griefs
 With many a sharp shower,° fight
 For thou may catch in an hour
 That° shall savor° full sour what / taste
 As long as thou lives.

100 For as ever read I 'pistle,° I have one to my fere² Epistle
 As sharp as a thistle, as rough as a brere;° briar

5. We poor married men suffer much woe.

6. Constantly.

7. I.e., one's wife.

8. Beset; “still”; constantly.

9. What destiny causes must occur.

1. I.e., wretched.

2. As my mate.

She is browed like a bristle, with a sour-loten cheer;³
Had she once wet her whistle she could sing full clear
Her Pater Noster.

105 She is great as a whale;
She has a gallon of gall:
By Him that died for us all,
I would I had run to° I had lost her. until

COLL. Gib, look over the raw!° Full deaflly ye stand! hedge

110 GIB. Yea, the devil in thy maw, so tariant!°
Saw thou awhere° of Daw? anywhere

COLL. Yea, on a lea-land° pasture land

Heard I him blaw!° He comes here at hand,
Not far.
Stand still.

GIB. Why?

115 COLL. For he comes, hope° I. think

GIB. He will make us both a lie
But if° we be ware.

[Enter DAW, who does not see the others.]

DAW. Christ's cross me speed, and Saint Nicholas!
Thereof had I need: it is worse than it was.
120 Whoso could take heed and let the world pass,
It is ever in dread° and brickle° as glass, doubt / brittle
And slithes°. slips away

This world foor° never so, behaved
With marvels mo° and mo, more

125 Now in weal, now in woe,
And all thing writhes°. changes

Was never sin° Noah's flood such floods seen, since
Winds and rains so rude and storms so keen:
Some stammered, some stood in doubt,⁷ as I ween°. suppose

130 Now God turn all to good! I say as I mean.

For ponder:

These floods so they drown

Both in fields and in town,

And bears all down,

135 And that is a wonder.

We that walk on the nights, our cattle to keep,
We see sudden° sights when other men sleep. unexpected
Yet methink my heart lights: I see shrews sleep.⁸

3. She has brows like pig's bristles and a sour-looking face.

4. Yes, the devil take thy guts for being so late.

5. Blow (his horn).

6. Unless.

7. The line apparently refers to men's behavior at the time of Noah's flood.

8. I see rascals are watching.

- [He sees the others, but does not hail them.]
 Ye are two tall wights.^o I will give my sheep creatures
 A turn.
 140 But full ill have I meant:⁹
 As I walk on this bent^o field
 I may lightly^o repent, quickly
 My toes if I spurn.^o stub
- 145 Ah, sir, God you save, and master mine!
 A drink fain would I have, and somewhat to dine.
 COLL. Christ's curse, my knave, thou art a lither hine!¹
 GIB. What, the boy list^o rave! Abide unto sine.² wants to
 We have made it.³
 150 Ill thrift on thy pate!
 Though the shrew^o came late rascal
 Yet is he in state
 To dine, if he had it.
- DAW. Such servants as I, that sweats and swinks,^o toil
 155 Eats our bread full dry, and that me forthinks.^o angers
 We are oft wet and weary when master-men winks,^o sleep
 Yet comes full lately^o both dinners and drinks. tardily
 But nately^o profitably
 Both our dame and our sire,
 160 When we have run in the mire,
 They can nip at our hire,⁴
 And pay us full lately.
- But here my troth, master, for the fare^o that ye make^o food / provide
 I shall do thereafter: work as I take.⁵
 165 I shall do a little, sir, and among^o ever lake,^o meanwhile / play
 For yet lay my supper never on my stomach
 In fields.
 Whereto should I threap?^o haggle
 With my staff can I leap,⁶
 170 And men say, "Light cheap
 Litherly foryields."⁷
- COLL. Thou were an ill lad to ride a-wooing
 With a man that had but little of spending.⁸
 GIB. Peace, boy, I bade—no more jangling,
 175 Or I shall make thee full rad,^o by the heaven's King, frightened
 With thy gauds.^o tricks

9. But that is a poor idea.

1. Thou art a worthless servant.

2. Wait till later.

3. I.e., had dinner.

4. They can deduct from our wages.

5. I.e., work in the same way as I am paid.

6. I.e., run away.

7. A cheap bargain repays badly (a proverb).

8. You would be a bad servant for a poor man to take wooing with him.

Where are our sheep, boy? We scorn.⁹
 DAW. Sir, this same day at morn
 I them left in the corn
 180 When they rang Lauds.¹

They have pasture good, they cannot go wrong.
 COLL. That is right. By the rood,² these nights are long! cross
 Yet I would, ere we yode,³ one gave us a song. went
 GIB. So I thought as I stood, to mirth⁴ us among.⁵ cheer / meanwhile

185 DAW. I grant.
 COLL. Let me sing the tenory.⁶ tenor
 GIB. And I the treble so hee.⁷ high
 DAW. Then the mean⁸ falls to me. middle part
 Let see how you chant.

[*They sing.—Enter MAK with a cloak over his clothes.*²]
 190 MAK. Now, Lord, for thy names seven, that made both moon and starns³
 Well mo than I can neven, thy will, Lord, of me tharns.⁴
 I am all uneven⁵—that moves oft my harns.⁵ at odds
 Now would God I were in heaven, for there weep no barns⁶ children
 So still.⁷ continually
 195 COLL. Who is that pipes so poor?
 MAK. [aside] Would God ye wist⁸ how I foort!⁹ knew / fared [aloud] Lo, a man that walks on the moor
 And has not all his will.

GIB. Mak, where has thou gane?⁹ Tell us tiding. gone
 200 DAW. Is he come? Then ilkane⁶ take heed to his thing.
 [Snatches a cloak from him.]
 MAK. What! Ich⁷ be a yeoman, I tell you, of the king,
 The self and the same, sond⁸ from a great lording
 And sich.⁹ messenger
 Fie on you! Goth hence suchlike
 Out of my presence:
 205 I must have reverence.
 Why, who be ich?

COLL. Why make ye it so quaint? Mak, ye do wrang.⁸
 GIB. But, Mak, list ye saint? I trow that ye lang.⁹

9. I.e., waste time.

1. Rang the bells for the church service held at dawn.

2. Mak's entrance is a stage direction in the original MS.

3. Stars.

4. Well more than I can name, thy will, Lord, falls short in regard to me.

5. That often disturbs my brains.

6. Each one; "thing": possessions. The stage direction here is in the MS.

7. I (the southern form): Mak is pretending to be an important person from the south.

8. Why do you behave in such an unfriendly manner? Mak, you do wrong.

9. But, Mak, do you want to act as if you were a saint? I guess you do.

- 210 DAW. I trow the shrew can paint¹—the devil might him hang!
 MAK. Ich shall make complaint and make you all to thwang° be flogged
 At a word,
 And tell even° how ye doth. exactly
- COLL. But Mak, is that sooth?
 215 Now take out that southern tooth,²
 And set in a turd!
- GIB. Mak, the devil in your ee!³ A stroke would I lean you!
 DAW. Mak, know ye not me? By God, I could teen° you. vex
 MAK. God look° you all three: Methought I had seen you. guard 220 Ye are a fair company.
- COLL. Can ye now mean you?⁴
 GIB. Shrew, peep!⁵
 Thus late as thou goes,
 What will men suppose?
 Thou has an ill nose⁶
 225 Of stealing of sheep.
- MAK. And I am true as steel, all men wate.° know
 But a sickness I feel that holds me full hate:° hot, feverish
 My belly fares not weel, it is out of estate.
 DAW. Seldom lies the devil dead by the gate.⁷
- 230 MAK. Therefore
 Full sore am I and ill
 If I stand stone-still:
 I eat not a needill⁸
 This month and more.
- 235 COLL. How fares thy wife? By my hood, how fares sho?° she
 MAK. Lies waltering,° by the rood, by the fire, lo! lounging
 And a house full of brood.° She drinks well, too: children
 Ill speed other good that she will do!⁹
 But sho
 240 Eats as fast as she can;
 And ilk° year that comes to man every
 She brings forth a lakan,° baby
 And some years two.
- But were I now more gracious° and richer by far,
 245 I were caten out of house and of harbar.° prosperous
 Yet is she a foul douce,° if ye come nar:¹ home
 There is none that trows° nor knows a sweetheart war° imagines / worse

1. I think the shrew can play tricks.
 2. Now stop speaking like a southerner.
 3. Eye; "lean": lend.
 4. Remember.
 5. Rascal, watch out.
 6. Noise, i.e., reputation.

7. Road (i.e., the devil is always on the move).
 8. Needle, i.e., a little bit.
 9. I.e., that's the only good thing she does.
 1. I.e., near the truth.

Than ken° I.

know

Now will ye see what I proffer:

250

To give all in my coffer

Tomorn at next² to offer

Her head-masspenny.³

GIB. I wot° so forwaked° is none in this shire. know / sleepless

I would sleep if° I taked less to my hire. even if

255

DAW. I am cold and naked and would have a fire.

I am weary forraked° and run in the mire. from walking

Wake thou.⁴

GIB. Nay, I will lie down by,

For I must sleep, truly.

260

DAW. As good a man's son was I

As any of you.

But Mak, come hither, between shall thou lie down.

MAK. Then might I let you bedeen of that ye would rown,⁵

No dread.° doubt

265

From my top to my toe,

[Saying his prayers.]

Manus tuas commendo

*Pontio Pilato.*⁶

Christ's cross me speed!

[He gets up as the others sleep and speaks.]⁷

Now were time for a man that lacks what he would 270

To stalk privily than° unto a fold, then

And nimble to work than, and be not too bold,

For he might abuy° the bargain if it were told pay for

At the ending.

Now were time for to reel:° move spryly

275

But he needs good counseel

That fain would fare weel° well

And has but little spending.

[He casts a spell.]

But about you a circill,° as round as a moon, circle

To° I have done that° I will, till that it be noon, until / what

280

That ye lie stone-still to that I have done;

And I shall say theretill° of good words a foon:° moreover / few

“On height,

Over your heads my hand I lift.

Out go your eyes! Fordo your sight!”⁸

2. “Tomorn at next”: tomorrow.

3. The penny paid for a mass for her departed spirit.

4. You stay awake.

5. Then I might hinder you if you wanted to whisper together.

6. Mak's prayer means, “Thy hands I commend to Pontius Pilate.”

7. One of the original stage directions.

8. May your sight be rendered powerless.

285

But yet I must make better shift
And it be right.⁹

Lord, what° they sleep hard—that may ye all hear. how
Was I never a shephard, but now will I lear.° learn
If the flock be scar'd, yet shall I nip near.

290

How! Draws hitherward! Now mends our cheer
From sorrow.

A fat sheep, I dare say!

A good fleece, dare I lay!° bet

Eft-quit° when I may,

repay

295

But this will I borrow.

[Exit with sheep.]

[MAK'S house. MAK speaks outside the door.]

MAK. How, Gill, art thou in? Get us some light.

GILL. [within] Who makes such a din this time of the night?

I am set for to spin; I hope not I might¹

Rise a penny to win—I shrew° them on height! curse

300

So fares

A housewife that has been

To be raised thus between:²

Here may no note° be seen completed work

For such small chares.°

chores

305

MAK. Good wife, open the heck!° Sees thou not what I bring?

door

GILL. I may thole thee draw the sneck.³ Ah, come in, my sweeting.

MAK. Yea, thou thar not reck of⁴ my long standing.

[She opens the door.]

GILL. By the naked neck art thou like for to hing.°

hang

MAK. Do way!

310

I am worthy° my meat,

worthy of

For in a strait° can I get pinch

More than they that swink° and sweat

work

All the long day.

Thus it fell to my lot, Gill, I had such grace.

315

GILL. It were a foul blot to be hanged for the case.

MAK. I have 'scaped,° Jelot,⁵ oft as hard a glase.° escaped / blow

GILL. But "So long goes the pot to the water," men says,
"At last

Comes it home broken."

320

MAK. Well know I the token,

But let it never be spoken!

But come and help fast.

9. If it is to be all right.

1. I don't think I could.

2. This is what happens to anyone who's been a housewife—to be got up all the time.

3. I may let you draw the latch.

4. You need not care about.

5. I.e., Gill.

I would he were flain,° I list° well eat: skinned / wish
 This twelvemonth was I not so fain of one sheep-meat.

325 GILL. Come they ere he be slain, and hear the sheep bleat—

MAK. Then might I be taen°—that were a cold sweat! taken
 Go spar° fasten
 The gate° door. street

GILL. Yes, Mak,

For and° they come at thy back—

330 MAK. Then might I buy,° for all the pack, if
 The devil of the war.° have to pay worse

GILL. A good bourd have I spied, sin thou can none:°

Here shall we him hide, to° they be gone, until

In my cradle. Abide, let me alone,

335 And I shall lie beside in childbed and groan.

MAK. Thou red,° get ready

And I shall sav thou was light° delivered

Of a knave-child° this night. boy child

GILL. Now well is me day bright

340 That ever was I bred.°

This is a good guise° and a fair cast:° method / trick

Yet a woman's advise helps at the last.

I wot° never who spies: again go thou fast. know

MAK. But° I come ere they rise, else blows a cold blast. unless 345 I will go sleep.

Yet sleeps all this meny,° company

And I shall go stalk privily,

As it had never been I

That carried their sheep.

[The moor. The shepherds are waking.]

350 COLL. *Resurrex a mortuus!*⁸ Have hold my hand!

*Judas carnas dominus!*⁹ I may not well stand.

My foot sleeps, by Jesus, and I walter° fastand.°

lie / fasting

I thought that we laid us full near England.

GIB. Ah, yea?

355 Lord, what° I have slept weel!°

how / well

As fresh as an eel,

As light I me feel

As leaf on a tree.

DAW. Benste° be herein! So my body quakes, blessing

360 My heart is out of skin, what-so° it makes.°

whatever / causes

6. A good trick have I found, since you know none.

7. Now it was a good day that I was born.

8. An illiterate oath referring, apparently, to Christ's Resurrection from the dead.

9. Judas, (in?)carnate lord.

Who makes all this din? So my brows blakes,¹
To the door will I win. Hark, fellows, wakes!

We were four:

See ye awhere of Mak now?

365 COLL. We were up ere thou.

GIB. Man, I give God avow
Yet yede he naw're.²

DAW. Methought he was lapped° in a wolfskin. covered

COLL. So are many happed° now, namely° clad / especially within.

370 DAW. When we had long napped, methought with a gin° snare
A fat sheep he trapped, but he made no din.

GIB. Be still:

Thy dream makes thee wood.° mad

It is but phantom, by the rood.° cross

375 COLL. Now God turn all to good,
If it be his will.

GIB. Rise, Mak, for shame! Thou lies right lang.° long

MAK. Now Christ's holy name be us amang!° among

What is this? For Saint Jame, I may not well gang.° walk

380 I trow° I be the same. Ah, my neck has lain wrang.° think / wrong

[One of them twists his neck.]

Enough!

Mickle thank! Sin yestereven

Now, by Saint Strephe,³

I was flayed with a sweven⁴—

385 My heart out of slough.° skin

I thought Gill began to croak and travail full sad,° hard

Well-near at the first cock, of a young lad,

For to mend° our flock—then be I never glad: increase

I have tow on my rock⁵ more than ever I had.

390 Ah, my head!

A house full of young tharms!°

The devil knock out their harns!° guts

Woe is him has many barns,° brains

And thereto little bread. children

395 I must go home, by your leave, to Gill, as I thought.

I pray you look° my sleeve, that I steal nought. examine

I am loath you to grieve or from you take aught.

DAW. Go forth! Ill might thou chieve!° Now would I we sought° prosper

This morn

1. The meaning is probably "my eyes are dim." Daw's head may be under a blanket.

2. He's gone nowhere yet.

3. Probably St. Stephen.

4. I was terrified by a dream.

5. Flax on my distaff (i.e., trouble).

6. I want us to seek.

- 400 That we had all our store.
 COLL. But I will go before.
 Let us meet.
- GIB. Whore?° where
 DAW. At the crooked thorn.
 [MAK'S house. MAK at the door.]
- MAK. Undo this door! Who is here? How long shall I stand?
 405 GILL. Who makes such a bere?° Now walk in the clamor wenian!°
 MAK. Ah, Gill, what cheer? It is I, Mak, your husband.
 GILL. Then may we see here the devil in a band,⁸
 Sir Guile!
 Lo, he comes with a lote° noise
 410 As he were holden in the throat:
 I may not sit at my note° work
 A hand-long° while. short
- MAK. Will ye here what fare⁹ she makes to get her a glose?
 And does nought but lakes° and claws her toes? plays
 415 GILL. Why, who wanders? Who wakes? Who comes? Who goes?
 Who brews? Who bakes? What makes me thus hoarse hose?° then
 And than° pity
 It is ruth° to behold,
 Now in hot, now in cold,
 420 Full woeful is the household
 That wants° a woman. lacks
- But what end has thou made with the herds,° shepherds
 Mak?
- MAK. The last word that they said when I turned my back,
 They would look that they had their sheep all the pack.
 425 I hope¹ they will not be well paid when they their sheep lack.
 Pardie!° by God
 But how-so the game goes,
 To me they will suppose,° suspect
 And make a foul nose,° noise
 430 And cry out upon me.
- But thou must do as thou hight.° promised
 GILL. I accord me theretill.²
 I shall swaddle him right in my cradill.
 If it were a greater sleight, vet could I help till.³

7. Waning of the moon (an unlucky time).

8. On a leash.

9. Fuss; "glose": excuse.

1. Expect; "paid": pleased.

2. I agree to it.

3. I.e., with it.

I will lie down straight.° Come, hap°
me.

straightway / cover

MAK. I will.

435 GILL. Behind

Come Coll and his marrow;°
They will nip us full narrow.

mate

MAK. But I may cry "Out, harrow,"°
The sheep if they find.

help

440 GILL. Harken ay when they call—they will come anon.

Come and make ready all, and sing by thine one.° self

Sing "lullay"° thou shall, for I must groan, lullaby

And cry out by the wall on Mary and John

For sore.°

pain

445 Sing "lullay" on fast

When thou hears at the last,

And but I play a false cast,⁴

Trust me no more.

[The moor.]

DAW. Ah, Coll, good morn. Why sleeps thou not?

450 COLL. Alas that ever I was born! We have a foul blot:

A fat wether° have we lorn.°

ram / lost

DAW. Marry, God's forbod!⁵

GIB. Who should do us that scorn? That were a foul spot!

COLL. Some shrew.°

rascal

I have sought with my dogs

455 All Horbury shrogs,° thickets

And of fifteen hogs

Found I but one ewe.⁶

DAW. Now trow me,° if ye will, by Saint Thomas of Kent, believe

Either Mak or Gill was at that assent.°

conspiracy

460 COLL. Peace, man, be still! I saw when he went.

Thou slanderes him ill, thou ought to repent

Good speed.

GIB. Now as ever might I thee,°

thrive

If I should even here. dee,° die

465 I would say it were he

That did that same deed.

DAW. Go we thither, I read,° and run on our feet.

advise

Shall I never eat bread the sooth to I weet.⁷

COLL. Nor drink in my head, with him till I meet.

4. Unless I play a false trick.

5. God forbid.

6. And with fifteen young sheep I found only a ewe (i.e., the wether was missing).

7. Until I know the truth.

470 GIB. I will rest in no stead° till that I him greet, place
 My brother.
 One I will hight:⁸
 Till I see him in sight
 Shall I never sleep one night
 475 There° I do another. where

[MAK's house. MAK and GILL within, she in bed groaning, he singing a lullaby; the shepherds enter outside the door.]

DAW. Will ye hear how they hack?⁹ Our sire list croon.
 COLL. Heard I never none crack° so clear out of tune. song
 Call on him.

GIB. Mak, undo your door soon!° at once
 MAK. Who is that spake, as° it were noon, as if 480 On loft?¹

Who is that, I say?
 DAW. Good fellows, were it day.²

MAK. As far as ye may,
 [opening] Good,° speaks soft good men

485 Over a sick woman's head, that is at malease.³
 I had liefer° be dead ere she had any disease.° rather / distress

GILL. Go to another stead, I may not well wheeze:° breathe
 Each foot that ye tread goes through my nese.° nose
 So, heel!° scat

490 COLL. Tell us, Mak, if you may,
 How fare ye, I say?
 MAK. But are ye in this town today?
 Now how fare ye?

Ye have run in the mire and are wet yit.
 495 I shall make you a fire if you will sit.
 A nurse would I hire—Think ye one⁴ yit?
 Well quit is my hire—my dream, this is it
 A season.⁵

I have barns,° if ye knew, children
 500 Well mo° than enew:° more / enough
 But we must drink as we brew,
 And that is but reason.

I would ye dined ere ye yode.° Methink that ye sweat. went

GIB. Nay, neither mends our mood⁶ drink nor meat.

505 MAK. Why, sir, ails you aught but good?⁷

8. One thing will I promise.

9. Bellow. "List": wants to.

1. Loudly.

2. Good companions, if it were daytime.

3. That feels badly.

4. Can you think of one?

5. Right on time.

6. Appeases our anger.

7. Is there anything wrong with you?
 "Get": tend.

- DAW. Yea, our sheep that we get
Are stolen as they yode:° our loss is great. walked
- MAK. Sirs, drinks!
Had I been thore° there
Some should have bought° it full sore. paid for
- 510 COLL. Marry, some men trows° that ye wore,° think / were
And that us forthinks.° disturbs
- GIB. Mak, some men trows that it should be ye.
- DAW. Either ye or your spouse, so say we.
- MAK. Now if you have suspouse° to Gill or to me, suspicion
515 Come and ripe° the house, and then may ye see search
Who had her⁸—
If I any sheep fot,° fetchd
Either cow or stot⁹—
And Gill my wife rose not 520 Here sin she laid her.
- As I am true and leal,° to God here I pray just
That this be the first meal that I shall eat this day.
- COLL. Mak, as I have sele,¹ advise thee, I say:
[They begin the search.]
He learned timely to steal that could not say nay.
- 525 GILL. I swelt!° die
Out, thieves, from my wones!° dwelling
Ye come to rob us for the nones.²
- MAK. Hear ye not how she groans?
Your hearts should melt.
- 530 GILL. Out, thieves, from my barn!° Nigh him not thore!³ child
- MAK. Wist ye how she had farn,⁴ your hearts would be sore.
You do wrong, I you warn, that thus comes before
To a womman that has farn°—but I say no more. been in labor
- GILL. Ah, my middill!
535 I pray to God so mild,
If ever I you beguiled,
That I eat this child
That lies in this cradill.
- MAK. Peace, woman, for God's pain, and cry not so!
540 Thou spills° thy brain and makes me full woe. spoil
- GIB. I trow our sheep be slain. What find ye two?
- DAW. All work we in vain; as well may we go.
But hatters,⁵
I can find no flesh,

8. I.e., the sheep.

9. Either female or male.

1. Happiness; "advise thee": take thought.

2. You come for the purpose of robbing us.

3. Approach him not there.

4. If you knew how she had fared.

5. Except for clothing.

545 Hard nor nesh,^o soft
Salt nor fresh,
But two tome^o platters. empty

Quick cattle⁶ but this, tame nor wild,
None, as have I bliss, as loud as he smiled.⁷
[Approaches the cradle.]

550 GILL. No, so God me bliss,^o and give me joy of my child! bless COLL. We have marked^o amiss—I hold us beguiled. aimed GIB. Sir, don!^o thoroughly

Sir—Our Lady him save—
Is your child a knave?⁸
555 MAK. Any lord might him have,
This child, to his son.

When he wakens he kips,^o that joy is to see. kicks
DAW. In good time to his hips, and in sely.⁹
But who were his gossips,^o so soon ready? godparents

560 MAK. So fair fall their lips—
COLL. Hark, now, a lee.^o lie
MAK. So God them thank,

Perkin, and Gibbon Waller, I say,
And gentle John Horne, in good fay^o— faith
He made all the garray

565 With the great shank.¹

GIB. Mak, friends will we be, for we are all one.^o in accord

MAK. We? Now I hold for me, for mends get I none.²
Farewell all three, all glad³ were ye gone.

DAW. Fair words may there be, but love is there none
570 This year.

[They go out the door.]

COLL. Gave ye the child anything?

GIB. I trow not one farthing.

DAW. Fast again will I fling.^o dash
Abide ye me there.

575 Mak, take it to no grief if I come to thy barn.^o child

MAK. Nay, thou does me great reproof,⁴ and foul has thou farn.

DAW. Thy child it will not grief, that little day-starn^o day star

Mak, with your leaf,^o let me give your barn leave

But sixpence.

580 MAK. Nay, do way, he sleeps.

DAW. Methinks he peeps.^o opens his eyes

MAK. When he wakens he weeps.

I pray you go hence.

6. Livestock.

7. Smelled as badly as he (the baby).

8. Boy (although Mak takes the word in its alternate meaning of "rascal").

9. Perhaps "that's the best thing for him."

1. He made all the trouble with his long legs (the reference is obscure).

2. Now I'll remain apart, for I get no apology.

3. I.e., I would be glad.

4. Shame; "farn": behaved.

DAW. Give me leave him to kiss, and lift up the clout.⁵

[Lifts the cover.]

585 What the devil is this? He has a long snout.

[The others re-enter.]

COLL. He is marked⁶ amiss. We wot ill about.

GIB. Ill-spun weft, ywis, ay comes foul out.⁷

Aye, so!

He is like to our sheep.

590 DAW. How, Gib, may I peep?

COLL. I trow kind will creep

Where it may not go.⁸

GIB. This was quaint gaud and a fair cast.⁹

It was a high fraud.

DAW. Yea, sirs, was't.

595 Let burn this bawd and bind her fast.

A false scaud^o hang at the last:

scold

So shall thou.

Will you see how they swaddle

His four feet in the middle?

600 Saw I never in cradle

A horned lad ere now.

MAK. Peace bid I! What, let be your fare!^o

fuss

I am he that him gat,^o and yond woman him bare. begot

COLL. What devil shall he hat?^o Mak? Lo, Gib, Mak's heir!

be named

605 GIB. Let be all that: now God give him care^o—sorrow

I sawgh.¹

GILL. A pretty child is he

As sits on a woman's knee,

A dillydown, pardie,

610 To gar^o a man laugh.

make

DAW. I know him by the earmark—that is a good token.

MAK. I tell you, sirs, hark, his nose was broken.

Sithen^o told me a clark that he was forspoken.^o

later / bewitched

COLL. This is a false wark.^o I would fain be wroken.^o

work / avenged

615 Get wapen.^o

weapon

GILL. He was taken with^o an elf—

by

I saw it myself—

When the clock struck twelf

He was forshapen.^o transformed

5. Cover.

6. Fashioned. "We wot ill about": we know mischief has been at work.

7. An ill-spun web, indeed, always comes out badly.

8. I think kinship will creep where it can't walk (i.e., only a parent could love this child).

9. This was a strange trick and a fine dodge.

1. Probably "I saw it."

620 GIB. Ye two are well feft sam in a stead.²
 DAW. Sin³ they maintain their theft, let do them to dead.
 MAK. If I trespass eft,^o gird^o off my head. again / cut
 With you will I be left.⁴

COLL. Sirs, do my read:^o advice

For this trespass
 625 We will neither ban^o ne flite,^o curse / wrangle
 Fight nor chite,^o chide
 But have done as tite,^o quickly
 And cast him in canvas.
 [They toss MAK in a blanket.]

[The moor.]

COLL. Lord, what^o I am sore, in point for to brist!^o how / burst
 630 In faith, I may no more—therefore will I rist.^o rest

GIB. As a sheep of seven score⁵ he weighed in my fist:
 For to sleep aywhore^o methink that I list.^o anywhere / want

DAW. Now I pray you
 Lie down on this green.

635 COLL. On these thieves yit I mean.^o think

DAW. Whereto should ye teen?^o worry
 Do as I say you.

[An ANGEL sings Gloria in Excelsis and then speaks.]⁶

ANGEL. Rise, herdmen hend,^o for now is he born gentle
 That shall take fro the fiend that Adam had lorn;⁷

640 That warlock^o to shend,^o this night is he born. devil / confound

God is made your friend now at this morn

He beheests.^o promises

At Bedlem^o go see: Bethlehem

There lies that free,^o noble one

645 In a crib full poorly,
 Betwixt two beasts.

[Exit.]

COLL. This was a quaint steven⁸ that ever yet I hard.^o heard
 It is a marvel to neven^o thus to be scar'd.^o tell of / scared

GIB. Of God's Son of heaven he spake upward.^o on high

650 All the wood on a leven methought that he gard
 Appear.⁹

DAW. He spake of a barn^o child

In Bedlem, I you warn.

COLL. That betokens yond starn.¹

655 Let us seek him there.

2. I.e., you two birds of a feather properly flock together.

3. Since; "dead": death.

4. I put myself in your mercy.

5. 140 pounds.

6. One of the original stage directions.

7. What Adam had brought to ruin.

8. Fine voice.

9. I thought he made the whole wood seem full of light.

1. That's what yonder star means.

- GIB. Say, what was his song? Heard ye not how he cracked it,²
Three breves³ to a long?
- DAW. Yea, marry, he hacked it.
Was no crochet⁴ wrong, nor nothing that lacked it.⁴ note
- COLL. For to sing us among, right as he knacked⁵ it, trilled
I can.⁶ know how
- 660 GIB. Let see how ye croon!
Can ye bark at the moon?
- DAW. Hold your tongues! Have done!
- COLL. Hark after, than!
- 665 GIB. To Bedlem he bade that we should gang:⁶ go
I am full rad⁷ that we tarry too lang.⁷ afraid / long
- DAW. Be merry and not sad; of mirth is our sang:
Everlasting glad to meed may we fang.⁵
- COLL. Without nose⁸ noise
670 Hie we thither forthy⁹ therefore
To that child and that lady;
If⁹ we be wet and weary, though
We have it not to lose.⁶
- GIB. We find by the prophecy—let be your din!—
675 Of David and Isay, and mo than I min,⁷
That prophesied by clergy⁹ that in a virgin learning
Should he light⁹ and lie, to sloken⁹ our sin alight / quench
And slake⁹ it, relieve
Our kind,⁸ from woe,
680 For Isay said so:
Ecce virgo
*Concipiet*⁹ a child that is naked.
- DAW. Full glad may we be and⁹ we abide that day if
That lovely to see, that all mights may.¹
- 685 Lord, well were me for once and for ay
Might I kneel on my knee, some word for to say
To that child.
But the angel said
In a crib was he laid,
690 He was poorly arrayed,
Both mean⁹ and mild. lowly
- COLL. Patriarchs that has been, and prophets befor,
That desired to have seen this child that is born,
They are gone full clean—that have they lorn.²
695 We shall see him, I ween,⁹ ere it be morn, think

2. Sang it out.

3. Short notes; "hacked": sang loud.

4. It lacked.

5. Eternal joy as our reward may we receive.

6. We must not neglect it.

7. Of David and Isaiah and more than

I remember.

8. I.e., mankind.

9. Behold, a virgin shall conceive (Isaiah vii.14).

1. I.e., when we see that lovely one who is all-powerful.

2. That (sight) have they lost.

To token.³
 When I see him and feel,
 Then wot I full weel⁴
 It is true as steel
 That prophets have spoken:

700

To so poor as we are that he would appear,
 First find, and declare by his messenger.

GIB. Go we now, let us fare, the place is us near.

DAW. I am ready and yare,⁵ go we in fere⁵

705

To that bright.⁶

prepared glorious one

Lord, if thy wills be—

We are lewd⁶ all three—ignorant

Thou grant us some kins glee⁶

To comfort thy wight.⁶

creature

[A stable in Bethlehem.]

710

COLL. Hail, comely and clean! Hail, young child!

Hail Maker, as I mean, of⁶ a maiden so mild!

born of

Thou has wairid,⁶ I ween, the warlock⁶ so wild.

put a curse on / devil

The false guiler of teen,⁷ now goes he beguiled.

Lo, he merries!

715

Lo, he laughs, my sweeting!

A well fair meeting!

I have holden my heting:⁶

promise

Have a bob⁶ of cherries.

bunch

GIB. Hail, sovereign Saviour, for thou has us sought!

720

Hail freely food⁸ and flower, that all thing has wrought!

Hail, full of favor, that made all of nought!

Hail! I kneel and I cower.⁶ A bird have I brought crouch

To my barn.⁶

child

Hail, little tiny mop!⁶

baby

725

Of our creed thou art crop.⁶

head

I would drink on thy cup,

Little day-starn.

DAW. Hail, darling dear, full of Godhead!

I pray thee be near when that I have need.

730

Hail, sweet is thy cheer⁶—my heart would bleed

face

To see thee sit here in so poor weed,⁶

clothing

With no pennies.

Hail! Put forth thy dall!⁶

hand

I bring thee but a ball:

735

Have and play thee withal,

And go to the tennis.

3. As a sign.

4. Then know I full well.

5. Together.

6. Some kind of cheer.

7. The false grievous deceiver.

8. Noble child.

MARY. The Father of heaven, God omnipotent,
That set all on seven,⁹ his Son has he sent.
My name could he never, and light ere he went.¹
I conceived him full even through might as he meant.²

740

And now is he born.
He³ keep you from woe!
I shall pray him so.
Tell forth as ye go,
And min on⁴ this morn.

745

COLL. Farewell, lady, so fair to behold,
With thy child on thy knee.

GIB. But he lies full cold.

Lord, well is me. Now we go, thou behold.

DAW. Forsooth, already it seems to be told 750

Full oft.

COLL. What grace we have fun!^o received

GIB. Come forth, now are we won!^o

redeemed

DAW. To sing are we bun:^o

bound

Let take on loft.⁵

[They sing.]

9. Who created everything perfectly. just as he intended.

1. My name did he name, and alighted 3. May he.
ere he went.

2. I conceived him through his power, 4. Remember.

5. Let's raise our voices.

EVERYMAN

(after 1485)

Everyman is the best surviving example of that kind of medieval drama which is known as the morality play. Moralities apparently evolved side by side with the mysteries and in England were, like them, acted by trade guilds, though they were composed individually and not in cycles. They too have a primarily religious purpose, though their method of attaining it is different. The mysteries endeavored to make the Christian religion more real to the unlearned by dramatizing significant events in Biblical history and by showing what these events meant in terms of human experience. The moralities, on the other hand, employed allegory to dramatize the moral struggle that Christianity envisions as present in every man: the actors are every man and the qualities within him, good or bad, and the plot consists of his various reactions to these qualities as they push and pull him one way or another—that is, in Christian terms, toward heaven or toward hell. The intent of the morality is more overtly didactic than the mystery, but most of the moralities share with the mysteries a good deal of rough humor. This is perhaps more evident in other plays of the genre than in Everyman, where the chief humor lies in the undue haste with which the hero's friends abandon him when he calls on them for help.

Everyman inculcates its austere lesson by the simplicity and directness of its language and of its approach. A fine sense of inevitability is built up as Everyman is stripped, one by one, of those apparent goods on which he had relied. First he is deserted by his patently false friends: his casual companions, his kinsmen, and his wealth. Receiving some comfort from his enfeebled good deeds, he falls back on them and on his other resources—his strength, his beauty, his intelligence, and his knowledge—qualities which, when properly used, help to make an integrated man. These assist him through the crisis in which he must make up his book of accounts, but at the end, when he must go to the grave, all desert him save his good deeds alone. While the play contains rather too much direct sermonizing, it makes most effectively its grim point that man can take with him from this world nothing that he has received, only what he has given.

In Everyman allegory appears in its most meticulously worked-out form. Each actor has his allegorical significance defined by his name and behaves entirely within the limits of that definition. The onlooker takes a good deal of intellectual satisfaction in watching the nice operation of the allegorical equations. On the other hand, one might object that allegory, when so neatly handled, sacrifices for a kind of mathematical regularity the suggestiveness that inheres in the far looser allegory of such a work as Piers Plowman, which stimulates the imagination more than it satisfies the intellect. Nevertheless, when it is well staged and well acted, Everyman, despite its uncompromising didacticism, is a powerful drama.

The play was written near the end of the 15th century. It is probably a translation of a Flemish play, though it is not impossible that the Flemish play is the translation and the English Everyman the original.

Everyman¹

Dramatis Personae

MESSENGER	KNOWLEDGE
GOD	CONFESSION
DEATH	BEAUTY
EVERYMAN	STRENGTH
FELLOWSHIP	DISCRETION
KINDRED	FIVE-WITS
COUSIN	ANGEL
GOODS	DOCTOR
GOOD DEEDS

HERE BEGINNETH A TREATISE HOW THE HIGH FATHER OF HEAVEN SENDETH DEATH TO SUMMON EVERY CREATURE

1. The text is based upon the earliest printing of the play (no manuscript is known) by John Skot about 1530, as reproduced by W. W. Greg (Louvain, 1904). The spelling has been modernized except where modernization would spoil the rhyme, and modern punctuation has been added. The stage directions have been amplified.

TO COME AND GIVE ACCOUNT OF THEIR LIVES IN THIS WORLD, AND IS IN MANNER OF A MORAL PLAY

[Enter MESSENGER.]

MESSENGER. I pray you all give your audience,
And hear this matter with reverence,
By figure² a moral play,
The Summoning of Everyman called it is,
5 That of our lives and ending shows
How transitory we be all day.³
The matter is wonder precious,
But the intent of it is more gracious
And sweet to bear away.
10 The story saith: Man, in the beginning
Look well, and take good heed to the ending,
Be you never so gay.
You think sin in the beginning full sweet,
Which in the end causeth the soul to weep,
15 When the body lieth in clay.
Here shall you see how fellowship and jollity,
Both strength, pleasure, and beauty,
Will fade from thee as flower in May.
For ye shall hear how our Heaven-King
20 Calleth Everyman to a general reckoning.
Give audience and hear what he doth say.

[Exit MESSENGER.—Enter GOD.]

GOD. I perceive, here in my majesty,
How that all creatures be to me unkind,^o thoughtless
Living without dread in worldly prosperity.
25 Of ghostly^o sight the people be so blind, spiritual
Drowned in sin, they know me not for their God.
In worldly riches is all their mind:
They fear not of my righteousness the sharp rod;
My law that I showed when I for them died
30 They forget clean, and shedding of my blood red.
I hanged between two,⁴ it cannot be denied:
To get them life I suffered to be dead.
I healed their feet, with thorns hurt was my head.
I could do no more than I did, truly—
35 And now I see the people do clean forsake me.
They use the seven deadly sins damnable,
As pride, covetise,^o wrath, and lechery⁵ avarice
Now in the world be made commendable.
And thus they leave of angels the heavenly company.
40 Every man liveth so after his own pleasure,
And yet of their life they be nothing sure.
I see the more that I them forbear,
The worse they be from year to year:
All that liveth appeareth^o fast. degenerates

2. In form.

3. Always.

4. I.e., the two thieves between whom

Christ was crucified.

5. The other three deadly sins are envy, gluttony, and sloth.

- 45 Therefore I will, in all the haste,
 Have a reckoning of every man's person.
 For, and° I leave the people thus alone if
 In their life and wicked tempests,
 Verily they will become much worse than beasts;
 50 For now one would by envy another up eat.
 Charity do they all clean forget.
 I hoped well that every man
 In my glory should make his mansion,
 And thereto I had them all elect.° chosen
 55 But now I see, like traitors deject,° abased
 They thank me not for the pleasure that I to° them meant, for
 Nor yet for their being that I them have lent.
 I proffered the people great multitude of mercy,
 And few there be that asketh it heartily.° sincerely
 60 They be so cumbered° with worldly riches encumbered
 That needs on them I must do justice—
 On every man living without fear.
 Where art thou, Death, thou mighty messenger?

[Enter DEATH.]

- DEATH. Almighty God, I am here at your will, 65 Your commandment to fulfill.

- GOD. Go thou to Everyman,
 And show him, in my name,
 A pilgrimage he must on him take,
 Which he in no wise may escape;
 70 And that he bring with him a sure reckoning
 Without delay or any tarrying.

DEATH. Lord, I will in the world go run over all,°
 And cruelly out-search both great and small.

[Exit GOD.]

- Everyman will I beset that liveth beastly
 75 Out of God's laws, and dreadeth not folly.
 He that loveth riches I will strike with my dart,
 His sight to blind, and from heaven to depart°— separate
 Except that Almsdeeds be his good friend—
 In hell for to dwell, world without end
 80 Lo, yonder I see Everyman walking:
 Full little he thinketh on my coming;
 His mind is on fleshly lusts and his treasure,
 And great pain it shall cause him to endure
 Before the Lord, Heaven-King.

[Enter EVERYMAN.]

- 85 Everyman, stand still! Whither art thou going
 Thus gaily? Hast thou thy Maker forget?° forgotten

EVERYMAN. Why askest thou?

Why wouldest thou weet?° know

DEATH. Yea, sir, I will show you:

- 90 In great haste I am sent to thee

From God out of his majesty.

EVERYMAN. What! sent to me?

DEATH. Yea, certainly.

Though thou have forgot him here,

95 He thinketh on thee in the heavenly sphere,

As, ere we depart, thou shalt know.

EVERYMAN. What desireth God of me?

DEATH. That shall I show thee:

A reckoning he will needs have 100 Without any longer respite.

EVERYMAN. To give a reckoning longer leisure I crave.

This blind^o matter troubleth my wit.

unexpected

DEATH. On thee thou must take a long journay:

Therefore thy book of count^o with thee thou bring, accounts

105 For turn again thou cannot by no way.

And look thou be sure of thy reckoning,

For before God thou shalt answer and shew

Thy many bad deeds and good but a few—

How thou hast spent thy life and in what wise,

110 Before the Chief Lord of Paradise.

Have ado that we were in that way,⁷

For wect thou well thou shalt make none attorney.⁸

EVERYMAN. Full unready I am such reckoning to give.

I know thee not. What messenger art thou?

115 DEATH. I am Death that no man dreadeth,⁹

For every man I 'rest,^o and no man spareth;

arrest

For it is God's commandment

That all to me should be obedient.

EVERYMAN. O Death, thou comest when I had thee least in mind.

120 In thy power it lieth me to save:

Yet of my good^o will I give thee, if thou will be kind, goods

Yea, a thousand pound shalt thou have—

And defer this matter till another day.

DEATH. Everyman, it may not be, by no way.

125 I set nought by¹ gold, silver, nor riches,

Nor by pope, emperor, king, duke, nor princes,

For, and^o I would receive gifts great,

if

All the world I might get.

But my custom is clean contrary:

130 I give thee no respite. Come hence and not tarry!

EVERYMAN. Alas, shall I have no longer respite?

I may say Death giveth no warning.

To think on thee it maketh my heart sick,

For all unready is my book of reckoning.

135 But twelve year and I might have a bidding,²

My counting-book I would make so clear

That my reckoning I should not need to fear.

7. I.e., let's get started at once.

8. I.e., none to appear in your stead.

9. That fears nobody.

1. I care nothing for.

2. If I might have a delay for just twelve years.

Wherefore, Death, I pray thee, for God's mercy,
Spare me till I be provided of remedy.

140 DEATH. Thee availeth not to cry, weep, and pray;
But haste thee lightly° that thou were gone that journey,

And prove° thy friends, if thou can. quickly
For weet° thou well the tide° abideth no man, test
And in the world each living creature know / time

145 For Adam's sin must die of nature.
EVERYMAN. Death, if I should this pilgrimage take
And my reckoning surely make,
Show me, for saint° charity, holy
Should I not come again shortly?

150 DEATH. No, Everyman. And thou be once there,
Thou mayst never more come here,
Trust me verily.

EVERYMAN. O gracious God in the high seat celestial,
Have mercy on me in this most need!

155 Shall I have no company from this vale terrestrial
Of mine acquaintance that way me to lead?

DEATH. Yea, if any be so hardy
That would go with thee and bear thee company.
Hie° thee that thou were gone to God's magnificence, hasten
160 Thy reckoning to give before his presence.
What, weenest° thou thy life is given thee, suppose
And thy worldly goods also?

EVERYMAN. I had weened so, verily.

DEATH. Nay, nay, it was but lent thee.

165 For as soon as thou art go,
Another a while shall have it and then go therefro,
Even as thou hast done.
Everyman, thou art mad! Thou hast thy wits° five, senses
And here on earth will not amend thy live!⁴
170 For suddenly I do come.

EVERYMAN. O wretched caitiff! Whither shall I flee
That I might 'scape this endless sorrow?

Now, gentle Death, spare me till tomorrow,
That I may amend me

175 With good advisement.° preparation

DEATH. Nay, thereto I will not consent,
Nor no man will I respite,
But to the heart suddenly I shall smite,
Without any advisement.

180 And now out of thy sight I will me hie:
See thou make thee ready shortly,
For thou mayst say this is the day
That no man living may 'scape away.

[Exit DEATH.]

- EVERYMAN. Alas, I may well weep with sighs deep:
 185 Now have I no manner of company
 To help me in my journey and me to keep.° guard
 And also my writing⁵ is full unready—
 How shall I do now for to excuse me?
 I would to God I had never be geet!⁶
 190 To my soul a full great profit it had be.
 For now I fear pains huge and great.
 The time passeth: Lord, help, that all wrought!
 For though I mourn, it availeth nought.
 The day passeth and is almost ago:° gone by 195 I wot° not well what for to do. know
 To whom were I best my complaint to make?
 What and I to Fellowship thereof spake,
 And showed him of this sudden chance?
 For in him is all mine affiance,° trust
 200 We have in the world so many a day
 Be good friends in sport and play.
 I see him yonder, certainly.
 I trust that he will bear me company.
 Therefore to him will I speak to ease my sorrow.
 [Enter FELLOWSHIP.]
 205 Well met, good Fellowship, and good morrow!
 FELLOWSHIP. Everyman, good morrow, by this day!
 Sir, why lookest thou so piteously?
 If anything be amiss, I pray thee me say,
 That I may help to remedy.
 210 EVERYMAN. Yea, good Fellowship, yea:
 I am in great jeopardy.
 FELLOWSHIP. My true friend, show to me your mind.
 I will not forsake thee to my life's end
 In the way of good company.
 215 EVERYMAN. That was well spoken, and lovingly!
 FELLOWSHIP. Sir, I must needs know your heaviness.° sorrow
 I have pity to see you in any distress.
 If any have you wronged, ye shall revenged be,
 Though I on the ground be slain for thee,
 220 Though that I know before that I should die.
 EVERYMAN. Verily, Fellowship, gramercy.° many thanks
 FELLOWSHIP. Tush! by thy thanks I set not a stree.° straw
 Show me your grief and say no more.
 EVERYMAN. If I my heart should to you break,° disclose
 225 And then you to turn your mind fro me,
 And would not me comfort when ye hear me speak,
 Then should I ten times sorrier be.
 FELLOWSHIP. Sir, I say as I will do, indeed.
 EVERYMAN. Then be you a good friend at need.
 230 I have found you true herebefore.

5. I.e., ledger.

6. Been begotten.

FELLOWSHIP. And so ye shall evermore.

For, in faith, and thou go to hell,

I will not forsake thee by the way.

EVERYMAN. Ye speak like a good friend. I believe you well.

235 I shall deserve° it, and° I may.

repay / if

FELLOWSHIP. I speak of no deserving, by this day!

For he that will say and nothing do

Is not worthy with good company to go.

Therefore show me the grief of your mind,

240 As to your friend most loving and kind.

EVERYMAN. I shall show you how it is:

Commanded I am to go a journey,

A long way, hard and dangerous,

And give a strait° count,° without delay, strict / accounting

245 Before the high judge Adonai.⁷

Wherefore I pray you bear me company,

As ye have promised, in this journey.

FELLOWSHIP. This is matter indeed! Promise is duty—

But, and I should take such a voyage on me,

250 I know it well, it should be to my pain.

Also it maketh me afeard, certain.

But let us take counsel here, as well as we can—

For your words would fear° a strong man.

frighten

EVERYMAN. Why, ye said if I had need,

255 Ye would me never forsake, quick ne dead,

Though it were to hell, truly.

FELLOWSHIP. So I said, certainly.

But such pleasures° be set aside, the sooth to say.

jokes

And also, if we took such a journey,

260 When should we again come?

EVERYMAN. Nay, never again, till the day of doom.

FELLOWSHIP. In faith, then will not I come there!

Who hath you these tidings brought?

EVERYMAN. Indeed, Death was with me here.

265 FELLOWSHIP. Now by God that all hath bought,°

redeemed

If Death were the messenger,

For no man that is living today

I will not go that loath° journey—

loathsome

Not for the father that begat me!

270 EVERYMAN. Ye promised otherwise, pardie.°

by God

FELLOWSHIP. I wot well I said so, truly.

And yet, if thou wilt eat and drink and make good cheer,

Or haunt to women the lusty company,⁸

I would not forsake you while the day is clear,

275 Trust me verily!

EVERYMAN. Yea, thereto ye would be ready—

To go to mirth, solace,° and play:

pleasure

7. I.e., God.

8. Or frequent the lusty company of women.

- Your mind to folly will sooner apply° attend
 Than to bear me company in my long journey.
- 280 FELLOWSHIP. Now in good faith, I will not that way.
 But, and thou will murder or any man kill,
 In that I will help thee with a good will.
- EVERYMAN. O that is simple° advice, indeed! foolish
 Gentle fellow, help me in my necessity:
 285 We have loved long, and now I need—
 And now, gentle Fellowship, remember me!
- FELLOWSHIP. Whether ye have loved me or no,
 By Saint John, I will not with thee go!
- EVERYMAN. Yet I pray thee take the labor and do so much for me,
- 290 To bring me forward,⁹ for saint charity,
 And comfort me till I come without the town.
- FELLOWSHIP. Nay, and thou would give me a new gown,
 I will not a foot with thee go.
 But, and thou had tarried, I would not have left thee so.
- 295 And as now, God speed thee in thy journey!
 For from thee I will depart as fast as I may.
- EVERYMAN. Whither away, Fellowship? Will thou forsake me?
- FELLOWSHIP. Yea, by my fay!° To God I betake° thee. faith / commend
- EVERYMAN. Farewell, good Fellowship! For thee my heart is sore.
- 300 Adieu forever—I shall see thee no more.
- FELLOWSHIP. In faith, Everyman, farewell now at the ending:
 For you I will remember that parting is mourning.
 [Exit FELLOWSHIP.]
- EVERYMAN. Alack, shall we thus depart° indeed— part
 Ah, Lady, help!—without any more comfort?
- 305 Lo, Fellowship forsaketh me in my most need!
 For help in this world whither shall I resort?
 Fellowship herebefore with me would merry make,
 And now little sorrow for me doth he take.
 It is said, "In prosperity men friends may find 310 Which in adversity be full unkind."
 Now whither for succor shall I flee,
 Sith° that Fellowship hath forsaken me? since
 To my kinsmen I will, truly,
 Praying them to help me in my necessity.
- 315 I believe that they will do so,
 For kind will creep where it may not go.¹
 I will go 'say°—for yonder I see them—
 Where° be ye now my friends and kinsmen. assay whether
- [Enter KINDRED and COUSIN.]
- KINDRED. Here be we now at your commandment:

9. Escort me.

1. For kinship will creep where it can— not walk (i.e., kinsmen will suffer hardship for one another).

- 320 Cousin, I pray you show us your intent
In any wise, and not spare.
COUSIN. Yea, Everyman, and to us declare
If ye be disposed to go anywhither.
For, weet^o you well, we will live and die together. know
- 325 KINDRED. In wealth and woe we will with you hold,
For over his kin a man may be bold.²
EVERYMAN. Gramercy,^o my friends and kinsmen kind. much thanks
Now shall I show you the grief of my mind.
I was commanded by a messenger
330 That is a high king's chief officer:
He bade me go a pilgrimage, to my pain—
And I know well I shall never come again.
Also I must give a reckoning strait,^o strict
For I have a great enemy that hath me in wait,³
335 Which intendeth me to hinder.
KINDRED. What account is that which ye must render?
That would I know.
EVERYMAN. Of all my works I must show
How I have lived and my days spent;
340 Also of ill deeds that I have used
In my time sith life was me lent,
And of all virtues that I have refused.
Therefore I pray you go thither with me
To help me make mine account, for saint charity.
- 345 COUSIN. What, to go thither? Is that the matter?
Nay, Everyman, I had liefer fast⁴ bread and water
All this five year and more!
EVERYMAN. Alas, that ever I was bore!^o born
For now shall I never be merry
350 If that you forsake me.
KINDRED. Ah, sir, what? Ye be a merry man:
Take good heart to you and make no moan.
But one thing I warn you, by Saint Anne,
As for me, ye shall go alone.
- 355 EVERYMAN. My Cousin, will you not with me go?
COUSIN. No, by Our Lady! I have the cramp in my toe:
Trust not to me. For, so God me speed,
I will deceive you in your most need.
KINDRED. It availeth you not us to 'tice.^o entice
360 Ye shall have my maid with all my heart:
She loveth to go to feasts, there to be nice,^o wanton
And to dance, and abroad to start.⁵
I will give her leave to help you in that journey,
If that you and she may agree.

2. I.e., for a man may make demands of his kinsmen.

3. I.e., Satan lies in ambush for me.

4. I.e., rather fast on.

5. To go gadding about.

365 EVERYMAN. Now show me the very effect° of your mind: bent
Will you go with me or abide behind?

KINDRED. Abide behind? Yea, that will I and I may!
Therefore farewell till another day.

[Exit KINDRED.]

EVERYMAN. How should I be merry or glad?

370 For fair promises men to me make,
But when I have most need they me forsake.
I am deceived. That maketh me sad.

COUSIN. Cousin Everyman, farewell now,

375 For verily I will not go with you;
Also of mine own an unready reckoning
I have to account—therefore I make tarrying.
Now God keep thee, for now I go.

[Exit COUSIN.]

EVERYMAN. Ah, Jesus, is all come hereto?°

to this glad

380 Lo, fair words maketh fools fain:°
They promise and nothing will do, certain.
My kinsmen promised me faithfully
For to abide with me steadfastly,
And now fast away do they flee.
Even so Fellowship promised me.

385 What friend were best me of to provide?
I lose my time here longer to abide.

Yet in my mind a thing there is:

All my life I have loved riches;

If that my Good° now help me might,

Goods

390 He would make my heart full light.

I will speak to him in this distress.

Where art thou, my Goods and riches?

GOODS. [within] Who calleth me? Everyman? What, hast thou haste?

I lie here in corners, trussed and piled so high,

395 And in chests I am locked so fast—

Also sacked in bags—thou mayst see with thine eye

I cannot stir, in packs low where I lie.

What would ye have? Lightly° me say.

quickly

EVERYMAN. Come hither, Good, in all the haste thou may,

400 For of counsel I must desire thee.

[Enter GOODS.]

GOODS. Sir, and° ye in the world have sorrow or adversity, if
That can I help you to remedy shortly.

EVERYMAN. It is another disease° that grieveth me:

distress

In this world it is not, I tell thee so.

405 I am sent for another way to go,

To give a strait count general

Before the highest Jupiter° of all.

And all my life I have had joy and pleasure in thee:

- Therefore I pray thee go with me,
 410 For, peradventure, thou mayst before God Almighty
 My reckoning help to clean and purify.
 For it is said ever among^r
 That money maketh all right that is wrong.
 GOODS. Nay, Everyman, I sing another song:
 415 I follow no man in such voyages.
 For, and I went with thee,
 Thou shouldest fare much the worse for me;
 For because on me thou did set thy mind,
 Thy reckoning I have made blotted and blind,^o illegible
 420 That thine account thou cannot make truly—
 And that hast thou for the love of me.
 EVERYMAN. That would grieve me full sore,
 When I should come to that fearful answer.
 Up, let us go thither together.
 425 GOODS. Nay, not so, I am too brittle, I may not endure.
 I will follow no man one foot, be ye sure.
 EVERYMAN. Alas, I have thee loved and had great pleasure
 All my life-days on good and treasure.
 GOODS. That is to thy damnation, without leasing,^o lie
 430 For my love is contrary to the love everlasting.
 But if thou had me loved moderately during,^o in the meanwhile
 As to the poor to give part of me,
 Then shouldest thou not in this dolor be,
 Nor in this great sorrow and care.
 435 EVERYMAN. Lo, now was I deceived ere I was ware,
 And all I may wite^o misspending of time. blame on GOODS. What, weenest^o thou that I am thine? suppose
 EVERYMAN. I had weened so.
 GOODS. Nay, Everyman, I say no.
 440 As for a while I was lent thee;
 A season thou hast had me in prosperity.
 My condition^o is man's soul to kill; disposition
 If I save one, a thousand I do spill.^o ruin
 Weenest thou that I will follow thee?
 445 Nay, from this world, not verily.
 EVERYMAN. I had weened otherwise. supposed
 GOODS. Therefore to thy soul Good is a thief;
 For when thou art dead, this is my guise^o— custom
 Another to deceive in the same wise
 450 As I have done thee, and all to his soul's reproof.^o shame
 EVERYMAN. O false Good, cursed thou be,
 Thou traitor to God, that hast deceived me
 And caught me in thy snare!
 GOODS. Marry, thou brought thyself in care,^o sorrow
 455 Whereof I am glad:

I must needs laugh, I cannot be sad.

EVERYMAN. Ah, Good, thou hast had long my heartly° love;

sincere

I gave thee that which should be the Lord's above.

But wilt thou not go with me, indeed?

160 I pray thee truth to say.

GOODS. No, so God me speed!

Therefore farewell and have good day.

[Exit GOODS.]

EVERYMAN. Oh, to whom shall I make my moan

For to go with me in that heavy° journey?

sorrowful

465 First Fellowship said he would with me gone:°

go

His words were very pleasant and gay,

But afterward he left me alone.

Then spake I to my kinsmen, all in despair,

And also they gave me words fair—

470 They lacked no fair speaking,

But all forsake me in the ending.

Then went I to my Goods that I loved best,

In hope to have comfort; but there had I least,

For my Goods sharply did me tell

475 That he bringeth many into hell.

Then of myself I was ashamed,

And so I am worthy to be blamed:

Thus may I well myself hate.

Of whom shall I now counsel take?

480 I think that I shall never speed

Till that I go to my Good Deed.

But alas, she is so weak

That she can neither go° nor speak.

walk

Yet will I venture° on her now.

gamble

485 My Good Deeds, where be you?

GOOD DEEDS. [speaking from the ground] Here I lie, cold in the ground:

Thy sins hath me sore bound

That I cannot stear.°

stir

EVERYMAN. O Good Deeds, I stand in fear:

490 I must you pray of counsel,

For help now should come right well.

GOOD DEEDS. Everyman, I have understanding

That ye be summoned, account to make,

Before Messiah of Jer'salem King.

495 And you do by me,⁸ that journey with you will I take.

EVERYMAN. Therefore I come to you my moan to make.

I pray you that ye will go with me.

GOOD DEEDS. I would full fain, but I cannot stand, verily.

EVERYMAN. Why, is there anything on you fall?°

fallen

500 GOOD DEEDS. Yea, sir, I may thank you of all:

8. I.e., if you do what I say.

If ye had perfectly cheered me,
Your book of count full ready had be.

[GOOD DEEDS shows him the account book.]

Look, the books of your works and deeds eke,^o also

As how they lie under the feet,

505 To your soul's heaviness.^o distress

EVERYMAN. Our Lord Jesus help me!

For one letter here I cannot see.

GOOD DEEDS. There is a blind^o reckoning in time of distress! illegible

EVERYMAN. Good Deeds, I pray you help me in this need,

510 Or else I am forever damned indeed.

Therefore help me to make reckoning

Before the Redeemer of all thing

That King is and was and ever shall.

GOOD DEEDS. Everyman, I am sorry of^o your fall for 515 And fain would help you and I were able.

EVERYMAN. Good Deeds, your counsel I pray you give me.

GOOD DEEDS. That shall I do verily,

Though that on my feet I may not go;

I have a sister that shall with you also,

520 Called Knowledge, which shall with you abide

To help you to make that dreadful reckoning.

[Enter KNOWLEDGE.]

KNOWLEDGE. Everyman, I will go with thee and be thy guide,

In thy most need to go by thy side.

EVERYMAN. In good condition I am now in everything,

525 And am whole content with this good thing,

Thanked be God my Creator.

GOOD DEEDS. And when she hath brought you there

Where thou shalt heal thee of thy smart,^o pain

Then go you with your reckoning and your Good Deeds together

530 For to make you joyful at heart

Before the blessed Trinity.

EVERYMAN. My Good Deeds, gramercy!

I am well content, certainly,

With your words sweet.

535 KNOWLEDGE. Now go we together lovingly

To Confession, that cleansing river.

EVERYMAN. For joy I weep—I would we were there!

But I pray you give me cognition,^o knowledge

Where dwelleth that holy man Confession?

540 KNOWLEDGE. In the House of Salvation:

We shall find him in that place

That shall us comfort, by God's grace.

[KNOWLEDGE leads EVERYMAN to CONFESSION.]

Lo, this is Confession: kneel down and ask mercy,

For he is in good conceit^o with God Almighty. esteem

545 EVERYMAN. [kneeling] O glorious fountain that all uncleanness doth clarify,⁹

Wash from me the spots of vice unclean,
That on me no sin may be seen.

I come with Knowledge for my redemption,
Redempt° with heart and full contrition, redeemed
550 For I am commanded a pilgrimage to take
And great accounts before God to make.
Now I pray you, Shrift, mother of Salvation,
Help my Good Deeds for my piteous exclamation.

CONFESSION. I know your sorrow well, Everyman:

555 Because with Knowledge ye come to me,
I will you comfort as well as I can,
And a precious jewel I will give thee,
Called Penance, voider° of adversity. expeller
Therewith shall your body chastised be—

560 With abstinence and perseverance in God's service.
Here shall you receive that scourge of me,
Which is penance strong° that ye must endure, harsh
To remember thy Saviour was scourged for thee
With sharp scourges, and suffered it patiently.

565 So must thou ere thou 'scape that painful pilgrimage.
Knowledge, keep° him in this voyage, guard
And by that time Good Deeds will be with thee.

But in any wise be secure° of mercy— certain
For your time draweth fast—and ye will saved be.
570 Ask God mercy and he will grant, truly.
When with the scourge of penance man doth him°
bind, himself

The oil of forgiveness then shall he find.

EVERYMAN. Thanked be God for his gracious work,
For now I will my penance begin.

575 This hath rejoiced and lighted my heart,
Though the knots¹ be painful and hard within.

KNOWLEDGE. Everyman, look your penance that ye fulfill,
What pain that ever it to you be;

And Knowledge shall give you counsel at will 580 How your account ye shall make clearly.

EVERYMAN. O eternal God, O heavenly figure,
O way of righteousness, O goodly vision,
Which descended down in a virgin pure
Because he would every man redeem,

585 Which Adam forfeited by his disobedience;
O blessed Godhead, elect and high Divine,° divinity
Forgive my grievous offense!
Here I cry thee mercy in this presence:
O ghostly Treasure, O Ransomer and Redeemer,

9. Purify.

1. I.e., the knots on the scourge (whip) of penance. "Within": i.e., to my senses.

- 530 Of all the world Hope and Conduiter,^o guide
 Mirror of joy, Founder^o of mercy, Founder
 Which enlumineth^o heaven and earth thereby, lights up
 Hear my clamorous complaint, though it late be;
 Receive my prayers, of thy benignity.
- 595 Though I be a sinner most abominable,
 Yet let my name be written in Moses' table.²
 O Mary, pray to the Maker of all thing
 Me for to help at my ending,
 And save me from the power of my enemy,
- 600 For Death assaileth me strongly.
 And Lady, that I may by mean of thy prayer
 Of your Son's glory to be partner—
 By the means of his passion I it crave.
 I beseech you help my soul to save.
- 605 Knowledge, give me the scourge of penance:
 My flesh therewith shall give acquittance.^o satisfaction for sins
 I will now begin, if God give me grace.
- KNOWLEDGE. Everyman, God give you time and space!^o opportunity
- Thus I bequeath you in the hands of our Saviour:
 610 Now may you make your reckoning sure.
- EVERYMAN. In the name of the Holy Trinity
 My body sore punished shall be:
 Take this, body, for the sin of the flesh!
 Also^o thou delightest to go gay and fresh, as 615 And in the way of damnation thou did me bring,
 Therefore suffer now strokes of punishing!
 Now of penance I will wade the water clear,
 To save me from purgatory, that sharp fire.
- GOOD DEEDS. I thank God, now can I walk and go, 620 And am delivered of my sickness and woe.
 Therefore with Everyman I will go, and not spare:
 His good works I will help him to declare.
- KNOWLEDGE. Now, Everyman, be merry and glad:
 Your Good Deeds cometh now, ye may not be sad.
- 625 Now is your Good Deeds whole and sound,
 Going^o upright upon the ground. walking
- EVERYMAN. My heart is light, and shall be evermore.
 Now will I smite faster than I did before.
- GOOD DEEDS. Everyman, pilgrim, my special friend,
 630 Blessed be thou without end!
 For thee is preparete^o the eternal glory. prepared
 Ye have me made whole and sound.
 Therefore I will bide by thee in every stound.^o trial
- EVERYMAN. Welcome, my Good Deeds! Now I hear thy voice, 635 I weep for very sweetness of love.

2. "Moses' table" is here the tablet on which are recorded those who have been baptized and have done penance.

KNOWLEDGE. Be no more sad, but ever rejoice:

God seeth thy living in his throne above.

Put on this garment to thy behove,^o

advantage

Which is wet with your tears—

640 Or else before God you may it miss

When ye to your journey's end come shall.

EVERYMAN. Gentle Knowledge, what do ye it call?

KNOWLEDGE. It is a garment of sorrow;

From pain it will you borrow:^o redeem

645 Contrition it is

That getteth forgiveness;

It pleaseth God passing^o well.

surpassingly

GOOD DEEDS. Everyman, will you wear it for your heal?^o welfare

EVERYMAN. Now blessed be Jesu, Mary's son,

650 For now have I on true contrition.

And let us go now without tarrying.

Good Deeds, have we clear our reckoning?

GOOD DEEDS. Yea, indeed, I have it here.

EVERYMAN. Then I trust we need not fear.

655 Now friends, let us not part in twain.

KNOWLEDGE. Nay, Everyman, that will we not, certain.

GOOD DEEDS. Yet must thou lead with thee

Three persons of great might.

EVERYMAN. Who should they be?

660 GOOD DEEDS. Discretion and Strength they hight,^o are called

And thy Beauty may not abide behind.

KNOWLEDGE. Also ye must call to mind

Your Five-Wits^o as for your counselors.

senses

GOOD DEEDS. You must have them ready at all hours.

665 EVERYMAN. How shall I get them hither?

KNOWLEDGE. You must call them all together,

And they will be here incontinent.^o

at once

EVERYMAN. My friends, come hither and be present,

Discretion, Strength, my Five-Wits, and Beauty!

[They enter.]

670 BEAUTY. Here at your will we be all ready.

What will ye that we should do?

GOOD DEEDS. That ye would with Everyman go

And help him in his pilgrimage.

Advise you:³ will ye with him or not in that voyage?

675 STRENGTH. We will bring him all thither,

To his help and comfort, ye may believe me.

DISCRETION. So will we go with him all together.

EVERYMAN. Almighty God, loved^o might thou be!

praised

I give thee laud that I have hither brought

680 Strength, Discretion, Beauty, and Five-Wits—lack I nought—

And my Good Deeds, with Knowledge clear,

3. Take thought.

All be in my company at my will here:
I desire no more to my business.

STRENGTH. And I, Strength, will by you stand in distress,

685 Though thou would in battle fight on the ground.

FIVE-WITS. And though it were through the world round,

We will not depart for sweet ne sour.

BEAUTY. No more will I, until death's hour,

Whatsoever thereof befall.

690 DISCRETION. Everyman, advise you first of all:

Go with a good advisement° and deliberation. preparation

We all give you virtuous° monition° confident / prediction

That all shall be well.

EVERYMAN. My friends, hearken what I will tell;

695 I pray God reward you in his heaven-sphere;

Now hearken all that be here,

For I will make my testament,

Here before you all present:

In alms half my good° I will give with my hands twain, goods

700 In the way of charity with good intent;

And the other half, still⁴ shall remain,

I 'queath° to be returned there it ought to be. bequeath

This I do in despite of the fiend of hell,

To go quit out of his perel,⁵

705 Ever after and this day.

KNOWLEDGE. Everyman, hearken what I say:

Go to Priesthood, I you advise,

And receive of him, in any wise,⁶

The holy sacrament and ointment° together; extreme unction

710 Then shortly see ye turn again hither:

We will all abide you here.

FIVE-WITS. Yea, Everyman, hie you that ye ready were.

There is no emperor, king, duke, ne baron,

That of God hath commission

715 As hath the least priest in the world being:

For of the blessed sacraments pure and bening° benign

He beareth the keys, and thereof hath the cure° care

For man's redemption—it is ever sure—

Which God for our souls' medicine

720 Gave us out of his heart with great pine,° torment

Here in this transitory life for thee and me.

The blessed sacraments seven there be:

Baptism, confirmation, with priesthood° good, ordination

And the sacrament of God's precious flesh and blood,

725 Marriage, the holy extreme unction, and penance:

These seven be good to have in remembrance,

Gracious sacraments of high divinity.

EVERYMAN. Fain° would I receive that holy body, gladly

4. I.e., which still.

5. In order to go free of danger from him.

6. At all costs.

- And meekly to my ghostly^o father I will go. spiritual 730 FIVE-WITS. Everyman, that is the best that ye can do:
 God will you to salvation bring.
 For priesthood exceedeth all other thing:
 To us Holy Scripture they do teach,
 And converteth man from sin, heaven to reach;
 735 God hath to them more power given
 Than to any angel that is in heaven.
 With five words⁷ he may consecrate
 God's body in flesh and blood to make,
 And handleth his Maker between his hands.
 740 The priest bindeth and unbindeth all bands,⁸
 Both in earth and in heaven.
 Thou ministers^o all the sacraments seven; administer
 Though we kiss thy feet, thou were worthy;
 Thou art surgeon that cureth sin deadly;
 745 No remedy we find under God
 But all only priesthood.⁹
 Everyman, God gave priests that dignity
 And setteth them in his stead among us to be.
 Thus be they above angels in degree. Unbiblical.
 [Exit EVERYMAN.]
 750 KNOWLEDGE. If priests be good, it is so, surely.
 But when Jesu hanged on the cross with great smart,^o pain
 There he gave out of his blessed heart
 The same sacrament in great torment,
 He sold them not to us, that Lord omnipotent:
 755 Therefore Saint Peter the Apostle doth say
 That Jesu's curse hath all they
 Which God their Saviour do buy or sell,¹
 Or they for any money do take or tell.²
 Sinful priests giveth the sinners example bad:
 760 Their children sitteth by other men's fires, I have heard;
 And some haunteth women's company
 With unclean life, as lusts of lechery.
 These be with sin made blind.
 FIVE-WITS. I trust to God no such may we find.
 765 Therefore let us priesthood honor,
 And follow their doctrine for our souls' succor.
 We be their sheep and they shepherds be
 By whom we all be kept in surety.
 Peace, for yonder I see Everyman come,
 770 Which hath made true satisfaction.

7. The five words ("For this is my body") spoken by the priest when he offers the wafer at communion.

8. A reference to the power of the keys, inherited by the priesthood from St. Peter, who received it from Christ (Matthew xvi.19) with the promise that whatever St. Peter bound or loosed on earth would be bound or loosed in heaven.

9. Except from priesthood alone.

1. To give or receive money for the sacraments is simony, named after Simon, who wished to buy the gift of the Holy Ghost and was cursed by St. Peter.

2. Or who, for any sacrament, take or count out money.

GOOD DEEDS. Methink it is he indeed.

[Re-enter EVERYMAN.]

EVERYMAN. Now Jesu be your alder speed!³

I have received the sacrament for my redemption,
And then mine extreme unction.

775 Blessed be all they that counseled me to take it!
And now, friends, let us go without longer respite.
I thank God that ye have tarried so long.

Now set each of you on this rood^o your hond cross
And shortly follow me:

780 I go before there^o I would be. God be our guide! where

STRENGTH. Everyman, we will not from you go

Till ye have done this voyage long.

DISCRETION. I, Discretion, will bide by you also.

KNOWLEDGE. And though this pilgrimage be never so harsh strong,^o

785 I will never part you fro.

STRENGTH. Everyman, I will be as sure by thee

As ever I did by Judas Maccabee.⁴

EVERYMAN. Alas, I am so faint I may not stand—

My limbs under me doth fold!

790 Friends, let us not turn again to this land,
Not for all the world's gold.

For into this cave must I creep

And turn to earth, and there to sleep.

BEAUTY. What, into this grave, alas?

795 EVERYMAN. Yea, there shall ye consume,^o more and lass.⁵ decay

BEAUTY. And what, should I smother here?

EVERYMAN. Yea, by my faith, and nevermore appear.

In this world live no more we shall,

But in heaven before the highest Lord of all.

800 BEAUTY. I cross out all this! Adieu, by Saint John—

I take my tape in my lap and am gone.⁶

EVERYMAN. What, Beauty, whither will ye?

BEAUTY. Peace, I am deaf—I look not behind me,

Not and thou wouldest give me all the gold in thy chest.

[Exit BEAUTY.]

805 EVERYMAN. Alas, whereto may I trust?

Beauty goeth fast away fro me—

She promised with me to live and die!

STRENGTH. Everyman, I will thee also forsake and deny.

Thy game liketh^o me not at all.

810 EVERYMAN. Why then, ye will forsake me all?

Sweet Strength, tarry a little space.

STRENGTH. Nay, sir, by the rood of grace,

I will hie me from thee fast,

pleases

3. The prosperer of you all.

4. Judas Maccabaeus was an enormously powerful warrior in the defense of Israel against the Syrians in late Old Testament times.

5. More and less (i.e., all of you).

6. I tuck my skirts in my belt and am off.

- Though thou weep till thy heart tobrast.^o break
- 815 EVERYMAN. Ye would ever bide by me, ye said.
 STRENGTH. Yea, I have you far enough conveyed!^o escorted
 Ye be old enough, I understand,
 Your pilgrimage to take on hand:
 I repent me that I hither came.
- 820 EVERYMAN. Strength, you to displease I am to blame,⁷
 Yet promise is debt, this ye well wot.^o know
 STRENGTH. In faith, I care not:
 Thou art but a fool to complain;
 You spend your speech and waste your brain.
- 825 Go, thrust thee into the ground.
 [Exit STRENGTH.]
 EVERYMAN. I had weened^o surer I should you have found. supposed
 He that trusteth in his Strength
 She him deceiveth at the length.
 Both Strength and Beauty forsaketh me—
- 830 Yet they promised me fair and lovingly.
 DISCRETION. Everyman, I will after Strength be gone:
 As for me, I will leave you alone.
 EVERYMAN. Why Discretion, will ye forsake me?
 DISCRETION. Yea, in faith, I will go from thee.
- 835 For when Strength goeth before,
 I follow after evermore.
 EVERYMAN. Yet I pray thee, for the love of the Trinity,
 Look in my grave once piteously.
 DISCRETION. Nay, so nigh will I not come.
- 840 Farewell everyone!
 [Exit DISCRETION.]
 EVERYMAN. O all thing faileth save God alone—
 Beauty, Strength, and Discretion.
 For when Death bloweth his blast
 They all run fro me full fast.
- 845 FIVE-WITS. Everyman, my leave now of thee I take.
 I will follow the other, for here I thee forsake.
 EVERYMAN. Alas, then may I wail and weep,
 For I took you for my best friend.
 FIVE-WITS. I will no longer thee keep.^o watch over
- 850 Now farewell, and there an end!
 [Exit FIVE-WITS.]
 EVERYMAN. O Jesu, help, all hath forsaken me!
 GOOD DEEDS. Nay, Everyman, I will bide with thee:
 I will not forsake thee indeed;
 Thou shalt find me a good friend at need.
- 855 EVERYMAN. Gramercy, Good Deeds! Now may I true friends
 see.
 They have forsaken me every one—

7. I'm to blame for displeasing you.

I loved them better than my Good Deeds alone.

Knowledge, will ye forsake me also?

KNOWLEDGE. Yea, Everyman, when ye to Death shall go,

860 But not yet, for no manner of danger.

EVERYMAN. Gramercy, Knowledge, with all my heart!

KNOWLEDGE. Nay, yet will I not from hence depart

Till I see where ye shall become.⁸

EVERYMAN. Methink, alas, that I must be gone

865 To make my reckoning and my debts pay,

For I see my time is nigh spent away.

Take example, all ye that this do hear or see,

How they that I best loved do forsake me,

Except my Good Deeds that bideth truly.

870 GOOD DEEDS. All earthly things is but vanity.

Beauty, Strength, and Discretion do man forsake,

Foolish friends and kinsmen that fair spake—

All fleeth save Good Deeds, and that am I.

EVERYMAN. Have mercy on me, God most mighty,

875 And stand by me, thou mother and maid, holy Mary!

GOOD DEEDS. Fear not: I will speak for thee.

EVERYMAN. Here I cry God mercy!

GOOD DEEDS. Short our end, and 'minish our pain.⁹

Let us go, and never come again.

880 EVERYMAN. Into thy hands, Lord, my soul I commend:

Receive it, Lord, that it be not lost.

As thou me boughtest,⁹ so me defend,

redeemed

And save me from the fiend's boast,

That I may appear with that blessed host

885 That shall be saved at the day of doom.

In manus tuas, of mights most,

Forever commendo spiritum meum.¹

[EVERYMAN and GOOD DEEDS descend into the grave.]

KNOWLEDGE. Now hath he suffered that we all shall endure,

The Good Deeds shall make all sure.

890 Now hath he made ending,

Methinketh that I hear angels sing

And make great joy and melody

Where Everyman's soul received shall be.

ANGEL. [within] Come, excellent elect⁹ spouse to Jesu!² chosen

895 Here above thou shalt go

Because of thy singular virtue.

Now the soul is taken the body fro,

Thy reckoning is crystal clear:

Now shalt thou into the heavenly sphere—

900 Unto the which all ye shall come

That liveth well before the day of doom.

8. Till I see what shall become of you.

9. I.e., make our dying quick and diminish our pain.

1. "Into thy hands, O greatest of powers, I commend my spirit forever."

2. Man's soul is often referred to as the bride of Jesus.

[Enter DOCTOR.³]DOCTOR. This memorial⁴ men may have in mind: reminder

Ye hearers, take it of worth,⁴ old and young,
And forsake Pride, for he deceiveth you in the end.

905 And remember Beauty, Five-Wits, Strength, and Discretion,
They all at the last do Everyman forsake,
Save his Good Deeds there doth he take—
But beware, for and they be small,
Before God he hath no help at all—

910 None excuse may be there for Everyman.

Alas, how shall he do than?⁵

then

For after death amends may no man make,
For then mercy and pity doth him forsake.

915 If his reckoning be not clear when he doth come,
God will say, "Ite, maledicti, in ignem eternum!"⁵

And he that hath his account whole and sound,
High in heaven he shall be crowned,

Unto which place God bring us all thither,
That we may live body and soul together.

920 Thereto help, the Trinity!

Amen say ye, for saint charity.

3. The Doctor is the learned theologian who explains the meaning of the play.

4. Prize it.

5. "Depart, ye cursed, into everlasting fire."

POPULAR BALLADS

Ballads are anonymous narrative songs that have been preserved by oral transmission. Although any stage of a given culture may produce ballads, they are most characteristic of primitive societies such as that of the American frontier in the 18th and 19th centuries or that of the English-Scottish border region in the later Middle Ages. These northern English songs, even divorced from the tunes to which they were once sung, are narrative poems of great literary interest.

The origins of the popular (or folk) ballad are much disputed. The theory that they were first composed by communal effort, taking shape as the songs with which primitive people accompanied ritual dances, no longer seems plausible. On the other hand, the forms in which the ballads have come down to us show that they have been subjected to a continuing process of revision, both conscious and unconscious, by those through whose lips and memories they passed. Though the English ballads were probably composed during the 500 year period from 1200 to 1700, few of them were printed before the 18th century and some not until the 19th. Bishop Thomas Percy (1729-1811) was among the first to take a literary interest in ballads, stimulated by his chance discovery of a 17th-century manuscript in which a number of them had been copied down among a great welter of Middle English verse. Percy's publication of this material in his Reliques of Ancient English Poetry inspired others, notably

Sir Walter Scott, to go to the living source of the ballads and to set them down on paper at the dictation of the border people among whom the old songs were still being sung. These collectors often found that one ballad was remembered differently by different people: for instance, when one speaks of Sir Patrick Spens one is actually speaking of a number of poems that tell the same story in slightly or widely different words. If a single original form by a single author lies behind this diversity, it is too far back in the mists of time to be recovered.

A work that is the product of a consciously artistic mind will not ordinarily be improved by the revision that most ballads have been subjected to, but some of the ballads are probably better in their revised form than they were in their original form. The distinctive quality that popular ballads share is spareness: they are apt to deal only with the culminating incident or climax of a plot, to describe that event with intense compression, to put the burden of narration on allusive monologue or dialogue, and to avoid editorial comment. This concentration upon the bare essential is precisely that quality that the fallible human memory is likely not only to preserve but also to enhance, for the effort of remembering causes a sloughing-off of what is not strictly relevant. Some of the best of the ballads may have thus been refined in their transmission through men's minds, gaining rather than losing artistic stature.

The fact that ballads were originally songs is important to their development. The simplicity of the tunes to which they were sung not only influenced the distinctive verse form—normally a quatrain with four stresses per line—but also encouraged a corresponding simplicity in the narrative itself, and made individualizing flourishes impossible. Furthermore, the choral practice of using refrains and other kinds of repetitions probably lent the ballad one of its most impressive qualities, for while the actual narratives are tightly compressed, ballads rarely develop in an unbroken line. The reader—originally, the hearer—is constantly made to pause by a repeated phrase, or even by nonsense syllables, which provide suspense in a very primitive and effective form. The progress to a foreknown, foredoomed conclusion is paradoxically made to seem more inevitable, more urgent, by such relaxations of narrative tension. The use of repetition and refrain also imparts to the ballads something of the quality of incantation, of ritual, of liturgy—all of which are, of course, themselves closely allied with music.

Most of the best ballads have as their subject a tragic incident, often a murder or accidental death, generally involving supernatural elements. These motifs are a part of the common legacy of European folklore, and many of the English ballads have counterparts in other languages. To this class belong, among the selections chosen for inclusion here, Lord Randall, Edward, Barbara Allan, the Wife of Usher's Well, the Three Ravens, and—though not in its present form—Sir Patrick Spens. Not all the ballads with folklore motifs are tragic, however, for Thomas Rhymer has a happy ending. This ballad has gone through an added stage of evolution, for it is a shortening—a reduction to ballad form—of a romance which is preserved in a longer and more sophisticated form; but the romance itself had its origin in some ancient folk tale, and there may have been an earlier ballad on the same theme, with, perhaps, a less happy conclusion.

Some ballads have as their subject actual historical incidents. Two late songs, the Bonny Earl of Murray and Bonny George Campbell, lament the political murders of two popular 16th-century Scots nobles. The presumably much older ballad Sir Patrick Spens may be based on a historical incident of the end of the 13th century. Yet all three of these achieve that mood of sadness that is characteristic of the best of the tragic stories derived from ancient folklore. The quasi-historical Robin Hood ballads, which form a large class by themselves, are less impressive. Most of them seem to have been composed relatively late and hence not to have gone through many stages of oral transmission; they lack the better ballads' intensity, often exhibiting an expansive development that is not free from chattiness. They are probably the work of minstrels who exploited the old folklore figure of Robin Hood by making him a symbol of that rebellion against authority that their own hearers perhaps longed for but did not dare to undertake. In the ballads Robin Hood is placed in a kind of never-never land of English history, where he can strike down tyrants with impunity, but often with far too much gloating: the attractive folklore figure of a natural, freedom-loving man has been burdened with too many political and social implications.

St. Steven and King Herod is hardly a ballad in the same sense as the other poems discussed here. It was probably not transmitted orally, for it contains Latin, and it shows none of the characteristic signs of having passed through more than a single stage of composition. Its author was probably a learned cleric who was exploiting the ballad form for religious purposes—an exploitation so successful as to earn the poem classification as a true ballad despite its evident artificiality.

The great collection of English ballads is that of F. J. Child, The English and Scottish Popular Ballads, first published in 1882. The numbers under which Child lists the various versions of each of the ballads printed here are given in footnotes to the individual titles. The versions chosen for this anthology are those which the editor considers the most effective as poetry. Spelling has been modernized; the majority of the northernisms in the originals have been retained.

Lord Randall¹

"Oh where ha'e ye been, Lord Randall my son?
O where ha'e ye been, my handsome young man?"

"I ha'e been to the wild wood: mother, make my bed soon,
For I'm weary wi' hunting, and fain° wald° lie down."

gladly / would

- 5 "Where gat ye your dinner, Lord Randall my son?
Where gat ye your dinner, my handsome young man?"
"I dined wi' my true love; mother, make my bed soon,
For I'm weary wi' hunting, and fain wald lie down."

1. Child, No. 12.

"What gat ye to your dinner, Lord Randall my son?

10 "What gat ye to your dinner, my handsome young man?"

"I gat eels boiled in broo:° mother, make my bed soon,

broth

For I'm weary wi' hunting and fain wald lie down."

"What became of your bloodhounds, Lord Randall my son?

What became of your bloodhounds, my handsome young man?"

15 "O they swelled and they died: mother, make my bed soon,

For I'm weary wi' hunting and fain wald lie down."

"O I fear ye are poisoned, Lord Randall my son!

O I fear ye are poisoned, my handsome young man!"

"O yes, I am poisoned: mother, make my bed soon,

20 For I'm sick at the heart, and I fain wald lie down."

Edward²

"Why does your brand sae drap wi' bluid,³

Edward, Edward?

Why does your brand sae drap wi' bluid,

And why sae sad gang° ye, O?"

go

5 "O I ha'e killed my hawk sae guid,

Mither, mither,

O I ha'e killed my hawk sae guid,

And I had nae mair° but he, O."

more

"Your hawkes bluid was never sae reid,° red

10 Edward, Edward.

Your hawkes bluid was never sae reid,

My dear son I tell thee, O."

"O I ha'e killed my reid-roan° steed,

chestnut

Mither, mither,

15 O I ha'e killed my reid-roan steed,

That erst° was sae fair and free, O."

before

"Your steed was auld° and ye ha'e gat mair,

old

Edward, Edward.

Your steed was auld and ye ha'e gat mair:

20 Som other dule° ye dree°, O."

grief / suffer

"O I ha'e killed my fader dear,

Mither, mither,

O I ha'e killed my fader dear,

Alas and wae° is me, O!"

woe

25 "And whatten° penance wul ye dree for that,

what sort of

Edward, Edward?

And whatten penance wul ye dree for that,

My dear son, now tell me, O?"

2. Child, No. 13.

3. I.e., why does your sword so drip with blood?

- "I'll set my feet in yonder boat,
 Mither, mither,
 I'll set my feet in yonder boat,
 And I'll fare over the sea, O."
- "And what wul ye do wi' your towers and your ha',
 Edward, Edward?
 And what wul ye do wi' your towers and your ha',
 That were sae fair to see, O?"
- "I'll let thame stand til they down fa',
 Mither, mither,
 I'll let thame stand til they down fa',
 For here never mair maun° I be, O." must
- "And what wul ye leave to your bairns° and your wife, children
 Edward, Edward,
 And what wul ye leave to your bairns and your wife,
 Whan ye gang over the sea, O?"
- "The warldes room⁴ late° them beg thrae° life, let / through
 Mither, mither,
 The warldes room late them beg thrae life,
 For thame never mair wul I see, O."
- "And what wul ye leave to your ain° mither dear, own
 Edward, Edward?
 And what wul ye leave to your ain mither dear,
 My dear son, now tell me, O?"
- "The curse of hell frae° me sal° ye bear, from / shall
 Mither, mither,
 The curse of hell frac me sal ye bear,
 Sic° counseils ye gave to me, O." such

Barbara Allan¹

- It was in and about the Martinmas² time,
 When the green leaves were a-fallin',
 That Sir John Graeme in the West Country
 Fell in love with Barbara Allan.
- He sent his man down through the town
 To the place where she was dwellin':
 "O haste and come to my master dear,
 Gin° ye be Barbara Allan." if
- O slowly, slowly rase° she up, rose
 To the place where he was lyin',
 And when she drew the curtain by:
 "Young man, I think you're dyin'."

4. The world's space.
 1. Child, No. 84.

2. November 11.

"O it's I'm sick, and very, very sick,
And 'tis a' for Barbara Allan."

15 "O the better for me ye sal^o never be, Though your heart's blood were a-spillin'." shall

"O dinna ye mind,³ young man," said she,
"When ye the cups were fillin',
That ye made the healths gae^o round and round,
20 And slighted Barbara Allan?" go

He turned his face unto the wall,
And death with him was dealin':
"Adieu, adieu, my dear friends all,
And be kind to Barbara Allan."

25 And slowly, slowly, rase she up,
And slowly, slowly left him;
And sighing said she could not stay,
Since death of life had reft^o him. deprived

She had not gane^o a mile but twa,^o gone / two 30 When she heard the dead-bell knellin',
And every jow^o that the dead-bell ga'ed⁴ stroke
It cried, "Woe to Barbara Allan!"

"O mother, mother, make my bed,
O make it soft and narrow:
35 Since my love died for me today,
I'll die for him tomorrow."

The Wife of Usher's Well¹

There lived a wife at Usher's Well,
And a wealthy wife was she;
She had three stout and stalwart sons,
And sent them o'er the sea.

5 They hadna' been a week from her,
A week but barely ane,^o one
When word came to the carlin^o wife old
That her three sons were gane.^o gone

They hadna' been a week from her,
10 A week but barely three,
When word came to the carlin wife
That her sons she'd never see.

"I wish the wind may never cease,
Nor fashes^o in the flood," disturbances

3. Don't you remember.
4. I.e., made.

1. Child, No. 79.

- 15 Till my three sons come hame^o to me,
In earthly flesh and blood." home
- It fell about the Martinmas,²
When nights are long and mirk,^o dark
The carlin wife's three sons came hame,
20 And their hats were o' the birk.³
- It neither grew in sike^o nor ditch,
Nor yet in ony sheugh,^o field
But at the gates o' Paradise furrow
That birk grew fair cneugh.
- 25 "Blow up the fire, my maidens,
Bring water from the well:
For a' my house shall feast this night,
Since my three sons are well."
- And she has made to them a bed,
30 She's made it large and wide,
And she's ta'en her mantle her about,
Sat down at the bedside.
- Up then crew the red, red cock,
And up and crew the gray.
35 The eldest to the youngest said,
" 'Tis time we were away."⁴
- The cock he hadna' crawled but once,
And clapped his wings at a',
When the youngest to the eldest said,
40 "Brother, we must awa'.^o away
- "The cock doth crawl, the day doth daw,^o dawn
The channerin'^o worm doth chide: fretting
Gin^o we be missed out o' our place, if
A sair pain we maun bide.⁵
- 45 "Fare ye weel,^o my mother dear, well
Fareweel to barn and byre.^o cow house
And fare ye weel, the bonny lass
That kindles my mother's fire."

The Three Ravens¹

There were three ravens sat on a tree,
Down a down, hay down, hay down,
There were three ravens sat on a tree,
With a down,

2. November 11.

3. Birch: those returning from the dead were thought to wear vegetation on their heads.

4. Dead men must return to their graves at cockcrow.

5. A sore pain we must abide.

1. Child, No. 26.

5 There were three ravens sat on a tree,
They were as black as they might be,
With a down, derry, derry, derry, down, down.

The one of them said to his mate,
"Where shall we our breakfast take?

10 "Down in yonder green field
There lies a knight slain under his shield.

"His hounds they lie down at his feet,
So well they can their master keep.

"His hawks they fly so eagerly,^o 15 There's no fowl^o dare him come nigh."
fiercely
bird

Down there comes a fallow^o doe,
As great with young as she might go.^o red-brown
walk

She lifted up his bloody head,
And kissed his wounds that were so red.

20 She got him up upon her back,
And carried him to earthen lake.^o pit

She buried him before the prime;²
She was dead herself ere evensong time.
God send every gentleman

25 Such hawks, such hounds, and such a lemman.^o mistress

Bonny George Campbell³

High upon Highlands
And low upon Tay,
Bonny George Campbell
Rade^o out on a day.
rode

5 Saddled and bridled
And gallant rade he:
Hame^o cam his guid horse,
But never cam he.
home

Out cam his auld mither,
10 Greeting fu' sair,⁴
And out cam his bonny bride,
Riving^o her hair.
tearing

Saddled and bridled
And booted rade he:
15 Toom^o hame cam the saddle,
But never cam he.
empty

2. The first hour of the morning.

3. Child, No. 210. The form printed here is a composite, made up from several variant versions by the ballad-collector Motherwell.

4. Weeping full sore.

“My meadow lies green,
 And my corn is unshorn,
 My barn is to build,
 20 And my babe is unborn.”

Saddled and bridled
 And booted rade he;
 Toom hame cam the saddle,
 But never cam he.

Sir Patrick Spens¹

The king sits in Dumferline town,
 Drinking the blude-reid° wine: blood-red
 “O whar will I get a guid sailor
 To sail this ship of mine?”

5 Up and spak an eldern° knight, ancient
 Sat at the king’s richt knee:
 “Sir Patrick Spens is the best sailor
 That sails upon the sea.”

The king has written a braid° letter broad
 10 And signed it wi° his hand,
 And sent it to Sir Patrick Spens,
 Wae walking on the sand.

The first line that Sir Patrick read,
 A loud lauch° lauched he; laugh
 15 The next line that Sir Patrick read,
 The tear blinded his ee.° eye

“O wha° is this has done this deed,
 This ill deed done to me, who
 To send me out this time o’ the year,
 20 To sail upon the sea?

“Make haste, make haste, my mirry men all,
 Our guid ship sails the morn.”

“O say na° sae,° my master dear, not / so
 For I fear a deadly storm.

25 “Late late yestre°en I saw the new moon
 Wi° the auld° moon in her arm, old
 And I fear, I fear, my dear master,
 That we will come to harm.”

O our Scots nobles were richt laith° loath
 30 To weet° their cork-heeled shoon,° wet / shoes
 But lang owre° a’ the play were played ere
 Their hats they swam aboon.° above

1. Child, No. 58.

O lang, lang may their ladies sit,
 Wi' their fans into their hand,
 35 Or e'er they see Sir Patrick Spens
 Come sailing to the land.

O lang, lang may the ladies stand,
 Wi' their gold kembs° in their hair, combs
 Waiting for their ain° dear lords, own
 40 For they'll see thame na mair.° more

Half o'er,² half o'er to Aberdour
 It's fifty fadom° deep, fathoms
 And there lies guid Sir Patrick Spens,
 Wi' the Scots lords at his feet.

The Bonny Earl of Murray¹

Ye Highlands and ye Lawlands,° Lowlands
 O where have you been?
 They have slain the Earl of Murray,
 And they laid him on the green.

5 "Now wae° be to thee, Huntly,² woe
 And wherefore did you sae?° so
 I bade you bring him wi' you,
 But forbade you him to slay."

He was a braw° gallant, brave
 10 And he rid³ at the ring;
 And the bonny Earl of Murray,
 O he might have been a king.

He was a braw gallant,
 And he played at the ba';° ball
 15 And the bonny Earl of Murray
 Was the flower amang them a'.

He was a braw gallant,
 And he played at the glove;⁴
 And the bonny Earl of Murray,
 20 O he was the queen's love.

O lang will his lady
 Look o'er the Castle Down,
 Ere she see the Earl of Murray
 Come sounding⁵ through the town.

2. Halfway over.

1. Child, No. 181.

2. Huntly, who slew Murray in 1592, had been ordered by King James VI of Scotland (the speaker of this stanza) to arrest the earl.

3. Rode. "The ring" was a hanging ring which mounted knights tried to impale on their spears.

4. Either the goal in a race or else a lady's favor.

5. Blowing horns.

Thomas Rhymer¹

True Thomas lay on Huntly bank;
 A ferly° he spied wi' his ee;° wonder / eye
 And there he saw a lady bright
 Come riding down by the Eildon Tree.²

5 Her shirt was o' the grass-green silk,
 Her mantle o' the velvet fine;
 At ilka° tett° of her horse's mane every / braid
 Hung fifty sil'er bells and nine.

True Thomas he pulled off his cap
 10 And louted° low down to his knee: bowed
 "All hail, thou mighty Queen of Heaven!
 For thy peer on earth I never did see."

"O no, O no, Thomas," she said,
 "That name does not belang to me;
 15 I am but the Queen of fair Elfland,
 That am hither come to visit thee.

"Harp° and carp,° Thomas," she said, play / speak
 "Harp and carp along wi' me;
 And if ye dare to kiss my lips,
 20 Sure of your body I will be."

"Betide me weal, betide me woe,
 That weird° shall never daunt me." fate
 Sine° he has kissed her rosy lips, then
 All underneath the Eildon Tree.

25 "Now ye maun° go wi' me," she said, must
 "True Thomas, ye maun go wi' me;
 And ye maun serve me seven years
 Through weal or woe, as may chance to be."

She mounted on her milk-white steed;
 30 She's ta'en True Thomas up behind;
 And ay whene'er her bridle rung,
 The steed flew swifter than the wind.

O they rade° on and farther on; rode
 The steed gaed° swifter than the wind, went 35 Until they reached a desert wide,
 And living land was left behind.

"Light down, light down now, True Thomas,
 And lean your head upon my knee.

1. I.e., Thomas the Minstrel. Child, No. 37.

2. Trees in folklore are often frequented by supernatural beings.

Abide and rest a little space,
 40 And I will show you ferlies three.

"O see ye not yon narrow road,
 So thick beset with thorns and briars?
 That is the path of righteousness,
 Though after it but few inquire.

45 "And see ye not that braid,° braid road broad
 That lies across that lily leven?°
 That is the path of wickedness,
 Though some call it the road to heaven.

"And see not ye that bonny road
 50 That winds about the ferny brae?° hillside
 That is the road to fair Elfland,
 Where thou and I this night maun gae.° go

"But Thomas, ye maun hold your tongue,
 Whatever ye may hear or see;
 55 For if you speak word in Elfenland,
 Ye'll ne'er get back to your ain° country." own

O they rade on and farther on,
 And they waded through rivers aboon° the knee, above
 And they saw neither sun nor moon,
 60 But they heard the roaring of the sea.

It was mirk,° mirk night, and there was nae stern-light,⁴ dark
 And they waded through red blude to the knee,
 For a' the blude that's shed on earth
 Rins° through the springs o' that country. runs

65 Sine they came onto a garden green,
 And she pulled an apple frae° a tree. from
 "Take this for thy wages, True Thomas,
 It will give thee the tongue that never can lee."° lie

"My tongue is mine ain," True Thomas said;
 70 "A gudely° gift ye wad° gi'e to me! goodly / would
 I neither dought° to buy nor sell feared
 At fair or tryst° where I may be. meeting place

"I dought neither speak to prince or peer,
 Nor ask of grace frae fair lady."
 75 "Now hold thy peace," the lady said,
 "For as I say, so must it be."

He has gotten a coat of the even° cloth, smooth
 And a pair of shoes of velvet green;
 And till seven years were gane and past,
 80 True Thomas on earth was never seen.

3. Probably "lawn."

4. No starlight.

Robin Hood and the Three Squires¹

There are twelve months in all the year,
 As I hear many men say,
 But the merriest month in all the year
 Is the merry month of May.

5 Now Robin Hood is to Nottingham gone,
With a link-a-down and a-day,
 And there he met a silly^o old woman, poor, innocent
 Was weeping on the way.

"What news? what news, thou silly old woman?"
 10 What news hast thou for me?"
 Said she, "There's three squires in Nottingham town, Today is condemned to dee."^o die

"O have they parishes burnt?" he said,
 "Or have they ministers slain?"
 15 Or have they robbed any virgin,
 Or with other men's wives have lain?"

"They have no parishes burnt, good sir,
 Nor yet have ministers slain,
 Nor have they robbed any virgin,
 20 Nor with other men's wives have lain."

"O what have they done?" said bold Robin Hood,
 "I pray thee tell to me."
 "It's for slaying of the king's fallow^o deer, brown-red Bearing their longbows with thee."

25 "Dost thou not mind,^o old woman," he said, remember
 "Since thou made me sup and dine?
 By the truth of my body," quoth bold Robin Hood,
 "You could not tell it in better time."

Now Robin Hood is to Nottingham gone,
 30 With a link-a-down and a-day,
 And there he met with a silly old palmer,²
 Was walking along the highway.

"What news? what news, thou silly old man?"
 "What news, I do thee pray?"
 35 Said he, "Three squires in Nottingham town
 Are condemned to die this day."

"Come change thine apparel with me, old man,
 Come change thine apparel for mine.

1. Child, No. 140.

2. A poor old palmer: a palmer was one who had made the pilgrimage to the Holy Land.

Here is forty shillings in good silver,

40 Go drink it in beer or wine."

"O thine apparel is good," he said,

"And mine is ragged and torn.

Wherever you go, wherever you ride,

Laugh ne'er an old man to scorn."

45 "Come change thine apparel with me, old churl,

Come change thine apparel with mine:

Here are twenty pieces of good broad gold,

Go feast thy brethren with wine."

Then he put on the old man's hat,

50 It stood full high on the crown:

"The first bold bargain that I come at,

It shall make thee come down."

Then he put on the old man's cloak,

Was patched black, blue, and red:

55 He thought it no shame all the day long

To wear the bags of bread.

Then he put on the old man's breeks,^o underbreeches

Was patched from ballup³ to side:

"By the truth of my body," bold Robin can^o say,

did

60 "This man loved little pride."

Then he put on the old man's hose,^o

tights

Were patched from knee to wrist:

"By the truth of my body," said bold Robin Hood,

"I'd laugh if I had any list."^o

desire

65 Then he put on the old man's shoes,

Were patched both beneath and aboon:^o

above

Then Robin Hood swore a solemn oath,

"It's good habit^o that makes a man."

clothing

Now Robin Hood is to Nottingham gone,

70 With a link-a-down and a-down,

And there he met with the proud sheriff,

Was walking along the town.

"O Christ you save, O sheriff," he said,

"O Christ you save and see:

75 And what will you give to a silly old man

Today will your hangman be?"

"Some suits, some suits," the sheriff he said,

"Some suits I'll give to thee;

Some suits, some suits, and pence thirtcen,

80 Today's a hangman's fee."

Then Robin he turns him round about,
 And jumps from stock^o to stone:
 "By the truth of my body," the sheriff he said,
 "That's well jumped, thou nimble old man."

stump

85 "I was ne'er a hangman in all my life,
 Nor yet intends to trade.
 But cursed be he," said bold Robin,
 "That first a hangman was made."

"I've a bag for meal, and a bag for malt,
 90 And a bag for barley and corn,
 A bag for bread, and a bag for beef,
 And a bag for my little small horn."

"I have a horn in my pocket:
 I got it from Robin Hood;
 95 And still when I set it to my mouth,
 For thee it blows little good."

"O wind^o thy horn, thou proud fellow:
 Of thee I have no doubt:^o
 I wish that thou give such a blast
 100 Till both thy eyes fall out."

blow fear

The first loud blast that he did blow,
 He blew both loud and shrill.
 A hundred and fifty of Robin Hood's men
 Came riding over the hill.

105 The next loud blast that he did give,
 He blew both loud and amain,
 And quickly sixty of Robin Hood's men
 Came shining⁴ over the plain.

"O who are those," the sheriff he said,
 110 "Come tripping over the lea?"^o
 "They're my attendants," brave Robin did say,
 "They'll pay a visit to thee."

meadow

They took the gallows from the slack,^o
 They set it in the glen;

hollow

115 They hanged the proud sheriff on that,
 Released their own three men.

St. Steven and King Herod¹

Saint Steven was a clerk
 In King Herodes hall,
 And served him of bread and cloth
 As every king befall.²

4. I.e., making a brave show.
 1. Child, No. 22.

2. As is appropriate to every king.

- 5 Steven out of kitchen came
 With boar's head on hand;
 He saw a star was fair and bright
 Over Bedlem° stand.
- He cast adown the boar's head
 10 And went into the hall:
 "I forsake thee, King Herodes,
 And thy works all.
- "I forsake thee, King Herodes,
 And thy works all:
 15 There is a child in Bedlem born
 Is better than we all."
- "What aileth thee, Steven?
 What is thee befall?
 Lacketh thee either meat or drink
 20 In King Herodes hall?"
- "Lacketh me neither meat ne drink
 In King Herodes hall:
 There is a child in Bedlem born
 Is better than we all."
- 25 "What aileth thee, Steven?
 Art thou wood, or ginneſt weede?³
 Lacketh thee either gold or fee°
 Or any rich weed?"°
- "Lacketh me neither gold ne fee
 30 Ne none rich weed:
 There is a child in Bedlem born
 Shall help us at our need."
- "That is also° sooth,° Steven,
 Also sooth, ywis,°
 35 As this capon crow ſhal
 That lith° here in my diſh."
- That word was not ſo ſoon ſaid,
 That word in that hall,
 The capon crew *Chriſtus natus eſt*⁴
 40 Among the lords all.
- "Riſeth up, my tormentors,
 By two and all by one,
 And leadeth Steven out of this town,
 And ſtoneth him with ſtone."
- 45 Tooken they Steven,
 And ſtoned him in the way;
 And therefore is his even⁵
 Chriſt's own day.

Bethlehem

property clothing

as / true indeed

lies

3. Art thou insane or beginning to go mad?

4. Christ is born.

5. Eve: the day before his feast day.

SIR THOMAS MALORY

(ca. 1405–1471)

- 1451: First of a long series of arrests and imprisonments.
 ca. 1469–70: Morte Darthur completed in prison.
 1485: Morte Darthur printed by William Caxton.

The little that we know of Malory (and that the Malory discussed here was indeed the Malory who wrote the Morte Darthur is an assumption that has recently been challenged severely though by no means fatally) suggests a man of violent temperament much given to lawless action. He seems to have been a respectable enough person in his youth, but in 1451 he got into difficulties with the law that lasted the rest of his life. In that year he was arrested in order to prevent his doing injury—presumably further injury—to a priory in Lincolnshire, and shortly thereafter he was accused of a number of criminal acts. These included escaping from prison after his first arrest, twice breaking into and plundering the Abbey of Coombe, extorting money from various persons, and committing rape. Malory pleaded innocent of all charges, and it is indeed possible that he was less guilty of (or had more provocation for) the crimes than the records make it appear. The years of the Wars of the Roses were violent ones, when a supporter of the party out of power was apt to be subjected to much persecution by the ruling group; such a man might at times feel himself justified in taking the law into his own hands in order to recover what had wrongfully been taken from him. But one suspects that Malory took the law into his own hands with unnecessary enthusiasm.

How much time Malory passed in prison is not known, but he was surely a prisoner in 1468 after he had supported an unsuccessful Lancastrian revolt against the Yorkist king, Edward IV, who specifically excluded Malory from two amnesties granted to the Lancastrians. It was probably in prison that he became engaged on the Morte Darthur; he was still in prison when he completed it, and may have died there. The book was printed (and edited) in 1485 by William Caxton, the first English printer. A manuscript of it that has recently come to light helps us to a better text than Caxton's.

Arthurian romance, of which Malory's book is a compilation, is a body of highly diverse narrative materials which originated at various times among various peoples and which only gradually became associated with the name of Arthur. Arthur himself was probably a British or Roman-British king who resisted the Anglo-Saxon invasions of England in the 6th century, but his historical reality is less important than the legendary role he played as the great figure around whom the medieval ideal of chivalry flourished. At its simplest, chivalry is the code that governs the actions of the knight-adventurer who rides out in search of wrongs that he may right—typically in search of ladies whom he may rescue from monsters, churls, and wicked (non-Arthurian) knights. The ideal was invented and given a local habitation in the brilliantly imaginative and idealistic 12th century. History had, of course, never witnessed such knights, such ladies, nor such a landscape as that on which their adventures took place, and when chivalry was first invented it was already placed in the past. Man's urge to devise an idealized past seems to be recurrent, for the Camelot of Arthur has its counterpart in the Sherwood Forest of Robin Hood and in the American West. All three of these fictions have the same ideal: that of maintaining order in an essentially lawless land by the efforts of the individual, who fights for the right against seemingly overwhelming odds. Naïve as the practice of this ideal may seem in the Arthurian fiction, the ideal itself has made an important contribution to civilization—though if one imitates literally the Arthurian practice of enforcing the right by violence, as Malory's life suggests that he did, one will find oneself not maintaining order, but disrupting it.

The Arthurian milieu attracted to itself all sorts of diverse motifs, such as the remnants of primitive pagan religious rites, heavily moralized Christianity, an elaborate and in general flagrantly immoral code of romantic love, and others equally miscellaneous. In 13th-century France the amorphous Arthurian material was given a kind of order in a series of prose narratives. Long and often rather vaguely told, these formed the chief material which Malory further edited and ordered while translating it into English.

His book is attractive, however, not only because it is the best and most complete treatment of the story of Arthur and his knights, but also because it is one of the greatest pieces of prose in English. Malory was the first English writer to make prose as sensitive an instrument of narrative as English poetry had always been. One has only to turn from a page of Chaucer's prose to a page of Malory's to be struck by the naturalness and lack of self-consciousness of the later writer. Indeed, Malory achieves in his prose that wonderful impression of simplicity that Chaucer achieves only in his poetry. No matter how extravagant the adventure Malory is recounting, he always manages to give it a hard base of realism. He is in particular a master of naturalistic dialogue, with which he keeps his narrative close to earth. And both he and the majority of his characters are masters of understatement who express themselves, in moments of great emotional tension, with a bare minimum of words. The result is highly provocative to the reader's imagination, which is made, in a sense, to do the writer's work for him. This appeal to the reader's creative imagination probably explains why the Morte Darthur brings forth such widely differing responses from its readers, who agree, perhaps, only in their affection for the work.

"The Death of Arthur"—the incident that gives the book its title, though the book itself concerns the whole life of Arthur—is one of Malory's finest passages, and the one on which Tennyson based a famous Idyll. Largely at the insistence of his nephew Gawain, Arthur has been in France, futilely besieging his friend Lancelot in a halfhearted attempt to punish him for having been Queen Guinevere's lover. Word comes to the King that his bastard son Mordred has seized the kingdom, and Arthur leads his forces back to England. Mordred attacks them upon their landing, and Gawain is mortally wounded and dies, though not before he has repented for having insisted that Arthur fight Lancelot and has written Lancelot to come to the aid of his former lord.

*From Morte Darthur*¹[The Death of Arthur]

So upon Trinity Sunday at night King Arthur dreamed a wonderful dream, and in his dream him seemed² that he saw upon a chafflet a chair, and the chair was fast to a wheel, and thereupon sat King Arthur in the richest cloth of gold that might be made. And the King thought there was under him, far from him, an hideous deep black water, and therein was all manner of serpents, and worms, and wild beasts, foul and horrible. And suddenly the King thought that the wheel turned upside down, and he fell among the serpents, and every beast took him by a limb. And then the King cried as he lay in his bed, "Help, help!"

And then knights, squires, and yeomen awaked the king, and then he was so amazed that he wist³ not where he was. And then so he awaked⁴ until it was nigh day, and then he fell on slumbering again, not sleeping nor thoroughly waking. So the King seemed⁵ verily that there came Sir Gawain unto him with a number of fair ladies with him. So when King Arthur saw him, he said, "Welcome, my sister's son. I weened ye had been dead. And now I see thee on-live, much am I beholden unto Almighty Jesu. Ah, fair nephew and my sister's son, what been these ladies that hither be come with you?"

"Sir," said Sir Gawain, "all these be ladies for whom I have foughten for when I was man living. And all these are tho⁶ that I did battle for in righteous quarrels, and God hath given them that grace, at their great prayer, because I did battle for them for their right, that they should bring me hither unto you. Thus much hath given me leave God, for to warn you of your death. For and ye fight as tomorn⁷ with Sir Mordred, as ye both have assigned,⁸ doubt ye not ye must be slain, and the most party of your people on both parties. And for the great grace and goodness that Almighty Jesu hath unto you, and for pity of you and many mo⁹ other good men there shall be slain, God hath sent me to you of his special grace to give you warning that in no wise ye do battle as tomorn, but that ye take a treatise¹ for a month-day. And proffer you largely,² so that tomorn

1. The selection here given is from the section of the book that Caxton called Book XXI, Chaps. 3-7, with omissions. The text has been based on the Winchester MS., with some readings introduced from the Caxton edition; spelling has been modernized and modern punctuation added.

2. It seemed to him. "Chafflet": scaffold.

3. Knew.

4. Lay awake.

5. It seemed to the King.

6. Those.

7. If you fight tomorrow.

8. Decided.

9. More. "There": i.e., who there.

1. Treaty, truce. "For a month-day": for a month from today.

2. Make generous offers.

ye put in a delay. For within a month shall come Sir Lancelot with all his noble knights and rescue you worshipfully and slay Sir Mordred and all that ever will hold with him."

Then Sir Gawain and all the ladies vanished. And anon the King called upon his knights, squires, and yeomen, and charged them wightl³ to fetch his noble lords and wise bishops unto him. And when they were come the King told them of his avision,⁴ that Sir Gawain had told him and warned him that, and he fought on the morn, he should be slain. Then the King commanded Sir Lucan the Butler⁵ and his brother Sir Bedivere the Bold, with two bishops with them, and charged them in any wise to take a treatise for a month-day with Sir Mordred. "And spare not: proffer him lands and goods as much as ye think reasonable."

So then they departed and came to Sir Mordred where he had a grim host of an hundred thousand, and there they entreated⁶ Sir Mordred long time. And at the last Sir Mordred was agreed for to have Cornwall and Kent by King Arthur's days,⁷ and after that, all England, after the days of King Arthur.

Then were they condescended⁸ that King Arthur and Sir Mordred should meet betwixt both their hosts, and everich⁹ of them should bring fourteen persons. And so they came with this word unto Arthur. Then said he, "I am glad that this is done," and so he went into the field.

And when King Arthur should depart, he warned all his host that, and they see any sword drawn, "Look ye come on fiercely and slay that traitor Sir Mordred, for I in no wise trust him." In like wise Sir Mordred warned his host that "And ye see any manner of sword drawn, look that ye come on fiercely, and so slay all that ever before you standeth, for in no wise I will not trust for this treatise." And in the same wise said Sir Mordred unto his host, "For I know well my father will be avenged upon me."

And so they met as their pointment¹ was and were agreed and accorded thoroughly. And wine was fetched and they drank together. Right so came an adder out of a little heath-bush, and it stung a knight in the foot. And so when the knight felt him so stung, he looked down and saw the adder. And anon he drew his sword to slay the adder, and thought² none other harm. And when the host on both parties saw that sword drawn, then they blew beams,³ trumpets, and horns, and shouted grimly. And so both hosts dressed them⁴ together. And King Arthur took his horse and

3. Quickly.

4. Dream.

5. "Butler" here is probably only a title of high rank, although it was originally used to designate the officer who had charge of wine for the king's table.

6. Dealt with.

7. During King Arthur's lifetime.

8. Agreed.

9. Each.

1. Arrangement.

2. Meant.

3. Trumpets.

4. Prepared to come.

said, "Alas, this unhappy day!" and so rode to his party, and Sir Mordred in like wise.

And never since was there never seen a more dolefuller battle in no Christian land, for there was but rushing and riding, foining⁵ and striking; and many a grim word was there spoken of either to other, and many a deadly stroke. But ever King Arthur rode throughout the battle⁶ of Sir Mordred many times and did full nobly, as a noble king should do, and at all times he fainted never. And Sir Mordred did his devoir⁷ that day and put himself in great peril.

And thus they fought all the long day, and never stinted⁸ till the noble knights were laid to the cold earth. And ever they fought still till it was near night, and by then was there an hundred thousand laid dead upon the down. Then was King Arthur wood-wroth⁹ out of measure when he saw his people so slain from him. And so he looked about him and could see no mo¹ of all his host, and good knights left no mo on-live, but two knights: the t'one² was Sir Lucan the Butler and [the other] his brother Sir Bedivere. And yet they were full sore wounded.

"Jesu, mercy," said the King, "where are all my noble knights become?³ Alas that ever I should see this doleful day! For now," said King Arthur, "I am come to mine end. But would to God," said he, "that I wist⁴ now where were that traitor Sir Mordred that has caused all this mischief."

Then King Arthur looked about and was ware where stood Sir Mordred leaning upon his sword among a great heap of dead men.

"Now give me my spear," said King Arthur unto Sir Lucan, "for yonder I have espied the traitor that all this woe hath wrought."

"Sir, let him be," said Sir Lucan, "for he is unhappy.⁵ And if ye pass this unhappy day ye shall be right well revenged upon him. And, good lord, remember ye of your night's dream, and what the spirit of Sir Gawain told you tonight, and yet God of his great goodness hath preserved you hitherto. And for God's sake, my lord, leave off by this,⁶ for, blessed be God, ye have won the field: for yet we been here three on-live, and with Sir Mordred is not one on-live. And therefore if ye leave off now, this wicked day of destiny is past."

"Now, tide⁷ me death, tide me life," said the King, "now I see him yonder alone, he shall never escape mine hands. For at a better avail⁸ shall I never have him."

"God speed you well!" said Sir Bedivere.

5. Lunging.

6. Battalion.

7. Knightly duty.

8. Stopped.

9. Mad with rage.

1. Others.

2. That one, i.e., the first.

3. What has become of all my noble knights?

4. Knew.

5. I.e., unlucky for you.

6. I.e., with this much accomplished.

7. Betide.

8. Advantage.

Then the King got his spear in both his hands and ran toward Sir Mordred, crying and saying, "Traitor, now is thy deathday come!"

And when Sir Mordred saw King Arthur he ran until him with his sword drawn in his hand, and there King Arthur smote Sir Mordred under the shield, with a foin⁹ of his spear, throughout the body more than a fathom.¹ And when Sir Mordred felt that he had his death's wound, he thrust himself with the might that he had up to the burr² of King Arthur's spear, and right so he smote his father King Arthur with his sword holden in both his hands, upon the side of the head, that the sword pierced the helmet and the tay³ of the brain. And therewith Sir Mordred dashed down stark dead to the earth.

And noble King Arthur fell in a swough⁴ to the earth, and there he swooned oftentimes, and Sir Lucan and Sir Bedivere oftentimes heaved him up. And so, weakly betwixt them, they led him to a little chapel not far from the seaside, and when the King was there, him thought him reasonably eased. Then heard they people cry in the field. "Now go thou, Sir Lucan," said the King, "and do me to wit⁵ what betokens that noise in the field."

So Sir Lucan departed, for he was grievously wounded in many places. And so as he yede⁶ he saw and harkened by the moonlight how that pillers⁷ and robbers were come into the field to pill and to rob many a full noble knight of brooches and bees⁸ and of many a good ring and many a rich jewel. And who that were not dead all out⁹ there they slew them for their harness and their riches. When Sir Lucan understood this work, he came to the King as soon as he might and told him all what he had heard and seen. "Therefore by my read,"¹ said Sir Lucan, "it is best that we bring you to some town."

"I would it were so," said the King, "but I may not stand, my head works² so. Ah, Sir Lancelot," said King Arthur, "this day have I sore missed thee. And alas that ever I was against thee, for now have I my death, whereof Sir Gawain me warned in my dream."

Then Sir Lucan took up the King the t'one party³ and Sir Bedivere the other party; and in the lifting up the King swooned and in the lifting Sir Lucan fell in a swoon that part of his guts fell out of his body, and therewith the noble knight's heart burst. And when the King awoke he beheld Sir Lucan how he lay foaming at the mouth and part of his guts lay at his feet.

9. Thrust.

1. Six feet.

2. Hand guard.

3. Edge.

4. Swoon.

5. Let me know.

6. Walked.

7. Plunderers.

8. Bracelets.

9. Entirely. "Harness": armor.

1. Advice.

2. Aches.

3. On one side.

"Alas," said the King, "this is to me a full heavy⁴ sight to see this noble duke so die for my sake, for he would have holpen⁵ me that had more need of help than I. Alas that he would not complain him for⁶ his heart was so set to help me. Now Jesu have mercy upon his soul."

Then Sir Bedivere wept for the death of his brother.

"Now leave this mourning and weeping, gentle knight," said the King, "for all this will not avail me. For wit thou well, and⁷ I might live myself, the death of Sir Lucan would grieve me evermore. But my time passeth on fast," said the King. "Therefore," said King Arthur unto Sir Bedivere, "take thou here Excalibur⁸ my good sword and go with it to yonder water's side; and when thou comest there I charge thee throw my sword in that water and come again and tell me what thou sawest there."

"My lord," said Sir Bedivere, "your commandment shall be done, and [I shall] lightly⁹ bring you word again."

So Sir Bedivere departed. And by the way he beheld that noble sword, that the pommel¹ and the haft was all precious stones. And then he said to himself, "If I throw this rich sword in the water, thereof shall never come good, but harm and loss." And then Sir Bedivere hid Excalibur under a tree. And so, as soon as he might, he came again unto the King and said he had been at the water and had thrown the sword into the water.

"What saw thou there?" said the King.

"Sir," he said, "I saw nothing but waves and winds."

"That is untruly said of thee," said the King. "And therefore go thou lightly again and do my commandment; as thou art to me lief² and dear, spare not, but throw it in."

Then Sir Bedivere returned again and took the sword in his hand. And yet him thought³ sin and shame to throw away that noble sword. And so eft⁴ he hid the sword and returned again and told the King that he had been at the water and done his commandment.

"What sawest thou there?" said the King.

"Sir," he said, "I saw nothing but waters wap and waves wan."⁵

"Ah, traitor unto me and untrue," said King Arthur, "now hast thou betrayed me twice. Who would have weened that thou that hast been to me so lief and dear, and thou art named a noble knight, and would betray me for the riches of this sword. But now go again

4. Sorrowful.

5. Helped.

6. Because.

7. If.

8. The sword which Arthur had received as a young man from the Lady of the Lake; it is presumably she who catches it when Bedivere finally throws it into the water.

9. Quickly.

1. Rounded knob on the hilt; "haft": handle.

2. Beloved.

3. It seemed to him.

4. Again.

5. The phrase seems to mean "waters wash the shore and waves grow dark."

lightly, for thy long tarrying putteth me in great jeopardy of my life, for I have taken cold. And but if thou do now as I bid thee, if ever I may see thee I shall slay thee mine⁶ own hands, for thou wouldest for my rich sword see me dead."

Then Sir Bedivere departed and went to the sword and lightly took it up, and so he went to the water's side; and there he bound the girdle⁷ about the hilts, and threw the sword as far into the water as he might. And there came an arm and an hand above the water and took it and clutched it, and shook it thrice and brandished; and then vanished away the hand with the sword into the water. So Sir Bedivere came again to the King and told him what he saw.

"Alas," said the King, "help me hence, for I dread me I have tarried overlong."

Then Sir Bedivere took the King upon his back and so went with him to that water's side. And when they were at the water's side, even fast⁸ by the bank hove⁹ a little barge with many fair ladies in it; and among them all was a queen; and all they had black hoods, and all they wept and shrieked when they saw King Arthur.

"Now put me into that barge," said the King; and so he did softly. And there received him three ladies with great mourning, and so they set them¹ down. And in one of their laps King Arthur laid his head, and then the queen said, "Ah, my dear brother, why have ye tarried so long from me? Alas, this wound on your head hath caught overmuch cold." And anon they rowed fromward the land, and Sir Bedivere beheld all tho ladies go froward him.

Then Sir Bedivere cried and said, "Ah, my lord Arthur, what shall become of me, now ye go from me and leave me here alone among mine enemies?"

"Comfort thyself," said the King, "and do as well as thou mayest, for in me is no trust for to trust in. For I must into the vale of Avilion² to heal me of my grievous wound. And if thou hear nevermore of me, pray for my soul."

But ever the queen and ladies wept and shrieked that it was pity to hear. And as soon as Sir Bedivere had lost the sight of the barge he wept and wailed and so took³ the forest, and went all that night. And in the morning he was ware betwixt two holts hoar⁴ of a chapel and an hermitage.⁵ * * *

6. I.e., with mine.

7. Sword belt.

8. Close.

9. Waited.

1. I.e., they sat.

2. A legendary island, sometimes identified with the earthly paradise.

3. Took to. "Went": walked.

4. Ancient copses.

5. In the passage here omitted, Sir

Bedivere meets the former Bishop of Canterbury, now a hermit, who describes how on the previous night a company of ladies had brought to the chapel a dead body, asking that it be buried. Sir Bedivere exclaims that the dead man must have been King Arthur, and vows to spend the rest of his life there in the chapel as a hermit.

Thus of Arthur I find no more written in books that been authorized,⁶ neither more of the very certainty of his death heard I never read,⁷ but thus was he led away in a ship wherein were three queens: that one was King Arthur's sister, Queen Morgan la Fée, the t'other⁸ was the Queen of North Wales, and the third was the Queen of the Waste Lands. * * *

Now more of the death of King Arthur could I never find but that these ladies brought him to his burials,⁹ and such one was buried there that the hermit bore witness that sometime was Bishop of Canterbury.¹ But yet the hermit knew not in certain that he was verily the body of King Arthur, for this tale Sir Bedivere, a Knight of the Table Round, made it to be written. Yet some men say in many parts of England that King Arthur is not dead, but had by the will of our Lord Jesu into another place. And men say that he shall come again and he shall win the Holy Cross. Yet I will not say that it shall be so, but rather I will say, Here in this world he changed his life. And many men say that there is written upon his tomb this verse: *Hic iacet Arthurus, rex quondam, rexque futurus.*²

1469-70

1485

6. That have authority.

7. Tell.

8. The second.

9. Grave.

1. Of whom the hermit, who was formerly

Bishop of Canterbury, bore witness.

2. "Here lies Arthur, who was once king and king will be again."

WILLIAM CAXTON

(ca. 1422-1491)

In his early years Caxton was a prosperous merchant who traded mostly in the low countries. In 1470, at the command of his patroness, Margaret of Burgundy, he completed a translation into English of the French Recueil des Histoires de Troie (i.e., collection of the stories of Troy), which he had begun earlier in his leisure time. This work, circulated in manuscript, became so popular that the demand for it exceeded the number of copies that could be readily produced by scribes. Caxton thereupon went to Cologne, where he studied the newly developed art of printing, and subsequently set up a press at Bruges in Belgium. In 1475 he printed his translation of the Troy book (the first book printed in English), and in the next year returned to England, where he established England's first printing press, in London. Among his first publications were Chaucer's Canterbury Tales (1478; second edition about 1484). In 1485 he printed Malory's work, with the Preface reproduced here.

A shrewd publisher and practiced writer, as well as a pioneer printer,

Caxton gives a most astute and inviting account of Malory's work and the personage after whom it was named. Caxton himself evidently put small credence in the historicity of Arthur, but by appearing—in all modesty—to have been overwhelmed by the faith that eminent people had in Arthur's existence, as well as by the survival of certain relics that seemed to support such faith, he encourages the reader to lay aside his own skepticism (although the warning remains: "ye are at your liberty" to accept or reject the truth of Malory's narrative). In describing the work itself, Caxton is careful to emphasize its exemplary qualities, "the noble acts of chivalry" that knights performed in the old days, from which one may learn virtuous conduct; but he is also careful not to suppress the fact—though he presents it in tantalizing subordination—that the book contains much that is exemplary only in the negative sense: "cowardice, murder, hate, * * * and sin," which for some might, perhaps, enhance the book's appeal.

Preface to Morte Darthur

After that I had accomplished and finished divers histories as well of contemplation as of other historial and worldly acts of great conquerors and princes, and also certain books of ensamples¹ and doctrine, many noble and divers gentlemen of this royaume of England camen and demanded me many and oftentimes wherefore that I have not do² made and imprint the noble history of the Saint Grail and of the most renommed³ Christian king, first and chief of the three best Christian, and worthy,⁴ king Arthur, which ought most to be remembered among us Englishmen tofore all other Christian kings.

For it is notoirly⁵ known through the universal world that there been nine worthy and the best that ever were, that is to wit, three Paynims,⁶ three Jews, and three Christian men. As for the Paynims, they were tofore the Incarnation of Christ, which were named, the first Hector of Troy, of whom th'istory is common both in ballad and in prose, the second Alexander the Great, and the third Julius Caesar, Emperour of Rome, of whom th'istories been well known and had.⁷ And as for the three which also were tofore th'Incarnation of our Lord, of whom the first was Duke Joshua which brought the children of Israel into the land of behest,⁸ the second David, king of Jerusalem, and the third Judas Maccabeus, of these three the Bible rehearseth all their noble histories and acts. And sith⁹ the said Incarnation have been three noble Christian men stalled¹ and admitted through the universal world into the number of the nine best and worthy, of whom was first the noble Arthur, whose noble acts I

1. Exemplary stories.

2. Caused to be.

3. Renowned.

4. I.e., one of the Nine Worthies

5. Notoriously.

6. Pagans.

7. Available.

8. Promised Land.

9. Since.

1. Assigned.

purpose to write in this present book here following. The second was Charlemagne, or Charles the Great, of whom th'istory is had in many places, both in French and English; and the third and last was Godefroy of Bouillon, of whose acts and life I made a book unto th'excellent prince and king of noble memory, King Edward the Fourth.

The said noble gentlemen instantly required² me t'imprint th'istory of the said noble king and conqueror king Arthur and of his knights, with th'istory of the Saint Grail and of the death and ending of the said Arthur, affirming that I ought rather t'imprint his acts and noble feats than of Godefroy of Bouillon or any of the other eight, considering that he was a man born within this royalmé and king and emperor of the same, and that there been in French divers and many noble volumes of his acts, and also of his knights.

To whom I answered that divers men hold opinion that there was no such Arthur and that all such books as been made of him been but feigned and fables, because that some chronicles make of him no mention ne remember him nothing, ne of his knights.

Whereto they answered, and one in special said, that in him that should say or think that there was never such a king called Arthur might well be aretted³ great folly and blindness, for he said that there were many evidences of the contrary. First, ye may see his sepulture⁴ in the monastery of Glastonbury; and also in Polychronicon,⁵ in the fifth book, the sixth chapter, and in the seventh book, the twenty-third chapter, where his body was buried, and after founden and translated⁶ into the said monastery. Ye shall see also in th'istory of Bochas,⁷ in his book De Casu Principum, part of his noble acts, and also of his fall. Also Galfridus, in his British book,⁸ recounteth his life. And in divers places of England many remembrances been yet of him and shall remain perpetually, and also of his knights: first, in the abbey of Westminster, at Saint Edward's shrine, remaineth the print of his seal in red wax, closed in beryl, in which is written PATRICIUS ARTHURUS BRITANNIE GALLIE GERMANIE DACIE IMPERATOR;⁹ item, in the castle of Dover ye may see Gawain's skull and Cradok's mantle; at Winchester, the Round Table; in other places Lancelot's sword and many other things.

Then, all these things considered, there can no man reasonably

2. Urgently requested.

3. Imputed.

4. Burial place.

5. A Latin history by Ranulph Higden (d. 1364), an English translation of which was printed by Caxton in 1482.

6. Carried.

7. The Italian Giovanni Boccaccio (d. 1375), whose book Concerning the Falls of Illustrious Men ("Concerning the Fall of Princes," according to Caxton) was a favorite of the later Middle Ages.

8. Geoffrey of Monmouth, whose History of the Kings of Britain (ca. 1136), begins with the story of the founding of Britain by Brutus, Aeneas' great-grandson, who was believed to have given his name to Britain: hence Caxton's "British."

9. The Noble Arthur, Emperor of Britain, Gaul, Germany, and Dacia.

gainsay but there was a king of this land named Arthur. For in all places, Christian and heathen, he is reputed and taken for one of the nine worthy, and the first of the three Christian men. And also he is more spoken of beyond the sea, mo¹ books made of his noble acts, than there be in England; as well in Dutch, Italian, Spanish, and Greekish, as in French. And yet of record remain in witness of him in Wales, in the town of Camelot, the great stones and marvelous works of iron lying under the ground, and royal vaults, which divers now living hath seen. Wherefore it is a marvel why he is no more renommed in his own country, save only it accordeth to the word of God, which saith that no man is accept for a prophet in his own country.

Then, all these things foresaid alleged,² I could not well deny but that there was such a noble king named Arthur, and reputed one of the nine worthy, and first and chief of the Christian men. And many noble volumes be made of him and of his noble knights in French, which I have seen and read beyond the sea, which been not had in our maternal tongue. But in Welsh been many, and also in French, and some in English, but nowhere nigh all. Wherefore, such as have late been drawn out briefly into English, I have, after the simple cunning that God hath sent to me, under the favor and correction of all noble lords and gentlemen, emprised³ to imprint a book of the noble histories of the said king Arthur and of certain of his knights, after a copy unto me delivered, which copy sir Thomas Malory did take out of certain books of French and reduced it into English.

And I, according to my copy, have done set it⁴ in imprint to the intent that noble men may see and learn the noble acts of chivalry, the gentle and virtuous deeds that some knights used in tho⁵ days, by which they came to honor, and how they that were vicious were punished and oft put to shame and rebuke; humbly beseeching all noble lords and ladies with all other estates, of what estate or degree they been of, that shall see and read in this said book and work, that they take the good and honest acts in their remembrance, and to follow the same; wherein they shall find many joyous and pleasant histories and noble and renommed acts of humanity, gentleness, and chivalries. For herein may be seen noble chivalry, courtesy, humanity, friendliness, hardiness, love, friendship, cowardice, murder, hate, virtue, and sin. Do after the good and leave the evil, and it shall bring you to good fame and renommee.⁶

And for to pass the time this book shall be pleasant to read in, but for to give faith and belief that all is true that is contained herein, ye be at your liberty. But all is written for our doctrine, and for to

1. More.

2. Having been cited.

3. Undertaken.

4. Have caused it to be set.

5. Those.

6. Renown.

beware that we fall not to vice ne sin, but t'exercise and follow virtue, by which we may come and attain to good fame and renommee in this life, and after this short and transitory life to come unto everlasting bliss in heaven; the which He grant us that reigneth in heaven, the Blessed Trinity. AMEN.

Then, to proceed forth in this said book, which I direct unto all noble princes, lords and ladies, gentlemen or gentlewomen, that desire to read or hear read of the noble and joyous history of the great conqueror and excellent king, king Arthur, sometime king of this noble royalme then called Britain, I, William Caxton, simple person, present this book following which I have emprised t'imprint: and treateth of the noble acts, feats of arms of chivalry, prowess, hardiness, humanity, love, courtesy, and very⁷ gentleness, with many wonderful histories and adventures.

1485

The Sixteenth Century

(1485-1603)

- 1485: Accession of Henry VII inaugurates age of the Tudor sovereigns.
- 1509: Accession of Henry VIII.
- 1517: Martin Luther's Wittenberg Theses; beginning of the Reformation.
- 1534: Henry VIII acknowledged "Supreme Head on Earth" of the English church.
- 1557: Publication of Tottel's Miscellany, containing poems by Sir Thomas Wyatt, Henry Howard Earl of Surrey, and others.
- 1558: Accession of Queen Elizabeth I.
- 1576: The Theatre, the first permanent structure in England for the presentation of plays, is built.
- 1588: Defeat of the Spanish Armada.
- 1603: Death of Elizabeth I; accession of James I, first of the Stuart line.

ENGLAND UNDER HENRY VII

The 16th century in England is the age of the Tudor sovereigns. There were three generations of them; they ruled England from 1485 to 1603. Before the first Tudor, the Earl of Richmond who became Henry VII, won his crown by defeating Richard III at Bosworth field, the country had for more than thirty years been torn by a dynastic strife between the houses of York and Lancaster. Henry VII was Lancastrian, but he married Elizabeth of the house of York, sister of Edward V and niece of the Yorkist king he defeated, Richard III. The barons, impoverished and divided by the dynastic wars, could not effectively oppose the power of the crown, and the church, the other great force in society, was closer to alliance with royal power than to opposition. So Tudor government meant, in comparison with what had gone before and with other conceivable alternatives, a government of strong central authority, of order, and of practical solutions to problems.

About a decade before Henry VII won his throne, the art of printing from movable type, a German invention, had been introduced into England by William Caxton (ca. 1422-91), who had learned and practiced it in the Low Countries. Literacy had been increasing during the 15th century, so that many more people could read than in Chaucer's time. It is estimated that some 30 per cent of the people could read English in the early 15th century and some 60 per cent by 1530. Printing of course made books cheaper and more plentiful, and accordingly there were more opportunities to read and more incentive to learn to read.

Seven years after Henry VII became king, Columbus discovered America, and a few years later Vasco da Gama reached the Orient by sailing around the Cape of Good Hope. The English were not pioneers in the discovery and exploration of the western hemisphere, but the consequences of new discoveries were to affect their place in the world profoundly, for in the next century they became great colonizers and merchant-adventurers.

Significant changes in trade and in the arts of war also marked the early years of the Tudor regime. Henry VII made commercial treaties with European countries; England, which had always been a sheep-raising country, was by now manufacturing and exporting significant amounts of cloth. As lands were enclosed to permit grazing on a larger scale, people were driven off the land to the cities, and London grew into a metropolitan market, with more sophisticated commercial institutions. At the same time the feudal order continued its decline, partly because the introduction of firearms had made obsolete the old armored knight on horseback, as well as the English bowman who had won such famous victories in France under King Henry V. The "new men" who supported the Tudors and profited from their favor could adapt themselves more easily to a changed society than could the survivors of the great families of the feudal 15th century.

Yet it would be a mistake to visualize these changes as sudden and dramatic. Although Caxton introduced printed books, and was an author and translator as well as a printer, his publications consisted of long prose romances translated from the French, collections of moral sayings, and other works—such as Malory's Morte Darthur—that were medieval rather than modern. And even though the armored knight was obsolete, for a century jousts and tournaments took place at court and the approved code of behavior was the traditional code of chivalry. As often in an age of spectacular novelty, full of significance for the future, men's minds looked back instead of forward. Confronted with innovation, they dreamed of an idealized past instead of looking forward to an uncertain future. The best writers of the time of Henry VII were imitators of Chaucer, who had died about a century before. They were Scottish rather than English: William Dunbar (ca. 1460–ca. 1520), Gavin Douglas (1475–1522), and Sir David Lindsay (1485–1555). Even the English writers looked back; a typical one is Stephen Hawes (1474–1523), who imitated not Chaucer but John Lydgate, monk of Bury.

HUMANISM

During the 15th century a few English clerics and government officials had journeyed to Italy and had seen something of the extraordinary cultural and intellectual movement flourishing in the city-states there. But it was only near the end of the century that Italian influence came to be important, and it was not until the accession of Henry VIII to the throne in 1509 that a notable renaissance took place in England.

A great leader of the intellectual movement known as humanism was

Sir Thomas More, Henry's Lord Chancellor, who gave up his life rather than bow to Henry as head of the English church. More's masterpiece, Utopia, was written in Latin, and was an appeal to all of Europe to reconsider social institutions in the light of reason and to achieve economic equality and peace. His English writings were largely on controversial subjects; his most ambitious one was a history of Richard III. More's friend Erasmus of Rotterdam spent some time in England, and his influence was strong, especially in the field of education. In the humanists' view, education was based upon the classics and the Bible, was to be liberal in the modern sense, yet extremely practical. It was designed to prepare able people for the duties of government. Queen Elizabeth herself, with her command of languages and her practical sense of the problems of diplomacy, was a fine example of the humanistically educated ruler.

Elizabethan education was based upon the medieval trivium (grammar, logic, and rhetoric) and quadrivium (arithmetic, geometry, astronomy, and music). Grammar was of course Latin grammar, and the rhetoric that went with it was a rigorous discipline in all the stylistic devices used by classical authors. The purpose was a utilitarian one—to train the student to speak and write good Latin, the language of diplomacy, of the professions, and of all higher learning. But the books read and studied rhetorically were not considered mere exhibitions of literary style: from the Sententiae Pueriles for beginners, on up through Terence, Virgil, Horace, and Cicero's De Officiis, the works were studied for the moral, political, and philosophical content they offered. Elizabethan schoolmasters might use the system of double translation, from English into Latin and then from Latin back into English, to develop facility and rhetorical elegance, but they well knew that the rapid development from child into man (so much more rapid than we consider either feasible or desirable) required moral instruction, and this was to be found in the Latin classics. It was a mission of the English humanists like Colet, Elyot, and Ascham to persuade the English gentry that their sons should be bred to this kind of learning as the most suitable preparation for public service.

Although Sir Thomas More had turned naturally to Latin in writing his Utopia, the choice was not as easy for succeeding generations. In fact, the question of whether to write in English or in Latin became a question of great seriousness. The vernaculars seemed relatively new and unstable to learned men, and with their great desire for eternal fame it was natural that they should concern themselves about the durability of their medium. Furthermore, the age of the humanists had emphasized the value of the classical languages; Cicero and the other masters of rhetoric were imitated in their own tongues. But in Italy, France, and England alike, there came to be a revolt against this sterile and slavish imitation of the classics. It is the contention of Joachim Du Bellay's Défense et Illustration de la Langue Française (1549) that the value of a language is not inherent in the language itself, but depends upon what great and fine works are written in that language; furthermore, and this is even more important, the feeling of nationality itself dictates that the vernacular should be used. If the tongue of the people is not so refined and polished as the Greek or Latin, all the more reason why men of learning should improve it by studying it and writing their most ambitious works in it. Roger Ascham (1515–

68), tutor to Princess Elizabeth, included in his book on archery called Toxophilus (1545) a defense of writing in English, though he said it would be easier for him to write in Latin or Greek. He dedicated the book to King Henry, and his patriotic motives are expressed in verses addressed to England:

Stick to the truth, and evermore thou shall

Through Christ, King Henry, the book and the bow,

All manner of enemies quite overthrow.

Richard Mulcaster (ca. 1530-1611), principal of the Merchant Taylors' School and teacher of Edmund Spenser, said:

I do write in my natural English tongue, because though I make the learned my judges, which understand Latin, yet I mean good to the unlearned, which understand but English. * * * For is it not indeed a marvelous bondage, to become servants to one tongue for learning's sake the most of our time, with loss of most time, whereas we may have the very same treasure in our own tongue, with the gain of most time? our own bearing the joyful title of our liberty and freedom, the Latin tongue remembering us of our thralldom and bondage? I love Rome, but London better; I favor Italy, but England more; I honor the Latin, but I worship the English.

THE REFORMATION—HENRY VIII, EDWARD VI, AND MARY

Humanists like Erasmus advocated and practiced a scholarly and critical study of the Scriptures; humanists like More were opposed to corrupt and ignorant clergy and such abuses as the sale of papal indulgences and pardons. But when, after Martin Luther nailed his famous Theses to the church door in Wittenberg in 1517, the Reformation itself gathered force, Erasmus and More drew back. Humanism and Reformation for a while seemed to be hostile forces.

What was the Reformation? From the point of view of those who supported it, it was a return to pure Christianity—cleansing the church of all the filth and idolatry that had accumulated over the centuries. From a less partisan point of view it was the break-up of western Christendom, the secularization of society, the establishment of princely ascendancy over the church, and consequently the identification of religious feelings with patriotic, nationalistic ones. From the point of view of the Catholic Church it was, of course, damnable heresy.

In England, one cannot say that the Reformation had an ideological basis. In the time of Chaucer there had been John Wycliffe and the Lollard movement, a grass-roots challenge to the practices and doctrines of the church, and some elements lasted on into the 16th century. But the split with the Church of Rome was caused by a man who considered himself a Catholic champion against Luther and his opinions: Henry VIII, who for writing a book against Luther had been given the title "Defender of the Faith" by Pope Leo X. Henry's motives were dynastic, not religious; he needed a legitimate son and he could not get one without the divorce which Rome refused him. He insisted upon being Supreme Head of the English church and requiring oaths of allegiance to him in that role; Sir Thomas More, his Lord Chancellor, resigned and finally gave up his life rather than sign such an oath. Thomas Cromwell, the powerful secretary of state, dissolved the monasteries and distributed the property to a group of people who thereafter would not side with Rome. And though under Henry the great English translator of the Bible, William Tyndale, was persecuted, driven out of England, and finally martyred in 1536, it was also in Henry's reign that the Scriptures in English were made available in The Great Bible of 1538 to anyone who could read.

Under Henry's son, the child king Edward VI (b. 1537; reigned 1547-53), the English Reformation, which had taken place for political reasons, acquired a strong religious and spiritual force. Protestant theologians from the Continent swarmed to England; the Book of Common Prayer was published in 1549 and 1552, and by 1553, the year of the boy king's death, the 42 Articles which officially defined the beliefs of the English church were thoroughly Protestant.

The successor to the young Protestant king was his older sister Mary, half-Spanish and devoutly Catholic, who married her cousin, Philip II of Spain. The leading Protestants either fled to the Continent or were burned at the stake as heretics; ideologically the Reformation could be reversed, but some of its practical consequences, like the distribution of monastery lands, could not. A Spaniard on the throne of England was not popular, and Mary, whose accession had been opposed by the Council which had proclaimed Lady Jane Grey queen, and whose throne was challenged by a rebellion led by Sir Thomas Wyatt the Younger, son of the poet, dared not press her people too far. She could maintain her Roman allegiance but she could not undo the work of her father and brother. The most necessary thing to do was something she could not do—produce an heir. (Had she done so, England and the United States would probably be Catholic countries today.) Her reign was short, and the Protestant exiles swarmed back at her death to be a potent force in English society during the long reign of Mary's half sister, Elizabeth.

NATIONALISM—ELIZABETH I

Elizabeth Tudor, who ascended the throne in 1558 and ruled until 1603, was one of the most remarkable political geniuses ever produced by a people which has not been barren of political geniuses. Vain, difficult, and headstrong, she nevertheless had a very shrewd instinct about her country's strengths and weaknesses, and she identified herself with her country as no previous ruler had done. Although she was susceptible to the flattery of her courtiers and favorites, she nevertheless entrusted power to such solid men as William Cecil and Francis Walsingham. Cecil (1520-98) was her chief and most trusted Secretary. He devoted his great talents with unswerving loyalty to the service of the queen in domestic affairs as well as in the complex relations with the governments of Europe. He sought also, with limited success, to raise money from Parliament to pay for the increasing cost of government. Walsingham (ca. 1530-90) was a radical Protestant, who tried to introduce a more ideologically committed foreign policy than the queen and Cecil were prepared to support.

England's strength lay in its middle position in the balance of power in Europe—it could throw its weight either way in the power contest between Spain and France; it could support or fail to support the Protestant uprising in the Low Countries. Moreover the queen was unmarried, and the general assumption was that of course she would marry, since as her father had undoubtedly taught her, one of a monarch's major duties is to provide an unquestioned, strong, legitimate heir to the throne. As long as she was capable of bearing children, Elizabeth's possible marriage was an important factor in European diplomacy. By the time it was too late to marry, England was strong and united, capable of shaking off (in 1588) the attempt of the Spanish king, Philip II, to invade the country. What unified England more than anything else was the papal bull of 1570, excommunicating Elizabeth and relieving her subjects of their loyalty to her. This bull, had it taken effect, would have brought to the throne Mary Queen of Scots, Catholic by faith and French by culture—an insupportable thought; Englishmen rallied to their queen and she became a symbol of Englishness and nationalism. The adulation of her, in the face of trouble on the Scottish border, near-chaos in Ireland, and varying threats from the Continent, grew to almost religious heights; her beauty (which was exaggerated), her wisdom (which generally did not need exaggeration), and her divine mission to guide England became articles of faith. In 1588 the defeat of the great Spanish Armada, the mightiest invasion fleet ever mounted against England, seemed to justify that faith.

England's weakness was its politico-religious division. The Catholics, who had never been reformed and who adhered to the pro-Spanish faction of the previous reign, and the Protestant exiles, whose sojourn on the Continent had only sharpened their zeal for the eradication of papistry everywhere in Europe, were the extremes. Between them were the majority of Englishmen whose main desire was for order (remembering the civil conflicts of the previous century), and for these Englishmen Elizabeth, in her person and her policy, became the symbol and the cause.

In matters of religion Elizabeth chose a middle way which satisfied neither the Catholics nor the Puritans. She imposed a form of service, compelled her subjects to attend it, and left their consciences to themselves. The effect was again nationalistic; in the settled and established Elizabethan church, Christians looked toward neither Rome nor Geneva as the prime source of authority, but to the throne of their own sovereign.

The desire for commercial profit also strengthened nationalistic feelings. In 1493 the Pope had divided the new world between the Spanish and the Portuguese by drawing a line from pole to pole (hence Brazil speaks Portuguese today and the rest of Latin America speaks Spanish): the English were not in the picture. But by the end of Edward VI's reign the Company of Merchant Adventurers was founded and Englishmen had become interested in Asia and North America. In order to maintain a vigorous shipping fleet, Cecil introduced "fish days" on Wednesdays and Fridays (popularly known as "Cecil's fast"); and there is reason to believe that shipping was at least maintained at its old level, in the days when Catholic rules against eating meat were an encouragement to fishermen. Some seagoing men, however, found a more profitable crop than fish and turned to piracy, preying on Spanish ships which were returning laden with wealth from the New World. This business soon became a private undeclared war, with the queen and her courtiers investing in these raids privately but accepting no responsibility for them. The greatest of many dazzling exploits was the voyage of Francis Drake in 1577-80: he sailed through the Straits of Magellan, pillaged Spanish towns on the Pacific, reached as far north as San Francisco, crossed to the Philippines and returned around the Cape of Good Hope; he came back with £1,000,000 in treasure, and his investors earned a dividend of 5,000 per cent. Queen Elizabeth knighted him on the deck of his ship, The Golden Hind.

More than anything else, the mere survival of Elizabeth for so long provided the opportunity for nationalistic consciousness and feeling to become established. When she came to the throne in 1558 she was 25 years old; her sister had reigned only five years and her brother only six, but she would remain queen for almost 45 years. The second half of the 16th century is very appropriately called the Elizabethan age.

DRAMATIC LITERATURE

If the morality play Everyman at the end of the 15th century marks the end of the Middle Ages, we must look for the beginnings of modern drama to the household of John Morton, Archbishop of Canterbury and Chancellor of England under Henry VII, where young Thomas More served as a page. There at Christmastime plays or revels were put on, and the story goes that young More would sometimes improvise a part and step in with the players. Cardinal Morton even maintained a chaplain on his staff, Henry Medwall, to write plays for his princely entertainment; two of them have survived, called Nature and Fulgens and Lucrece. These plays were short, given in the great hall at Lambeth Palace, and were called "interludes." Some of these interludes, especially those by John Heywood, are heavily dependent upon French farce.

Interludes and morality plays continued to be popular down to Shakespeare's lifetime, but the development of the drama into a sophisticated art form required another influence—the classics. In the middle of the century we find a schoolmaster, Nicholas Udall, writing a classical comedy in English, based upon the Latin comedies his students had been reading. He called it Ralph Roister Doister. About the same time another comedy, classical in form but English in content, was amusing the students at Cambridge. It was called Gammer Gurton's Needle. Lively, vivid, native English material put into the regular form of the Latin comedies of Plautus and Terence: this is the fortunate combination that looked forward to the comedies of Shakespeare. Ralph Roister Doister contains a classical miles gloriosus (cowardly braggart soldier) who is the remote ancestor of Shakespeare's Sir John Falstaff in I Henry IV.

The Latin tragedies of Seneca had a similar influence. They were constructed in five acts and had violent and bloody plots, resounding rhetorical speeches, and ghosts among the cast of characters. Moreover Seneca is full of references to Fortune, a Roman goddess who turned her wheel and brought those who had reached the top down to the bottom. The precarious position of men in high estate formed a basis for Elizabethan tragedy, as it had for medieval. The mid-16th century contribution to the type of literature represented by Boccaccio's Falls of Illustrious Men, Chaucer's Monk's Tale, and Lydgate's Falls of Princes was a collection of verse complaints called The Mirror for Magistrates. A "mirror" in the old sense was a warning, and a "magistrate" was anyone in a position of power or authority. The first regular English tragedy was called Gorboduc or Ferrex and Porrex; it was written by two lawyers, Thomas Sackville and

Thomas Norton. It was first produced at the Inner Temple (a law school) in 1561 and later acted before the queen. The play is set in the legendary very early period of English history shared by Shakespeare's King Lear, and, like Lear, its hero divides his kingdom among his children with disastrous results. It is important also that Gorboduc is in blank verse rather than in one of the awkward verse forms characteristic of much midcentury writing.

The fusion of classical form with English content brought about the possibility of a mature and artistic drama. But such drama must have an audience, a theater, and professional actors. The earliest English drama had been acted by members of the clergy in the church; medieval miracle and mystery plays had been acted by amateurs—members of the local trade guilds—ordinarily on wagons in the streets of the towns. Moralities and interludes were produced by semi-amateur groups who traveled about, or by the servants of a lord in the hall of his castle. Much dramatic activity took place at winter and midsummer festivals, and it should be remembered that before the Reformation there were many more holidays than there were later. The drama of the Elizabethan age retained much of the festive atmosphere of its infancy.

The actors who traveled about giving their performances wherever they could were not men of respectable status; they tended to be classified with jugglers, acrobats, mountebanks, and other persons of dubious character. In 1545 they were classified by statute as idle rogues and vagabonds; as such, they were subject to arrest. Some noblemen maintained a company of actors as their personal servants, wearing livery and the badge of their masters. They could travel and practice their craft when not needed by their lords, and they were of course exempt from the statute. So it came about that the professional acting companies of Shakespeare's time, including Shakespeare's own, attached themselves to a nobleman and were technically his servants, even though virtually all of their time was devoted to, and their income came from, the public. The rise in social status of actors during Shakespeare's lifetime is illustrated by the fact that he and his fellows were made officers of the royal household when James came to the throne and were sworn as Grooms of the Chamber in ordinary without fee.

The earliest successful acting companies, if success is measured by acceptance at court, were companies of boys. Richard Edwards, Master of the Children of the Chapel Royal in the 1560's, wrote plays for them, and for almost twenty years the rival company, the Children of Paul's (the choir school of St. Paul's cathedral) regularly presented plays at court.

The adult actors played in various places—great houses, the hall of an Inn of Court, on makeshift stages, or in London inn-yards. In 1576 James Burbage, one of the Earl of Leicester's players, built a structure to house their performances and called it The Theatre. It was in Shoreditch, outside the limits of the City of London and accordingly beyond the jurisdiction of the city authorities, who were generally hostile to dramatic spectacles. Other public theaters were erected, and before long enclosed private theaters were secured, under conditions which would allow them freedom from municipal control.

The public theaters were usually oval in shape, with an unroofed yard in the center where the groundlings stood, covered seats in three rising tiers around the yard, and a platform stage jutting out into the yard and surrounded on three sides by spectators. Plays were given in the afternoon and of course were dependent on fair weather. The private theaters were indoors, artificially lighted, and patronized by a more select audience. After 1608 Shakespeare's company had its regular public theater, the Globe, and a private theater, the Blackfriars.

The companies were what would now be called "repertory companies"—that is, they filled the roles of each play from members of their own group, not employing outsiders, and they performed a number of different plays on consecutive days, not continuing a single play for a "run." The principal actors were shareholders in the profits of the company. Boys were apprenticed to actors just as they had been apprenticed to master craftsmen in the guilds; they took the women's parts in plays until their voices changed. The plays might be bought for the company from hack writers; or, as in Shakespeare's company, the group might include an actor-playwright who could supply it with some (but by no means all) of its plays. The text remained the property of the company, but a popular play was eagerly sought by the printers, and the company sometimes had trouble achieving effective control over its rights to the play. The editors of the first collected edition of Shakespeare's plays, the First Folio (1623) said that up until then the readers had been "abused with divers stolen and surreptitious copies, maimed and deformed by the frauds and stealths of injurious impostors." This is true of the so-called "bad quartos," such as the first quarto of Hamlet (1603) but the second quarto of that play (1604) was probably printed from Shakespeare's manuscript.

POET, PATRON, AND PUBLISHER

In the court the greatest opportunities existed, but there also were the greatest disappointments to be found. "It was overrun with place-seekers," writes M. St. Clare Byrne in Elizabethan Life in Town and Country, "but it was also undeniably the focus of the national life. It drew to it the clever mountebanks, but also the real vigor and talent. It captured and stimulated men's imaginations, even if eventually it disheartened and disgusted them." Men like Sir Christopher Hatton and Sir Walter Raleigh leaped from obscurity to great power and prominence as a result of their success as courtiers, but it must not be forgotten that they had other abilities than the gallantry and dancing which have made them famous in anecdote. The security of the courtier was always precarious, and there was scarcely one of Queen Elizabeth's courtiers who did not know, at some time or other, the harshness of the sovereign's disapproval. The great guide and conduct book for the courtier was Castiglione's Il Cortegiano (1528, translated into English by Sir Thomas Hoby in 1561), and according to its theses the function of the courtier was to give good and honest advice to the prince. But, as Sir Philip Sidney found out when he tried to advise the queen against a French marriage, advice is not always relished by a monarch whose powers over any individual subject are almost absolute. As a result there was a long tradition of literature against court life, comparing it unfavorably to the country life of the retired and obscure man. Sir Thomas Wyatt's verse epistles to Sir Francis Bryan and John Pains are early examples of this attitude, and it runs all through the period. Of course the fact that there was a "tradition" means that everything unfavorable said about the court should not be taken at its face value. But enough evidence exists to show that there was a definite feeling that court life was too precarious, too superficial, too corrupt, too hypocritical. From the time of Wyatt to the time of Raleigh the bitter tone is consistent.

For literary men like Edmund Spenser and Lyly, men who by birth were not in a position to be real courtiers, the court offered a faint hope of livelihood, notice, and encouragement. But for these two, at any rate, it was a source of bitter disappointment. Lyly's long wait for the office of the Revels and Spenser's disillusionment after hoping for court favor (reflected in Mother Hubberds Tale and Colin Clouts Come Home Againe) tell the story. Much of the satire of the period is directed against the superficiality and treachery of the court atmosphere. "A thousand hopes, but all nothing," wailed Lyly, "a hundred promises, but yet nothing."

Although most of the literature which is still considered worth reading shows the predominant influences of the court, it would be a mistake to underestimate the influence of the City of London on the literary taste and production of the period. London had grown tremendously since the time of Chaucer. Instead of a population of about 50,000 it had 93,276 in 1563 and 224,275 in 1605. It was by far the most important city in the realm, and the political history of the 17th century is understandable only if one recognizes the great power the City had, even as against the Crown. The printing presses were located in London, the publishers were located in London, and the mass of the middle-class population which set the style for literature written for the ordinary man lived in London. The middle class found among the university men some writers who catered to them: Thomas Heywood is a good example. And although Thomas Nashe scornfully rejects the claim of the bourgeois to have any literary taste at all or to have any ability at producing literature, still the class had its own writers, like Thomas Deloney, and it knew what it liked—books of instruction, romances, religious tracts, and sensational ballads. Whether the aristocrats admitted it or not, the standards and tastes of the middle class affected all writing, all publishing, and all literary success. For finally the writer saw his work exhibited on the stalls of St. Paul's churchyard, and the customers who frequented that center of the book trade were more often members of the middle class than of the court circle. Louis B. Wright has shown (in his Middle-Class Culture in Elizabethan England) how extensive and profound was the influence of the citizenry upon the writing and publication of books, and how bourgeois standards of edification and utility dictated to most of the authors of the time.

Next to the Court and the City, the most important sources of literature were of course the two universities. Before Elizabeth's time the universities were mainly devoted to educating the clergy, and of course that remained an important part of their function. But in the second half of the century the sons of the gentry and the aristocracy were going in increasing numbers to the universities and the Inns of Court (where law was studied), though often they did not take degrees or get called to the bar. Their residence in these places was simply an educational preparation for public service or managing their estates. The career of a professional man of letters as such did not exist: literature was regarded as an adjunct, not a primary occupation.

Literary
30 → 186

The university graduate who came to London to make a literary career for himself faced a very difficult situation. It is best pictured, perhaps, in the Cambridge trilogy of Parnassus plays, performed at the end of the century but fairly faithfully reflecting conditions which held good during the whole period. It was the university wits, to be sure, who gave to the drama some of the classical form it needed, and who inaugurated the great literary vogue of the 90's. But the lives of Nashe and Marlowe, of Robert Greene and George Peele, do not suggest that the path was easy. The diary of Philip Henslowe, a leading theatrical manager, has entry after entry showing university graduates in prison or in debt or even at best miserably eking out an existence patching plays.

Financial rewards for writing and publishing prose or poetry came mostly in the form of gifts from patrons—in reality the old system of master and servant which had come down from the Middle Ages and had not changed much with the invention of printing. The writer by a dedication hoped for a suitable reward, and in an age when honor and vanity were motives much more sharply defined or observed than they are today, this procedure sometimes worked. Yet the patron whose vanity was amply satisfied by his own conceit and would not reward an author for a dedication remained a constant irritation to the writers of the time, and we hear many complaints that the age is degenerate because patrons are not more munificent. There were some generous and literary-minded patrons, notably Sir Philip Sidney and his sister Mary, the Countess of Pembroke. Shakespeare's relations with his patron, the Earl of Southampton, little as we know about them, were apparently satisfactory, as the dedication to The Rape of Lucrece (1594) is much warmer and more personal than the earlier one, to Venus and Adonis (1593). But the experience of Robert Greene is perhaps more typical than that of Shakespeare in this respect. He had sixteen different patrons for seventeen books; this suggests that he was not fortunate in finding favor or support from any one. A fraudulent practice grew up of printing the book and then printing off separate dedications, so that an impecunious author could deceive several patrons each into thinking that he was the one to be honored by the volume. Two or three pounds seems to have been the usual reward for the dedication of a pamphlet or small volume of verse. Ben Jonson, who fared much better than most of his contemporaries, sums up the matter, for poets at least, when he says: "Poetry in this latter age hath proved but a mean mistress to such as have wholly addicted themselves to her, or given their names up to her family. Those who have but saluted her on the way, and now and then tendered their visits, she hath done much for, and advanced in the way of their own professions (both the law and the gospel) beyond all they could have hoped or done for themselves without her favor."

The other possible source of reward, besides the patron, was the publisher. And rewards from the publisher in the 16th century were nothing at all like the rewards from that source now. In the first place there was no such thing as copyright, and no such thing, in the ordinary way, as royalties paid according to the sale of the book. An author sold his manuscript to the publisher outright, for what seems now like a ridiculously low price—for a pamphlet or small book of poetry, usually forty shillings.

The writer's troubles were not over when he had written his book, gone through the difficulty of finding a publisher, and finally come to terms with him for the sale of it. He still had to face the many and stringent regulations of the press by political and ecclesiastical authorities, and the fact that he had sold the manuscript did not exempt him from responsibility for what was in it. The authorities were, first, the Privy Council, the highest political authority in the realm below the queen; then the Court of Star Chamber, which punished breaches of censorship; then the Court of High Commission, the supreme ecclesiastical authority, which sometimes supervised matters which had only the slightest connection with religion; then the Stationers' Company, with whom a book had to be registered but who supervised and protected the publisher and printer rather than the author.

The principal rules governing the publication of books were that the number of printers (not publishers) was strictly limited; that nothing could be printed except in the City of London and the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge; that everything printed must receive the imprimatur of the Archbishop of Canterbury and the Bishop of London or their representatives; and that everything published in London must be entered in the registers of the Stationers' Company, if any kind of property protection were desired for it. An example of the regulation which reached back of the publisher to the author himself can be seen in the history of John Stubbs, who protested against Elizabeth's projected French marriage in a pamphlet called The Discovery of a Gaping Gulf (1579). For writing this pamphlet, Stubbs was condemned to have his right hand cut off with one stroke of a butcher's cleaver. When the execution had taken place, Stubbs took off his hat with his left hand and cried "God save the queen!"

Almost every writer of the period got into some sort of trouble for publishing a book. It might be prison, it might be merely a reprimand, it might be an investigation by the Star Chamber. It was dangerous to put pen to paper, and it was so unprofitable that it is a wonder that any original writing was published at all. Yet the Elizabethan age is an extremely prolific one in writing and publishing. The Short Title Catalogue of the Bibliographical Society, which lists works and editions published between 1475 and 1640, includes over 26,000 items, and it does not include all that were published.

To suppose that poetry, or even prose, circulated only in printed form would be a mistake. The 16th century was the first century of the printed book, and the older way, of circulating in manuscript, lingered on into the 17th century. This was particularly true of poets of gentle or noble rank. Sidney is the most prominent example. Sir John Harington, in his translation of Ariosto's Orlando Furioso in 1591, mentions a sonnet of Sidney's "which many I am sure have read"; that particular sonnet was not published until seven years later. Many people kept commonplace books in which they would copy down poems from borrowed manuscript copies. Professional scribes made a living by copying manuscripts, for authors or for readers. There are even complaints by printers of the hoarding of literary manuscripts by "their grand possessors." There is a difference, which has not always been appreciated, between the poetry of the professional poets who wrote for print and the gentle or noble poets who wrote for circulation in manuscript among their cultivated friends.

ART, NATURE, AND POETRY

Elizabethan taste had some very definite and particular characteristics of its own, and the student who wishes to read Elizabethan literature in the spirit of its own time must adjust his mind to the differences between the aesthetic principles of the 16th century and those of our own day. In the 16th century there still remained much of the medieval awareness of the arts as crafts, and every writer of the period shows an amazing knowledge of the techniques of many crafts or "mysteries" now unfamiliar. Shakespeare is not an isolated example, and it has been often noticed that his works show an intimate knowledge of such matters as gardening, hawking, dressmaking, archery, building, and so on. Managing the great horse in the tournament was an art. Sailing was an art. Planting a kitchen garden was an art. What they had in common was that they all used the materials of nature but exploited the ingenuity of man's mind. The same fundamental characteristic was thought to apply to the art or craft of writing.

We have been taught by the Romantic movement to glorify nature and to regard the works of art as attempts, usually unsuccessful, to emulate nature. This conception would have seemed strange indeed to the Elizabethans. They recognized, of course, that nature was the cause and basis of all; but that seemed to them no reason why the ingenuity of man should not be used in enabling nature to outdo herself. In The Winter's Tale Polixenes is amused at the naïveté of Perdita, who protests that she will have no streaked carnations or gillyflowers in her garden because

I have heard it said
There is an art which in their piedness shares
With great creating nature.

"Say there be," replies Polixenes,

Yet nature is made better by no mean
But nature makes that mean. So, over that art
Which you say adds to nature, is an art
That nature makes. You see, sweet maid, we marry
A gentler scion to the wildest stock
And make conceive a bark of baser kind
By bud of nobler race. This is an art
Which does mend nature—change it rather; but
The art itself is nature.

There was no uneasiness in the Elizabethan mind about a possible conflict between art and nature, for the reason that Polixenes gives. And the improvement by device, by arrangement, by art, of something naturally beautiful extended to all aspects of life, so that there was felt to be no great gulf between literature and the sports of the field or the arts of the kitchen.

The Elizabethan garden was designed as a square, filled with elaborate and intricate, but perfectly regular, design. Francis Bacon protests at gardens which include plots of different colored earths, so arranged as to form a design even without the flowers planted in them; he says he sees enough of this kind of thing in confections and tarts. Yet the very protest shows that his taste was perhaps not typical, and a contemporary might well have asked him why a garden should not look like a confection from the baker's—they were both samples of the art of design. Some Elizabethans had their houses built in the shape of an E, out of honor to the queen, and one man, John Thorpe, designed his house in the form of his own initials. These instances were extreme, of course, but they show the tendency.

Contrapuntal music (composed of several independent melodies joined together), which was sung by the Elizabethans in an accomplished amateur manner, was an intricate kind of music, with elaborate patterns and complex harmonies. The composer Thomas Morley (ca. 1557–1603) says of the madrigal:

As for the music, it is, next unto the motet, the most artificial and to men of understanding most delightful. If therefore you will compose in this kind you must possess yourself with an amorous humor * * * so that you must in your music be wavering like the wind, sometime wanton, sometime grave and staid, otherwise effeminate; you may maintain points and revert them, use triplaes and show the very uttermost of your variety, and the more variety you show the better shall you please.

But a rigid form was to control all of this extravagance, just as the square border of a garden and the regularity of the pattern controlled the exuberance of the curves in the "knot" or design.

The verse forms used by the Elizabethans range from the extremely simple four-line ballad stanza through the rather complicated form of the sonnet to the elaborate and beautiful 18-line stanza of Spenser's Epithalamion. A stanza such as

The man of life upright
Whose guileless heart is free
From all dishonest deeds
Or thought of vanity

might have been written by any one of many poets at almost any time in the 16th century; it happened to have been written by a fine craftsman, Thomas Campion, near the end of it. Henry Howard, Earl of Surrey, who introduced blank verse into English and helped introduce the sonnet in the reign of Henry VIII, was also a practitioner of a form of iambic couplet in which the first line had twelve syllables and the second fourteen:

The young man eke that feels his bones with pains oppressed,
How he would be a rich old man, to live and lie at rest.

This verse form, called "poulter's measure" (because a poulter's dozen was supposed to be sometimes twelve and sometimes fourteen), was the most common verse form in the 60's and 70's. Its dreary monotony in long stretches is matched only by the "fourteener" couplet of fourteen syllables in a line. We still have examples of these forms in our hymnbooks; when each line of poulter's measure is printed as two lines, the hymnbooks call it "short meter"; when they so divide fourteeners they call it "common meter."

Sonnets, which the Elizabethans often called "quatorzains," using the term "sonnet" loosely for any short poem, are fourteen-line poems in iambic pentameter with elaborate rhyme schemes. The most common Italian form, which Wyatt, Sidney, and others imitated, was divided structurally into the octave (first eight lines) and the sestet (last six). A typical rhyme scheme was abba abba cddc ee. The so-called English sonnet, introduced by Surrey and practiced by Shakespeare, is structurally three quatrains and a couplet: abab cdcd efef gg. Spenser, the most experimental and the most gifted prosodist of the century, preferred a form that is harder to write and richer in rhymes: abab bcbc cdcd ee.

The six-line and the seven-line rhyme royal stanza, both practiced by Chaucer, survived into the 16th century. Shakespeare used the former in Venus and Adonis and the latter in The Rape of Lucrece; the popular collection of historical poems, The Mirror for Magistrates, features rhyme royal.

An innovation was Spenser's nine-line stanza, called after him the "Spenserian stanza," which added to the eight-line stanza of iambic pentameter (rhyming ababbcbc) an additional line of twelve syllables, an Alexandrine, rhyming with the preceding line. This is the stanza form which serves so well the large descriptive and narrative requirements of The Faerie Queene. The elaborate scheme of the stanza Spenser devised for his Epithalamion perhaps illustrates the height of Elizabethan craftsmanship in verse. Its eighteen lines rhyme ababcc, then various combinations in the second six, and finally three couplets. Lines 6, 11, and 16 are short, having only six syllables contrasted to the pentameter's ten, and the last line is an Alexandrine, as in the Spenserian stanza.

GENRES AND CONVENTIONS IN POETRY

A literary convention is a pattern that has become habitual and arouses certain expectations in the reader. For the Elizabethan poet available conventions enabled him to assume particular responses from his audience and to show his learning by his exploitation of these well-known patterns and his virtuosity by his ingenious elaborations of them. It must not be supposed that these conventions were lifeless forms, so stale with use that they no longer carried meaning or conviction. They were charged with values, with associations. They related writer and reader to other times, other languages, other cultures.

The ~~pastoral convention~~ presented a simple and idealized world, inhabited by shepherds and shepherdesses, concerned not at all with war or politics or commerce. Its business consisted of tending the flocks, friendly poetic contests among shepherds, love, and the pursuit of contentment rather than fame or fortune.

Pastoral lyrics expressed the joys of pastoral life or disappointment in love. Pastoral eclogues were dialogues between shepherds in which a poetic contest was staged, or there was serious, satirical comment on abuses in the great world concealed in the disguise of the homely local concerns of country folk. There were also, of course, pastoral dramas and pastoral romances (prose fiction) which embodied the same values of otium (leisure), freedom from pride and ambition, and the pursuit of humble contentment.

Another popular convention was that of the ~~mythological-erotic poem~~.

derived from Ovid mainly but influenced by Italian imitations of him. In the middle ages Ovid's poetry had been allegorized and interpreted morally—the same process that has overtaken the love songs in the Song of Solomon in the Old Testament. This process continued on into the 17th century, but a newer treatment of the convention returned to the frank sensuality of the Latin amatory poets and allowed for elaborate mythological decoration of the narrative without worrying about moral propriety or allegorical interpretation. Such poems appealed to a courtly taste; they validated the senses and they asserted the primacy of physical beauty and the imagination. Shakespeare in Venus and Adonis and Marlowe in Hero and Leander were among the poets who practiced in this convention.

Sometimes related to the Ovidian tradition but separate from it in origin was the convention of the complaint poem. This goes back to a medieval genre represented by works of the Italian Boccaccio and his English imitators, Lydgate and the authors of The Mirror for Magistrates. The complaint poem is essentially tragic and moral. In it the ghost of someone who fell from high place bemoans his fate and warns others. If the ghost is a woman, like Daniel's Rosamund, her fall was caused by the frailty of her sex and the poem may be related to the Ovidian tradition. Another kind of poem, which came both from Ovid and the Mirror for Magistrates tradition, was the heroical epistle, practised notably by Dryden.

The Elizabethan sonnet, which reached the height of its vogue in the last decade of the 16th century, depended upon a convention established by Petrarch and followed by his many imitators in Italy and France. In this tradition the poet complains of his lady's coldness; he describes the contrary states of feeling the lover experiences; and he writes sonnets on the conventional themes of sleep, absence, originality, renunciation, and others. The purposes of the love sonneteers differed, of course, but what they had in common might be described as an ambition to give dignity and power to the theme of love by the elaborate rhetorical and stylistic devices available in the Petrarchan tradition. Lesser poets often produced nothing but standard conceits served up in fourteen-line helpings, but major poets such as Sidney, Spenser, and Shakespeare wrote sonnets of power and originality that stand out as major poetic products of the Elizabethan Age.

The conventional forms for satire were less well fixed in the 16th century than in some later periods, though there is a good deal of Elizabethan satirical verse. Some examples belong to a medieval tradition coming down from Piers Plowman, which was believed to be the only English masterpiece in satire until satires by the "university wits" in the tradition of the Latin satirists Persius and Juvenal began to appear, and some were written by young John Donne and circulated only in manuscript until after the poet's death in 1631. The epigram was a form that flourished, both in the classical tradition of Martial and in the lyric form of words for a madrigal; the famous The Silver Swan is an example.

Poetry for music also followed some conventions: the dance song of course had its definite rhythms and refrains, and many well-known tunes provided the formula by which poet after poet composed new words. In the polyphonic madrigal, the same phrases tend to be repeated again and again, while the words often get lost in the music because various voices sing different words at the same time. As a result, the poem written as a madrigal is usually short and simple both in language and ideas. The "ayre," however, is a song written for a single voice to a lute accompaniment and is usually sung straight through. Since the words are much more intelligible, the thought can be more complex. While the poem is often a good deal longer than the madrigal (since the same melody is repeated over and over), the poem is divided into repetitive stanzas.

There were conventions as well for the heroic poem, of which Spenser's Faerie Queene is the prime example. The classical epics of Homer and Virgil had their influence, but so did the romantic Italian epics of Ariosto and Tasso. Chapman's Homer and Harington's Ariosto were regarded by contemporaries as something more than translation, having much of the interest and significance of original poems.

The major conventions in poetry did not stifle originality; they served as both an ordering device and a challenge that stimulated the poet to something fresh and new. When these conventions were alive for writers and readers, they had significance in themselves, which was an essential part of the total significance of the poem. Knowledge of the more important Elizabethan conventions is not simply of scholarly interest; it is essential to the experience of the poem as a poem.

ELIZABETHAN MOODS AND ATTITUDES

The English Renaissance was no sharp break with the past. Attitudes and feelings which had been characteristic of the 15th or 14th centuries persisted well down into the era of humanism and Reformation. George Gascoigne, the leading writer of the 1570's, has in many ways a medieval point of view, and the popular collection of verse tales of the fall of princes called The Mirror for Magistrates (first published in 1559, and reprinted with additions in 1563, 1587, and 1610) derives from Lydgate and Boccaccio. Even a lyric by that flamboyant and "modern" Elizabethan, Sir Walter Raleigh, may embody a sentiment of the vanity and transitoriness of all earthly ambitions and achievements. The Dance of Death and related images were still living symbols to the Elizabethan imagination; witness Shakespeare's Richard II (III.ii.152-70):

And nothing can we call our own but death
 And that small model of the barren earth
 Which serves as paste and cover to our bones.
 For God's sake let us sit upon the ground
 And tell sad stories of the death of kings!
 How some have been deposed; some slain in war;
 Some haunted by the ghosts they have deposed;
 Some poisoned by their wives; some sleeping killed—
 All murdered; for within the hollow crown
 That rounds the mortal temples of a king
 Keeps Death his court, and there the antic sits,
 Scoffing his state and grinning at his pomp;
 Allowing him a breath, a little scene,
 To monarchize, be feared, and kill with looks;
 Infusing him with self and vain conceit,
 As if this flesh which walls about our life
 Were brass impregnable: and humored thus,
 Comes at the last, and with a little pin
 Bores through the castle wall, and farewell king!

* Stupid self-contradiction.

Yet there was at the same time a spirit of joy and gaiety, of innocence and lightheartedness, that future ages were to look back on as "merry England." This spirit is popular, it comes from the folk and from the persistent love of Englishmen for their countryside; it is spontaneous, yet it seems somehow stable and permanent. Perhaps its best expression is in the songs of Shakespeare's plays:

When daffodils begin to peer,
With heigh! the doxy over the dale,
Why, then comes in the sweet o' the year;
For the red blood reigns in the winter's pale.

or

When daisies pied and violets blue
And ladysmocks all silver-white
And cuckoobuds of yellow hue
Do paint the meadows with delight.

The mood of pastoral, as we have already seen in our notice of that convention, is generally one of quiet contentment, of reflective leisure, of the enjoyment of a simple, idealized world. Marlowe's Passionate Shepherd to His Love beautifully invokes this world.

There was of course also among the Elizabethans the opposite mood: the burning desire for conquest, for achievement, for surmounting all obstacles. The Elizabethans called it "the aspiring mind." The great projector of this mood is Christopher Marlowe, who has his heroes fling themselves into the pursuit of power—

Is it not passing brave to be a king
And ride in triumph through Persepolis?—

or into the lust for gold—

Infinite riches in a little room—

or into the search for knowledge—

All things that move between the quiet poles
Shall be at my command; emperors and kings
Are but obeyed in their several provinces,
Nor can they raise the wind or rend the clouds;
But his dominion that excels in this
Stretcheth as far as doth the mind of man.

Marlowe's heroes are defeated finally, all of them, but their fiery spirit in assaulting the limits of the possible echoes after they are gone.

The Elizabethan spirit has been described as "sensuous, comprehensive, extravagant, disorderly, thirsty for beauty, abounding in the zest for life." This is part of the truth, but not all of it. Fundamentally, the thought and feeling of Shakespeare's contemporaries was far more deeply affected by Christian humanism than by the extravagances of Marlowe. We need to remember Ben Jonson, with his classical principles of structure and decorum and his ideal of the balanced man. Jonson was in every respect more typical of his age than Shakespeare. His emphasis upon learning, his reconciliation of ancient models and English content, and his critical responsibility truly represent the ideal English poet of his time, as Sidney would have visualized him. Because his major work was done after 1603, he is represented in the 17th-century section of this anthology.

The second generation of English humanists—men like Roger Ascham (1515–68, tutor to Queen Elizabeth), Sir John Cheke (1514–57, professor of Greek at Cambridge), and Thomas Wilson (1525–81, rhetorician and translator)—combined an earnest Protestant Christianity with their classical learning, and Ascham vigorously opposed the more secular, pagan humanism that was coming out of Italy. These men shaped the University of Cambridge, which in turn shaped many men. It was an Oxford man, however—Richard Hooker—who provided in his great work, The Laws of Ecclesiastical Polity (1593 and later), the supreme masterpiece of English Christian humanism. In so far as his doctrine is concerned, Spenser is a Christian humanist, and the label can justly be applied to John Milton, both in content and in form.

If the beginning of the Tudor era showed more links with the past than with the future, it is equally true that the end of Elizabeth's reign prefigured some of the conflict and uncertainty of the time to come. "The disenchantment of the Elizabethans" is a phrase that has been used to describe it. In 1599, the year of Spenser's death, the headstrong Earl of Essex returned from Ireland, inaugurating a course of events that would lead to his rebellion and execution in 1601. Elizabeth was old, a peaceful succession was by no means assured, and the rifts in society which were to mean civil war in the midcentury were already present. An outbreak of satire and epigrams had to be stopped by the authorities. Some of the cynical undercurrent in Shakespeare's Hamlet and Troilus and Cressida reflects the spirit of the time. John Donne was already writing his poems, and a very different age, the 17th century, was in the offing. In 1603 Elizabeth, the last of the Tudors, died, and to the immense relief of anxious Englishmen, the succession took place peacefully. The new monarch was the Protestant James VI of Scotland, who became James I of England.

SIR THOMAS MORE

(1478-1535)

1514-16: Writing Utopia.

1532: Resigns as Lord Chancellor after refusing to take oath to support Act of Succession and Supremacy.

More's famous philosophical romance Utopia (the name means "nowhere") is the father of a whole class of writings, from Bacon's New Atlantis (1626), through Swift's Gulliver's Travels (1726), Butler's Erewhon (1872), and Bellamy's Looking Backward (1888), to the "science fiction" stories of the present. But More's book has its own ancestry. It derives in part from Plato's Republic (and hence is philosophical) and in part from the accounts of travelers like Amerigo Vespucci (1507) and hence is romantic. It is a major monument of the great Christian humanist awakening of which Pico della Mirandola (1463-94), Desiderius Erasmus (ca. 1466-1536), and More himself were the most brilliant figures. Since the first of these was Italian, the second Dutch, and the third English, the movement was obviously international; Utopia was written in Latin, the international language.

Utopia represents itself as a traveler's tale, told by a veteran mariner (who is also a philosopher) to a group of somewhat skeptical companions as they sit in a garden one afternoon in Antwerp, in Holland. It is divided into two books. In the first, written in dialogue form, the corruption of European civil life is criticized. In the second, the traveler Raphael Hythloday describes the institutions of Utopia, with many ironic references to the real world with which the listeners are familiar.

Utopia is thus not presented as a mere dream or impractical fancy, as the modern use of the word "utopian" sometimes suggests. It is the fruit of More's serious thought—though he was never wholly serious—on the great social problems of his time. More felt, very strongly, the value of the ideals embodied in the rules of the monastic orders. Yet he was himself a man of the world, a lawyer and negotiator; he saw how far from realization in practice were the social ideals he admired. Central to his thought is the idea of community of property, for which he had a precedent in Plato as well as in the rules of the monastic orders; no fundamental reform in society is possible until private property is abolished. Yet it is typical of More's carefully balanced method that a standard defense of private property is put into the mouth of More as a character in the dialogue, against the position of the main speaker, Hythloday.

More's life was even more remarkable than his writings. He was born in London, the son of a prominent lawyer; as a boy he served in Archbishop Morton's household, then proceeded to Oxford and the Inns of Court. He became a friend of Erasmus, the great humanist, scholar, and editor of the New Testament; it was to More that Erasmus dedicated his satire The Praise of Folly. Soon after he wrote Utopia More rose to positions of great responsibility under King Henry VIII: Master of Requests, Privy Councillor, Speaker of the House of Commons, and finally Lord Chancellor. In 1532, after the king's marriage to Anne Boleyn, More refused to take the oath for the Act of Succession and Supremacy. Although he had compromised before, as any successful administrator must, his conscience would not permit him to assert that any temporal lord, even Henry, could or ought to be head of that spiritual body, the church. From the point of view of the government, his refusal was treason, and he was condemned to death; efforts, including those of his wife, to reconcile him with Henry failed, and in 1535 he was executed. No death in English history is more famous: as he mounted the shaky steps to the scaffold, he said to the sheriff's officer, "I pray you, Master Lieutenant, see me safe up, and for my coming down let me shift for myself"; as he put his head on the block he moved his beard aside, remarking that his beard had done the king no offense. He was of course certain that he was not dying for treason, but in and for the faith of the Catholic Church. Four hundred years later he was canonized by the church as St. Thomas More.

From Utopia¹

From Book I

[MORE MEETS A RETURNED TRAVELER]

The most invincible King of England, Henry the Eighth of that name, a prince adorned with the royal virtues beyond any other, had recently some differences of no slight import with Charles, the most serene Prince of Castille,² and sent me into Flanders as his spokesman to discuss and settle them. I was companion and associate to that incomparable man Cuthbert Tunstall,³ whom the King has recently created Master of the Rolls, to everyone's great satisfaction. I will say nothing in praise of this man, not because I fear the judgment of a friend might be questioned, but because his learning and integrity are greater than I can describe and too well-known everywhere to need my commendation—unless I would, according to the proverb, "Show the sun with a lantern."

Those appointed by the prince to deal with us, all excellent men, met us at Bruges by prearrangement. Their head man and leader was the Margrave, so called, of Bruges, a most distinguished person. But their main speaker and guiding spirit was Georges de Themsecke, the Provost of Cassel, a man eloquent by nature as well as by training, very learned in the law, and most skillful in diplomatic affairs through his ability and long practice. After we had met several times, certain points remained on which we could not come to agreement; so they adjourned the meetings and went to Brussels for some days to consult their prince in person.

Meanwhile, since my business permitted it, I went to Antwerp. Of those who visited me while I was there, Peter Giles⁴ was more

1. The translation from which these selections are taken is by Robert M. Adams (1975).

2. Later Charles V (1500–58), King of Spain and Holy Roman Emperor. The differences had to do with the wool trade.

3. Later Bishop of London and of Durham, one of More's closest friends (1474–1599).

4. Peter Giles (Petrus Aegidius), pupil and friend of Erasmus, town clerk of Antwerp. He arranged for the first printing, in Latin, of Utopia (1516).

welcome to me than any of the others. He was a native of Antwerp, a man of high reputation, already appointed to a good position and worthy of the very best: a young man distinguished equally by learning and character. Apart from being cultured, virtuous, and courteous to all, with his intimates he is so open, trustworthy, loyal, and affectionate that it would be hard to find another friend like him anywhere. No man is more modest or more frank; none better combines simplicity with wisdom. His conversation is so merry, and so witty without malice, that the ardent desire I felt to see my native country, my wife and my children (from whom I had been separated more than four months) was much eased by his agreeable company and pleasant talk.

One day after I had heard mass at Nôtre Dame, the most beautiful and most popular church in Antwerp, I was about to return to my quarters when I happened to see him talking with a stranger, a man of quite advanced years. The stranger had a sunburned face, a long beard, and a cloak hanging loosely from his shoulders; from his appearance and dress, I took him to be a ship's captain. When Peter saw me, he approached and greeted me. As I was about to return his greeting, he drew me aside, and, indicating the stranger, said, "Do you see that man? I was just on the point of bringing him to you."

"He would have been very welcome on your behalf," I answered.

"And on his own too, if you knew him," said Peter, "for there is no man alive today can tell you so much about unknown peoples and lands; and I know that you're always greedy for such information."

"In that case," said I, "my guess wasn't a bad one, for at first glance I supposed he was a skipper."

"Then you're not quite right," he replied, "for his sailing has not been like that of Palinurus, but more that of Ulysses, or rather of Plato.⁵ This man, who is named Raphael—his family name is Hythloday—knows a good deal of Latin, and is particularly learned in Greek. He studied Greek more than Latin because his main interest is philosophy, and in that field he found that the Romans have left us nothing very valuable except certain works of Seneca and Cicero. Being eager to see the world, he left his patrimony to his brothers (he is Portuguese by birth) and took service with Amerigo Vespucci.⁶ He accompanied Vespucci on the last three of his four voyages, accounts of which are now common read-

5. Palinurus, Aeneas's pilot, fell asleep, fell overboard and drowned. Ulysses, by contrast, was a wily, alert traveler. Plato is cited as the profound philosopher; his Republic strongly influenced Utopia. Raphael Hythloday is an invented character. His last name is coined from Greek words meaning "a skilled conveyor of nonsense."

6. Vespucci's last two voyages were made for the King of Portugal (hence Hythloday's birthplace). His account of his voyages, published in 1507, made him more famous than Columbus.

ing everywhere; but on the last voyage, he did not return home with the commander. After much persuasion and expostulation he got Amerigo's permission to be one of the twenty-four men who were left in a fort at the farthest point of the last voyage. Being marooned in this way was altogether agreeable to him, as he was more anxious to pursue his travels than afraid of death. He would often say, "The man who has no grave is covered by the sky," and "The road to heaven is equally short from all places." Yet this frame of mind would have cost him dear, if God had not been gracious to him. After Vespucci's departure, he traveled through many countries with five companions from the fort. At last, by strange good fortune, he got, via Ceylon, to Calcutta, where by good luck he found some Portuguese ships; and so, beyond anyone's expectation, he returned to his own own country."

When Peter had told me this, I thanked him for his kindness in wishing to introduce me to a man whose conversation he hoped I would enjoy, and then I turned toward Raphael. After greeting one another and exchanging the usual civilities of strangers upon their first meeting, we all went to my house. There in the garden we sat down on a bench covered with turf to talk together.

He told us that when Vespucci sailed away, he and his companion who had stayed behind in the fort often met with the people of the countryside, and by ingratiating speeches gradually won their friendship. Before long they came to dwell with them safely and even affectionately. The prince also gave them his favor (I have forgotten his name and that of his country), furnishing Raphael and his five companions not only with ample provisions, but with means for traveling—rafts when they went by water, wagons when they went by land. In addition, he sent with them a most trusty guide who was to introduce and recommend them to such other princes as they desired to visit. After many days' journey, he said, they came to towns and cities, and to commonwealths that were both populous and not badly governed.

To be sure, under the equator and as far on both sides of the line as the sun moves, there lie vast empty deserts, scorched with the perpetual heat. The whole region is desolate and squalid, grim and uncultivated, inhabited by wild beasts, serpents, and also by men no less wild and dangerous than the beasts themselves. But as they went on, conditions gradually grew milder. The heat was less fierce, the earth greener, men and even beasts less savage. At last they reached people, cities, and towns which not only traded among themselves and with their neighbors, but even carried on commerce by sea and land with remote countries. After that, he said, they were able to visit different lands in every direction, for he and his companions were welcome as passengers aboard any ship about to make a journey.

The first vessels that they saw were flat-bottomed, with sails made of papyrus-reeds and wicker, or occasionally of leather. Farther on, they found ships with pointed keels and canvas sails, very much like our own. The seamen were skilled in managing wind and water; but they were most grateful to him, Raphael said, for showing them the use of the compass, of which they had been ignorant. For that reason, they had formerly sailed with great timidity, and only in summer. Now they have such trust in the compass that they no longer fear winter at all, and tend to be overconfident rather than secure. There is some danger that through their imprudence, this discovery, which they thought would be so advantageous to them, may become the cause of much mischief.

It would take too long to repeat all that Raphael told us he had observed, nor would it make altogether for our present purpose. Perhaps in another place we shall tell more about the things that are most profitable, especially the wise and sensible institutions that he observed among the civilized nations. We asked him many questions about such things, and he answered us willingly enough. We made no inquiries, however, about monsters, which are the routine of travelers' tales. Scyllas, ravenous Celaenos, man-eating Lestrygonians⁷ and that sort of monstrosity you can hardly avoid, but it is not so easy to find good citizens and wise governments. While he told us of many ill-considered usages in these new-found nations, he also described quite a few other customs from which our own cities, nations, races, and kingdoms might take example in order to correct their errors. These I shall discuss in another place, as I said. Now I intend to relate only what he told us about the manners and laws of Utopians, first explaining the occasion that led him to speak of that commonwealth. Raphael had been talking very wisely about the many errors and also the wise institutions found both in that hemisphere and this (as many of both sorts in one place as in the other), speaking as shrewdly about the manners and governments of each place he had visited briefly as though he had lived there all his life. Peter was amazed.

"My dear Raphael," he said, "I'm surprised that you don't enter some king's service; for I don't know of a single prince who wouldn't be eager to have you. Your learning, and your knowledge of various countries and men would entertain him while your advice and your supply of examples would be very helpful. Thus you might advance your own interest and be useful at the same time to all your relatives and friends."

"I am not much concerned about my relatives and friends," he replied, "because I consider that I have already done my duty by large birds with the faces of women, pale with hunger, and provided with long, sharp talons. Lestrygonians were cannibals in the Odyssey.

7. "Scyllas" were fabulous monsters, like the one who lived in a cave in the rock Scylla in the Odyssey; Celaeno was leader of the harpies in the Aeneid,

them. While still young and healthy, I distributed among my relatives and friends the possessions that most men do not part with till they are old and sick (and then only reluctantly, because they can no longer keep them). I think they should be content with this gift of mine, and not expect that for their sake I should enslave myself to any king whatever."

"Well said," Peter replied; "but I do not mean that you should be in servitude to any king, only in his service."

"The difference is only a matter of one syllable," Raphael replied.⁸

"All right," said Peter, "but whatever you call it, I do not see any other way in which you can be so useful to your friends or to the general public, apart from making yourself happier."

"Happier indeed!" exclaimed Raphael. "Would a way of life so absolutely repellent to my spirit make my life happier? As it is now, I live as I please, and I fancy very few courtiers, however splendid, can say that. As a matter of fact, there are so many men soliciting favors from the great that it will be no great loss if they have to do without me and a couple of others like me."

Then I said, "It is clear, my dear Raphael, that you want neither wealth nor power, and indeed I value and revere a man of such a disposition as much as I do the greatest men in the world. Yet I think if you would devote your time and energy to public affairs, you would do a thing worthy of a generous and philosophical nature, even if you did not much like it. You could best perform such a service by joining the council of some great prince, whom you would incite to noble and just actions. I am sure you would do this if you held such an office, and your influence would be felt, because a people's welfare or misery flows in a stream from their prince, as from a never-failing spring. Your learning is so full, even if it weren't combined with experience, and your experience is so great, even if you didn't have any learning, that you would be an extraordinary councillor to any king in the world."

"You are twice mistaken, my dear More," he replied, "first in me and then in the situation itself. I don't have the capacity you ascribe to me, and if I had it in the highest degree, the public would not be any better off through the destruction of my peace. In the first place, most princes apply themselves to the arts of war, in which I have neither ability nor interest, instead of to the good arts of peace. They are generally more set on acquiring new kingdoms by hook or by crook than on governing well those that they already have. Moreover, the councillors of kings are all so wise that they need no other knowledge (or at least that's the way they see it). At the same time, they accept and even flatter the most absurd statements of favorites through whose influence they seek to stand well with the prince. It is only natural, of course, that each man should think his own opinions best: the old crow loves his fledglings, and the ape his cubs. Now in a court composed of people who envy everyone else and admire only themselves, if a man should suggest something he had read of in other ages or seen in other places, the other councillors would think their reputation for wisdom was endangered, and they would look like simpletons, unless they could find fault with his proposal. If all else failed, they would take refuge in some remark like this: 'The way we're doing it is the way we've always done it, this custom was good enough for our fathers, and I only hope we're as wise as they were.' And with this deep thought they would take their seats, as though they had said the last word on the subject—implying, forsooth, that it would be a very dangerous matter if a man were found to be wiser in any point than his forefathers were. As a matter of fact, we quietly neglect the best examples they have left us; but if something better is proposed, we seize the excuse of reverence for times past and cling to it desperately. Such proud, obstinate, ridiculous judgments I have encountered many times, and once even in England."

8. The play on words here depends on the Latin original: servias and inservias.

* * *

From Book II

THE GEOGRAPHY OF UTOPIA

The island of the Utopians is two hundred miles across in the middle part where it is widest, and is nowhere much narrower than this except toward the two ends. These ends, drawn toward one another in a five-hundred-mile circle, make the island crescent-shaped like a new moon. Between the horns of the crescent, which are about eleven miles apart, the sea enters and spreads into a broad bay. Being sheltered from the wind by the surrounding land, the bay is never rough, but quiet and smooth instead, like a big lake. Thus, nearly the whole inner coast is one great harbor, across which ships pass in every direction, to the great advantage of the people. What with shallows on one side, and rocks on the other, the entrance into the bay is very dangerous. Near the middle of the channel, there is one rock that rises above the water, and so presents no dangers in itself; on top of it a tower has been built, and there a garrison is kept. Since the other rocks lie under water, they are very dangerous to navigation. The channels are known only to the Utopians, so hardly any strangers enter the bay without one of their pilots; and even they themselves could not enter safely if they did not direct themselves by some landmarks on the coast. If they should shift these landmarks about, they could lure to destruction an enemy fleet coming against them, however big it was.

On the outer side of the island there are likewise occasional harbors; but the coast is rugged by nature, and so well fortified that a few defenders could beat off the attack of a strong force. They say (and the appearance of the place confirms this) that their land was not always an island. But Utopus, who conquered the country and gave it his name (it had previously been called Abraxa),⁹ brought its rude and uncouth inhabitants to such a high level of culture and humanity that they now excel in that regard almost every other people. After subduing them at his first landing, he cut a channel fifteen miles wide where their land joined the continent, and caused the sea to flow around the country. He put not only the natives to work at this task, but all his own soldiers too, so that the vanquished would not think the labor a disgrace. With the work divided among so many hands, the project was finished quickly, and the neighboring peoples, who at first had laughed at his folly, were struck with wonder and terror at his success.

There are fifty-four cities on the island, all spacious and magnificent, identical in language, customs, institutions, and laws. So far as the location permits, all of them are built on the same plan, and have the same appearance. The nearest are at least twenty-four miles apart, and the farthest are not so remote that a man cannot go on foot from one to the other in a day.

Once a year each city sends three of its old and experienced citizens to Amaurot¹ to consider affairs of common interest to the island. Amaurot is the chief city, lies near the omphalos² of the land, so to speak, and convenient to every other district, so it acts as a capital. Every city has enough ground assigned to it so that at least ten miles of farm land are available in every direction, though where the cities are farther apart, they have much more land. No city wants to enlarge its boundaries, for the inhabitants consider themselves good tenants rather than landlords. At proper intervals all over the countryside they have built houses and furnished them with farm equipment. These houses are inhabited by citizens who come to the country by turns to occupy them. No rural house has fewer than forty men and women in it, besides two slaves.³ A master and mistress, serious and mature persons, are in charge of each household. Over every thirty households is placed a single phylarch.⁴ Each year twenty persons from each rural household move back to the city, after completing a two-year stint in the country. In their place, twenty others are sent out from town, to learn farm work from those who have already been in the country for a year, and who are better skilled in farming. They, in turn, will teach

9. From Greek, "not small" or "insignificant."

1. Coined from a Greek adjective meaning "dark, obscure"—a suitable name for the capital of a country whose name means "Nowhere."

2. Navel, umbilicus—the spiritual as well as physical center of a nation.

3. More provides for a few bondmen or slaves in Utopia, to perform tasks unfit for citizens, such as slaughtering.

4. From Greek words meaning "head of a tribe."

those who come the following year. If all were equally ignorant of farm work, and new to it, they might harm the crops out of ignorance. This custom of alternating farm workers is solemnly established so that no one will have to do such hard work against his will for more than two years; but many of them who take a natural pleasure in farm life ask to stay longer.

The farm workers till the soil, raise cattle, hew wood, and take it to the city by land or water, as is most convenient. They breed an enormous number of chickens by a marvelous method. Men, not hens, hatch the eggs by keeping them in a warm place at an even temperature. As soon as they come out of the shell, the chicks recognize the men, follow them around, and are devoted to them instead of to their real mothers.

They raise very few horses, and these full of mettle, which they keep only to exercise the young men in the art of horsemanship. For the heavy work of plowing and hauling they use oxen, which they agree are inferior to horses over the short haul, but which can hold out longer under heavy burdens, are less subject to disease (as they suppose), and so can be kept with less cost and trouble. Moreover, when oxen are too old for work, they can be used for meat.

Grain they use only to make bread. They drink wine, apple or pear cider, or simple water, which they sometimes mix with honey or licorice, of which they have an abundance. Although they know very well, down to the last detail, how much grain each city and its surrounding district will consume, they produce much more grain and cattle than they need for themselves, and share the surplus with their neighbors. Whatever goods the folk in the country need which cannot be produced there, they request of the town magistrates, and since there is nothing to be paid or exchanged, they get what they want at once, without any haggling. They generally go to town once a month in any case, to observe the holy days. When harvest time approaches, the phylarchs in the country notify the town-magistrates how many hands will be needed. Crews of harvesters come just when they're wanted, and in one day of good weather they can usually get in the whole crop.

THEIR GOLD AND SILVER

For these reasons,⁵ therefore, they have accumulated a vast treasure, but they do not keep it like a treasure. I'm really quite ashamed to tell you how they do keep it, because you probably won't believe me. I would not have believed it myself if someone had just told me about it; but I was there, and saw it with my own eyes. It is a general rule that the more different anything is from what people

5. More has explained, in a section here omitted, that the Utopians hire mercenary soldiers in time of war and pay them very highly; enemy soldiers often desert to them.

are used to, the harder it is to accept. But, considering that all their other customs are so unlike ours, a sensible man will not be surprised that they use gold and silver quite differently than we do. After all, they never do use money among themselves, but keep it only for a contingency which may or may not actually arise. So in the meanwhile they take care that no one shall overvalue gold and silver, of which money is made, beyond what the metals themselves deserve. Anyone can see, for example, that iron is far superior to either; men could not live without iron, by heaven, any more than without fire or water. But gold and silver have, by nature, no function that we cannot easily dispense with. Human folly has made them precious because they are rare. Like a most wise and generous mother, nature has placed the best things everywhere and in the open, like air, water, and the earth itself; but she has hidden away in remote places all vain and unprofitable things.

If in Utopia gold and silver were kept locked up in some tower, foolish heads among the common people might well concoct a story that the prince and the senate⁶ were out to cheat ordinary folk and get some advantage for themselves. They might indeed put the gold and silver into beautiful plate-ware and rich handiwork, but then in case of necessity the people would not want to give up such articles, on which they had begun to fix their hearts, only to melt them down for soldiers' pay. To avoid all these inconveniences, they thought of a plan which conforms with their institutions as clearly as it contrasts with our own. Unless we've actually seen it working, their plan may seem ridiculous to us, because we prize gold so highly and are so careful about protecting it. With them it's just the other way. While they eat from pottery dishes and drink from glass cups, well made but inexpensive, their chamber pots and stools—all their humblest vessels, for use in the common halls and private homes—are made of gold and silver. The chains and heavy fetters of slaves are also made of these metals. Finally, criminals who are to bear through life the mark of some disgraceful act are forced to wear golden rings on their ears, golden bands on their fingers, golden chains around their necks, and even golden crowns on their heads. Thus they hold gold and silver up to scorn in every conceivable way. As a result, when they have to part with these metals, which other nations give up with as much agony as if they were being disemboweled, the Utopians feel it no more than the loss of a penny.

They find pearls by the seashore, diamonds and rubies in certain cliffs, but never go out of set purpose to look for them. If they

6. The prince, as More has earlier explained, is chosen for life by the senate, whose members are selected by an assembly, whose members in turn are selected from households.

happen to find some, they polish them, and give them to the children who, when they are small, feel proud and pleased with such gaudy decorations. But after, when they grow a bit older, and notice that only babies like such toys, they lay them aside. Their parents don't have to say anything, they simply put these trifles away out of a shamefaced sense that they're no longer suitable, just as our children when they grow up put away their rattles, marbles, and dolls.

Different customs, different feelings: I never saw the adage better illustrated than in the case of the Anemolian⁷ ambassadors, who came to Amaurot while I was there. Because they came to discuss important business, the senate had assembled ahead of time, three citizens from each city. But the ambassadors from nearby nations, who had visited Utopia before and knew something of their customs, realized that fine clothing was not much respected in that land, silk was despised, and gold was a badge of contempt; and therefore they came in the very plainest of their clothes. But the Anemolians, who lived farther off and had had fewer dealings with the Utopians, had heard only that they all dressed alike, and very simply; so they took for granted that their hosts had nothing to wear that they didn't put on. Being themselves rather more proud than wise, they decided to dress as resplendently as the very gods and dazzle the eyes of the poor Utopians by the splendor of their garb.

Consequently the three ambassadors made a grand entry with a suite of a hundred attendants, all in clothing of many colors, and most in silk. Being noblemen at home, the ambassadors were arrayed in cloth of gold, with heavy gold chains on their necks, gold rings on their ears and fingers, and sparkling strings of pearls and gems on their caps. In fact, they were decked out in all the articles which in Utopia are used to punish slaves, shame wrongdoers, or pacify infants. It was a sight to see how they strutted when they compared their finery with the dress of the Utopians who had poured out into the street to see them pass. But it was just as funny to see how wide they fell of the mark, and how far they were from getting the consideration they wanted and expected. Except for a very few Utopians who for some special reason had visited foreign countries, all the onlookers considered this pomp and splendor a mark of disgrace. They therefore bowed to the humblest servants as lords, and took the ambassadors to be slaves because they were wearing golden chains, passing them by without any reverence at all. You might have seen children, who had themselves thrown away their pearls and gems, nudge their mothers when they saw the ambassadors' jeweled caps, and say:

7. From Greek, "windy people."

"Look at that big lummoX, mother, who's still wearing pearls and jewels as if he were a little kid!"

But the mother, in all seriousness, would answer:

"Hush, my boy, I think he is one of the ambassadors' fools."

Others found fault with the golden chains as useless, because they were so flimsy any slave could break them, and so loose that he could easily shake them off and run away whenever he wanted. But after the ambassadors had spent a couple of days among the Utopians, they learned of the immense amounts of gold which were as thoroughly despised there as they were prized at home. They saw too that more gold and silver went into making the chains and fetters of a single runaway slave than into costuming all three of them. Somewhat crestfallen, then, they put away all the finery in which they had strutted so arrogantly; but they saw the wisdom of doing so after they had talked with the Utopians enough to learn their customs and opinions.

MARRIAGE CUSTOMS

Women do not marry till they are eighteen, nor men till they are twenty-two. Premarital intercourse by either men or women, if discovered and proved, is severely punished, and the guilty parties are forbidden to marry during their whole lives, unless the prince, by his pardon, alleviates the sentence. In addition both the father and mother of the household where the offense occurred suffer public disgrace for having been remiss in their duty. The reason they punish this offense so severely is that they suppose few people would join in married love—with confinement to a single partner, and all the petty annoyances that married life involves—unless they were strictly restrained from a life of promiscuity.

In choosing marriage partners, they solemnly and seriously follow a custom which seemed to us foolish and absurd in the extreme. Whether she is a widow or a virgin, the bride-to-be is shown naked to the groom by a responsible and respectable matron; and, similarly, some respectable man presents the groom naked to his future bride. We laughed at this custom and called it absurd; but they were just as amazed at the folly of all other nations. When men go to buy a colt, where they are risking only a little money, they are so suspicious that though he is almost bare they won't close the deal until the saddle and blanket have been taken off, lest there be a hidden sore underneath. Yet in the choice of a mate, which may cause either delight or disgust for the rest of their lives, people are completely careless. They leave all the rest of her body covered up with clothes and estimate the attractiveness of a woman from a mere handbreadth of her person, the face, which is all they can see. And so they marry, running great risk of hating one another for the rest of their lives, if something in either's person should offend the other. Not all people are so wise as to concern themselves solely with character; even the wise appreciate physical beauty, as a supplement to a good disposition. There's no question but that deformity may lurk under clothing, serious enough to make a man hate his wife when it's too late to be separated from her. When deformities are discovered after marriage, each person must bear his own fate, so the Utopians think everyone should be protected by law beforehand.

There is extra reason for them to be careful, because in that part of the world, they are the only people who practice monogamy. Their marriages are seldom terminated except by death, though they do allow divorce for adultery or for intolerably difficult behavior. A husband or wife who is an aggrieved party to such a divorce is granted permission by the senate to remarry, but the guilty party is considered disreputable and permanently forbidden to take another mate. They absolutely forbid a husband to put away his wife against her will because of some bodily misfortune; they think it cruel that a person should be abandoned when most in need of comfort; and they add that old age, since it not only entails disease but is actually a disease itself, needs more than a precarious fidelity.

It happens occasionally that a married couple cannot get along, and have both found other persons with whom they hope to live more harmoniously. After getting the approval of the senate, they may then separate by mutual consent and contract new marriages. But such divorces are allowed only after the senators and their wives have carefully investigated the case. They allow divorce only very reluctantly because they know that husbands and wives will find it hard to settle down together if each has in mind that another new relation is easily available.

They punish adulterers with the strictest form of slavery. If both parties were married, they are both divorced, and the injured parties may marry one another, if they want, or someone else. But if one of the injured parties continues to love such an undeserving spouse, the marriage may go on, providing the innocent person chooses to share in the labor to which every slave is condemned. And sometimes it happens that the repentance of the guilty, and the devotion of the innocent party, move the prince to pity, so that he restores both to freedom. But a second conviction of adultery is punished by death.

RELIGIONS

There are different forms of religion throughout the island, and in each particular city as well. Some worship as a god the sun, others the moon, and still others one of the planets. There are some who worship a man of past ages who was conspicuous either for virtue or glory; they consider him not only a god but the supreme god. Most of the Utopians, however, and among these all the wisest, believe nothing of the sort: they believe in a single power, unknown, eternal, infinite, inexplicable, far beyond the grasp of the human mind, and diffused throughout the universe, not physically, but in influence. Him they call father, and to him alone they attribute the origin, increase, progress, change, and end of all visible things; they do not offer divine honors to any other.

Though the other sects of the Utopians differ from this main group in various particular doctrines, they all agree in this main head, that there is one supreme power, the maker and ruler of the universe, whom they all call in their native language Mithra.⁸ Different people define him differently, and each supposes the object of his worship is the special vessel of that great force which all people agree in worshipping. But gradually they are coming to forsake this mixture of superstitions, and to unite in that one religion which seems more reasonable than any of the others. And there is no doubt that the other religions would have disappeared long ago, except for various unlucky accidents which befell certain Utopians who were thinking about changing their religion. All the others immediately construed these events as a sign of heavenly anger, not chance, as if the deity who was being abandoned were avenging an insult against himself.

But after they had heard from us the name of Christ, and learned of his teachings, his life, his miracles, and the no less marvelous devotion of the many martyrs who shed their blood to draw nations far and near into the Christian fellowship, you would not believe how they were impressed. Either through the mysterious inspiration of God, or because Christianity is very like the religion already prevailing among them, they were well disposed toward it from the start. But I think they were also much influenced by the fact that Christ had encouraged his disciples to practice community of goods, and that among the truest groups of Christians, the practice still prevails.⁹ Whatever the reason, no small number of them chose to join our communion, and received the holy water of baptism. By that time, two of our group had died, and among us four survivors there was, I am sorry to say, no priest; so, though they received instruction in other matters, they still lack those sacraments which in our religion can be administered only by priests. They do, however, understand what they are and earnestly desire them. In fact, they dispute vigorously among themselves whether a man chosen from among themselves could be considered a priest, even if not ordained by a Christian bishop. Though they seemed on the point of selecting such a person, they had not yet done so when I left.

8. The spirit of light in ancient Persian religion, which More could have learned about from reading Pico della Mirandola.

9. Many monastic orders of More's time abolished private property for their members.

Those who have not accepted Christianity make no effort to restrain others from it, nor do they criticize new converts to it. While I was there, only one of the Christians got into trouble with the law. As soon as he was baptized, he took on himself to preach the Christian religion publicly, with more zeal than discretion. We warned him not to do so, but he soon worked himself up to a pitch where he not only preferred our religion, but condemned all others as profane in themselves, leading their impious and sacrilegious followers to the hell-flames they richly deserved. After he had been going on in this style for a long time, they arrested him. He was tried, not on a charge of despising their religion, but of creating a public disorder, convicted and sentenced to exile. For it is one of their oldest institutions that no man's religion, as such, shall be held against him.

Even before he came to the island, King Utopus had heard that the inhabitants were continually quarreling over religious matters. In fact, he found it was easy to conquer the country because the different sects were too busy fighting one another to oppose him. As soon as he had gained the victory, therefore, he decreed that every man might cultivate the religion of his choice, and might proselytize for it, provided he did so quietly, modestly, rationally, and without bitterness toward others. If persuasions failed, no man was allowed to resort to abuse or violence, under penalty of exile or enslavement.

Utopus laid down these rules, not simply for the sake of peace, which he saw was in danger of being destroyed by constant quarrels and implacable hatred; but also for the sake of religion itself. In matters of religion, he was not at all quick to dogmatize, because he suspected that God perhaps likes various forms of worship and has therefore deliberately inspired different people with different views. On the other hand, he was quite sure that it was arrogant folly for anyone to enforce conformity with his own beliefs by means of threats or violence. He supposed that if one religion is really true and the rest false, that true one will prevail by its own natural strength, provided only that men consider the matter reasonably and moderately. But if they try to decide these matters by fighting and rioting, since the worst men are always the most headstrong, the best and holiest religion in the world will be crowded out by blind superstitions, like grain choked out of a field by thorns and briars. So he left the whole matter open, allowing each individual man to choose what he would believe. The only exception he made was a positive and strict law against any person who should sink so far below the dignity of human nature as to think that the soul perishes with the body, or that the universe is ruled by mere chance, rather than divine providence.

Thus the Utopians all believe that after this life vices are to be punished and virtue rewarded; and they consider that anyone who opposes this proposition is hardly a man, since he has degraded the sublimity of his own soul to the base level of a beast's wretched body. They will not even count him as one of their citizens, since he would undoubtedly betray all the laws and customs of society, if not prevented by fear. Who can doubt that a man who has nothing to fear but the law, and no hope of life beyond the grave, will do anything he can to evade his country's laws by craft or break them by violence, in order to gratify his own private greed? Therefore a man who holds such views is offered no honors, entrusted with no offices, and given no public responsibility; he is universally regarded as a low and sordid fellow. Yet they do not afflict him with punishments, because they are persuaded that no man can choose to believe by a mere act of the will. They do not compel him by threats to dissemble his views, nor do they tolerate in the matter any deceit or lying, which they detest as next door to deliberate malice. The man may not argue in the presence of the common people in behalf of his opinion; but in the presence of the priests and other important persons, they not only permit but encourage it. For they are confident that in the end his madness will yield to reason.

There are some others, in fact no small number of them, who err in the opposite direction, in supposing that animals too have immortal souls, though not comparable to ours in excellence, nor destined to equal felicity. These men are not thought to be evil, their opinion is not thought to be wholly unreasonable, and so they are not interfered with.

Almost all the Utopians are absolutely convinced that man's bliss after death will be enormous and eternal; thus they lament every man's sickness, but mourn over a death only if the man was torn from life anxiously and against his will. Such behavior they take to be a very bad sign, as if the soul, being in despair and conscious of guilt, dreaded death through a secret premonition of punishments to come. Besides, they suppose God can hardly be well pleased with the coming of one who, when he is summoned, does not come gladly, but is dragged off reluctantly and against his will. Such a death fills the onlookers with horror, and they carry away the corpse to the cemetery in melancholy silence. There, after begging God to have mercy on his spirit, and pardon his infirmities, they bury the unhappy man. But when a man dies blithely and full of good hope, they do not mourn for him, but carry the body cheerfully away, singing and commending the dead man's soul to God. They cremate him in a spirit more of reverence than of grief, and erect a tombstone on which the dead man's honors are inscribed. As they go home, they talk of his character and deeds, and no part of his life is mentioned more frequently or more gladly than his joyful death.

They think that recollecting the good qualities of a man helps the living to behave virtuously and is also the most acceptable form of honor to the dead. For they think that dead persons are actually present among us, and hear what we say about them, though through the dullness of human sight they are invisible to our eyes. Given their state of bliss, the dead must be able to travel freely where they please, and they are bound to want to revisit their friends, whom they loved and honored during their lives. Like all other good things, they think that after death freedom of motion is increased rather than decreased in all good men; and thus they believe the dead come frequently among the living, to observe their words and actions. Hence they go about their business the more confidently because of their trust in such protectors; and the belief that their forefathers are physically present keeps men from any secret dishonorable deed.

Fortune-telling and other vain forms of superstitious divination, such as other people take very seriously, they consider ridiculous and contemptible. But they venerate miracles which occur without the help of nature, considering them direct and visible manifestations of the divine power. Indeed, they report that miracles have frequently occurred in their country. Sometimes in great and dangerous crises they pray publicly for a miracle, which they then anticipate with great confidence, and obtain.

They think that the careful investigation of nature, and the sense of reverence arising from it, are acts of worship to God.

* * *

[CONCLUSION]

Now I have described to you as accurately as I could the structure of that commonwealth which I consider not only the best but the only one that can rightfully claim that name. In other places men talk very liberally of the common wealth, but what they mean is simply their own wealth; in Utopia, where there is no private business, every man zealously pursues the public business. And in both places, men are right to act as they do. For among us, even though the state may flourish, each man knows that unless he makes separate provision for himself, he may perfectly well die of hunger. Bitter necessity, then, forces men to look out for themselves rather than for others, that is, for the people. But in Utopia, where everything belongs to everybody, no man need fear that, so long as the public warehouses are filled, he will ever lack for anything he needs. Distribution is simply not one of their problems; in Utopia no men are poor, no men are beggars. Though no man owns anything, everyone is rich.

For what can be greater riches than for a man to live joyfully and peacefully, free from all anxieties, and without worries about making a living? No man is bothered by his wife's querulous complaints about money, no man fears poverty for his son, or struggles to scrape up a dowry for his daughter. Each man can feel secure of his own livelihood and happiness and of his whole family's as well: wife, sons, grandsons, great-grandsons, great-great-grandsons, and that whole long line of descendants that gentlefolk are so fond of contemplating. Indeed, even those who once worked but can do so no longer are cared for just as well as if they were still productive.

Let me now make bold to compare this justice of the Utopians with the so-called justice that prevails among other nations—among whom let me perish if I can discover the slightest scrap of justice or fairness. What kind of justice is it when a nobleman or a goldsmith¹ or a moneylender, or someone else who makes his living by doing either nothing at all or something completely useless to the public, gets to live a life of luxury and grandeur? In the meantime, a laborer, a carter, a carpenter, or a farmer works so hard and so constantly that even a beast of burden would perish under the load; and this work of theirs is so necessary that no commonwealth could survive a year without it. Yet they earn so meager a living and lead such miserable lives that a beast of burden would really be better off. Beasts do not have to work every minute, and their food is not much worse; in fact they like it better. And, besides, they do not have to worry about their future. But workingmen not only have to sweat and suffer without present reward, but agonize over the prospect of a penniless old age. Their daily wage is inadequate even for their present needs, so there is no possible chance of their saving toward the future.

Now isn't this an unjust and ungrateful commonwealth? It lavishes rich rewards on so-called gentry, bankers and goldsmiths and the rest of that crew, who don't work at all, are mere parasites, or purveyors of empty pleasures. And yet it makes no provision whatever for the welfare of farmers and colliers, laborers, carters, and carpenters, without whom the commonwealth would simply cease to exist. After the state has taken the labor of their best years, when they are worn out by age and sickness and utter destitution, then the thankless state, forgetting all their pains and services, throws them out to die a miserable death. What is worse, the rich constantly try to grind out of the poor part of their meager wages, not only by private swindling, but by public tax-laws. It is basically unjust that people who deserve most from the commonwealth should receive least. But now they have distorted and debased the right even further by giving their extortion the color of law; and thus they have palmed injustice off as "legal." When I run over in my mind the various commonwealths flourishing today, so help me God, I can see nothing in them but a conspiracy of the rich, who are fattening up their own interests under the name and title of the commonwealth. They invent ways and means to hang onto whatever they have acquired by sharp practice, and then they scheme to oppress the poor by buying up their toil and labor as cheaply as possible. These devices become law as soon as the rich, speaking through the commonwealth—which, of course, includes the poor as well—say they must be observed.

1. Banker.

And yet, when these insatiably greedy and evil men have divided among themselves goods which would have sufficed for the entire people, how far they remain from the happiness of the Utopians, who have abolished not only money but with it greed! What a mass of trouble was uprooted by that one step! What a multitude of crimes was pulled up by the roots! Everyone knows that if money were abolished, fraud, theft, robbery, quarrels, brawls, seditions, murders, treasons, poisonings, and a whole set of crimes which are avenged but not prevented by the hangman would at once die out. If money disappeared, so would fear, anxiety, worry, toil, and sleepless nights. Even poverty, which seems to need money more than anything else for its relief, would vanish if money were entirely done away with.

Consider if you will this example. Take a barren year of failed harvests, when many thousands of men have been carried off by hunger. If at the end of the famine the barns of the rich were searched, I dare say positively enough grain would be found in them to save the lives of all those who died from starvation and disease, if it had been divided equally among them. Nobody really need have suffered from a bad harvest at all. So easily might men get the necessities of life if that cursed money, which is supposed to provide access to them, were not in fact the chief barrier to our getting what we need to live. Even the rich, I'm sure, understand this. They must know that it's better to have enough of what we really need than an abundance of superfluities, much better to escape from our many present troubles than to be burdened with great masses of wealth. And in fact I have no doubt that every man's perception of where his true interest lies, along with the authority of Christ our Saviour (whose wisdom could not fail to recognize the best, and whose goodness would not fail to counsel it), would long ago have brought the whole world to adopt Utopian laws, if it were not for one single monster, the prime plague and begetter of all others—I mean Pride.

Pride measures her advantages not by what she has but by what other people lack. Pride would not condescend even to be made a goddess, if there were no wretches for her to sneer at and domineer over. Her good fortune is dazzling only by contrast with the miseries of others, her riches are valuable only as they torment and tantalize the poverty of others. Pride is a serpent from hell which twines itself around the hearts of men; and it acts like the suckfish² in holding them back from choosing a better way of life.

Pride is too deeply fixed in the hearts of men to be easily plucked out. So I am glad that the Utopians at least have been lucky enough to achieve this commonwealth, which I wish all mankind would imitate. The institutions they have adopted have made their community most happy, and as far as anyone can tell, capable of lasting forever. Now that they have rooted up the seeds of ambition and faction at home, along with most other vices, they are in no danger from internal strife, which at home has been the ruin of many other states that seemed secure. As long as they preserve harmony at home, and keep their institutions healthy, the Utopians can never be overcome or even shaken by their envious neighbors, who have often attempted their ruin, but always in vain.

When Raphael had finished his story, it seemed to me that not a few of the customs and laws he had described as existing among the Utopians were quite absurd. Their methods of waging war, their religious ceremonies, and their social customs were some of these, but my chief objection was to the basis of their whole system, that is, their communal living and their moneyless economy. This one thing alone takes away all the nobility, magnificence, splendor, and majesty which (in the popular view) are considered the true ornaments of any nation. But I saw Raphael was tired with talking, and I was not sure he could take contradiction in these matters, particularly when I remembered what he had said about certain councillors who were afraid they might not appear wise unless they found out something to criticize in other men's ideas.

So with praise for the Utopian way of life and his account of it, I took him by the hand and led him in to supper. But first I said that we would find some other time for thinking of these matters more deeply, and for talking them over in more detail. And I still hope such an opportunity will present itself some day.

2. The remora, which attaches itself by a suction cup to larger fish or ships. It was fabled to be strong enough to hold back a ship under sail.

Meanwhile, though he is a man of unquestioned learning, and highly experienced in the ways of the world, I cannot agree with everything he said. Yet I confess there are many things in the Commonwealth of Utopia which I wish our own country would imitate—though I don't really expect it will.

1514-16

1516

JOHN SKELTON (ca. 1460-1529)

According to one of the jest-book tales, John Skelton suddenly interrupted one of his sermons to ask the members of his congregation why they had complained that he kept a fair wench in the rectory. To be sure, he said, he did keep a fair wench; she was fairer than his parishioners' wives and had given him a son. Holding the child up naked before the congregation, he exclaimed, "How say you, neighbors all? Is not this child as fair as is the best of all yours? It hath nose, eyes, hands, and feet, as well as any of yours. It is not like a pig, nor a calf, nor like no foul nor no monstrous beast. If I had brought forth this child without arms or legs, or that it were deformed being a monstrous thing, I would never have blamed you to have complained to the Bishop of me, but to complain without a cause! I say as I said before, in my antetheme, vos estis, you be, and have been, and will and shall be knaves to complain of me without a cause reasonable."

Many and colorful were the stories circulated about the mad wag Skelton—who was also the major poet of the first quarter of the century, with the title of Poet Laureate from both Oxford and Cambridge. He was famous as a rhetorician and a translator, and he was also, for a time, tutor to the young Henry VIII. He took orders and, after writing The Bowge of Court (1498), a satire on courtiers and court life, retired about 1503, became rector of the parish church at Diss, in Norfolk. By 1512 he had returned to the court, appointed King's Orator. He moved to a house in the sanctuary of Westminster in 1518, and shortly thereafter began his vituperous attacks upon Cardinal Wolsey, the great prelate-statesman, including Speak, Parrot, Colin Clout, and Why Come Ye Not To Court? (1521-22). Wolsey had him imprisoned for a time but later released him.

While in retirement at Diss, he began to write poetry in a "plain style" that rejected ornate rhetorical devices and aureate language. His satires gain some of their most startling effects by mixing high and low styles. These "open satires," as they are called, are written in short rhymed lines that to the modern ear resemble doggerel, although something like this form was probably familiar enough to readers of medieval satire. A Skeltonic line may have from two to five beats, and the lines can keep on rhyming until the resources of the language give out. To many of his poems, particularly the satires, this strange meter is singularly appropriate. The Tunning of Elinour Rumming is, for example, a wonderfully disordered, clattering portrait of an alewife that reminds one of Brueghel's paintings in its realism, and the Skeltonics do much to contribute to the effect of disorder. The lines give the voice of the narrator of the satires a breathless urgency much admired by Robert Graves and W. H. Auden, among other modern poets. Skelton's satires draw upon a long tradition of medieval anti-clerical satire, but he brings a fresh voice to the genre.

Skelton's lyrics also partake of traditional medieval modes which the poet makes his own. To the three-part song Mannerly Margery, a traditional ballad of the clerk and the serving-maid, he gives an ironic ending. His rather salacious Lullay, Lullay is a parody on traditional lullabies in which the Virgin Mary rocks the Christ child in her lap. In an entirely different mood is the pleasant lyric in praise of Mistress Margaret Hussey. It is one of several which Skelton published in 1523 in The Garland of Laurel; in that work the poet is crowned with a laurel wreath by the Countess of Surrey and her ladies, and in gratitude he writes a poem to each of them. In his lyrics as well as his satires we hear a genuine music and find, as always, the impress of the distinctive character of their author.

From Colin Clout¹

	And if ye stand in doubt Who brought this rhyme about, My name is Colin Clout. I purpose to shake out
5	All my conning° bag, Like a clerkly hag. ² For though my rhyme be ragged, Tattered and jagged,	learning
10	Rudely rain-beaten, Rusty and moth-eaten, If ye take well therewith, It hath in it some pith. For, as far as I can see, It is wrong with each degree.
15	For the temporality° Accuseth the spirituality; The spirituality again Doth grudge and complain Upon the temporal men; Thus, each of other blother°	laymen
20	The one against the other. Alas, they make me shudder! For in hugger-mugger° The Church is put in fault; The prelates been so haut,° They say, and look so high	babble
25	As though they wouldé fly Above the starry sky.	haste haughty

1519

iambic trimeter

1. These are lines 47-74, comprising part of the introductory matter. Colin Clout, the narrator, here introduces the theme of the whole long poem, in the characteristically jagged Skeltonic line.

2. Old scholar.

Upon a Dead Man's Head

That was sent to him from an honorable gentlewoman for a token, Skelton, Laureate, devised this ghostly³ meditation in English covenable,⁴ in sentence, commendable, lamentable, lacrimable, profitable for the soul.

5	Your ugly token My mind hath broken From worldly lust; For I have discussed, We are but dust And die we must.
10	It is general To be mortal; I have well espied No man may him hide From Death hollow-eyed With sinews wyderéd° With bones shyderéd°,° With his worm-eaten maw And his ghastly jaw Gaping aside, Naked of hide, Neither flesh nor fell.°	withered shattered skin
20	Then, by my counsel Look that ye spell° Well this gospel, For whereso we dwell Death will us quell And with us mell.°	study mix
25	For all our pampered paunches There may no fraunchis° Nor worldly bliss Redeem us from this: Our days be dated To be checkmated With draughtes of death Stopping our breath; Our eyen° sinking, Our bodies stinking, Our gummes grinning, Our soules brinning.°	franchise eyes burning

3. Spiritual.

4. Suitable; "in sentence": in meaning.

To whom, then, shall we sue
 For to have rescue
 But to sweet Jesu
 40 On us then for to rue?
 O goodly child
 Of Mary mild
 Then be our shield,
 That we be not exiled
 45 To the dyne° dale dark
 Of bootless bale⁵
 Nor to the lake
 Of fiendes° black. devils

 But grant us grace
 50 To see thy face
 And to purchase
 Thine heavenly place
 And thy palace
 Full of solace
 55 Above the sky
 That is so high,
 Eternally
 To behold and see
 The Trinity.

Amen.

*Myrres vous y.*⁶

ca. 1498

Mannerly Margery Milk and Ale⁷

Aye, beshrew you, by my fay,⁸
 These wanton clerks be nice° alway, foolish
 Avaunt, avaunt, my popinjay!
 "What, will you do nothing but play?"
 5 Tilly vally straw, let be I say!
 Gup,⁹ Christian Clout, gup, Jack of the Vale!
 With Mannerly Margery milk and ale.

 "By God, ye be a pretty pode,° toad
 And I love you an whole cartload."
 10 Straw, James Foder, ye play the fode,° deceiver, seducer
 I am no hackney for your rod:° riding
 Go watch a bull, your back is broad!
 Gup, Christian Clout, gup, Jack of the Vale!
 With Mannerly Margery milk and ale.

5. Irremediable sorrow.

6. See yourself in it.

7. The clerk's lines are in quotation marks; Margery sings the rest, except the chorus lines, which are sung by a bass.

8. "Beshrew": curse (not used seriously); "fay": faith.

9. Contracted from "go up."

- 15 Ywis° ye deal uncourteously;
 What, would ye frumple° me? now fie! certainly
 "What, and ye shall not be my pigsny?"° rumple, tumble
 By Christ, ye shall not, no hardily: darling
 I will not be japped° bodily! tricked, deceived
 20 Gup, Christian Clout, gup, Jack of the Vale!
 With Mannerly Margery milk and ale.
 "Walk forth your way, ye cost me naught;
 Now have I found that I have sought:
 The best cheap flesh that ever I bought."
 25 Yet, for his love that hath all wrought,
 Wed me, or else I die for thought.
 Gup, Christian Clout, your breath is stale!
 Go, Mannerly Margery milk and ale!
 Gup, Christian Clout, gup, Jack of the Vale!
 30 With Mannerly Margery milk and ale.
 ca. 1510 1523

Lullay, Lullay, Like a Child

- With lullay, lullay, like a child,
 Thou sleepest too long, thou art beguiled.° deceived
 "My darling dear, my daisy flower,
 Let me," quod° he, "lie in your lap." quoth
 5 "Lie still," quod she, "my paramour,
 Lie still, hardily,° and take a nap." confidently
 His head was heavy, such was his hap,
 All drowsy dreaming, drowned in sleep,
 That of his love he took no keep.
 10 With hey, lullay, lullay, like a child,
 Thou sleepest too long, thou art beguiled.
 With ba, ba, ba!¹ and bas, bas, bas!
 She cherished him, both cheek and chin,
 That he wist never where he was,
 15 He had forgotten all deadly sin.
 He wanted wit her love to win,
 He trusted her payment and lost all his pay;
 She left him sleeping and stale° away, stole
 With hey, lullay, lullay, like a child,
 20 Thou sleepest too long, thou art beguiled.
 The rivers rough, the waters wan,
 She sparéd not to wet her feet;
 She waded over, she found a man
 That halséd° her heartily and kissed her sweet— embraced
 25 Thus after her cold she caught a heat.

1. The "by" of lullaby; "bas, bas, bas": kiss, kiss, kiss.

"My lief," she said, "routeth² in his bed; Ywis[°] he hath an heavy head." certainly
With hey, lullay, lullay, like a child,
Thou sleepest too long, thou are beguiled.

30 What dreamest thou, drunkard, drowsy pate?
Thy lust and liking is from thee gone.
Thou blinkard blowboll,³ thou wakest too late.
Behold thou liest, luggard,[°] alone! sluggard
Well may thou sigh, well may thou groan,
35 To deal with her so cowardly.
Ywis, pole-hatchet,[°] she bleared thine eye. barfly

1490-1503

To Mistress Margaret Hussey

Merry Margaret,
As midsummer flower,
Gentle as falcon
Or hawk of the tower;¹
5 With solace and gladness,
Much mirth and no madness,
All good and no badness;
So joyously,
So maidenly,
10 So womanly
Her demeaning
In every thing,
Far, far passing
That I can endite,²
15 Or suffice to write
Of merry Margaret
As midsummer flower,
Gentle as falcon
Or hawk of the tower.
20 As patient and as still
And as full of good will
As fair Isaphill;³
Colyander,
Sweet pomander,⁴
25 Good Cassander;⁵

2. My lover snores.

3. Blink-eyed drunkard.

1. "Falcon-gentle" was the term applied to the female and young of the goshawk; a "hawk of the tower" was one that towered aloft, sailing high in the air before swooping on its prey.

2. I.e., surpassing anything that I can compose.

3. Hyppipyle, Queen of Lemnos, famous for her devotion to her father and to her children.

4. Colyander or coriander was an herb supposed to soothe pain; like sweet pomander, it had a pleasant odor.

5. The beautiful daughter of Priam of Troy; she could prophesy accurately but no one believed her prophecies. This did not discourage her; she is preeminently "steadfast of thought" (line 26).

30

Steadfast of thought,
 Well made, well wrought,
 Far may be sought
 Ere that ye can find
 So courteous, so kind
 As merry Margaret,
 This midsummer flower,
 Gentle as falcon
 Or hawk of the tower.

1523

SIR THOMAS WYATT THE ELDER

(1503-1542)

Wyatt was born at Allington Castle in Kent, and educated at St. John's College, Cambridge. He spent most of his life as a courtier and diplomat, serving King Henry VIII as Clerk of the King's Jewels and as ambassador to Spain and to the Emperor Charles V. He was also a member of various missions to France and Italy. He spent much of his adult life abroad; his interest in foreign literature, especially Italian, is evident from his translations and imitations of poems by the Italian sonneteers Petrarch, Sannazaro, Alamanni, and others. The life of a courtier under Henry VIII was not a calm life: Wyatt was twice arrested and imprisoned, once in 1536, after a quarrel with the Duke of Suffolk, and again in 1541, when he was charged with treason, lodged in the Tower of London, and stripped of all his property. On both occasions he was fortunate enough to regain the king's favor and receive a pardon. His praise of quiet retired life in the country and the cynical comments about foreign courts in his verse epistle to John Poina derive from his own experience.

For all his travel abroad, Wyatt remained essentially an Englishman. His poetry includes not only the sonnets, based upon Italian models, but also many delightful lyrics with short stanzas and refrains in the manner of the native English "ballet" (pronounced to rhyme with mallet) or dance-song. Wyatt's own temperament and disposition show more clearly in these English poems than in the sonnets. The lover in the Petrarchan sonnet is usually in a mood of doleful despair; the typical poem is essentially a complaint, though the interest lies in following the elaborately worked out "conceits" or comparisons. The lover is abject, he is the lady's slave; her coldness is a perpetual torture to him. In the ballets, however, a rather gay, manly independence is the characteristic note.

The sonnet, a 14-line poem with a complicated rhyme scheme, was introduced into English by Wyatt. He took his subject matter from Petrarch's sonnets, for the most part, but his rhyme schemes came from other Italian models. The most common rhyme scheme in Wyatt's sonnets is abba abba cddc ee; the usual Italian structure of an octave (first eight lines) followed after a turn in the sense by a sestet (last six lines) was already beginning to break down into the "English" structure for the sonnet, three quatrains and a couplet.

Although Wyatt intended to publish a collection of his poems, he never did so. In fact, very little of his verse was published until after his death. In aristocratic circles poems circulated in manuscript and were copied by hand; the general public usually saw courtiers' poems only when some enterprising publisher acquired manuscripts, perhaps already formed into a collection, and printed them as a miscellany. An early volume of this sort, called The Court of Venus, published a few Wyatt poems before 1540. A dozen such collections were published during the second half of the 16th century, with titles like A Paradise of Dainty Devices, A Handful of Pleasant Delights, and A Gorgeous Gallery of Gallant Inventions. By far the most important of these miscellanies was issued by the printer Richard Tottel in 1557 (15 years after Wyatt's death) with the title Songs and Sonnets written by the Right Honorable Lord Henry Howard late Earl of Surrey and other. Until modern times it was always called simply Songs and Sonnets (Shakespeare has his Master Slender in The Merry Wives of Windsor say "I had rather than forty shillings I had my book of Songs and Sonnets here"); but now it is always referred to as Tottel's Miscellany. The printer, Richard Tottel, addressed the reader in an interesting epistle:

That to have well written in verse, yea and in small parcels, deserveth great praise, the works of divers Latins, Italians and other do prove sufficiently. That our tongue is able in that kind to do as praiseworthy as the rest, the honorable style of the noble Earl of Surrey and the weightiness of the deep-witted Sir Thomas Wyatt the Elder's verse, with several graces in sundry good English writers, do show abundantly. It resteth now, gentle reader, that thou think it not ill done to publish, to the honor of the English tongue, and for profit of the studious of English eloquence, those works which the ungentle hoarders up of such treasure have heretofore envied thee. And for this point, good reader, thine own profit and pleasure in these presently, and moe hereafter, shall answer for my defence. If perhaps some mislike the stateliness of style, removed from the rude skill of common ears, I ask help of the learned to defend their learned friends, the authors of this work. And I exhort the unlearned, by reading to be more skilfull, and to purge that swinelike grossness that maketh the sweet marjoram not to smell to their delight.

The anthology includes 271 poems—97 attributed to Wyatt, 40 to Surrey, 40 to Nicholas Grimald, and 94 to "Uncertain Authors." It is surely one of the most important books in the history of English literature, for it was the channel through which the main currents of European Renaissance poetry flowed into the British Isles. In it the sonnet, blank verse, terza rima, ottava rima, rondeau, and other forms were naturalized into English, and suddenly the ragged, undisciplined, pedestrian verse of the first part of the century became antiquated. When Wyatt was a boy it was possible for Alexander Barclay, an ambitious and by no means uneducated poet, to write verse like this:

The famous poets with the muses nine
With wit inspired, fresh, pregnant and divine,
Say boldly endite in style substantial;
Some in poems high and historical,
Some them delight in heavy tragedies
And some in wanton or merry comedies.

Wyatt was not primarily concerned with regularity of accent and smoothness of rhythm. By the time Tottel's Miscellany was published, Wyatt's rather rough and vigorous metrical practice was felt to be crude, and Tottel's editor smoothed out the versification. We reprint They Flee from Me in the versions of the Egerton manuscript and of Tottel. The Egerton manuscript (E. MS.) contains poems in Wyatt's own hand and corrections in his hand of scribal texts. The Devonshire manuscript (D. MS.) was not apparently in the poet's possession, but some of its texts seem earlier than Egerton's and it furnishes additional poems.

The Long Love That in My Thought Doth Harbor¹

Sonnet, iambic pent

The long love that in my thought doth harbor,
And in my heart doth keep his residence,
Into my face presseth with bold pretense
And therein campeth, spreading his banner.²
She that me learneth to love and suffer
And wills that my trust and lust's negligence³
Be reined by reason, shame, and reverence
With his hardiness taketh displeasure.
Wherewithal unto the heart's forest he fleeth,
Leaving his enterprise with pain and cry,
And there him hideth, and not appeareth.
What may I do, when my master feareth,
But in the field with him to live and die?
For good is the life ending faithfully.

A
B
B
A
A
B
B
A
C
C
C
D
E
D
E. MS.

Themes

Personification of love
Metaphor love, blush, heart

Farewell, Love

Consonance

Farewell, Love, and all thy laws forever,
Thy baited hooks shall tangle me no more;
Senec and Plato call me from thy lore,
To perfect wealth my wit for to endeavor.⁴
In blind error when I did persever,
Thy sharp repulse, that pricketh aye so sore,
Hath taught me to set in trifles no store

5

1. Wyatt's version of Petrarch's Sonnetto in Vita 91; his younger friend, the Earl of Surrey, also translated it (see Love, That Doth Reign and Live Within My Thought).

2. I.e., the poet's blush. The first four lines of this sonnet contain the "conceit" (or elaborately sustained metaphor) of love as a kind of warrior who "harbors" in the speaker's thought, lives in his heart, and occasionally invades his face "with bold pretense" (i.e., making bold claim). He flaunts his warlike presence by means of the "banner." Elaborate metaphors of this kind are found often in Elizabethan love poetry; sometimes an entire sonnet will turn on one conceit. "Learns" teaches.

3. I.e., my open and careless revelation of my love. "Shame": modesty, shamefastness.

4. I.e., "Senec" (Seneca, the Roman moral philosopher and tragedian) and Plato call him to educate his mind to perfect well-being ("wealth").

And 'scape forth since liberty is lever.⁵
 Therefore farewell, go trouble younger hearts,
 And in me claim no more authority;
 With idle youth go use thy property,
 And thereon spend thy many brittle darts.
 For hitherto though I have lost all my time,
 Me lusteth⁶ no longer rotten boughs to climb.

Synecdoche
10

Cupid metaphor
E. MS.

My Galley⁷

My galley chargéd with forgetfulness
 Thorough⁸ sharp seas, in winter nights doth pass
 'Tween rock and rock; and eke⁹ mine enemy, alas, also/Satan
 That is my lord, steereth with cruelty,
 And every oar a thought in readiness, 5
 As though that death were light in such a case.¹
 An endless wind doth tear the sail apace
 Of forced sighs and trusty fearfulness.²
 A rain of tears, a cloud of dark disdain,
 Hath done the wearied cords great hinderance; 10
 Wreathéd with error and eke with ignorance.
 The stars be hid that led me to this pain.
 Drownéd is reason that should me consort,³
 And I remain despairing of the port.

E. MS.

Madam, Withouten Many Words

Madam, withouten many words,
 Once⁴ I am sure ye will or no,
 And if ye will, then leave your bordes,⁵
 And use your wit and show it so.

And with a beck ye shall me call,
 And if of one that burneth alway
 Ye have any pity at all,
 Answer him fair with yea or nay. 5

If it be yea I shall be fain,
 If it be nay, friends as before;
 Ye shall another man obtain
 And I mine own and yours no more. 10

E. MS.

5. More pleasing, dearer.

6. I care.

7. Translated from Petrarch, Sonnetto in Vita 137.

8. Through.

9. Also.

1. As though my destruction wouldn't matter much.

2. Fear to trust.

3. Accompany.

4. Sometime.

5. Jest.

Whoso List to Hunt¹ Not a sonnet

Whoso list² to hunt, I know where is an hind,
 But as for me, alas, I may no more.
 The vain travail hath wearied me so sore
 I am of them that farthest cometh behind.
 Yet may I, by no means, my wearied mind
 Draw from the deer, but as she fleeth afore, Fainting I follow. I leave off therefore,
 Since in a net I seek to hold the wind.
 Who list her hunt, I put him out of doubt,
 As well as I, may spend his time in vain.
 And graven with diamonds in letters plain
 There is written, her fair neck round about,
 "Noli me tangere, for Caesar's I am,
 And wild for to hold, though I seem tame."

5

10

E. MS.

My Lute, Awake!

My lute, awake! Perform the last
 Labor that thou and I shall waste,
 And end that I have now begun;
 For when this song is sung and past,
 My lute, be still, for I have done.

5

As to be heard where ear is none,
 As lead to grave in marble stone³
 My song may pierce her heart as soon.
 Should we then sigh or sing or moan?
 No, no, my lute, for I have done.

10

The rocks do not so cruelly
 Repulse the waves continually
 As she my suit and affection.
 So that I am past remedy,
 Whereby my lute and I have done.

15

Proud of the spoil that thou hast got
 Of simple hearts, thorough love's shot;
 By whom, unkind, thou hast them won,
 Think not he hath his bow forgot,
 Although my lute and I have done.

20

1. An adaptation of Petrarch, Rime 190, perhaps influenced by commentators on Petrarch, who said that Noli me tangere quia Caesaris sum ("Touch me not, for I am Caesar's") was inscribed on the collars of Caesar's hinds which were then set free and were presumably safe from hunters. Wyatt's sonnet is usually supposed to refer to Anne Boleyn, in whom Henry VIII became interested in 1526.

2. Cares.

3. I.e., when sound may be heard with no ear to hear it, or when soft lead is able to carve ("grave") hard marble.

hyperbole

Vengeance shall fall on thy disdain
That makest but game on earnest pain.
Think not alone under the sun
Unquit ⁴ to cause thy lovers plain,
Although my lute and I have done.

25

Perchance thee lie withered and old
The winter nights that are so cold,
Plaining in vain unto the moon.
Thy wishes then dare not be told.
Care then who list, ⁵ for I have done.

30

And then may chance thee to repent
The time that thou hast lost and spent
To cause thy lovers sigh and swoon.
Then shalt thou know beauty but lent,
And wish and want as I have done.

35

Now cease, my lute. This is the last
Labor that thou and I shall waste,
And ended is that we begun.
Now is this song both sung and past;
My lute, be still, for I have done.

40

E. MS.

They Flee from Me

^{women as wild animals}
They flee from me, that sometime did me seek,
With naked foot stalking in my chamber.
I have seen them, gentle, tame, and meek,
That now are wild, and do not remember
That sometime they put themselves in danger
To take bread at my hand; and now they range,
Busily seeking with a continual change.

A
B
A
B
C
C
5
} septet

Thankéd be fortune it hath been otherwise,
Twenty times better; but once in special,
In thin array, after a pleasant guise,
When her loose gown from her shoulders did fall, ¹⁰ VISUAL
And she me caught in her arms long and small,¹
Therewithall sweetly did me kiss
And softly said, "Dear heart, how like you this?"

It was no dream, I lay broad waking.
But all is turned, thorough my gentleness,
Into a strange fashion of forsaking;
And I have leave to go, of her goodness,

15

verbal irony

4. Unrevenged. "Plain": to complain. 1. Slender.

5. Likes.

And she also to use newfangelness.²
 But since that I so kindly³ am servéd,
 I fain would know what she hath deservéd.

verbally / irony 20

E. MS.

The Lover Showeth How He Is Forsaken of Such as He Sometime Enjoyed

They flee from me, that sometime did me seek
 With naked foot stalking within my chamber.
 Once have I seen them gentle, tame, and meek
 That now are wild, and do not once remember
 That sometime they have put themselves in danger
 To take bread at my hand, and now they range,
 Busily seeking in continual change.

5

Thankéd be fortune, it hath been otherwise,
 Twenty times better; but once especial,
 In thin array, after a pleasant guise,
 When her loose gown did from her shoulders fall,
 And she me caught in her arms long and small,
 And therewithal, so sweetly did me kiss
 And softly said, "Dear heart, how like you this?"

10

It was no dream, for I lay broad awaking.
 But all is turned now, through my gentleness,
 Into a bitter fashion of forsaking.
 And I have leave to go, of her goodness,
 And she also to use newfangelness.
 But since that I unkindly so am servéd,
 How like you this, what hath she now deservéd?

15

20

Tottel, 1557

Divers Doth Use

Divers doth use, as I have heard and know,
 When that to change their ladies do begin,
 To mourne and wail, and never for to lin,⁴
 Hoping thereby to pease⁵ their painful woe.
 And some there be, that when it chanceth so
 That women change and hate where love hath been,
 They call them false and think with words to win
 The hearts of them which elsewhere doth grow.
 But as for me, though that by chance indeed
 Change hath outworn the favor that I had,
 I will not wail, lament, nor yet be sad,

5

10

2. Fickleness.

3. Naturally, but with an ironic suggestion of the modern meaning of "kindly."

4. Cease.

5. Appease, relieve.

Nor call her false that falsely did me feed,
But let it pass, and think it is of kind ⁶
That often change doth please a woman's mind.

D. MS.

Tangled I Was in Love's Snare

Tangled I was in love's snare,
Oppressed with pain, torment with care,
Of grief right sure, of joy full bare,
Clean in despair by cruelty—
But ha! ha! ha! full well is me, 5
For I am now at liberty.

The woeful day so full of pain,
The weary night all spent in vain,
The labor lost for so small gain,
To write them all it will not be. 10
But ha! ha! ha! full well is me,
For I am now at liberty.

Everything that fair doth show,
When proof is made it proveth not so,
But turneth mirth to bitter woe;
Which in this case full well I see. 15
But ha! ha! ha! full well is me,
For I am now at liberty.

Too great desire was my guide
And wanton will went by my side;
Hope ruléd still, and made me bide 20
Of love's craft th' extremity.
But ha! ha! ha! full well is me,
For I am now at liberty.

With feigné words which were but wind 25
To long delays I was assigned;
Her wily looks my wits did blind;
Thus as she would I did agree.
But ha! ha! ha! full well is me,
For I am now at liberty. 30

Was never bird tangled in lime ⁷
That brake away in better time
Than I, that rotten boughs did climb,
And had no hurt, but 'scapéd free.
Now ha! ha! ha! full well is me, 35
For I am now at liberty.

1557

6. Nature.

7. A sticky substance made from holly bark, used to catch small birds.

In Spain

Tagus,⁸ Farewell, that westward with thy streams
 Turns up the grains of gold already tried;
 With spur and sail for I go seek the Thames,
 Gainward⁹ the sun, that showeth her wealthy pride;
 And to the town which Brutus¹ sought by dreams, 5
 Like bended moon² doth lend her lusty side,
 My king, my country, alone for whom I live—
 Of mighty Love the wings for this me give!

E. MS.

Mine Own John Pains¹

Mine own John Pains, since ye delight to know
 The cause why that homeward I me draw,
 And flee the press of courts, whereso they go,
 Rather than to live thrall, under the awe
 Of lordly looks, wrapped within my cloak, 5
 To will and lust² learning to set a law;
 It is not for because I scorn and mock
 The power of them to whom Fortune hath lent
 Charge over us, of right to strike the stroke.³
 But true it is that I have always meant 10
 Less to esteem them than the common sort,
 Of outward things that judge in their intent
 Without regard what doth inward resort.
 I grant sometime that of glory the fire
 Doth touch my heart; me list not to report 15
 Blame by honor, and honor to desire.⁴
 But how may I this honor now attain
 That cannot dye the color black a liar?
 My Pains, I cannot frame me tune to feign,
 To cloak the truth, for praise without desert, 20
 Of them that list all vice for to retain.
 I cannot honor them that sets their part

8. The Tagus River flows through Spain and Portugal. The poem was written at the poet's departure from Spain in 1539.

9. Toward.

1. The legendary founder of London, after whom Britain was supposedly named.

2. Crescent moon.

3. A friend of Wyatt's. This verse epistle of informal satire is based upon the tenth satire of the Italian Luigi Alamanni, but personalized and Anglicized in detail by Wyatt. It was apparently written during Wyatt's banishment from court in 1536. Lines 1-51 of the poem are from the Devonshire manuscript, lines 52-103 from the Egerton manuscript.

2. Pleasure.

3. I.e., my retirement from court is not because I scorn great and powerful princes. But (lines 10-13) I esteem them less than do the "common sort" of people, who judge by externals only.

4. I.e., I do not wish to attack honor, nor to call dishonorable desire honorable.

With Venus and Bacchus all their life long;⁵
 Nor hold my peace of them, although I smart.
 I cannot crouch nor kneel to do so great a wrong, 25
 To worship them like God on earth alone,
 That are as wolves these sely⁶ lambs among.
 I cannot with my words complain and moan
 Nor suffer naught, nor smart without complaint,
 Nor turn the word that from my mouth is gone; 30
 I cannot speak and look like a saint,
 Use wiles for wit, or make deceit a pleasure;
 And call craft counsel, for profit still to paint;
 I cannot wrest the law to fill the coffer,
 With innocent blood to feed myself fat, 35
 And do most hurt where most help I offer.
 I am not he that can allow the state
 Of high Caesar, and damn Cato⁷ to die,
 That with his death did 'scape out of the gate
 From Caesar's hands, if Livy⁸ do not lie, 40
 And would not live where liberty was lost,
 So did his heart the common weal⁹ apply.
 I am not he, such eloquence to boast
 To make the crow in singing as the swan,
 Nor call the lion of coward beasts the most, 45
 That cannot take a mouse as the cat can;
 And he that dieth of hunger of the gold,
 Call him Alexander,¹ and say that Pan
 Passeth Apollo in music manifold;²
 Praise Sir Thopas for a noble tale, 50
 And scorn the story that the Knight told;³
 Praise him for counsel that is drunk of ale;
 Grin when he laugheth that beareth all the sway,
 Frown when he frowneth, and groan when he is pale;
 On others' lust to hang both night and day— 55
 None of these points would ever frame in me;
 My wit is naught: I cannot learn the way;
 And much the less of things that greater be
 That asken help of colors of device⁴
 To join the mean with each extremity. 60
 With nearest virtue to cloak alway the vice,
 And as to purpose, likewise it shall fall

5. I.e., I cannot honor those who devote themselves to Venus (goddess of love-making) and Bacchus (god of drinking).

6. Innocent.

7. Cato the Younger, the famous Roman patriot who committed suicide rather than submit to Caesar.

8. Titus Livius (59 B.C.—A.D. 17), the great Roman historian.

9. The common good, or the state.

1. Alexander yearned for more worlds to conquer.

2. Pan's music was simple and rustic, played on "Pan's pipes."

3. The silly tale of Sir Thopas, in Chaucer's Canterbury Tales, is told by Chaucer himself, until the Host forces him to stop. The Knight's Tale is the most courtly and dignified of the tales.

4. Tricks of rhetoric.

To press the virtue that it may not rise;
 As drunkenness, good fellowship to call;
 The friendly foe, with his double face, 65
 Say he is gentle and courteous therewithal;
 And say that favel^b hath a goodly grace
 In eloquence; and cruelty to name
 Zeal of justice, and change in time and place;
 And he that suff'reth offense without blame, 70
 Call him pitiful, and him true and plain
 That railleth reckless to every man's shame,
 Say he is rude that cannot lie and feign,
 The lecher a lover, and tyranny
 To be the right of a prince's reign. 75
 I cannot, I: no, no, it will not be.
 This is the cause that I could never yet
 Hang on their sleeves, that weigh, as thou mayst see,
 A chip of chance more than a pound of wit.
 This maketh me at home to hunt and hawk, 80
 And in foul weather at my book to sit,
 In frost and snow then with my bow to stalk.
 No man doth mark whereso I ride or go.
 In lusty leas^c at liberty I walk,
 And of these news I feel nor weal nor woe, 85
 Save that a clog doth hang yet at my heel.⁷
 No force for that, for it is ordered so
 That I may leap both hedge and dike full well;
 I am not now in France, to judge the wine,
 With sav'ry sauce those delicates⁸ to feel; 90
 Nor yet in Spain, where one must him incline,
 Rather than to be, outwardly to seem.
 I meddle not with wits that be so fine;
 Nor Flanders' cheer⁹ letteth not my sight to deem
 Of black and white, nor taketh my wit away 95
 With beastliness, they beasts do so esteem.
 Nor am I not where Christ is given in prey
 For money, poison, and treason—at Rome¹
 A common practice, used night and day.
 But here I am in Kent and Christendom, 100
 Among the Muses, where I read and rhyme;
 Where, if thou list, my Poins, for to come,
 Thou shalt be judge how I do spend my time.

E. MS.

5. Flattery.

6. Pleasant fields.

7. "I feel neither happiness nor unhappiness about current political affairs, except that a 'clog' (i.e., his confinement on parole to his estate) keeps me from traveling far." Note that "news" is a plural in Elizabethan English. "No force": no matter.

8. Delicacies.

9. I.e., the drinking for which Flemings were notorious in the 16th century; "letteth": hinders, prevents.

1. In Tottel's Miscellany, published in the reign of the Catholic Queen Mary, these lines were altered as follows: "where truth is given in prey / For money, poison and treason; of some."

HENRY HOWARD, EARL OF SURREY

(1517-1547)

Surrey was the eldest son of the Duke of Norfolk, who was the premier English nobleman and the chief bulwark of the old aristocracy against the rising tide of "new men" and the Reformed religion. Surrey was descended from kings on both sides of his family; he was brought up with Henry VIII's illegitimate son, the Duke of Richmond, who married Surrey's sister. Some stories indicate that Surrey was a proud, high-spirited youth, not above wandering about the streets at night, in the company of Sir Thomas Wyatt's son, using stone-bows to break the windows of sober sleeping citizens. Surrey, like his father and grandfather, was an able soldier, and the Howards were called upon whenever military brilliance was needed. But their fortunes at court depended upon Henry's queens; the Howards were in high favor when Surrey's cousin, Catherine Howard, was queen, but they were low on Fortune's wheel when the queen was Jane Seymour, the mother of the future king.

Surrey's importance and interest as a poet depend upon his continuing the practice of the sonnet in English as instituted by Wyatt and establishing a form for it which was used by Shakespeare and has become known as the "English" sonnet form: three quatrains and a couplet, rhyming abab cdcd efef gg. Even more significantly, he was the first English poet to publish in blank verse—unrhymed iambic pentameter—a verse form that has so flourished in the succeeding four centuries that it seems almost indigenous to the language. The work in which he used this "strange meter," as the publisher called it, was a translation of part of Virgil's Aeneid. Book IV was published in 1554 and Book II in 1557. A brief sample from Book II introduces Aeneas about to tell Dido and her court the story of the fall of Troy:

They whisted [quieted down] all, with fixed face attent,
When Prince Aeneas from the royal seat
Thus gan to speak: "O Queen, it is thy will
I should renew a woe cannot be told,
How that the Greeks did spoil and overthrow
The Phrygian wealth and wailful realm of Troy,
Those ruthful [pitiful] things that I myself beheld,
And whereof no small part fell to my share,
Which to express, who could refrain from tears?"

Surrey was a courtier poet, interested in circulating his poems in manuscript in aristocratic court circles. His friends would have read with interest his poem about being imprisoned in Windsor Castle, where he had spent his boyhood under happier circumstances. He did publish his Epitaph on Wyatt, but the bulk of his poetry first appeared in Tottel's Miscellany, ten years after his death.

Surrey shows a more regular maintenance of normal accent than Wyatt, and he is often more fluent and musical. His poetic diction is clear and consistent, and in many ways Surrey indicates the direction in which the main stream of English verse will flow. Yet he often seems less vivid and vigorous than Wyatt, and he perhaps takes the figurative language he uses less seriously.

Love, That Doth Reign and Live Within My Thought¹

Love, that doth reign and live within my thought,
And built his seat within my captive breast,
Clad in the arms wherein with me he fought,
Oft in my face he doth his banner rest.
But she that taught me love and suffer pain, 5
My doubtful hope and eke² my hot desire
With shamefast look to shadow and refrain,
Her smiling grace converteth straight to ire.
And coward Love, then, to the heart apace
Taketh his flight, where he doth lurk and plain,³ 10
His purpose lost, and dare not show his face.
For my lord's guilt thus faultless bide I pain,
Yet from my lord shall not my foot remove:
Sweet is the death that taketh end by love.

1557

The Soote Season⁴

The soote season, that bud and bloom forth brings,
With green hath clad the hill and eke the vale;
The nightingale with feathers new she sings;
The turtle to her make⁵ hath told her tale.
Summer is come, for every spray now springs; 5
The hart hath hung his old head on the pale;
The buck in brake his winter coat he flings,
The fishes float with new repaired scale;
The adder all her slough away she slings,
The swift swallow pursueth the flies small; 10
The busy bee her honey now she mings.⁶
Winter is worn, that was the flowers' bale.⁷
And thus I see among these pleasant things,
Each care decays, and yet my sorrow springs.

1557

1. Compare this version of Petrarch's Sonnetto in Vita 91 with Wyatt's translation of the same original (The Long Love That in My Thought Doth Harbor, printed earlier in this anthology).

2. Also; "shamefast": modest.

3. Complain.

4. In this adaptation from Petrarch's

Sonnetto in Morte 42, Surrey has changed the details of nature from Italian to English. Note that the sonnet has only two rhymes. "Soote": sweet, fragrant.

5. Turtledove to her mate.

6. Mingles.

7. Harm.

Alas! So All Things Now Do Hold Their Peace^{7a}

Alas! so all things now do hold their peace,
 Heaven and earth disturbéd in no thing;
 The beasts, the air, the birds their song do cease,
 The nightés chare⁸ the stars about doth bring.
 Calm is the sea, the waves work less and less; 5
 So am not I, whom love, alas, doth wring,
 Bringing before my face the great increase
 Of my desires, whereat I weep and sing,
 In joy and woe, as in a doubtful ease.
 For my sweet thoughts sometime do pleasure bring, 10
 But by and by the cause of my disease⁹
 Gives me a pang that inwardly doth sting,
 When that I think what grief it is again
 To live and lack the thing should rid my pain.

1557

Give Place, Ye Lovers, Here Before

Give place, ye lovers, here before
 That spent your boasts and brags in vain;
 My lady's beauty passeth more
 The best of yours, I dare well sayn¹
 Than doth the sun the candlelight, 5
 Or brightest day the darkest night,

And thereto hath a troth as just²
 As had Penelope the fair,
 For what she saith, ye may it trust
 As it by writing sealéd were, 10
 And virtues hath she many moe
 Than I with pen have skill to show.

I could rehearse, if that I wold,³
 The whole effect of Nature's plaint,
 When she had lost the perfect mold 15
 The like to whom she could not paint;
 With wringing hands how she did cry
 And what she said, I know it, I.

I know she swore, with raging mind,
 Her kingdom only set apart, 20

7a. Translated from Petrarch's Sonnetto in Vita 113.

8. From Italian carro (the Great Bear).

9. Dis-ease, i.e., discomfort.

1. Say.

2. Constancy as firm.

3. Would.

There was no loss, by law of kind,⁴
 That could have gone so near her heart;
 And this was chiefly all her pain:
 She could not make the like again.

Sith ⁵ nature thus gave her the praise
 To be the chiefest work she wrought,
 In faith, methinks some better ways
 On your behalf might well be sought
 Than to compare, as ye have done,
 To match the candle with the sun.

25

30

1557

My Friend, the Things That Do Attain⁶

My friend, the things that do attain
 The happy life be these, I find:
 The riches left, not got with pain;
 The fruitful ground; the quiet mind;

The equal friend; no grudge, no strife;
 No charge of rule, nor governance;
 Without disease, the healthy life;
 The household of continuance;

5

The mean diet, no dainty fare;
 Wisdom joined with simpleness;
 The night discharged of all care,
 Where wine the wit may not oppress:

10

The faithful wife, without debate;
 Such sleeps as may beguile the night;
 Content thyself with thine estate,
 Neither wish death, nor fear his might.

15

1547

Epitaph on Sir Thomas Wyatt Elegy

Wyatt resteth here, that quick¹ could never rest,
 Whose heavenly gifts, increased by disdain²
 And virtue, sank the deeper in his breast:
 Such profit he of envy could obtain.

4. Nature.

5. Since.

6. A translation of an epigram by the Latin poet Martial (X.47). The theme, a glorification of "the mean estate," is very common in Elizabethan literature.

1. Alive.

2. Hostility (equivalent to "envy" in line 4). I.e., he could turn hostility toward him to his advantage.

A head where wisdom mysteries³ did frame, 5
Whose hammers beat still in that lively brain
As on a stithy,⁴ where some work of fame
Was daily wrought to turn to Britain's gain.

A visage stern and mild, where both did grow
Vice to condemn, in virtues to rejoice; 10
Amid great storms whom grace assured so
To live upright and smile at fortune's choice.

A hand that taught what may be said in rhyme,
That reft⁵ Chaucer the glory of his wit—
A mark the which, unperfected for time, 15
Some may approach but never none shall hit.

A tongue that served in foreign realms his king,
Whose courteous talk to virtue did inflame
Each noble heart: a worthy guide to bring
Our English youth by travail unto fame. 20

An eye whose judgment no affect⁶ could blind,
Friends to allure and foes to reconcile,
Whose piercing look did represent a mind
With virtue fraught, reposed, void of guile.

A heart where dread yet never so impressed 25
To hide the thought that might the truth advance;
In neither fortune lift⁷ nor yet repressed
To swell in wealth or yield unto mischance. Antithesis, is a Colon?

A valiant corpse⁸ where force and beauty met,
Happy—alas, too happy, but for foes, 30
Lived and ran the race that Nature set,
Of manhood's shape, where she the mold did lose.⁹

But to the heavens that simple¹ soul is fled,
Which left with such as covet Christ to know
Witness of faith² that never shall be dead, 35
Sent for our health, but not received so.

Thus, for our guilt, this jewel have we lost;
The earth his bones, the heaven possess his ghost.³ not a phrase
AMEN.

1542

3. Subtle meanings.

4. Forge or anvil (a conventional image from Horace; see Ben Jonson's poem on Shakespeare, lines 58–64).

5. Bereft, robbed.

6. Passion or prejudice.

7. Elevated.

8. Body (not, as now, a dead body).

9. Another conventional idea, that

Nature, in creating someone, made a masterpiece and lost the pattern.

1. Innocent. The soul is referred to as "simple" by Plato and Dante. simple, undivisible, atomic

2. I.e., which left with Christians

("such as covet Christ to know") a testimony.

3. Spirit.

Praises objectivity, diplomacy

Prisoned in Windsor, He Recounteth His Pleasure
There Passed¹

So cruel prison how could betide,² alas,
As proud Windsor, where I in lust³ and joy,
With a king's son, my childish⁴ years did pass
In greater feast than Priam's sons of Troy?⁵

Where each sweet place returns a taste full sour: 5
The large green courts, where we were wont to hove,⁶
With eyes cast up unto the Maidens' Tower,
And easy sighs, such as folk draw in love.

The stately seats, the ladies bright of hue;
The dances short, long tales of great delight, 10
With words and looks that tigers could but rue,⁷
Where each of us did plead the other's right.

The palm play⁸ where, dispoiled for the game,
With dazed eyes oft we by gleams of love
Have missed the ball and got sight of our dame 15
To bait⁹ her eyes, which kept the leads above.

The gravel ground, with sleeves tied on the helm,
On foaming horse, with swords and friendly hearts,
With cheer¹ as though one should another whelm,
Where we have fought and chased oft with darts. 20

With silver drops the mead² yet spread for ruth,
In active games of nimbleness and strength,
Where we did strain, trained with³ swarms of youth,
Our tender limbs that yet shot up in length.

The secret groves, which oft we made resound 25
Of pleasant plaint and of our ladies' praise,
Recording oft what grace each one had found,
What hope of speed, what dread of long delays.

The wild forest, the clothéd holts⁴ with green,
With reins availed⁵ and swift ybreathed horse, 30
With cry of hounds and merry blasts between,
Where we did chase the fearful hart of force.⁶

1. In the summer of 1537 Surrey was imprisoned at Windsor Castle for striking a courtier. In the poem he recalls his boyhood stay there (1530-32) with Henry Fitzroy, illegitimate son of Henry VIII.

2. I.e., how could there happen to be.

3. Pleasure.

4. Youthful.

5. Priam, ancient King of Troy, had fifty sons whom he feasted, according to Homer.

6. Linger.

7. Sympathize with, despite tigers' legendary fierceness.

8. Handball.

9. Attract, as in fishing.

1. Appearance.

2. The dewy meadow.

3. Accompanied by.

4. I.e., wooded hills.

5. Slackened.

6. Perforce.

The wide vales eke that harbored us each night
 Wherewith, alas, reviveth in my breast
 The sweet accord; such sleeps as yet delight, 35
 The pleasant dreams, the quiet bed of rest.

The secret thoughts imparted with such trust;
 The wanton talk, the divers change of play;
 The friendship sworn, each promise kept so just,
 Wherewith we pass the winter nights away. 40

And with this thought, the blood forsakes my face,
 The tears berain my cheeks of deadly hue,
 The which, as soon as sobbing sighs, alas,
 Upsuppéd have, thus I my plaint renew:

"Oh place of bliss, renewer of my woes, 45
 Give me accompt, where is my noble fere,⁷
 Whom in thy walls thou didst each night enclose,
 To other lief,⁸ but unto me most dear."

Each stone, alas, that doth my sorrow rue,
 Returns thereto a hollow sound of plaint. 50
 Thus I alone, where all my freedom grew,
 In prison pine with bondage and restraint.

And with remembrance of the greater grief
 To banish the less I find my chief relief.

1557

7. Companion. The reference is to rey's sister.
 Henry Fitzroy, who had died the year before, aged 17; he was married to Sur-
 8. Dear.

SIR PHILIP SIDNEY

(1554-1586)

Sir Philip Sidney—courtier, soldier, scholar, poet, friend, and patron—seemed to the Elizabethans to embody all the traits of character and personality they admired: he was Castiglione's Il Cortegiano come to life. When he was killed in battle in the Low Countries at the age of 32, all England mourned.

He was the son of Sir Henry Sidney, thrice Lord Deputy of Ireland, and of a sister of Robert Dudley, Earl of Leicester, the most spectacular and powerful of all the queen's subjects. He entered Shrewsbury School in 1564, at the age of 10, on the same day as Fulke Greville, who became his lifelong friend and biographer. Greville said of Sidney, "though I lived with him and knew him from a child, yet I never knew him other than a man—with such staidness of mind, lovely and familiar gravity, as carried grace and reverence above greater years." Although he attended Oxford, he left without taking a degree. His education was completed by extended travels on the Continent, where he had opportunities to meet the most important men of the time and to be witness to such crucial events as the Massacre of St. Bartholomew's Day, August 23, 1572. Sidney's family background and education were Protestant, but this slaughter of the French Huguenots undoubtedly strengthened his Protestant sympathies. Another important influence was his friendship with the scholar-diplomat Hubert Languet.

On his return to England he lived the life of a prominent courtier, serving occasionally on diplomatic missions and actively encouraging literary men such as Edward Dyer, Fulke Greville, and, most importantly, the young Edmund Spenser, who dedicated The Shepheardes Calender to him as "the president of noblesse and of chevalree." So strong were Sidney's Protestant convictions that he incurred the queen's displeasure by opposing her projected marriage to the Duke of Anjou; this led to his dismissal from court for a time. He retired to Wilton, the estate of his beloved sister Mary, Countess of Pembroke, and there he wrote, at her request and for her entertainment, a pastoral romance called Arcadia.

Sidney's romance exists in two forms, called the "Old Arcadia" and the "New Arcadia." The "New Arcadia" was published in fragmentary form, almost three books, in 1590. In 1593 the Countess of Pembroke republished it with slight changes and added the last three books of the "Old Arcadia," but the first three books of the earlier version remained in manuscript until the 20th century. As William Ringler says, "The Arcadia, in both its old and new forms, is the most important original work of English prose fiction produced before the 18th century." The romance's complicated plot is full of oracles, disguisings, mistaken identity, melodramatic incidents and tangled love situations. Some episodes are of political interest, and Sidney clearly put more of his serious thought on statecraft into it than he pretends when he describes the book as mere entertainment. The Arcadia also contains many poems—eclogues and songs which are interspersed throughout the narrative; they represent Sidney's experimental and exploratory ventures into verse. A good example is the double sestina, Ye Goatherd Gods.

In 1579, the same year in which he dedicated The Shepheardes Calender to Sidney, Spenser wrote to his friend Gabriel Harvey, "New books I hear of none but only of one that writing a certain book called The School of Abuse, and dedicating it to Master Sidney, was for his labor scorned, if at least it be in the goodness of that nature to scorn." The book referred to was by Stephen Gosson; it was an attack upon poets and players from a narrowly Puritan point of view. Sidney did not specifically answer Gosson's attack, but he must have had it in mind when he composed, at some uncertain date, a major piece of critical prose which was published after his death under the titles The Defense of Poesy and An Apology for Poetry. In this long essay Sidney systematically defends poetry (indeed all imaginative literature) against its attackers. He points out the antiquity of poetry, and its prestige in the ancient world. He establishes its universality. He cites the names given to poets by the Romans (vates or prophet) and the Greeks (poietaes or maker) to indicate their ancient dignity. But, he says, the real defense of the poet depends not upon what he has been but upon what he does. All arts depend upon works of nature, but the poet, supreme among artists, can make another nature, new and more beautiful.

"Nature never set forth the earth in so rich tapestry as divers poets have done, neither with pleasant rivers, fruitful trees, sweet-smelling flowers, nor whatsoever else may make the too much loved earth more lovely." Moreover, the poet presents virtues and vices in a more lively and telling way than nature does; his function is to teach and delight at the same time. He is superior to the philosopher and the historian, because he is more concrete than the one and more universal than the other. Sidney shows himself to be a thorough student of Aristotle when he explains poetry as an art of imitation in which the artist imitates not merely what is, but also what might be. He refutes the charge that poets are liars by stating that "the poet nothing affirmeth," and he maintains that poetry does not abuse man's wits by arousing base desires but that man's wits abuse poetry. Then Sidney surveys the English literary scene as it looked to him. He found little to praise: Surrey's lyrics, the Mirror for Magistrates, Spenser's Shepherd's Calendar (though he disliked Spenser's use of antique language). The drama was generally bad (he was writing before the great achievements of the Elizabethans), and its failure to observe the classical unities of time and place was, for Sidney, a particular weakness. He concludes by a general defense of English as a language suitable for poetry and a humorous defiance of those who will not be converted by his defense. Despite the seriousness and logical rigor of Sidney's essay, it has many delightful personal touches. His manner is graceful and easy; it exhibits that sprezzatura, or casualness in doing something difficult perfectly, which Castiglione had held up as an ideal in The Courtier.

Sidney's Astrophel and Stella ("Starlover and Star") is the first of the great Elizabethan sonnet ^{sequence} cycles. These collections, imitative of Petrarch or of his French imitators, were based upon a well-understood convention. The poet undertook to display all the contrary feelings of a lover—hope and despair, tenderness and bitterness, exultation and modesty, by the use of "conceits" or ingenious comparisons. Many of these became traditional, and eventually, stale: the poet who complained that in love he both burned and froze, or that his sighs were the winds driving his ship on a tossing sea, was echoing many an earlier poet. So Sidney protests, in the role of Astrophel, that he uses no standard conventional phrases; his verse is original and comes from the heart. (This pretense is also conventional.) But what gives Sidney's sonnets their extraordinary vigor and freshness is Sidney's ability to dramatize. He uses dialogue, is often colloquial, and he heightens the situation as much as he can within the fourteen lines.

The sonnet cycle has a framework of plot, but it does not tell a story. Yet there is a rather mysterious story hinted at in Sidney's cycle, and some of these hints point to what may be an actual episode in the poet's life. Penelope Devereux, Lady Rich, is supposed to be the original of Stella, and some of the sonnets contain puns on the name "Rich." On the other hand, Stella is virtuous in the sonnets, and refuses Astrophel anything more than a kiss, whereas the historical Penelope Devereux was apparently a different kind of woman. But there is little profit in speculating on the events behind an Elizabethan sonnet cycle; as Sidney said in his Apology, "the poet nothing affirmeth."

Sidney called poetry his "unelected vocation," and he did not publish it himself. His view of himself was probably more that of patron than of artist. Yet his achievement as the author of the most important work of prose fiction in his age, the most important piece of literary criticism, and the most important sonnet cycle surely qualify him as a major author.

Ye Goatherd Gods¹

- STREPHON. Ye goatherd gods, that love the grassy mountains,
 Ye nymphs which haunt the springs in pleasant valleys,
 Ye satyrs joyed with free and quiet forests,
 Vouchsafe your silent ears to plaining music,
 Which to my woes gives still an early morning, 5
 And draws the dolor on till weary evening.
- KLAIUS. O Mercury,² foregoer to the evening,
 O heavenly huntress of the savage mountains,
 O lovely star, entitled of the morning, polymetron
 While that my voice doth fill these woeful valleys, 10
 Vouchsafe your silent ears to plaining music,
 Which oft hath Echo tired in secret forests.
- STREPHON. I, that was once free burgess³ of the forests,
 Where shade from sun, and sport I sought in evening,
 I, that was once esteemed for pleasant music, 15
 Am banished now among the monstrous mountains
 Of huge despair, and foul affliction's valleys,
 Am grown a screech owl to myself each morning.
- KLAIUS. I, that was once delighted every morning,
 Hunting the wild inhabitants of forests, 20
 I, that was once the music of these valleys,
 So darkened am that all my day is evening,
 Heartbroken so that molehills seem high mountains
 And fill the vales with cries instead of music.
- STREPHON. Long since, alas, my deadly swannish⁴ music 25
 Hath made itself a crier of the morning,
 And hath with wailing strength climbed highest mountains;

1. From Sidney's pastoral-heroic romance, the Arcadia. The poem is a dialogue between two shepherds, Strephon and Klaius, both of whom are in love with the absent Urania. Sidney, of course, knew no shepherds like this: the figures and the landscape in the poem belong to the pastoral tradition of an elegant idealized country life—usually Greek.

The form of the poem is basically that of the sestina, which has six-line stanzas and a final triplet of three lines; the terminal words of each stanza are the same, but rearranged according to a definite pattern, and all six terminal words must appear in the final triplet. Sestinas usually have six stanzas, but Sidney has here created a double sestina, of twelve stanzas. The Arcadia has about eighty interpolated poems, some of them ingenious metrical experiments like this one.

2. The evening star. The "huntress" is Diana, the moon; the "lovely star" is Lucifer, the morning star.

3. Citizen.

4. Doleful, like the song supposedly sung by the swan just before its death.

Long since my thoughts more desert be than forests, metaphor
 Long since I see my joys come to their evening,
 And state⁵ thrown down to overtrodden valleys. 30

KLAIUS. Long since the happy dwellers of these valleys
 Have prayed me leave my strange exclaiming music
 Which troubles their day's work and joys of evening;
 Long since I hate the night, more hate the morning;
 Long since my thoughts chase me like beasts in forests metaphor 35
 And make me wish myself laid under mountains.

STREPHON. Meseems I see the high and stately mountains
 Transform themselves to low dejected valleys;
 Meseems I hear in these ill-changed forests
 The nightingales do learn of owls their music; 40
 Meseems I feel the comfort of the morning
 Turned to the mortal serene⁶ of an evening.

KLAIUS. Meseems I see a filthy cloudy evening
 As soon as sun begins to climb the mountains;
 Meseems I feel a noisome⁷ scent, the morning 45
 When I do smell the flowers of these valleys;
 Meseems I hear, when I do hear sweet music,
 The dreadful cries of murdered men in forests.

STREPHON. I wish to fire the trees of all those forests;
 I give the sun a last farewell each evening; 50
 I curse the fiddling finders-out of music;
 With envy I do hate the lofty mountains
 And with despite scilicet despise the humble valleys;
 I do detest night, evening, day, and morning.

KLAIUS. Curse to myself my prayer is, the morning; 55
 My fire is more than can be made with forests,
 My state more base than are the basest valleys.
 I wish no evenings more to see, each evening;
 Shaméd, I hate myself in sight of mountains
 And stop mine ears, lest I grow mad with music. 60

STREPHON. For she whose parts maintained a perfect music,
 Whose beauties shined more than the blushing morning,
 Who much did pass⁸ in state the stately mountains,
 In straightness passed the cedars of the forests,
 Hath cast me, wretch, into eternal evening 65
 By taking her two suns from these dark valleys.
conventio-nes

KLAIUS. For she, to whom compared, the Alps are valleys,
 She, whose least word brings from the spheres their music,

5. High position.

6. Deadly dew.

7. Stinking. "The morning": i.e., in the morning.

8. Surpass.

At whose approach the sun rose in the evening,
 Who where she went bare⁹ in her forehead morning, 70
 Is gone, is gone, from these our spoiled forests,
 Turning to deserts our best pastured mountains.

STREPHON. These mountains witness shall, so shall these valleys.

KLAUS. These forests eke, made wretched by our music,
 Our morning hymn is this, and song at evening. 75

1577-1580

1593

Thou Blind Man's Mark

Thou blind man's mark,¹ thou fool's self-chosen snare,
 Fond fancy's scum, and dregs of scattered thought;
 Band² of all evils, cradle of causeless care;
 Thou web of will, whose end is never wrought;
 Desire, desire! I have too dearly bought, 5
 With price of mangled mind, thy worthless ware;
 Too long, too long, asleep thou hast me brought,
 Who should my mind to higher things prepare.
 But yet in vain thou hast my ruin sought;
 In vain thou madest me to vain things aspire; 10
 In vain thou kindlest all thy smoky fire;
 For virtue hath this better lesson taught—
 Within myself to seek my only hire,
 Desiring naught but how to kill desire.

1581

1598

Leave Me, O Love

Leave me, O love which reachest but to dust;
 And thou, my mind, aspire to higher things;
 Grow rich in that which never taketh rust,
 Whatever fades but fading pleasure brings.
 Draw in thy beams, and humble all thy might 5
 To that sweet yoke where lasting freedoms be;
 Which breaks the clouds and opens forth the light,
 That doth both shine and give us sight to see.
 O take fast hold; let that light be thy guide
 In this small course which birth draws out to death, 10
 And think how evil becometh him to slide,
 Who seeketh heav'n, and comes of heav'nly breath.³

9. Bore.

1. Target.

2. Swaddling band.

3. I.e., and think how evil it is for one who is seeking heaven and has a divine spirit or soul in him to descend to earthly things.

Then farewell, world; thy uttermost I see;
Eternal Love, maintain thy life in me.

1581

1598

The Nightingale

The nightingale, as soon as April bringeth¹
Unto her rested sense a perfect waking
(While late bare earth, proud of new clothing, springeth),
Sings out her woes, a thorn her song-book making,
And mournfully bewailing, 5
Her throat in tunes expresseth
What grief her breast oppresseth
For Tereus' force on her chaste will prevailing.
O Philomela fair, O take some gladness,
That here is juster cause of plaintful sadness: 10
Thine earth now springs, mine fadeth;
Thy thorn without, my thorn my heart invadeth.

Alas, she hath no other cause of anguish
But Tereus' love, on her by strong hand wroken,²
Wherein she suffering, all her spirits languish; 15
Full womanlike complains her will was broken.
But I, who daily craving,
Cannot have to content me,
Have more cause to lament me,
Since wanting is more woe than too much having. 20
O Philomela fair, O take some gladness,
That here is juster cause of plaintful sadness:
Thine earth now springs, mine fadeth;
Thy thorn without, my thorn my heart invadeth.

1581

1598

From *Astrophel and Stella*¹

1

Loving in truth, and fain² in verse my love to show,
That the dear she might take some pleasure of my pain,
Pleasure might cause her read, reading might make her know,
Knowledge might pity win, and pity grace obtain, } elia rope
I sought fit words to paint the blackest face of woe: 5
Studying inventions fine, her wits to entertain,

1. The nightingale sings in England for only a few weeks after its return from winter quarters in the south. Mythology has it that while singing "she" presses her breast against a thorn, to remind her of the bitter pain suffered when, as Philomela, she was raped by her brother-in-law King Tereus, and had her tongue torn out.

2. Inflicted.

1. The first sonnet is one of six in the cycle that are written in hexameters.

2. Desirous.

Oft turning others' leaves, to see if thence would flow
 Some fresh and fruitful showers upon my sunburnt brain.
 But words came halting³ forth, wanting Invention's stay;
 Invention, Nature's child, fled stepdame Study's blows; personification
 And others' feet still seemed but strangers in my way.
 Thus, great with child to speak, and helpless in my throes,
 Biting my truant pen, beating myself for spite:
 "Fool," said my Muse to me, "look in thy heart, and write!"

5

It is most true that eyes are formed to serve
 The inward light,⁴ and that the heavenly part
 Ought to be king, from whose rules who do swerve,
 Rebels to nature, strive for their own smart.
 It is most true, what we call Cupid's dart
 An image is, which for ourselves we carve, 5
 And, fools, adore in temple of our heart,
 Till that good god make church and churchman starve.
 True, that true beauty virtue is indeed,
 Whereof this beauty can be but a shade, 10
 Which elements with mortal mixture breed.⁵
 True, that on earth we are but pilgrims made,
 And should in soul up to our country move.
 True, and yet true that I must Stella love.

6

Some lovers speak, when they their Muses entertain,
 Of hopes begot by fear, of wot⁶ not what desires,
 Of force of heavenly beams infusing hellish pain,
oxymoron Of living deaths, dear wounds, fair storms, and freezing fires;
 Someone his song in Jove and Jove's strange tales attires, 5
 Bordered with bulls and swans, powdered with golden rain;⁷
 Another humbler wit to shepherd's pipe⁸ retires,
 Yet hiding royal blood full oft in rural vein.
 To some a sweetest plaint a sweetest style affords,
 While tears pour out his ink, and sighs breathe out his words, 10
 His paper pale despair, and pain his pen doth move.
 I can speak what I feel, and feel as much as they,⁹
 But think that all the map of my state I display
 When trembling voice brings forth, that I do Stella love.

3. Limping. "Stay": crutch, support.

4. I.e., the soul. The concessions made in the argument of this sonnet are to Platonic and Christian doctrines as opposed to romantic love.

5. This beauty is a mixture of the four elements (earth, air, water, fire) and as such is mortal. According to Platonic doctrine the only true beauty (identical with virtue) is a divine idea or essence and is immortal.

6. Know.

7. In classical mythology Jove courted

Europa in the shape of a bull, Leda as a swan, and Danaë as a golden shower.

8. In the pastoral convention the poet pretends to be a shepherd and his poems are the songs he plays on his oaten or reed pipe.

9. I.e., the Petrarchan sonneteers in Italy and France, whose literary conventions he had been describing. As a matter of fact, he utilizes some of these conventions himself and is not so direct and simple as he would have us believe here and in sonnets 1 and 74.

15

You that do search for every purling¹ spring
 Which from the ribs of old Parnassus² flows,
 And every flower, not sweet, perhaps, which grows
 Near thereabout, into your poesy wring;
 You that do dictionary's method bring 5
 Into your rhymes, running in rattling rows;
 You that poor Petrarch's long-deceased woes Antithesis
 With newborn sighs and denizen'd wit³ do sing;
 You take wrong ways: those far-fet⁴ helps be such
 As do beweray⁵ a want of inward touch. 10
 And sure, at length stolen goods do come to light.
 But if, both for your love and skill, your name
 You seek to nurse at fullest breast of Fame,
 Stella behold, and then begin to endite.⁶

18

With what sharp checks I in myself am shent,⁷
 When into Reason's audit I do go,
 And by just counts myself a banckrout⁸ know
 Of all those goods, which heaven to me hath lent;
 Unable quite to pay even Nature's rent, 5
 Which unto it by birthright I do owe;
 And which is worse, no good excuse can show,
 But that my wealth I have most idly spent.
 My youth doth waste, my knowledge brings forth toys,⁹
 My wit doth strive those passions to defend, 10
 Which for reward spoil it with vain annoys.
 I see my course to lose myself doth bend:
 I see and yet no greater sorrow take,
 Then that I lose no more for Stella's sake.

21

Your words, my friend, right healthful caustics, blame
 My young mind marred, whom Love doth windlass¹ so,
 That mine own writings like bad servants show
 My wits, quick in vain thoughts, in virtue lame;
 That Plato I read for nought, but if he tame 5
 Such coltish gyres,² that to my birth I owe
 Nobler desires, lest else that friendly foe,
 Great expectation, wear a train of shame.
 For since mad March great promise made of me,
 If now the May of my years much decline, 10

1. Gently murmuring.

2. The mountain above Delphi, sacred to the Muses; hence, poetic inspiration.

3. Ingenuity ("wit") imported from abroad ("denizen'd"), here Italy.

4. Farfetched.

5. Reveal.

6. Compose, write.

7. Disgraced; "checks": reproofs.

8. Bankrupt.

9. Trifles, i.e. these poems.

1. Ambush, ensnare.

2. Youthful gyrations.

What can be hoped my harvest time will be?
 Sure you say well; your wisdom's golden mine
 Dig deep with learning's spade; now tell me this,
 Hath this world ought so fair as Stella is?

31

With how sad steps, Oh Moon, thou climb'st the skies!
 How silently, and with how wan a face!
 What, may it be that even in heavenly place
 That busy archer ³ his sharp arrows tries?
 Sure, if that long-with-love-acquainted eyes
 Can judge of love, thou feel'st a lover's case,
 I read it in thy looks; thy languished grace,
 To me, that feel the like, thy state describes.
 Then, even of fellowship, Oh Moon, tell me,
 Is constant love deemed there but want of wit?
 Are beauties there as proud as here they be?
 Do they above love to be loved, and yet
 Those lovers scorn whom that love doth possess?
 Do they call virtue there ungratefulness? ⁴

39

Come sleep! Oh sleep, the certain knot of peace,
 The baiting place ¹ of wit, the balm of woe,
 The poor man's wealth, the prisoner's release,
 The indifferent judge between the high and low;
 With shield of proof ² shield me from out the prease
 Of those fierce darts Despair at me doth throw;
 Oh make in me those civil wars to cease;
 I will good tribute pay, if thou do so.
 Take thou of me smooth pillows, sweetest bed,
 A chamber deaf to noise and blind to light,
 A rosy garland and a weary head;
 And if these things, as being thine by right,
 Move not thy heavy grace, thou shalt in me,
 Livelier than elsewhere, Stella's image see.

41

Having this day my horse, my hand, my lance
 Guided so well that I obtained the prize,³
 Both by the judgment of the English eyes
 And of some sent from that sweet enemy, France,
 Horsemen my skill in horsemanship advance,
 Town-folks my strength; a daintier judge applies
 His praise to sleight which from good use ⁴ doth rise;

3. Cupid.

4. I.e., do they call ungratefulness virtue there (as they do here)?

1. A place for refreshment on a journey.

2. Proven strength. "Prease": press, crowd.

3. At an actual tournament in the summer of 1581.

4. Cleverness which from experience.

Some lucky wits impute it but to chance;
 Others, because of both sides I do take
 My blood from them who did excel in this,⁵
 Think nature me a man-at-arms did make. 10
 How far they shoot awry! The true cause is,
 Stella looked on, and from her heavenly face
 Sent forth the beams which made so fair my race.

45

Stella oft sees the very face of woe
 Painted in my beclouded, stormy face,
 But cannot skill⁶ to pity my disgrace,
 Not though thereof the cause herself she know;⁷
 Yet, hearing late a fable which did show, 5
 Of lovers never known, a grievous case,
 Pity thereof got in her breast such place
 That, from that sea derived, tears' springs did flow.
 Alas! If fancy,⁸ drawn by imaged things,
 Though false, yet with free scope more grace doth breed 10
 Than servant's wrack, where new doubts honor brings,⁹
 Then think, my dear, that you in me do read
 Of lover's ruin some sad tragedy.
 I am not I; pity the tale of me.

64

No more, my dear, no more these counsels try;
 Oh, give my passions leave to run their race;
 Let Fortune lay on me her worst disgrace;
 Let folk o'ercharged with brain against me cry;
 Let clouds bedim my face, break in mine eye; 5
 Let me no steps but of lost labor trace;
 Let all the earth with scorn recount my case;
 But do not will me from my Love to flie.
 I do not envy Aristotle's wit,¹
 Nor do aspire to Caesar's bleeding fame, 10
 Nor ought do care, though some above me sit,
 Nor hope nor wish another course to frame,
 But that which once may win thy cruel heart:
 Thou art my wit, and thou my virtue art.

71

Who will in fairest book of Nature know,
 How Virtue may best lodged in beauty be,
 Let him but learn of Love to read in thee,
 Stella, those fair lines, which true goodness show.

5. I.e., because my ancestors on both sides were distinguished in the tournament.

6. Is unable. "Disgrace": i.e., her lack of favor.

7. I.e., even though she knows herself to be the cause of it.

8. Imagination, but often involving love.

9. I.e., than the despair of a lover ("servant"), caused by her new scruples ("doubts") based on her honor.

1. Wisdom.

There shall he find all vices' overthrow,
 Not by rude force, but sweetest sovereignty
 Of reason, from whose light those night birds² fly;
 That inward sun in thine eyes shineth so.
 And not content to be Perfection's heir
 Thyself, dost strive all minds that way to move,
 Who mark in thee what is in thee most fair.
 So while thy beauty draws the heart to love,
 As fast thy Virtue bends that love to good:
 "But ah," desire still cries, "give me some food."

5

10

74

I never drank of Aganippe well,
 Nor ever did in shade of Tempe sit,³
 And Muses scorn with vulgar brains to dwell;
 Poor layman I, for sacred rites unfit.
 Some do I hear of poets' fury tell,
 But, God wot, wot not what they mean by it;
 And this I swear by blackest brook of hell,⁴
 I am no pick-purse of another's wit.
 How falls it then that with so smooth an ease
 My thoughts I speak; and what I speak doth flow
 In verse, and that my verse best wits doth please?
 Guess we the cause. What, is it thus? Fie, no.
 Or so? Much less. How then? Sure thus it is:
 My lips are sweet, inspired with Stella's kiss.

5

10

1582

1591

*Fourth Song*¹

Only joy, now here you are,
 Fit to hear and ease my care;
 Let my whispering voice obtain
 Sweet reward for sharpest pain;
 Take me to thee, and thee to me.
 "No, no, no, no, my dear, let be."

5

Night hath closed all in her cloak,
 Twinkling stars love-thoughts provoke,
 Danger hence good care doth keep,
 Jealousy itself doth sleep;
 Take me to thee, and thee to me.
 "No, no, no, no, my dear, let be."

10

2. Night birds, like owls, conventionally symbolized vices.

3. Aganippe: a well at the foot of Mt. Helicon in Greece, sacred to the Muses; Tempe: a valley beside Mt. Olympus, sacred to Apollo, the god of song.

4. The river Styx.

1. One of a number of songs that appear among Astrophel and Stella sonnets in the Folio edition of 1598; this one comes between Sonnets 85 and 86.

Better place no wit can find,
 Cupid's yoke to loose or bind;
 These sweet flowers on fine bed too, 15
 Us in their best language woo;
 Take me to thee, and thee to me.
 "No, no, no, no, my dear, let be."

This small light the moon bestows
 Serves thy beams but to disclose; 20
 So to raise my hap more high,
 Fear not else, none can us spy;
 Take me to thee, and thee to me.
 "No, no, no, no, my dear, let be."

That you heard was but a mouse, 25
 Dumb sleep holdeth all the house;
 Yet asleep, methinks they say,
 Young folks, take time while you
 may;
 Take me to thee, and thee to me.
 "No, no, no, no, my dear, let be." 30

Niggard time threats, if we miss
 This large offer of our bliss,
 Long stay ere he grant the same;
 Sweet, then, while each thing doth frame,
 Take me to thee, and thee to me. 35
 "No, no, no, no, my dear, let be."

Your fair mother is abed,
 Candles out and curtains spread;
 She thinks you do letters write;
 Write, but let me first endite; 40
 Take me to thee, and thee to me.
 "No, no, no, no, my dear, let be."

Sweet, alas, why strive you thus?
 Concord better fitteth us;
 Leave to Mars the force of hands, 45
 Your power in your beauty stands;
 Take me to thee, and thee to me.
 "No, no, no, no, my dear, let be."

Woe to me, and do you swear
 Me to hate? but I forbear; 50
 Cursed be my destinies all,
 That brought me so high to fall;
 Soon with my death I will please
 thee.
 "No, no, no, no, my dear, let be."

From An Apology for Poetry

* * * There is no art delivered to mankind that hath not the works of nature for his principal object, without which they could not consist, and on which they so depend, as they become actors and players, as it were, of what nature will have set forth. So doth the astronomer look upon the stars, and, by that he seeth, setteth down what order nature hath taken therein.¹ So do the geometrician and arithmetician in their diverse sorts of quantities. So doth the musician in times tell you which by nature agree,² which not. The natural philosopher thereon³ hath his name, and the moral philosopher standeth upon the natural virtues, vices, and passions of man; and "follow nature," saith he, "therein, and thou shalt not err." The lawyer saith what men have determined; the historian what men have done. The grammarian speaketh only of the rules of speech; and the rhetorician and logician, considering what in nature will soonest prove and persuade, thereon give artificial rules, which still are compassed within the circle of a question according to the proposed matter.⁴ The physician weigheth the nature of a man's body, and the nature of things helpful or hurtful unto it. And the metaphysic, though it be in the second and abstract notions, and therefore be counted supernatural, yet doth he indeed build upon the depth of nature. Only the poet, disdaining to be tied to any such subjection, lifted up with the vigor of his own invention, doth grow in effect another nature, in making things either better than nature bringeth forth, or, quite anew, forms such as never were in nature, as the Heroes,⁵ Demigods, Cyclops, Chimeras, Furies, and such like: so as he goeth hand in hand with nature, not enclosed within the narrow warrant of her gifts, but freely ranging only within the zodiac of his own wit.

Nature never set forth the earth in so rich tapestry as divers poets have done—neither with pleasant rivers, fruitful trees, sweet-smelling flowers, nor whatsoever else may make the too much loved earth more lovely. Her⁶ world is brazen, the poets only deliver a golden. But let those things alone, and go to man—for whom as the other things are, so it seemeth in him her uttermost cunning

1. I.e., according to that which he sees, he sets down what arrangements nature has made.

2. Which musical measures fit together naturally.

3. I.e., from studying nature; the "natural philosopher" is what we would call a scientist. "Standeth upon": takes as his subject matter.

4. I.e., which apply only to the particular situation for which the rule was devised. "Weigheth": studies, considers.

5. Sidney uses the word in its Greek sense, meaning a deified man; "Cyclops": one-eyed giants in Homer's Odyssey; "Chimeras": fire-breathing monsters, with lion's head, goat's body, and serpent's tail.

6. I.e., nature's. "Brazen": a reference to the traditional idea that the first age of man was the Golden Age, and that deterioration then followed through the Silver Age and the Brazen Age down to the present Iron Age.

is employed—and know whether she have brought forth so true a lover as Theagenes, so constant a friend as Pylades, so valiant a man as Orlando, so right a prince as Xenophon's Cyrus,⁷ so excellent a man every way as Virgil's Aeneas. Neither let this be jestingly conceived, because the works of the one be essential, the other in imitation or fiction; for any understanding knoweth the skill of the artificer standeth in that idea or foreconceit of the work, and not in the work itself. And that the poet hath that idea is manifest, by delivering them forth in such excellency as he hath imagined them. Which delivering forth also is not wholly imaginative, as we are wont to say by them that build castles in the air: but so far substantially it worketh, not only to make a Cyrus, which had been but a particular excellency, as nature might have done, but to bestow a Cyrus upon the world, to make many Cyruses, if they will learn aright why and how that maker made him.

Neither let it be deemed too saucy a comparison to balance the highest point of man's wit with the efficacy of nature; but rather give right honor to the heavenly Maker of that maker,⁸ who, having made man to his own likeness, set him beyond and over all the works of that second nature: which in nothing he showeth so much as in poetry, when with the force of a divine breath he bringeth things forth far surpassing her doings, with no small argument to the incredulous of that first accursed fall of Adam, since our erected wit⁹ maketh us know what perfection is, and yet our infected will keepeth us from reaching unto it.¹ But these arguments will by few be understood, and by fewer granted. Thus much (I hope) will be given me, that the Greeks with some probability of reason gave him the name above all names of learning. Now let us go to a more ordinary opening² of him, that the truth may be more palpable: and so I hope, though we get not so unmatched a praise as the etymology of his names will grant, yet his very description, which no man will deny, shall not justly be barred from a principal commendation.

Poesy therefore is an art of imitation, for so Aristotle termeth it³ in his word mimesis, that is to say, a representing, counter-

7. Theagenes: hero of Heliodorus' Greek romance Aethiopica; Pylades was the constant friend of the Greek hero Orestes; Orlando: hero of Ariosto's Orlando Furioso; Cyrus: hero of Xenophon's Cyropaedia.

8. Sidney had earlier explained that the word "poet" comes from the Greek word for "maker." The "maker" is then in a role like that of God, but on a lower level—an anticipation of the idea of the poet as creator.

9. I.e., our elevated, undebased intelligence.

1. The "will" is "infected" because corrupted and weakened by original sin in the Fall.

2. Analysis or explanation. Sidney goes on to explain poetry as an art of imitation, following Aristotle. There are three kinds: divine poetry, which imitates the excellencies of God; philosophical poetry, which imitates learning; and a third kind, which we generally call simple "poetry," and which imitates life as it might be and should be, for the purpose of conveying instruction and delight.

3. In the Poetics 1.2, but Sidney is probably drawing here on Scaliger's Poetice 1.1.

feiting, or figuring forth—to speak metaphorically, a speaking picture; with this end, to teach and delight. Of this have been three several kinds.

The chief, both in antiquity and excellency, were they that did imitate the inconceivable excellencies of God. Such were David in his Psalms; Solomon in his Song of Songs, in his Ecclesiastes, and Proverbs; Moses and Deborah in their Hymns; and the writer of Job, which, beside other, the learned Emanuel Tremellius and Franciscus Junius⁴ do entitle the poetical part of the Scripture. Against these none will speak that hath the Holy Ghost in due holy reverence. In this kind, though in a full wrong divinity, were Orpheus, Amphion, Homer in his Hymns, and many other, both Greeks and Romans, and this poesy must be used by whosoever will follow St. James's counsel in singing psalms when they are merry, and I know is used with the fruit of comfort by some, when, in sorrowful pangs of their death-bringing sins, they find the consolation of the never-leaving goodness.

The second kind is of them that deal with matters philosophical: either moral, as Tyrtæus, Phocylides, and Cato;⁵ or natural, as Lucretius and Virgil's Georgics; or astronomical, as Manilius and Pontanus; or historical, as Lucan; which who mislike, the fault is in their judgments quite out of taste, and not in the sweet food of sweetly uttered knowledge.

But because this second sort is wrapped within the fold of the proposed subject, and takes not the course of his own invention, whether they properly be poets or no let grammarians dispute; and go to the third, indeed right⁶ poets, of whom chiefly this question ariseth, betwixt whom and these second is such a kind of difference as betwixt the meaner sort of painters, who counterfeit only such faces as are set before them, and the more excellent, who, having no law but wit, bestow that in colors upon you which is fittest for the eye to see, as the constant though lamenting look of Lucretia, when she punished in herself another's fault⁷ (wherein he painteth not Lucretia whom he never saw, but painteth the outward beauty of such a virtue). For these third be they which most properly do imitate to teach and delight, and to imitate borrow nothing of what is, hath been, or shall be; but range, only reined with learned discretion, into the divine consideration of what may be, and should be. These be they that, as the first and most noble sort may justly be termed vates,⁸ so these are waited on in the excellentest languages and best understandings, with the

4. Two 16th-century Protestant scholars who published a Latin translation of the Bible in 1575–80.

5. Dionysius Cato was the reputed author of Disticha de moribus, four books of epigrammatic moral precepts in Latin hexameters used as a textbook in Elizabethan schools.

6. Real.

7. Lucretia was the wife of L. Tarquinius Colatinus, outraged by Sextus, son of Tarquinius Superbus. See Shakespeare The Rape of Lucrece.

8. A vates was originally a prophet or oracle; later the term was used for a poet.

foredescribed name of poets; for these indeed do merely make to imitate, and imitate both to delight and teach, and delight to move men to take that goodness in hand, which without delight they would fly as from a stranger, and teach, to make them know that goodness whereunto they are moved: which being the noblest scope to which ever any learning was directed, yet want there not idle tongues to bark at them.

These be subdivided into sundry more special denominations. The most notable be the heroic, lyric, tragic, comic, satiric, iambic, elegiac, pastoral, and certain others, some of these being termed according to the matter they deal with, some by the sorts of verses they liked best to write in; for indeed the greatest part of poets have appareled their poetical inventions in that numbrous⁹ kind of writing which is called verse—indeed but appareled, verse being but an ornament and no cause to poetry, since there have been many most excellent poets that never versified, and now swarm many versifiers that need never answer to the name of poets. For Xenophon,¹ who did imitate so excellently as to give us effigiem iusti imperii, “the portraiture of a just Empire,” under name of Cyrus (as Cicero saith of him), made therein an absolute heroical poem. So did Heliodorus in his sugared invention of that picture of love in Theagenes and Chariclea;² and yet both these writ in prose: which I speak to show that it is not rhyming and versing that maketh a poet—no more than a long gown maketh an advocate, who though he pleaded in armor should be an advocate and no soldier. But it is that feigning notable images of virtues, vices, or what else, with that delightful teaching, which must be the right describing note to know a poet by, although indeed the Senate of Poets hath chosen verse as their fittest raiment, meaning, as in matter they passed all in all, so in manner to go beyond them—not speaking (table-talk fashion or like men in a dream) words as they chanceably fall from the mouth, but peizing³ each syllable of each word by just proportion according to the dignity of the subject.

Now therefore it shall not be amiss first to weigh this latter sort of poetry by his works, and then by his parts, and, if in neither of these anatomies⁴ he be condemnable, I hope we shall obtain a more favorable sentence. This purifying of wit, this enriching of memory, enabling of judgment, and enlarging of conceit, which commonly we call learning, under what name soever it come forth, or to what immediate end soever it be directed, the final end is to lead and draw us to as high a perfection as our degenerate souls, made worse by their clayey lodgings, can be capable of. This, ac-

9. Not “numerous,” but in “numbers” or metrical lines.

1. Xenophon’s Cyropaedia is an idealized and romanticized biography, in prose, of Cyrus the Great.

2. Heliodorus’s popular Greek romance.

written in the 4th century A.D., but not known in western Europe until the 16th century.

3. Weighing.

4. Analyses.

according to the inclination of the man, bred many formed impressions. For some that thought this felicity principally to be gotten by knowledge and no knowledge to be so high and heavenly as acquaintance with the stars, gave themselves to astronomy; others, persuading themselves to be demigods if they knew the causes of things, became natural and supernatural philosophers; some an admirable delight drew to music; and some the certainty of demonstration to the mathematics. But all, one and other, having this scope—to know, and by knowledge to lift up the mind from the dungeon of the body to the enjoying his own divine essence. But when by the balance of experience it was found that the astronomer looking to the stars might fall into a ditch, that the inquiring philosopher might be blind in himself, and the mathematician might draw forth a straight line with a crooked heart, then, lo, did proof, the overruler of opinions, make manifest that all these are but serving sciences, which, as they have each a private end in themselves, so yet are they all directed to the highest end of the mistress-knowledge, by the Greeks called architectonike, which stands (as I think) in the knowledge of a man's self, in the ethic and politic consideration, with the end of well doing and not of well knowing only:—even as the saddler's next end is to make a good saddle, but his farther end to serve a nobler faculty, which is horsemanship; so the horseman's to soldiery, and the soldier not only to have the skill, but to perform the practice of a soldier. So that, the ending end of all earthly learning being virtuous action, those skills, that most serve to bring forth that, have a most just title to be princes over all the rest. Wherein if we can show the poet's nobleness by setting him before his other competitors, among whom as principal challengers step forth the moral philosophers, whom, me thinketh, I see coming towards me with a sullen gravity, as though they could not abide vice by daylight, rudely clothed for to witness outwardly their contempt of outward things, with books in their hands against glory, whereto they set their names, sophistically⁵ speaking against subtlety and angry with any man in whom they see the foul fault of anger. These men, casting largess⁶ as they go of definitions, divisions, and distinctions, with a scornful interrogative do soberly ask whether it be possible to find any path so ready to lead a man to Virtue as that which teacheth what Virtue is. And teacheth it not only by delivering forth his very being, his causes and effects, but also by making known his enemy Vice, which must be destroyed, and his cumbersome servant Passion, which must be mastered; by showing the generalities that containeth it and the specialities that are derived from it; lastly, by plain setting down how it extendeth itself out of the limits of a man's own little world to the government of families and maintaining of public societies.

5. With deceptive subtlety.

6. Bountiful gifts.

The historian scarcely giveth leisure to the moralist to say so much but that he, laden with old mouse-eaten records, authorizing himself,⁷ for the most part, upon other histories, whose greatest authorities are built upon the notable foundation of hearsay; having much ado to accord differing writers and to pick truth out of partiality,⁸ better acquainted with a thousand years ago than with the present age, and yet better knowing how this world goeth than how his own wit runneth, curious for antiquities and inquisitive⁹ of novelties, a wonder to young folks and a tyrant in table talk, denieth, in a great chafe, that any man teaching of virtue and virtuous actions, is comparable to him. "I am Lux vitae, temporum magistra, nuncia vetustatis, etc."¹ * * *

But since I have run so long a career in this matter, methinks, before I give my pen a full stop, it shall be but a little more lost time to inquire why England (the mother of excellent minds) should be grown so hard a stepmother to poets, who certainly in wit ought to pass all other, since all only proceedeth from their wit, being indeed makers of themselves, not takers of others. How can I but exclaim,

*Musa, mihi causas memora, quo numine laeso!*²

Sweet poesy, that hath anciently had kings, emperors, senators, great captains, such as, besides a thousand others, David, Adrian, Sophocles, Germanicus,³ not only to favor poets, but to be poets; and of our nearer times can present for her patrons a Robert, King of Sicily, the great King Francis of France, King James of Scotland;¹ such cardinals as Bembo and Bibiena; such famous preachers and teachers as Beza and Melancthon; so learned philosophers as Fracastorius and Scaliger; so great orators as Pontanus and Muretus; so piercing wits as George Buchanan;² so grave counselors as, be-

7. Basing his authority.

8. Prejudice.

9. Impertinently curious, prying.

1. "The light of life, mistress of the times, interpreter of the past" (paraphrased from Cicero, De Oratore II.36). In the omitted portion, Sidney defends the various kinds of literature and refutes the traditional complaints that poets tell lies, that poetry is effeminate, that poetry abuses man's wit, and that Plato banished poets from his commonwealth. He calls for laurels for poets instead of abuse of their art.

2. "O Muse, call to mind the causes: what divinity was injured?" (Acneid I.8).

3. Adrian is the Emperor Hadrian; Sophocles, the great Greek dramatist, was also a general; Germanicus, 1st-century Roman emperor, translated poetry.

1. Robert d'Anjou, King of Naples, friend of Petrarch and Boccaccio; Francis I of France was a great patron of arts and letters; King James I of Scotland was author of the King's Quair.

2. Pietro Cardinal Bembo, a stylist and man of letters (he also appears in Castiglione's Courtier); Bernardo da Bibbiena, a writer of comedy and private secretary to Lorenzo de Medici. Theodore Beza and Philip Melancthon were prominent European Protestant theologians. Fracastorius and Julius Caesar Scaliger were famous Italian scholars. John Jovius Pontanus was an Italian mediæval poet; Muretus was the Latinized name of Marc Antoine Muret, French scholar and writer. George Buchanan was the foremost Scottish writer of the 16th century.

sides many, but before all, that Hospital of France,³ than whom (I think) that realm never brought forth a more accomplished judgment, more firmly builded upon virtue—I say these, with numbers of others, not only to read others' poesies, but to poetize for others' reading—that poesy, thus embraced in all other places, should only find in our time a hard welcome in England, I think the very earth lamenteth it, and therefore decketh our soil with fewer laurels than it was accustomed. For heretofore poets have in England also flourished, and, which is to be noted, even in those times when the trumpet of Mars did sound loudest. And now that an overfaint quietness should seem to strew the house for poets,⁴ they are almost in as good reputation as the mountebanks at Venice. Truly even that, as of the one side it giveth great praise to poesy, which like Venus (but to better purpose) hath rather be troubled in the net with Mars than enjoy the homely quiet of Vulcan;⁵ so serves it for a piece of a reason why they are less grateful to idle England, which now can scarce endure the pain of a pen. Upon this necessarily followeth, that base men with servile wits undertake it, who think it enough if they can be rewarded of the printer. And so as Epaminondas is said, with the honor of his virtue, to have made an office, by his exercising it, which before was contemptible, to become highly respected,⁶ so these, no more but setting their names to it, by their own disgracefulness disgrace the most graceful poesy. For now, as if all the Muses were got with child, to bring forth bastard poets, without any commission they do post over the banks of Helicon, till they make the readers more weary than posthorses, while, in the meantime, they, are better content to suppress the outflowing of their wit than, by publishing them, to be accounted knights of the same order. But I that, before ever I durst aspire unto the dignity, am admitted into the company of the paper-blurrers, do find the very true cause of our wanting estimation is want of desert, taking upon us to be poets in despite of Pallas. Now, wherein we want desert were a thank-worthy labor to express: but if I knew, I should have mended myself. But I, as I never desired the title, so have I neglected the means to come by it. Only, overmastered by some thoughts, I yielded an inky tribute unto them. Marry, they that delight in poesy itself should seek to know what they do, and how they do, and, especially,

Queis meliore luto finxit praeordia Titan,⁷

3. Michel de l'Hospital, Chancellor of France and defender of the Huguenots.

4. I.e., now that peace has strewn rushes on the floor to make poets comfortable. "Mountebanks": vendors of quack medicines.

5. Vulcan discovered his wife Venus in bed with Mars; he entrapped them in a net and called the other gods to see them, expecting the lovers to suffer ridicule and shame, but he was the victim of their laughter himself.

6. He was sewer commissioner in Thebes.

7. "Whose hearts Titan [Prometheus] had formed of better clay" (Juvenal, Satires XIV.34-35).

look themselves in an unflattering glass of reason, if they be inclinable unto it. For poesy must not be drawn by the ears; it must be gently led, or rather it must lead; which was partly the cause that made the ancient learned affirm it was a divine gift, and no human skill: since all other knowledges lie ready for any that hath strength of wit; a poet no industry can make, if his own genius be not carried unto it; and therefore is it an old proverb, Orator fit, Poeta nascitur.⁸ Yet confess I always that as the fertilest ground must be manured, so must the highest-flying wit have a Daedalus⁹ to guide him. That Daedalus, they say, both in this and in other, hath three wings to bear itself up into the air of due commendation: that is, Art, Imitation, and Exercise. But these, neither artificial rules nor imitative patterns, we much cumber ourselves withal. Exercise indeed we do, but that very fore-backwardly: for where we should exercise to know, we exercise as having known: and so is our brain delivered of much matter which never was begotten by knowledge. For, there being two principal parts—matter to be expressed by words and words to express the matter—in neither we use Art or Imitation rightly. Our matter is *Quodlibet*¹ indeed, though wrongly performing Ovid's verse, never marshaling it into an assured rank, that almost the readers cannot tell where to find themselves.

Quicquid conabar dicere, versus erit:

Chaucer, undoubtedly, did excellently in his Troilus and Cressida; of whom, truly, I know not whether to marvel more, either that he in that misty time could see so clearly, or that we in this clear age walk so stumblingly after him. Yet had he great wants, fit to be forgiven in so reverent antiquity. I account the *Mirror of Magistrates*² meetly furnished of beautiful parts, and in the Earl of Surrey's Lyrics many things tasting of a noble birth, and worthy of a noble mind. The Shepherd's Calendar hath much poetry in his Eclogues, indeed worthy the reading, if I be not deceived. That same framing of his style to an old rustic language I dare not allow, since neither Theocritus in Greek, Virgil in Latin, nor Sannazaro in Italian³ did affect it. Besides these, do I not remember to have seen but few (to speak boldly) printed, that have poetical sinews in them: for proof whereof, let but most of the verses be put in prose, and then ask the meaning; and it will be found that one verse did but beget another, without ordering at the first what should be at the last; which becomes a confused mass of words,

8. "An orator is made, but a poet must be born one."

9. The legendary craftsman who invented wings for himself and his son Icarus. Icarus did not follow his father's instructions and fell into the sea.

1. "Anything you please." The phrase following may be translated, "Whatever

I try to write will become verse."

2. A large collection of Elizabethan poems on the downfall of princes and men of power. The "beautiful parts" were probably in Sackville's Induction to it.

3. Three models for pastoral poetry.

with a tingling sound of rhyme, barely accompanied with reason.

Our tragedies and comedies (not without cause cried out against), observing rules neither of honest civility nor of skillful poetry, excepting *Gorboduc*⁴ (again, I say, of those that I have seen), which notwithstanding, as it is full of stately speeches and well-sounding phrases, climbing to the height of Seneca's style, and as full of notable morality, which it doth most delightfully teach, and so obtain the very end of poesy, yet in truth it is very defectious in the circumstances, which grieveth me, because it might not remain as an exact model of all tragedies. For it is faulty both in place and time, the two necessary companions of all corporal actions. For where the stage should always represent but one place, and the uttermost time presupposed in it should be, both by Aristotle's precept and common reason, but one day, there is both many days, and many places, inartificially imagined. But if it be so in Gorboduc, how much more in all the rest, where you shall have Asia of the one side, and Afric of the other, and so many other under-kingdoms, that the player, when he cometh in, must ever begin with telling where he is, or else the tale will not be conceived? Now ye shall have three ladies walk to gather flowers, and then we must believe the stage to be a garden. By and by we hear news of shipwreck in the same place, and then we are to blame if we accept it not for a rock. Upon the back of that comes out a hideous monster, with fire and smoke, and then the miserable beholders are bound to take it for a cave. While in the meantime two armies fly in, represented with four swords and bucklers,⁵ and then what hard heart will not receive it for a pitched field? Now, of time they are much more liberal, for ordinary it is that two young princes fall in love. After many traverses,⁶ she is got with child, delivered of a fair boy; he is lost, groweth a man, falls in love, and is ready to get another child; and all this in two hours' space: which, how absurd it is in sense, even sense may imagine, and art hath taught, and all ancient examples justified, and, at this day, the ordinary players in Italy will not err in. Yet will some bring in an example of Eunuchus in Terence,⁷ that containeth matter of two days, yet far short of twenty years. True it is, and so was it to be played in two days, and so fitted to the time it set forth. And though Plautus hath in one place done amiss, let us hit with him, and not miss with him. But they will say, How then shall we set forth a story, which containeth both many places and many times? And do they not know that a tragedy is tied to the laws of poesy, and not of history; not bound to follow the story, but, having liberty, either to feign a quite new

4. A Senecan play by Thomas Sackville and Thomas Norton, published in 1565 and called the first regular English tragedy. The tragedies of the Roman dramatist Seneca (5 B.C.-A.D. 65) are written in a highly rhetorical, de-clamatory style.

5. Shields.

6. Difficulties, mishaps.

7. Terence (195-159 B.C.) and Plautus (251-184 B.C.) were the chief Latin writers of comedy.

WRONG
Your folly
Sidney

matter, or to frame the history to the most tragical conveniency? Again, many things may be told which cannot be showed, if they know the difference betwixt reporting and representing. As, for example, I may speak (though I am here) of Peru, and in speech digress from that to the description of Calicut; but in action I cannot represent it without Pacolet's horse.⁸ And so was the manner the ancients took, by some Nuncius⁹ to recount things done in former time or other place. Lastly, if they will represent an history, they must not (as Horace saith) begin ab ovo,¹ but they must come to the principal point of that one action which they will represent. By example this will be best expressed. I have a story of young Polydorus,² delivered for safety's sake, with great riches, by his father Priam to Polymnestor, king of Thrace, in the Trojan war time. He, after some years, hearing the overthrow of Priam, for to make the treasure his own, murdereth the child. The body of the child is taken up by Hecuba. She, the same day, findeth a sleight to be revenged most cruelly of the tyrant. Where now would one of our tragedy writers begin, but with the delivery of the child? Then should he sail over into Thrace, and so spend I know not how many years, and travel numbers of places. But where doth Euripides? Even with the finding of the body, leaving the rest to be told by the spirit of Polydorus. This need no further to be enlarged; the dullest wit may conceive it.

But besides these gross absurdities, how all their plays be neither right tragedies, nor right comedies, mingling kings and clowns, not because the matter so carrieth it, but thrust in clowns by head and shoulders, to play a part in majestical matters, with neither decency nor discretion,³ so as neither the admiration and commiseration, nor the right sportfulness, is by their mongrel tragicomedy obtained. I know Apuleius⁴ did somewhat so, but that is a thing recounted with space of time, not represented in one moment: and I know the ancients have one or two examples of tragicomedies, as Plautus hath Amphitruo.⁵ But, if we mark them well, we shall find, that they never, or very daintily, match hornpipes⁶ and funerals. So falleth it out that, having indeed no right comedy, in that comical part of our tragedy we have nothing but scurrility, unworthy of any chaste ears, or some extreme show of doltishness, indeed fit to lift up a loud laughter, and nothing else: where the whole tract of a comedy should be full of delight, as the tragedy should be still maintained in a well-raised admiration. But our comedians

WRONG Think of Lear's Fool or Hamlet's gravediggers.
8. A magic horse in the French romance Valentine and Orson. "Calicut": Calcutta.

9. Messenger.

1. From the beginning (literally, "from the egg").

2. In Euripides' Hecuba.

3. Mingling of social levels (kings and clowns) was thought to be a violation of the principle of decorum.

4. Not a dramatist, but the 2nd-century Roman author of the popular satirical novel, The Golden Ass.

5. Amphitruo is tragicomic only in that it contains gods and heroes; otherwise it is pure comedy.

6. Merry tunes for country dances.

think there is no delight without laughter; which is very wrong, for though laughter may come with delight, yet cometh it not of delight, as though delight should be the cause of laughter; but well may one thing breed both together. Nay, rather in themselves they have, as it were, a kind of contrariety: for delight we scarcely do but in things that have a conveniency to ourselves or to the general nature: laughter almost ever cometh of things most disproportioned to ourselves and nature. Delight hath a joy in it, either permanent or present. Laughter hath only a scornful tickling. For example, we are ravished with delight to see a fair woman, and yet are far from being moved to laughter. [We laugh at deformed creatures, wherein certainly we cannot delight. We delight in good chances, we laugh at mischances; we delight to hear the happiness of our friends, or country, at which he were worthy to be laughed at that would laugh. We shall, contrarily, laugh sometimes to find a matter quite mistaken and go down the hill against the bias, in the mouth of some such men, as for the respect of them one shall be heartily sorry, yet he cannot choose but laugh; and so is rather pained than delighted with laughter. Yet deny I not but that they may go well together. For as in Alexander's picture well set out we delight without laughter, and in twenty mad antics we laugh without delight, so in Hercules, painted with his great beard and furious countenance, in woman's attire, spinning at Omphale's commandment,⁷ it breedeth both delight and laughter. For the representing of so strange a power in love procureth delight: and the scornfulness of the action stirreth laughter. But I speak to this purpose, that all the end of the comical part be not upon such scornful matters as stirreth laughter only, but, mixed with it, that delightful teaching which is the end of poesy. And the great fault even in that point of laughter, and forbidden plainly by Aristotle, is that they stir laughter in sinful things, which are rather execrable than ridiculous; or in miserable, which are rather to be pitied than scorned. For what is it to make folks gape at a wretched beggar, or a beggarly clown,⁸ or, against law of hospitality, to jest at strangers, because they speak not English so well as we do? What do we learn? Since it is certain

*Nil habet infelix paupertas durius in se,
Quam quod ridiculos homines facit.*⁸

But rather a busy loving courtier, a heartless threatening Thraso, a self-wise-seeming schoolmaster, an awry-transformed traveler—these if we saw walk in stage names, which we play naturally, therein were delightful laughter, and teaching delightfulness: as in the

7. Hercules was so infatuated with Omphale, queen of Lydia, that he submitted to being dressed as a female slave and forced to spin wool.

8. "Unfortunate poverty has in itself nothing harder to bear than that it makes men ridiculous" (Juvenal, Satires III.152-53).

⁸ clown = rustic, country bumpkin

other, the tragedies of Buchanan do justly bring forth a divine admiration. But I have lavished out too many words of this play matter. I do it because, as they are excelling parts of poesy, so is there none so much used in England, and none can be more pitifully abused; which, like an unmannerly daughter showing a bad education, causeth her mother Poesy's honesty to be called in question.

Other sorts of poetry almost have we none, but that lyrical kind of songs and sonnets: which, Lord, if He gave us so good minds, how well it might be employed, and with how heavenly fruit, both private and public, in singing the praises of the immortal beauty, the immortal goodness of that God who giveth us hands to write and wits to conceive; of which we might well want words, but never matter; of which we could turn our eyes to nothing, but we should ever have new budding occasions. But truly many of such writings as come under the banner of unresistible love, if I were a mistress, would never persuade me they were in love; so coldly they apply fiery speeches, as men that had rather read lovers' writings, and so caught up certain swelling phrases (which hang together like a man which once told me the wind was at northwest, and by south, because he would be sure to name winds enough), than that in truth they feel those passions, which easily (as I think) may be betrayed by that same forcibleness, or energia (as the Greeks call it) of the writer. But let this be a sufficient though short note, that we miss the right use of the material point of poesy.

Now, for the outside of it, which is words, or (as I may term it) diction, it is even well worse. So is that honey-flowing matron Eloquence appareled, or rather disguised, in a courtesan-like painted affectation: one time with so farfetched words, they may seem monsters, but must seem strangers, to any poor Englishman; another time, with coursing of a letter,⁹ as if they were bound to follow the method of a dictionary; another time, with figures and flowers,¹ extremely winter-starved. But I would this fault were only peculiar to versifiers, and had not as large possession among prose-printers, and (which is to be marveled) among many scholars, and (which is to be pitied) among some preachers. Truly I could wish, if at least I might be so bold to wish in a thing beyond the reach of my capacity, the diligent imitators of Tully² and Demosthenes (most worthy to be imitated) did not so much keep Nizolian paper-books³ of their figures and phrases, as by attentive translation (as it were) devour them whole, and make them wholly theirs. For now

9. Alliteration.

1. Of rhetoric.

2. Cicero.

3. Marius Nizolius or Nizzoli (1498?–1576), Italian rhetorician and lexicographer, published a collection of Ciceroian phrases in 1535. Ascham mentions the keeping of similar books in The Scholemaster.

they cast sugar and spice upon every dish that is served to the table, like those Indians, not content to wear earrings at the fit and natural place of the ears, but they will thrust jewels through their nose and lips, because they will be sure to be fine. Tully, when he was to drive out Catiline, as it were with a thunderbolt of eloquence, often used that figure of repetition, *Vivit. Vivit? Immo in Senatum venit,*⁴ etc. Indeed, inflamed with a well-grounded rage, he would have his words (as it were) double out of his mouth, and so do that artificially which we see men do in choler naturally. And we, having noted the grace of those words, hale them in sometime to a familiar epistle, when it were too much choler to be cholerick.

Now for similitudes in certain printed discourses, I think all Herbarists,⁵ all stories of beasts, fowls, and fishes are rifled up, that they come in multitudes to wait upon any of our conceits; which certainly is as absurd a surfeit to the ears as is possible: for the force of a similitude not being to prove anything to a contrary disputer, but only to explain to a willing hearer; when that is done, the rest is a most tedious prattling, rather over-swaying the memory from the purpose whereto they were applied, than any whit informing the judgment, already either satisfied, or by similitudes not to be satisfied. For my part, I do not doubt, when Antonius and Crassus, the great forefathers of Cicero in eloquence, the one (as Cicero testifieth of them) pretended not to know art, the other not to set by it, because with a plain sensibleness they might win credit of popular ears; which credit is the nearest step to persuasion; which persuasion is the chief mark of oratory—I do not doubt (I say) but that they used these knacks very sparingly; which, who doth generally use, any man may see doth dance to his own music; and so be noted by the audience more careful to speak curiously than to speak truly.

Undoubtedly (at least to my opinion undoubtedly) I have found in divers small-learned courtiers a more sound style than in some professors of learning: of which I can guess no other cause, but that the courtier, following that which by practice he findeth fittest to nature, therein (though he know it not) doth according to art, though not by art: where the other, using art to show art, and not to hide art (as in these cases he should do), flieth from nature, and indeed abuseth art.

But what? Methinks I deserve to be pounded for straying from poetry to oratory: but both have such an affinity in this wordish consideration, that I think this digression will make my meaning receive the fuller understanding—which is not to take upon me to teach poets how they should do, but only, finding myself sick among the rest, to show some one or two spots of the common infection grown among the most part of writers: that, acknowledging ourselves somewhat awry, we may bend to the right use both of matter and manner; whereto our language giveth us great occasion, being indeed capable of any excellent exercising of it. I know some will say it is a mingled language. And why not so much the better, taking the best of both the other? Another will say it wanteth grammar. Nay truly, it hath that praise, that it wanteth not grammar: for grammar it might have, but it needs it not; being so easy of itself, and so void of those cumbersome differences of cases, genders, moods, and tenses, which I think was a piece of the Tower of Babylon's curse, that a man should be put to school to learn his mother tongue. But for the uttering sweetly and properly the conceits of the mind, which is the end of speech, that hath it equally with any other tongue in the world: and is particularly happy in compositions of two or three words together, near the Greek, far beyond the Latin: which is one of the greatest beauties can be in a language.

4. Sidney quotes rather freely from memory a line from Cicero (Catiline, 1, 2): "He lives, nay more, he comes into the Senate."

5. Writers who, like Lyly, introduce botanical and zoological analogies into their writing.

Now, of versifying there are two sorts, the one ancient, the other modern: the ancient marked the quantity of each syllable, and according to that framed his verse; the modern observing only number⁶ (with some regard of the accent), the chief life of it standeth in that like sounding of the words, which we call rhyme. Whether of these be the most excellent, would bear many speeches. The ancient, no doubt, more fit for music, both words and tune observing quantity, and more fit lively to express divers passions, by the low and lofty sound of the well-weighted syllable. The latter likewise, with his rhyme, striketh a certain music to the ear: and, in fine, since it doth delight, though by another way, it obtains the same purpose: there being in either sweetness, and wanting in neither majesty. Truly the English, before any other vulgar language I know, is fit for both sorts: for, for the ancient, the Italian is so full of vowels that it must ever be cumbered with elisions; the Dutch so, of the other side, with consonants, that they cannot yield the sweet sliding fit for a verse; the French, in his whole language, hath not one word that hath his accent in the last syllable saving two, called antepenultima; and little more hath the Spanish: and, therefore, very gracelessly may they use dactyls. The English is subject to none of these defects.

Now, for the rhythm, though we do not observe quantity, yet we observe the accent very precisely: which other languages either cannot do, or will not do so absolutely. That caesura, or breathing place in the midst of the verse, neither Italian nor Spanish have, the French, and we, never almost fail of. Lastly, even the very

6. "Quantity" meant length or duration of a syllable; by "number" Sidney means merely counting the syllables.

rhyme itself the Italian cannot put in the last syllable, by the French named the "masculine rhyme," but still in the next to the last, which the French call the "female," or the next before that, which the Italians term sdrucchiola. The example of the former is buono: suono, of the sdrucchiola, femina: semina. The French, of the other side, hath both the male, as bon: son, and the female, as plaise: taise, but the sdrucchiola he hath not: where the English hath all three, as due: true; father: rather; motion: potion;¹ with much more which might be said, but that I find already the triflingness of this discourse is much too much enlarged.

So that since the ever-praiseworthy poesy is full of virtue-breeding delightfulness, and void of no gift that ought to be in the noble name of learning; since the blames laid against it are either false or feeble; since the cause why it is not esteemed in England is the fault of poet-apes, not poets; since, lastly, our tongue is most fit to honor poesy, and to be honored by poesy; I conjure you all that have had the evil luck to read this ink-wasting toy of mine, even in the name of the Nine Muses, no more to scorn the sacred mysteries of poesy, no more to laugh at the name of "poets," as though they were next inheritors to fools, no more to jest at the reverent title of a "rhymers"; but to believe, with Aristotle, that they were the ancient treasurers of the Grecians' divinity; to believe, with Bembus, that they were first bringers-in of all civility; to believe, with Scaliger, that no philosopher's precepts can sooner make you an honest man than the reading of Virgil; to believe, with Clauserus,² the translator of Cornutus, that it pleased the heavenly Deity, by Hesiod and Homer, under the veil of fables, to give us all knowledge, logic, rhetoric, philosophy, natural and moral, and Quid non?;³ to believe, with me, that there are many mysteries contained in poetry, which of purpose were written darkly, lest by profane wits it should be abused; to believe, with Landin,⁴ that they are so beloved of the gods that whatsoever they write proceeds of a divine fury; lastly, to believe themselves, when they tell you they will make you immortal by their verses.

Thus doing, your name shall flourish in the printers' shops; thus doing, you shall be of kin to many a poetical preface; thus doing, you shall be most fair, most rich, most wise, most all; you shall dwell upon superlatives. Thus doing, though you be libertino patre natus,⁵ you shall suddenly grow Herculeæ proles,⁶

1. These were three-syllable words in Elizabethan pronunciation.

2. Conrad Clauser (ca. 1520-1611), a German scholar; he translated a Greek treatise by Cornutus, who was a contemporary of Nero's.

3. What not.

4. Cristoforo Landino, 15th-century Italian scholar and onetime tutor to Lorenzo de Medici.

5. "Born of a freed slave father."

6. I.e., a descendent of Hercules. The next phrase means "if my songs are of any avail" (Aeneid IX.446).

Si quid mea carmina possunt.

Thus doing, your soul shall be placed with Dante's Beatrice, or Virgil's Anchises. But if (fie of such a but) you be born so near the dull-making cataract of Nilus⁷ that you cannot hear the planet-like music of poetry, if you have so earth-creeping a mind that it cannot lift itself up to look to the sky of poetry, or rather, by a certain rustical disdain, will become such a mome⁸ as to be a Momus of poetry; then, though I will not wish unto you the ass's ears of Midas,⁹ nor to be driven by a poet's verses (as Bubonax¹ was) to hang himself, nor to be rhymed to death, as is said to be done in Ireland;² yet thus much curse I must send you, in the behalf of all poets, that while you live, you live in love, and never get favor for lacking skill of a sonnet, and, when you die, your memory die from the earth for want of an epitaph.

1595

7. According to Cicero, people living near the cataracts of the Nile became deaf from the noise. "Planet-like music": the music of the spheres was supposed to be the most beautiful of all music.

8. A stupid person; "Momus": a critic.

9. He was given ass's ears because he preferred Pan's playing to Apollo's.

1. Bupalus, a sculptor, was so ashamed when his works were satirized by the poet Hipponax that he hanged himself. Sidney fuses the two names.

2. There was a popular tradition that Irish bards could cause death by their incantations.

EDMUND SPENSER

(1552-1599)

1579: Publication of The Shepheardes Calender.

1580: In Ireland, where he remains for the rest of his life.

1590: First three books of The Faerie Queene published.

The greatest nondramatic poet of the English Renaissance, Edmund Spenser, was born in London, probably in 1552, and attended the Merchant Taylors' School under its famous headmaster Richard Mulcaster. In 1569 he went to Cambridge as a "sizar" or poor scholar. His Cambridge experience strongly colored the rest of his life; it was at the university that Spenser began as a poet by translating some poems for a volume of anti-Catholic propaganda. His work, then and later, reflects the strong Puritanical environment of Cambridge where the popular preacher Thomas Cartwright was beginning to make the authorities uneasy. Spenser's friendship with Gabriel Harvey, a Cambridge don, humanist, pamphleteer, and eccentric, also began at the university. Some correspondence between Harvey and Spenser, published in 1580, shows that they were interested in theories of poetry and in experiments in quantitative versification in English; it also shows that Spenser had ambitious plans as a poet.

He proceeded through the university, receiving the degree of B.A. in 1573 and M.A. in 1576. He then entered upon a series of positions in the retinues of prominent men, including Dr. John Young, Bishop of Rochester; the Earl of Leicester, the queen's favorite; and finally, Lord Grey of Wilton, Lord Deputy of Ireland. During his employment in Leicester's household he came to know Sir Philip Sidney and his friend Sir Edward Dyer, courtiers who were interested in promoting a new English poetry. Spenser's own contribution to the movement is The Shepheardes Calender, published in 1579 and dedicated to Sidney in the verses:

To His Booke

Goe little booke: thy selfe present,
 As child whose parent is unkent,
 To him that is the president
 Of noblesse and of chevalree.
 And if that Envie barke at thee,
 As sure it will, for succoure flee
 Under the shadow of his wing
 And, asked who thee forth did bring,
 A shepheardes swaine saye did thee sing,
 All as his straying flocke he fedde;
 And when his honor has thee redde,
 Crave pardon for my hardy hedde.
 But if that any aske thy name,
 Say thou wert base begot with blame,
 For thy thereof thou takest shame.
 And when thou art past jeoparddee,
 Come tell me what was said of mee
 And I will send more after thee.

Immerito [Unworthy].

The Calender consists of twelve pastoral eclogues, one for each month of the year. Each is prefaced by an illustrative woodcut representing the characters or theme of the poem and picturing the appropriate sign of the zodiac for that month in the clouds above. The eclogue was a classical form, practiced by Virgil and others: it presents, usually in dialogue between shepherds, the moods and feelings and attitudes of the simple life. But often the pastoral eclogue criticizes the world as it is by reflection from the world as it might be, and in Spenser, as in other Renaissance poets, the eclogue at times becomes didactic or satirical. Though it pretends to represent simple shepherds, it is really commenting on contemporary affairs. The eclogues of the Calender are divided by its commentator, "E. K.," into three groups—plaintive, recreative, and moral. Of the moral eclogues, the final and climactic one is October, which deals with the problem of poetry in modern life and the responsibility of the poet in time—in an important way, the theme of the whole Calender. It looks forward to related themes in Milton's Lycidas.

Spenser used a deliberately archaic language, partly out of homage to Chaucer, whom he refers to as Tityrus, the god of shepherds, "who taught me, homely as I can, to make." But Spenser also used this language to get a rustic effect. The patron to whom the Calender is dedicated did not approve; Sidney wrote in his Apology for Poetry, "The Shepheardes Calender hath much poetry in his Eclogues, indeed worthy the reading, if I be not deceived. That same framing of his style to an old rustic language I dare not allow, since neither Theocritus in Greek, Virgil in Latin, nor Sannazaro in Italian did affect it." Another classical purist, Ben Jonson, growled that Spenser "writ no language," but that he would have him read for his matter. It would be a pity to follow Jonson's advice too literally, for Spenser's skillful use of many verse forms and his extraordinary musical effects indicate that here indeed is a poet to inaugurate the "new poetry" of the Elizabethan age.

There are thirteen different meters in The Shepheardes Calender: three kinds of couplet; three kinds of four-line stanza; three kinds of six-line stanza; stanzas of eight, nine, and ten lines; and a sestina. Some of these Spenser invented, some he adapted, but most of them were novel: only three or four were at all common in 1579. Spenser was a prolific experimenter: of the thirteen different meters in the Calender he used only three in his later poems. He went on to make further innovations—the special rhyme scheme of the Spenserian sonnet, richer than any other; the remarkably beautiful adaptation of Italian canzone forms for the Epithalamion and Prothalamion, and the nine-line stanza of The Faerie Queene, with its extraordinary six-foot line at the end, are only the most famous. Spenser is sometimes called the "poet's poet" because so many later English poets have learned the art of versification from him. In the 19th century alone his influence may be seen in Shelley's Revolt of Islam, Byron's Childe Harold's Pilgrimage, Keats's Eve of St. Agnes, and Tennyson's The Lotos Eaters.

The year after the publication of The Shepheardes Calender Spenser went to Ireland to serve Lord Grey; he spent the rest of his life there, except for two visits to England. He was at work on his great romantic epic, The Faerie Queene, when Sir Walter Raleigh visited him at Kilcolman Castle; the result was a trip to England and the publication, in 1590, of the first three books of The Faerie Queene. After that there was no question that Edmund Spenser was "the prince of poets in his time." He published a volume of poems called Complaints; a pastoral sequel to some of the eclogues in The Shepheardes Calender called Colin Clouts Come Home Againe (1595), which gave his views of the English court on his visit there in 1590; a sonnet cycle, Amoretti, and two marriage poems, Epithalamion and Prothalamion, but he completed only six of his projected twelve books of The Faerie Queene: in 1596 the first three books appeared again, with alterations, together with Books IV, V, and VI; the so-called "Mutability Cantos" first appeared in the edition of 1609.

In the second half of the decade, Ireland was torn by revolt and civil war; Spenser's castle was destroyed, and the poet was sent to England with messages from the besieged garrison in Ireland. He died in Westminster on January 13, 1599, and was buried near his beloved Chaucer in what is now called the Poets' Corner of Westminster Abbey.

Spenser is a complex genius who cannot be put into neatly labeled categories. He is, for instance, strongly influenced by Renaissance Neoplatonism, but remains always firmly grounded in earthiness and practicality. In The Faerie Queene he reaches toward the highest ideals of the Renaissance but knows, at the same time, what it is to want to remain an animal. He is a lover and celebrator of physical beauty, and he is sternly moral. His "morality" is, however, not of the repressive sort; it arises from his understanding of right action and of the temptations that entrap men as they try to achieve such action. Spenser was strongly influenced by Puritanism in his early days; he always remained a thoroughgoing Protestant; the Roman Catholic Church is made a villain in The Faerie Queene—and yet his understanding of faith and of sin has its roots in the great Catholic thinkers. He is profoundly English and patriotic; in him nationality and religion were inextricably joined. In the Proem to Book V of The Faerie Queene he characteristically looks back to the antique world and compares his own time with it most unfavorably. Yet his strongest links are not with the past, despite his love of Chaucer and his deliberately antique language: his closest affinity is with Milton, who was born nine years after Spenser's death. Milton called Spenser a better teacher than Scotus or Aquinas. He recognized Spenser, his great predecessor, as, like himself, a Christian humanist and British poet-prophet.

Spenser's poetry is always printed in the original spelling and punctuation (although a few of the most confusing punctuation marks have been altered in the present text), since it was a deliberate choice on Spenser's part that his language should seem antique. (A modern reader who read Shakespeare or the King James version of the Bible in the original spelling would not find as much difference in Spenser, but he would find some.) Furthermore, Spenser uses his spelling to suggest rhymes to the eye, sometimes to suggest etymologies, often incorrectly. The fact that Spenser's spelling is inconsistent is simply typical of his time; in the 16th century a man varied the spelling of even his name to suit convenience or a whim.

From THE SHEPHEARDES CALENDER¹

October

Argument

In Cuddie² is set out the perfecte paterne of a Poete, whiche finding no maintenaunce of his state and studies, complayneth of the contempte of Poetrie, and the causes thereof: Specially having

1. When The Shepheardes Calender was published in 1579, each of the twelve eclogues was followed by a "Glosse," which contained explications of difficult or archaic words, together with learned discussions of—and disagreements with—Spenser's ideas, imagery, and poetics. The Glosses are by one "E. K.," whose identity has never been satisfactorily ascertained. Although certain scholars have suggested that E. K. was Spenser himself, it is equally possible that he was a friend.

E. K.'s editorial apparatus is usually printed along with the poems from the Calender. In the text that follows, the present editor has incorporated the glosses into the footnotes, abridging only some of E. K.'s longer exegeses, anecdotes, and tags from classical and contemporary authors; the original spelling has also been retained. E. K. first discusses the poem's sources: "This Aeglogue is made in imitation of Theocritus his xvi. Idilion, wherein hee reproved the Tyranne Hiero of Syracuse for his nigardise toward Poetes, in whome is the power to make men immortal for theyr good dedes, or shameful for their naughty lyfe. And the lyke also is in Mantuane. The style hereof as also that in Theocritus, is more loftye then the rest, and applyed to the heighte of Poeticall witte." Actually Spenser's eclogue owes very little to Theocritus, but it does draw heavily upon the fifth eclogue of Baptista Spagnuoli, called Mantuan.

2. "I doubte whether by Cuddie be specified the authour selfe, or some bene in all ages, and even amongst the most barbarous alwayes of singular account³ and honor, and being indede so worthy and commendable an arte: or rather no arte, but a divine gift and heavenly instinct not to bee gotten by laboure and learning, but adorned with both: and poured into the witte by a certaine *ἐνθουσιασμός*⁴ and celestiall inspiration, as the Author hereof els where at large discourseth, in his booke called the English Poete, which booke being lately come to my hands, I mynde also by Gods grace upon further advisement to publish.

PIERS

Cuddie, for shame hold up thy heavey head,
And let us cast with what delight to chace,
And weary thys long lingring Phoebus race.⁵
Whilome⁶ thou wont the shepheards laddes to leade, formerly
5 In rymes, in ridles, and in bydding base:⁶
Now they in thee, and thou in sleepe art dead.

CUDDIE

Piers, I have pyped erst⁷ so long with payne, up to now
That all mine Oten reedes⁷ bene rent and wore:
And my poore Muse hath spent her sparéd store,
10 Yet little good hath got, and much lesse gayne.
Such pleasaunce makes the Grashopper so poore,
And ligge so layd,⁸ when Winter doth her straine:

The dapper⁹ ditties, that I wont devise,
To feede youthes fancie, and the flocking fry,
15 Delighten much: what I the bett forthy?
They han the pleasure, I a sclender prise.
I beate the bush, the byrds to them doe flye:
What good thereof to Cuddie can arise?

PIERS

Cuddie, the prayse is better, then the price,
20 The glory eke much greater then the gayne:
O what an honor is it, to restraine
The lust of lawlesse youth with good advice:¹

other. For in the eyght Aeglogue the same person was brought in, singing a Cansion of Colins making, as he sayth. So that some doubt, that the persons be different" [E. K.'s Glosse].

3. Account, reputation.

4. The Greek word from which "enthusiasm" comes; its original meaning was "possessed by a god." The "English Poete" is a lost work by Spenser, apparently never published.

5. I.e., let us see how we may pass the day pleasantly.

6. A popular game, here probably a poetry contest.

7. "Avena" [E. K.'s Glosse]. Avena means "stalks" and was used by Virgil (Eclogues I.2) to signify the shepherd's pipe. E. K. thinks Spenser's "oten reeds" translates Avena.

8. "Lye so faynt and unlustie" [E. K.'s Glosse]. The reference is to the fable of the industrious ant and the carefree grasshopper.

9. "Pretye" [E. K.'s Glosse]. "Frye is a bold Metaphore, forced from the spawning fishes. For the multitude of young fish be called the frye" [E. K.'s Glosse]. In the next line, "what * * * for thy?" means, "what better am I for this reason?"

1. "This place seemeth to conspyre with Plato, who in his first booke de Legibus sayth, that the first invention of Poetry was of very vertuous intent * * * " [E. K.'s Glosse].

Or pricke° them forth with pleasaunce of thy vaine,² stimulate
 Where to thou list their trayned° willes entice. ensnared

- 25 Soone as thou gynst to sette thy notes in frame,
 O how the rurall routes° to thee doe cleave: crowds
 Seemeth thou dost their soule of sence bereave,³
 All as the shepheard, that did fetch his dame
 From Plutoes balefull bowre withouten leave:
 30 His musicks might the hellish hound did tame.

CUDDIE

- So praysen babes the Peacocks spotted traine,
 And wondren at bright Argus blazing eye:⁴
 But who rewards him ere the more forthy?
 Or feedes him once the fuller by a graine?
 35 Sike° prayse is smoke, that sheddeth in the skye, such Sike words bene wynd, and wasten soone in vayne.

PIERS

- Abandon then the base and viler clowne,° rustic
 Lyft up thy selfe out of the lowly dust:
 And sing of bloody Mars, of wars, of giusts,° jousts
 40 Turne thee to those, that weld° the awful crowne. wield
 To doubted⁵ Knights, whose woundlesse armour rusts,
 And helmes unbruzéd wexen dayly browne.

- There may thy Muse display her fluttryng wing,⁶
 And stretch herselfe at large from East to West:
 45 Whither thou list in fayre Elisa rest,
 Or if thee please in bigger notes to sing,
 Advaunce the worthy whome shee loveth best,
 That first the white beare to the stake did bring.⁷

2. I.e., pleasure in your distinctive style.

3. "What the secrete working of Musick is in the myndes of men, as well appeareth, hereby, that some of the auncient Philosophers, and those the moste wise, as Plato and Pythagoras held for opinion, that the mynd was made of a certaine harmonie and musickall numbers, for the great compassion and likenes of affection in thone and in the other * * * So that it is not incredible which the Poete here sayth, that Musick can bereave the soule of sence" [E. K.'s Glosse]. The "shepheard" in the next line is "Orpheus: of whom is sayd, that by his excellent skil in Musick and Poetry, he recovered his wife Eurydice from hell" [E. K.'s Glosse].

4. "Of Argus is before said, that Juno to him committed hir husband Jupiter his Paragon Iô, because he had an hundred eyes: but afterwarde Mercury wyth hys Musick lulling Argus aslepe, slew him and brought Iô away, whose eyes it is sayd that Juno for his eternall memory placed in her byrd the Peacocks taylor. For those coloured spots indeede resemble eyes" [E. K.'s Glosse].

5. Redoubted, dreaded. The knights' "armour" is "woundlesse" because "unwounded in warre, [they] doe rust through long peace" [E. K.'s Glosse].

6. "A poetickall metaphore: whereof the meaning is, that if the Poet list shewe his skill in matter of more dignitie, then is the homely Aeglogue, good occasion is him offered of higher veyne and more Heroicall argument, in the person of our most gracious sovereign, whom (as before) he calleth Elisa. Or if mater of knighthood and chevalrie please him better, that there be many Noble and valiaunt men, that are both worthy of his payne in their deserved prayes, and also favourers of hys skil and faculty" [E. K.'s Glosse].

7. "He meaneth (as I guesse) the most honorable and renowned the Erle of Leicester * * * " [E. K.'s Glosse]. Leicester's device was the bear and ragged staff.

And when the stubborne stroke of stronger stounds,[°] efforts
 50 Has somewhat slackt the tenor of thy string:⁸
 Of love and lustihead[°] tho mayst thou sing, pleasure
 And carrol lowde, and leade the Myllers rownde,⁹
 All[°] were Elisa one of thilke same ring. although
 So mought our Cuddies name to Heaven sownde.

CUDDIE

55 Indeede the Romish Tityrus,¹ I heare,
 Through his Mecaenas left his Oaten reede,
 Whereon he earst[°] had taught his flocks to feede, before
 And laboured lands to yield the timely eare,
 And eft did sing of warres and deadly drede.²
 60 So as the Heavens did quake his verse to here.

But ah Mecaenas is yclad in claye,
 And great Augustus long ygoe is dead:
 And all the worthies liggén wrapt in leade,
 That matter made for Poets on to play:
 65 For ever, who in derring doe³ were dreade,
 The loftie verse of hem was loved aye.⁴

But after vertue gan for age to stoupe,
 And mighty manhode brought a bedde of ease:⁵
 The vaunting Poets found nought worth a pease,
 70 To put in preace⁶ among the learned troupe.
 Tho gan the streames of flowing wittes to cease,
 And sonnebright honour pend in shamefull coupe.⁷

And if that any buddes of Poesie,
 Yet of the old stocke gan to shoote agayne:

8. "That is when thou chaungest thy verse from stately discourse, to matter of more pleasaunce and delight" [E. K.'s Glosse].

9. "A kind of daunce" [E. K.'s Glosse]. "Ring," in the next line, E. K. explains as a "company of dauncers."

1. "Well known to be Virgile, who by Mecaenas means was brought into the favour of the Emperor Augustus, and by him moved to write in loftier kinde, then he erst had doen" [E. K.'s Glosse].

2. "In these three verses are the three severall workes of Virgile intended. For in teaching his flocks to feede, is meant his Aeglogues. In labouring of lands, is hys Bucoliques. In singing of wars and deadly drede, is his divine Aeneis figured" [E. K.'s Glosse].

3. "In manhoode and chevalrie" [E. K.'s Glosse].

4. "He sheweth the cause, why Poetes were wont be had in such honor of noble men; that is, that by them their worthines and valor shold through theyr famous Posies be commended to al posterities. Wherefore it is sayd, that Achilles had never bene so famous, as he is, but for Homeres immortal verses. Which is the only advantage, which he had of Hector. * * * As also that Alexander destroying Thebes, when he was enformed that the famous Lyrick Poet Pindarus was borne in that citie, not onely commaunded streightly, that no man should upon payne of death do any violence to that house by fire or otherwise: but also specially spared most, and some highly rewarded, that were of hys kinne. * * * Such honor have Poetes alwayes found in the sight of princes and noble men. Which this author here very well sheweth, as els where more notably" [E. K.'s Glosse].

5. "He sheweth the cause of contempt of Poetry to be idlenesse and basenesse of mynd" [E. K.'s Glosse].

6. Put in press, crowd in among.

7. Coop. E. K. explains the phrase as "shut up in slouth, as in a coope or cage."

- 75 Or^o it mens follies mote be frost to fayne,
 And rolle with rest in rymes of rybaudrye:
 Or as it sprong, it wither must agayne:
 Tom Piper makes us better melodie.⁸

either

PIERS

- O pierlesse Poesye, where is then thy place?
 80 If nor in Princes pallace thou doe sitt:
 (And yet is Princes pallace the most fitt)
 Ne brest of baser birth⁹ doth thee embrace.
 Then make thee winges of thine aspyring wit,
 And, whence thou camst, flye backe to heaven apace.

CUDDIE

- 85 Ah Percy it is all to weake and wanne,
 So high to sore, and make so large a flight:
 Her peeced pyneons¹ bene not so in plight,
 For Colin fittes such famous flight to scanne:
 He, were he not with love so ill bedight,^o
 90 Would mount as high, and sing as soote as Swanne.²

furnished

PIERS

- Ah fon,^o for love does teach him climbe so hie,
 And lyftes him up out of the loathsome myre:
 Such immortall mirrhor,³ as he doth admire,
 Would rayse ones mynd above the starry skie.
 95 And cause a caytive corage⁴ to aspire,
 For lofty love doth loath a lowly eye.

fool

CUDDIE

- All otherwise the state of Poet stands,
 For lordly love is such a Tyranne fell:
 That where he rules, all power he doth expell.
 100 The vaunted verse a vacant head Jemaundes,
 Ne wont with crabbéd care the Muses dwell.
 Unwisely weaves, that takes two webbes in hand.

- Who ever casts^o to compasse weightye prise,
 And thinks to throwe out thondring words of threate:
 105 Let powre in lavish cups and thriftie bitts of meate,⁵
 For Bacchus fruite is frend to Phoebus wise.

tries

8. "An Ironicall Sarcasmus, spoken in derision of these rude wits, whych make more account of a ryming rybaud, then of skill grounded upon learning and judgment" [E. K.'s Glosse].

9. "The meaner sort of men" [E. K.'s Glosse].

1. Patched-up wings. "Unperfect skil. Spoken wyth humble modestie" [E. K.'s Glosse]. "Colin fittes": it is appropriate for Colin (Spenser).

2. "The comparison seemeth to be strange: for the swanne hath ever wonne small commendation for her swete singing: but it is sayd of the learned that the swan a little before hir death, singeth most pleasantly, as prophceying by a secrete instinct her neere destinie * * * " [E. K.'s Glosse].

3. "Beauty, which is an excellent object of Poeticall spirites * * * " [E. K.'s Glosse].

4. "A base and abject minde" [E. K.'s Glosse].

5. I.e., let him pour lavish drink and nourishing ("thrifty") food.

And when with Wine the braine begins to sweate,
The numbers flowe as fast as spring doth ryse.

Thou kenst not Percie howe the ryme should rage.

110 O if my temples were distaind^o with wine,⁶ distended

And girt in girlonds of wild Yvie twine,
How I could reare the Muse on stately stage,
And teache her tread aloft in bus-kin⁷ fine,
With queint Bellona⁸ in her equipage.

115 But ah my corage cooles ere it be warme,
For thy, content us in thys humble shade:
Where no such troublous tydes^o han us assayde, seasons
Here we our slender pipes may safely charme.⁹

PIERS

And when my Gates shall han their bellies layd:¹

120 Cuddie shall have a Kidde to store his farme.

Cuddies Embleme.²

Agitante calescimus illo &c.

1579

6. "He seemeth here to be ravished with a Poetical furie. For (if one rightly mark) the numbers rise so ful, and the verse groweth so big, that it seemeth he hath forgot the meannesse of shepheards state and stile" [E. K.'s Glosse]. E. K. adds an explanation of "wild Yvie" in the next line: "For it is dedicated to Bacchus and therefore it is sayd that the Maenades (that is Bacchus franticke priestes) used in theyr sacrifice to carry Thyrsos, which were pointed staves or Javelins, wrapped about with yvie."

7. "It was the maner of Poetes and plaiers in tragedies to were buskins, as also in Comedies to use stockes and light shoes. So that the buskin in Poetry is used for tragical matter * * * " [E. K.'s Glosse].

8. "Strange Bellona; the goddesse of bataille, that is Pallas, which may therefore wel be called queint for that (as Lucian saith) when Jupiter hir father was in traveile of her, he caused his sonne Vulcane with his axe to hew his head. Out of which leaped forth lustely a valiant damsell armed at all poyntes, whom seeing Vulcane so faire and comely, lightly leaping to her, proffered her some cortesie, which the Lady disdeigning, shaken her speare at him, and threatned his saucinesse. Therefore such straungenesse is well applied to her" [E. K.'s Glosse]. E. K. also glosses "equipage": order.

9. "Temper and order. For Charmes were wont to be made by verses as Ovid sayth, Aut si carminibus" [E. K.'s Glosse]. E. K. had a slip of memory: the fragment is not in Ovid.

1. I.e., when my goats bear their young.

2. An "embleme" is a motto or relevant quotation. The Latin line, of which Spenser gives the first three words here, is from Ovid, Fasti vi.5: "There is a god within us; it is from his stirring that we feel warm." E. K. comments on the quotation: "Hereby is meant, as also in the whole course of this Aeglogue, that Poetry is a divine instinct and unnatural rage passing the reache of comen reason. Whom Piers answereth Epiphonematicos [by way of summary] as admiring the excellencye of the skylle whereof in Cuddie hee hadde al-readye hadde a taste."

The Faerie Queene Spenser's masterpiece is a poem peculiarly characteristic of its age. It is a "courtesy book," like Castiglione's Courtier, intended to "fashion a gentleman or noble person" by exhibiting the traits such a person should have. Only six of the twelve projected books were finished. These exhibit the virtues of Holiness, Temperance, Chastity, Friendship, Justice, and Courtesy. A fragment of another book, the cantos on Mutability, also survives. But whereas the ordinary courtesy book was a piece of explanation and exhortation, The Faerie Queene is also a poem, and, as Elizabethans all believed, a poem teaches by delighting. Spenser's great work is full of adventures and marvels, dragons, witches, enchanted trees, giants, jousting knights, and castles; a romantic epic, like Ariosto's Orlando Furioso (1516). But it is also an allegory, like Tasso's Gerusalemme Liberata (1575); the heroes of the several books represent the virtues portrayed in those books. The Redcrosse Knight in Book I is of course St. George, the patron saint of England, but he also represents Holiness, as Sir Guyon in Book II represents Temperance (not simply abstinence in drinking but self-control under all the temptations of the senses). The heroes do not have the virtues they represent at the beginning of their adventures—they acquire them in the course of the book. Spenser explains his allegorical method in a preliminary letter to Sir Walter Raleigh; however he does not explain what would be obvious to every contemporary reader, the many conventional symbols and attributes which would identify his characters. For example, when a woman appears who has a miter, wears scarlet clothes, and comes from the river Tiber, the reader is supposed to know immediately that she stands for the Roman Catholic Church, which had been so often identified by Protestant preachers with the Whore of Babylon in the Book of Revelation.

Book I of The Faerie Queene is in a way an epitome of the whole poem, or the part of it Spenser completed. It is almost entirely self-contained; it has been called a miniature epic in itself. It consists of twelve cantos, as Virgil's Aeneid consists of twelve books. The introductory lines are intended to remind the reader of Virgil, who began with pastoral poetry and moved on to the epic, as Spenser is now doing.

The theme is not arms and the man, however, but something more romantic—"Fierce warres and faithfull loves." The scenery, too, is not classical but romantic. There are plains and forests and caves and castles and magical trees and springs; one meets dwarfs and giants and lions and pilgrims and magicians and Saracens or "paynims" (with French names). An accurate map of Faerie Land is impossible but unnecessary; if you are going somewhere you just start out and, after many adventures, get there. A clear, pleasant stream may be dangerous to drink because it produces loss of strength. Any stranger you meet is more than likely to be a villain and to be in disguise.

The good people are subject to the Faerie Queene and are called Faeries or Elves. They are human beings, though not much individualized. They undergo the trials and tribulations men undergo in the ordinary world, but these events are told in a romantic, fantastic way in order to arouse wonder. The bad creatures, people and monsters, are various vices, evils, and temptations, often revealed to the reader by their names or by the short verse summaries at the beginning of each canto but not revealed to the hero until he has conquered them. Houses, castles, and animals also stand for abstract virtues or vices. The world of Faerie Land is a visual world in which the meaning of something is made fully evident by its appearance when stripped of all disguise.

Read as romantic narrative, the plot of Book I is a series of chivalric adventures undertaken by the Redcrosse Knight culminating in his killing the dragon, rescuing Una's parents, and winning her as his bride. Read as spiritual allegory, the book tells the story of the Christian's struggle for salvation—his wandering between the evil extremes of pride and despair, his encounter with the seven deadly sins, his separation from and reunion with the one true faith, the purgation of his sinfulness, and his final salvation by divine grace added to heroic effort.

The poem can be enjoyed on many levels, and it may, in fact, work on several of these levels at a time. In addition to being—most especially—a heroic poem and a spiritual allegory, it also embodies many religious and political aspects of Spenser's own England; a "political allegory" runs all through Book I. This is a romantic, "medieval," heroic, religious, political, magical world, and the reader entering it must be prepared to move as the story moves, taking the meanings on whatever level seems most viable at the moment. Spenser is not a great explainer; more usually, he gives the reader a scene or a surface, and lets the full allegorical import work its way out.

Moreover, that scene or surface may draw on the riches of literary and pictorial traditions. Entire episodes may be adopted from the Italian romantic epics of Ariosto and Tasso and, either through them or independently, from Homer, Virgil, or Ovid (this was an age when borrowing and reworking earlier materials was praiseworthy in a poet). Places, such as Lucifera's castle; individual attributes, such as Una's lamb or Speranza's anchor; even names or colors came to Spenser from the classics, from theologians, from liturgical tradition, from the village pulpit, from folk tales and pageants, from tapestries, paintings, and emblem books. In our notes we have attempted to show what some of the sources were—but more important is the understanding that these traditions had a life for Spenser and his readers; they could flow together, separate, recombine.

The strangeness of The Faerie Queene becomes, on closer acquaintance, a source of delight. No work of the English Renaissance is more exuberant, more fertile, more full.

From THE FAERIE QUEENE

1552

A Letter of the Authors

EXPOUNDING HIS WHOLE INTENTION IN THE COURSE OF THIS WORKE: WHICH FOR THAT IT GIVETH GREAT LIGHT TO THE READER, FOR THE BETTER UNDERSTANDING IS HEREUNTO ANNEXED

To the Right noble, and Valorous, Sir Walter Raleigh knight, Lo. Wardein of the Stanneryes, and her Majesties liefetenaunt of the County of Cornewayll

Sir knowing how doubtfully all Allegories may be construed, and this booke of mine, which I have entituled the Faery Queene, being a continued Allegory, or darke conceit, I have thought good as well for avoyding of gealous opinions and misconstructions, as also for your better light in reading thereof, (being so by you commanded,) to discover unto you the general intention and meaning, which in the whole course thereof I have fashioned, without expressing of any particular purposes or by-accidents¹ therein occasioned. The generall end therefore of all the booke is to fashion² a gentleman or noble person in vertuous and gentle discipline: Which for that I conceived shoulde be most plausible and pleasing, being coloured with an historicall fiction, the which the most part of men delight to read, rather for variety of matter, then for profite of the ensample: I chose the historye of King Arthure, as most fitte for the excellency of his person, being made famous by many mens former workes, and also furthest from the daunger of envy, and suspection of present time.³ In which I have followed all the antique Poets historicall, first Homere, who in the Persons of Agamemnon and Ulysses hath ensampled a good governour and a vertuous man, the one in his Ilias, the other in his Odysseis: then Virgil, whose like intention was to doe in the person of Aeneas: after him Ariosto comprised them both in his Orlando: and lately Tasso dissevered them againe, and formed both parts in two persons, namely that part which they in Philosophy call Ethice, or vertues of a private man, coloured in his Rinaldo: The other named Politice in his Godfredo.⁴ By ensample of which excellent Poets, I labour to pourtraict in Arthure, before he was king, the image of a brave knight, perfected in the twelve private morall vertues, as Aristotle

1. Secondary matters.

2. I.e., to represent (secondarily, to educate).

3. I.e., free from current political controversy.

4. Lodovico Ariosto (1474-1533) was author of the epic-romance Orlando Fu- rioso, first published in complete form in 1532; Torquato Tasso (1544-95) published his chivalric romance Rinaldo in 1562 and the epic Gerusalemme Liberata (centered on the heroic figure of Count Godfredo) in 1581.

hath devised,⁵ the which is the purpose of these first twelve bookes: which if I finde to be well accepted, I may be perhaps encouraged, to frame the other part of polliticke vertues in his person, after that hee came to be king. To some I know this Methode will seeme displeasaunt, which had rather have good discipline delivered plainly in way of precepts, or sermoned at large, as they use, then thus clowdily enwrapped in Allegoricall devises. But such, me seeme, should be satisfide with the use of these dayes, seeing all things accounted by their shoves, and nothing esteemed of, that is not delightfull and pleasing to commune sence. For this cause is Xenophon preferred before Plato, for that the one in the exquisite depth of his judgment, formed a Commune welth⁶ such as it should be, but the other in the person of Cyrus and the Persians fashioned a government such as might best be: So much more profitable and gracious is doctrine by ensample, then by rule. So have I laboured to doe in the person of Arthure: whome I conceive after his long education by Timon, to whom he was by Merlin delivered to be brought up, so soone as he was borne of the Lady Igrayne, to have seene in a dream or vision the Faery Queen, with whose excellent beauty ravished, he awaking resolved to seeke her out, and so being by Merlin armed, and by Timon throughly instructed, he went to seeke her forth in Faerye land. In that Faery Queene I meane glory in my generall intention, but in my particular I conceive the most excellent and glorious person of our sovaine the Queene, and her kingdome in Faery land. And yet in some places els, I doe otherwise shadow⁷ her. For considering she beareth two persons, the one of a most royall Queene or Empresse, the other of a most vertuous and beautifull Lady, this latter part in some places I doe express in Belpheobe, fashioning her name according to your owne excellent concept of Cynthia,⁸ (Phoebe and Cynthia being both names of Diana.) So in the person of Prince Arthure I sette forth magnificence in particular, which vertue for that (according to Aristotle and the rest) it is the perfection of all the rest, and conteineth in it them all, therefore in the whole course I mention the deedes of Arthure applyable to that vertue, which I write of in that booke. But of the xii. other vertues, I make xii. other knights the patrones, for the more variety of the history. Of which these three bookes contain three, The first of the knight of the Redcrosse, in whome I expresse Holynes: The seconde of Sir Guyon, in whome I sette forth Temperaunce: The third of Brito-

5. Aristotle did not devise twelve private moral virtues: Spenser was in fact relying upon more modern philosophers—his friend Lodowick Bryskett and the Italian Piccolomini. That Spenser actually planned a poem four times as long as the six books we now have rather staggers the imagination, but his language is plain.

6. The allusion is to Plato's Republic and Xenophon's Cyropaedia.

7. Picture, portray.

8. Raleigh's poem Cynthia praised Queen Elizabeth.

^{Note that chastity was a virtue mainly for women.}
 martis a Lady knight, in whome I picture Chastity. But because the beginning of the whole worke seemeth abrupte and as depending upon other antecedents, it needs that ye know the occasion of these three knights severall adventures. For the Methode of a Poet historical is not such, as of an Historiographer. For an Historiographer discourseth of affayres orderly as they were donne, accounting as well the times as the actions; but a Poet thrusteth into the midst, even where it most concerneth him, and there recouring to the thinges forepaste, and divining of thinges to come, maketh a pleasing Analysis of all. The beginning therefore of my history, if it were to be told by an Historiographer, should be the twelfth booke, which is the last, where I devise that the Faery Queene kept her Annuall feaste xii. dayes, uppon which xii. severall dayes, the occasions of the xii. severall adventures hapned, which being undertaken by xii. severall knights, are in these xii books severally handled and discoursed. The first was this. In the beginning of the feaste, there presented him selfe a tall clownishe⁹ younge man, who falling before the Queen of Faeries desired a boone (as the manner then was) which during that feast she might not refuse: which was that hee might have the atchievement of any adventure, which during that feaste should happen, that being graunted, he rested him on the floore, unfitte through his rusticity for a better place. Soone after entred a faire Ladye in mourning weedes, riding on a white Asse, with a dwarfe behind her leading a warlike steed, that bore the Armes of a knight, and his speare in the dwarfes hand. Shee falling before the Queene of Faeries, complayned that her father and mother an ancient King and Queene, had bene by an huge dragon many years shut up in a brasen Castle, who thence suffred them not to yssew: and therefore besought the Faery Queene to assygne her some one of her knights to take on him that exployt. Presently that clownish person upstarting, desired that adventure: whereat the Queene much wondering, and the Lady much gainesaying, yet he earnestly importuned his desire. In the end the Lady told him that unlesse that armour which she brought, would serve him (that is the armour of a Christian man specified by Saint Paul v. Ephes.) that he could not succeed in that enterprise, which being forthwith put upon him with dewe furnitures¹ thereunto, he seemed the goodliest man in al that company, and was well liked of the Lady. And cftesoones taking on him knighthood, and mounting on that straunge Courser, he went forth with her on that adventure: where beginneth the first booke, vz.

A gentle knight was pricking on the playne. &c.

The second day ther came in a Palmer bearing an Infant with

9. Rustic-looking.

1. Suitable equipment.

bloody hands, whose Parents he complained to have bene slayn by an Enchaunteresse called Acrasia: and therfore craved of the Faery Queene, to appoint him some knight, to performe that adventure, which being assigned to Sir Guyon, he presently went forth with that same Palmer: which is the beginning of the second booke and the whole subject thereof. The third day there came in, a Groome who complained before the Faery Queene, that a vile Enchaunter called Busirane had in hand a most faire Lady called Amoretta, whom he kept in most grievous torment, because she would not yield him the pleasure of her body. Whereupon Sir Scudamour the lover of that Lady presently tooke on him that adventure. But being unable to performe it by reason of the hard Enchauntments, after long sorrow, in the end met with Britomartis, who succoured him, and reskewed his love.

But by occasion hereof, many other adventures are intermedled, but rather as Accidents, then intendments.² As the love of Britomart, the overthrow of Marinell, the misery of Florimell, the vertuousnes of Belphoebe, the lasciviousnes of Hellenora, and many the like.

Thus much Sir, I have briefly overronne to direct your understanding to the wel-head of the History, that from thence gathering the whole intention of the conceit, ye may as in a handfull gripe al the discourse, which otherwise may happily³ seeme tedious and confused. So humbly craving the continuance of your honorable favour towards me, and th'eternall establishment of your happines, I humbly take leave.

23. January, 1589

Yours most humbly affectionate.

ED. SPENSER.

The First Booke of the Faerie Queene

CONTAYNING
The Legende of the Knight of the Red Crosse,
OR
OF HOLINESSE

I

Lo I the man, whose Muse whilome did maske,
As time her taught, in lowly Shepheards weeds,⁴

2. That is, there are episodes that are merely romantic and not specifically allegorical. Characters are often types, not symbols.

3. By chance.

4. I.e., behold me, the poet who appropriately appeared before ("whilome") as a writer of humble pastoral (i.e., The Shepheardes Calender). These lines are imitated from the verses prefixed to Virgil's Aeneid.

Am now enforst a far unfitter taske,
 For trumpets sterne to chaunge mine Oaten reeds,⁵
 5 And sing of Knights and Ladies gentle deeds;
 Whose prayes having slept in silence long,⁶
 Me, all too meane, the sacred Muse areeds °
 To blazon broad emongst her learned throng:
 Fierce warres and faithfull loves shall moralize my song.

appoints

2
 10 Helpe then, O holy Virgin chiefe of nine,⁷
 Thy weaker Novice to performe thy will,
 Lay forth out of thine everlasting scryne⁸
 The antique rolles, which there lye hidden still,
 Of Faerie knights and fairest Tanaquill,⁹
 15 Whom that most noble Briton Prince¹ so long Sought through the world, and suffered so much ill,
 That I must rue his undeservéd wrong:
 O helpe thou my weake wit, and sharpen my dull tong.

3
 20 And thou most dreaded impe² of highest Jove,
 Faire Venus sonne, that with thy cruell dart
 At that good knight so cunningly didst rove, °
 That glorious fire it kindled in his hart,
 Lay now thy deadly Heben ° bow apart,
 And with thy mother milde come to mine ayde:
 25 Come both, and with you bring triumphant Mart,³
 In loves and gentle jollities arrayd,
 After his murdrous spoiles and bloudy rage allayd.

shoot

ebony

4
 And with them eke, ° O Goddesse heavenly bright,
 Mirrour of grace and Majestie divine,
 30 Great Lady of the greatest Isle, whose light
 Like Phoebus lampe throughout the world doth shine,
 Shed thy faire beames into my feeble eyne,
 And raise my thoughts too humble and too vile, °
 To thinke of that true glorious type ° of thine,
 35 The argument of mine afflicted stile:
 The which to heare, vouchsafe, O dearest dred⁴ a-while.

also lowly pattern

Canto I

*The Patron of true Holinesse,
 Foule Errour doth defeate:
 Hypocrisie him to entrappe,
 Doth to his home entreate.*

5. To write heroic poetry, of which the trumpet is a symbol, instead of pastoral poetry like The Shepheardes Calender, symbolized by the humble shepherd's pipe ("Oaten reeds").

6. Lines 5 and 6 are imitated from the opening lines of Ariosto's Orlando Furioso.

7. Clio, the Muse of history; "weaker": too weak.

8. A chest for papers.

9. I.e., Gloriana.

1. I.e., Arthur.

2. Child, i.e., Cupid.

3. Mars, god of war and lover of Venus.

4. Object of awe.

1

A Gentle Knight was pricking ° on the plaine, cantering
 Ycladd in mightie armes and silver shield,
 Wherein old dints of deepe wounds did remaine,
 The cruell markes of many a bloody feld;
 5 Yet armes till that time did he never wield: °
 His angry steede did chide his foming bitt,
 As much disdayning to the curbe to yield:
 Full jolly ° knight he seemd, and faire did sitt, courageous
 As one for knightly giusts ° and fierce encounters tourneys, jousts fitt.

2

10 But on his brest a bloudie Crosse he bore,
 The deare remembrance of his dying Lord,
 For whose sweete sake that glorious badge he wore,
 And dead as living ever him adored:
 Upon his shield the like was also scored,
 15 For soveraine ° hope, which in his helpe he had:
 Right faithfull true he was in dcede and word,
 But of his cheere ° did seeme too solemne sad; ° serious
 Yet nothing did he dread, but ever was ydrad. ° dreaded, feared

3

Upon a great adventure he was bond,
 20 That greatest Gloriana to him gave,
 That greatest Glorious Queene of Faerie Lond,
 To winne him worship, ° and her grace to have, honor
 Which of all earthly things he most did crave;
 And ever as he rode, his hart did earne ° yearn
 25 To prove his puissance in battell brave
 Upon his foe, and his new force to learne;
 Upon his foe, a Dragon horrible and stearne.

4

A lovely Ladie rode him faire beside,
 Upon a lowly Asse more white then snow,
 30 Yet she much whiter, but the same did hide
 Under a vele, that wimpled ° was full low, folded
 And over all a blacke stole she did throw,
 As one that inly mournd: so was she sad,
 And heavie sat upon her palfrey slow:
 35 Seeméd in heart some hidden care she had,
 And by her in a line a milke white lambe she lad.

5

So pure an innocent, as that same lambe,
 She was in life and every vertuous lore,
 And by descent from Royall lynage came

5. Redcrosse wears the armor of the Christian man, as Spenser explained in the letter to Raleigh: "put on the whole armor of God, that ye may be able to stand against the wiles of the devil" (Ephesians vi.10-22). The armor bears the dents of every Christian's fight against evil; Redcrosse himself is as yet untried.

6. Having greatest power (often applied to medical remedies).

7. Facial expression.

- 40 Of ancient Kings and Queenes, that had of yore
 Their scepters stretcht from East to Western shore,
 And all the world in their subjection held;
 Till that infernall feend with foule uprore
 Forwasted all their land, and them expeld:
 45 Whom to avenge, she had this Knight from far compeld.^o summoned

6

- Behind her farre away a Dwarfe did lag,
 That lasie seemd in being ever last,
 Or wearied with bearing of her bag
 Of needments at his backe. Thus as they past,
 50 The day with cloudes was suddaine overcast,
 And angry Jove an hideous storme of raine
 Did poure into his Lemans⁸ lap so fast,
 That every wight^o to shrowd^o it did constrain, creature/cover
 And this faire couple eke ^o to shroud themselves were fain. also

7

- 55 Enforst to seeke some covert nigh at hand,
 A shadie grove not far away they spide,
 That promist ayde the tempest to withstand:
 Whose loftie trees yclad with sommers pride,
 Did spred so broad, that heavens light did hide,
 60 Not perceable with power of any starre:
 And all within were pathes and alleies wide,
 With footing worne, and leading inward farre:
 Faire harbour that them seemes; so in they entred arre.

8

- And foorth they passe, with pleasure forward led,
 65 Joying to heare the birdes sweete harmony,
 Which therein shrouded from the tempest dred,
 Seemd in their song to scorne the cruell sky.
 Much can^o they prayse the trees, so straight and hy, did
 The sayling Pine, the Cedar proud and tall,
 70 The vine-prop Elme, the Poplar never dry,
 The builder Oake, sole king of forrests all,
 The Aspine good for staves, the Cypressse funerall.

9

- The Laurell, meed^o of mightie Conquerours reward
 And Poets sage, the Firre that weepeth still,
 75 The Willow worne of forlorne Paramours,
 The Eugh^o obedient to the benders will, yew
 The Birch for shaftes, the Sallow^o for the mill, willow
 The Mirrhe sweete bleeding in the bitter wound,
 The warlike Beech, the Ash for nothing ill,
 80 The fruitfull Olive, and the Platane^o round, plane-tree
 The carver Holme,^o the Maple seeldom inward sound.⁹ holly

8. His lover, i.e., the earth.

9. In these lines, Spenser has been imitating Chaucer's catalogue of trees in the Parliament of Fowls; the convention goes back to Ovid.

10

Led with delight, they thus beguile the way,
 Untill the blustering storme is overblowne;
 When weening^o to returne, whence they did stray, supposing
 85 They cannot finde that path, which first was showne,
 But wander too and fro in wayes unknowne,
 Furthest from end then, when they nearest weene,
 That makes them doubt, their wits be not their owne:
 So many pathes, so many turnings seene,
 90 That which of them to take, in diverse doubt they been.

11

At last resolving forward still to fare,
 Till that some end they finde or^e in or out, either
 That path they take, that beaten seemd most bare,
 Which when by tract¹ they hunted had throughout,
 95 And like to lead the labyrinth about;^o out of
 At length it brought them to a hollow cave,
 Amid the thickest woods. The Champion stout
 Eftsoones^o dismounted from his courser brave, forthwith
 And to the Dwarfe a while his needlesse spere he gave.

12

100 "Be well aware," quoth then that Ladie milde,
 "Least suddaine mischiefe ye too rash provoke:
 The danger hid, the place unknowne and wilde,
 Breedes dreadfull doubts: Oft fire is without smoke,
 And perill without show: therefore your stroke
 105 Sir knight with-hold, till further triall made."
 "Ah Ladie," said he, "shame were to revoke
 The forward footing for^o an hidden shade: because of Vertue gives her selfe light, through darknesse for to wade."

13

"Yea but," quoth she, "the perill of this place
 110 I better wot then² you, though now too late
 To wish you backe returne with foule disgrace,
 Yet wisdomes wames, whilst foot is in the gate,
 To stay the steepe, ere forcéd to retrate.
 This is the wandring wood, this Errours den,
 115 A monster vile, whom God and man does hate:
 Therefore I read^o beware." "Fly fly," quoth then advise
 The fearefull Dwarfe: "this is no place for living men."

14

But full of fire and greedy hardiment,^o boldness
 The youthfull knight could not for ought be staide, 120 But forth unto the darksome hole he went,
 And looked in: his glistring armor made
 A litle glooming light, much like a shade,
 By which he saw the ugly monster plaine,

1. By following the track.

2. Know than.

Halfe like a serpent horribly displaide,³

125 But th' other halfe did womans shape retaine,
Most lothsom, filthie, foule, and full of vile disdaine.

15

And as she lay upon the durtie ground,

Her huge long taile her den all overspred,

Yet was in knots and many boughtes* upwound,

coils

130 Pointed with mortall sting. Of her there bred

A thousand yong ones, which she dayly fed,

Sucking upon her poisonous dugs, eachone

Of sundry shapes, yet all ill favoréd:

Soone as that uncouth* light upon them shone,

unfamiliar

135 Into her mouth they crept, and suddain all were gone.

16

Their dam upstart, out of her den effraide,

And rushéd forth, hurling her hideous taile

About her curséd head, whose folds displaid

Were stretcht now forth at length without 140 entraile.*

winding, coiling

She lookt about, and seeing one in mayle

Arméd to point,⁴ sought backe to turne againe;

For light she hated as the deadly bale,*

evil

Ay wont in desert darknesse to remaine,

145 Where plaine none might her see, nor she see any plaine.

17

Which when the valiant Elfe⁵ pereived, he lept

As Lyon fierce upon the flying pray,

And with his trenchand* blade her boldly kept cutting

From turning backe, and forcéd her to stay:

150 Therewith enraged she loudly gan to bray,

And turning fierce, her speckled taile advaunst,

Threatning her angry sting, him to dismay:

Who nough aghast, his mightie hand enhaunst:*

lifted up

The stroke down from her head unto her shoulder glaunst.

18

Much daunted with that dint, her sence was dazd,

155 Yet kindling rage, her selfe she gathered round,

And all attonce her beastly body raizd

With doubled forces high above the ground:

Tho° wrapping up her wrethéd sterne arownd,

then

Lept fierce upon his shield, and her huge traine°

tail

160 All suddenly about his body wound,

That hand or foot to stirre he strove in vaine:

God helpe the man so wrapt in Errours endlesse traine.

3. That Error (or theological, doctrinal heresy) is half serpent reminds us of the primal error in Eden, which the serpent instigated. "Error," at first glance, may not seem an important demon; here Lewis is helpful in reminding us that "Spenser is writing in an age of religious doubt and controversy when the avoidance of error is a problem as pressing as, and in a sense prior to, the conquest of sin" (Allegory of Love, p. 334). The description echoes both classical and Biblical monsters (cf. Revelation ix.7-10).

4. I.e., completely.

5. Knight of Faerie Land.

19

His Lady sad to see his sore constraint,
 Cride out, "Now now Sir knight, shew what ye bee,
 165 Add faith unto your force, and be not faint:
 Strangle her, else she sure will strangle thee."
 That when he heard, in great perplexitie,
 His gall did grate for grieve^o and high disdaine, wrath
 And knitting all his force got one hand free,
 170 Wherewith he grypt her gorge^o with so great paine, neck
 That soone to loose her wicked bands did her constraine.

20

Therewith she spewd out of her filthy maw
 A floud of poyson horrible and blacke,
 Full of great lumpes of flesh and gobbets raw,
 175 Which stunck so vildly, that it forst him slacke
 His grasping hold, and from her turne him backe:
 Her vomit full of bookes and papers⁶ was,
 With loathly frogs and toades, which eyes did lacke,
 And creeping sought way in the weedy gras:
 180 Her filthy parbreake^o all the place defiled has.⁷ vomit

21

As when old father Nilus gins to swell
 With timely^o pride above the Aegyptian vale, in season
 His fattie^o waves do fertile slime outwell, rich
 And overflow each plaine and lowly dale:
 185 But when his later spring gins to avale,^o subside
 Huge heapes of mudd he leaves, wherein there breed
 Ten thousand kindes of creatures, partly male
 And partly female of his fruitfull seed;
 Such ugly monstrous shapes elsewhere may no man reed.^o see

22

190 The same so sore annoyéd has the knight,
 That welnigh chokéd with the deadly stinke,
 His forces faile, ne can no longer fight.
 Whose corage when the feend perceived to shrinke,
 She pouréd forth out of her hellish sinke
 195 Her fruitfull curséd spawn of serpents small,
 Deforméd monsters, fowle, and blacke as inke,
 Which swarming all about his legs did crall,
 And him encombred sore, but could not hurt at all.

23

As gentle Shepheard in sweete even-tide,
 200 When ruddy Phoebus gins to welke^o in west, sink
 High on an hill, his flocke to vewen wide,
 Markes which do byte their hasty supper best;

6. The reference is to books and pamphlets of Catholic propaganda, particularly attacks on Queen Elizabeth in 1588—and, indeed, to violent religious controversy of any kind.

7. Revelation xvi.13: "And I saw three unclean spirits like frogs come out of the mouth of the dragon, and out of the mouth of the beast, and out of the mouth of the false prophet."

A cloud of combrous gnattes do him molest,
 All striving to infixe their feeble stings,
 205 That from their noyance he no where can rest,
 But with his clownish^o hands their tender wings rustic
 He brusheth oft, and oft doth mar their murmurings.

24

Thus ill bestedd,^o and fearfull more of shame, situated
 Then of the certaine perill he stood in,
 210 Halfe furious unto his foe he came,
 Resolved in minde all suddenly to win,
 Or soone to lose, before he once would lin;^o cease, stop
 And strooke at her with more then manly force,
 That from her body full of filthie sin
 215 He raft^o her hatefull head without remorse; cut away
 A streame of cole black bloud forth gushed from her corse.

25

Her scattred brood, soone as their Parent deare
 They saw so rudely^o falling to the ground, with great force
 Groning full deadly, all with troublous feare,
 220 Cathred themselves about her body round,
 Weening their wonted entrance to have found
 At her wide mouth: but being there withstood
 They flockéd all about her bleeding wound,
 And suckéd up their dying mothers blood,
 225 Making her death their life, and eke her hurt their good. also

26

That detestable sight him much amazde,
 To see th' unkindly Impes of heaven accurst,
 Devoure their dam; on whom while so he gazd,
 Having all satisfide their bloody thirst,
 230 Their bellies swolne he saw with fulnesse burst,
 And bowels gushing forth: well worthy end
 Of such as drunke her life, the which them nurst;
 Now needeth him no lenger labour spend,
 His foes have slaine themselves, with whom he should contend.

27

235 His Ladie seeing all, that chaunst, from farre
 Approcht in hast to greet his victorie,
 And said, "Faire knight, borne under happy starre,
 Who see your vanquisht foes before you lye;
 Well worthy be you of that Armorie,⁸
 240 Wherein ye have great glory wonne this day,
 And proved your strength on a strong enimie,
 Your first adventure: many such I pray,
 And henceforth ever wish, that like succeed it may."

28

Then mounted he upon his Steede againe,
 245 And with the Lady backward sought to wend;^o go

8. I.e., Christian armor.

That path he kept, which beaten was most plaine,
 Ne ever would to any by-way bend,
 But still did follow one unto the end,
 The which at last out of the wood them brought.
 250 So forward on his way (with God to frend⁹)
 He passéd forth, and new adventure sought;
 Long way he travelléd, before he heard of ought.

29

At length they chaunst to meet upon the way
 An aged Sire, in long blacke weedes yclad,¹
 255 His feete all bare, his beard all hoarie gray,
 And by his belt his booke he hanging had;
 Sober he seemde, and very sagely sad,^o
 And to the ground his eyes were lowly bent,
 Simple in shew, and voyde of malice bad,
 260 And all the way he prayéd, as he went,
 And often knockt his brest, as one that did repent.

pensive

30

He faire the knight saluted, louting^o low,
 Who faire him quited,^o as that courteous was:
 And after asked him, if he did know
 265 Of straunge adventures, which abroad did pas.
 "Ah my deare Sonne," quoth he, "how should, alas,
 Silly^o old man, that lives in hidden cell,
 Bidding^o his beades all day for his trespas,
 Tydings of warre and worldly trouble tell?
 270 With holy father sits not with such things to mell.^o

bowing answered

innocent telling meddle

31

"But if of daunger which hereby doth dwell,
 And homebred evill ye desire to heare,
 Of a straunge man I can you tidings tell,
 That wasteth all this countrey farre and neare."
 275 "Of such," said he, "I chiefly do inquire,
 And shall you well reward to shew the place,
 In which that wicked wight his dayes doth wearè.^o
 For to all knighthood it is foule disgrace,
 That such a cursed creature lives so long a space."

spend

32

"Far hence," quoth he, "in wastfull^o wilderness
 280 His dwelling is, by which no living wight
 May ever passe, but thorough great distresse."
 "Now," sayd the Lady, "draweth toward night,
 And well I wote, that of your later^o fight
 285 Ye all forwearied be: for what so strong,
 But wanting rest will also want of might?
 The Sunne that measures heaven all day long,
 At night doth baite^o his steedes the Ocean waves emong.

desolate

recent feed, refresh

9. With God as friend.

1. Dressed in long black garments.

33

290 "Then with the Sunne take Sir, your timely rest,
 And with new day new worke at once begin:
 Untroubled night they say gives counsell best."
 "Right well Sir knight ye have adviséd bin," Quoth then that aged man; "the way to win
 Is wisely to advise: now day is spent;
 295 Therefore with me ye may take up your In°
 For this same night." The knight was well content:
 So with that godly father to his home they went.

lodging

34

A little lowly Hermitage it was,
 Downe in a dale, hard by a forests side,
 300 Far from resort of people, that did pas
 In travell to and froe: a little wyde°
 There was an holy Chappell edifyde,°
 Wherein the Hermite dewly wont° to say
 His holy things each morne and eventyde:
 305 Thereby a Christall streame did gently play,
 Which from a sacred fountaine welléd forth alway.

apart built was wont

35

Arrivé there, the little house they fill,
 Ne looke for entertainment, where none was:
 Rest is their feast, and all things at their will;
 310 The noblest mind the best contentment has.
 With faire discourse the evening so they pas:
 For that old man of pleasing wordes had store,
 And well could file his tongue as smooth as glas;
 He told of Saintes and Popes, and evermore
 315 He strowd an Ave-Mary after and before.

36

The drouping Night thus creepeth on them fast,
 And the sad humour² loading their eye liddes,
 As messenger of Morpheus³ on them cast
 Sweet slombring deaw, the which to sleepe them biddes.
 320 Unto their lodgings then his guesstes he riddes:°
 Where when all drownd in deadly sleepe he findes,
 He to his study goes, and there amidde
 His Magick bookes and artes of sundry kindes,
 He seekes out mighty charmes, to trouble sleepey mindes.

leads

37

325 Then choosing out few wordes most horrible
 (Let none them read), thereof did verses frame,
 With which and other spelles like terrible,
 He bade awake blacke Plutoes griesly Dame,⁴
 And curséd heaven, and spake reprochfull shame
 330 Of highest God, the Lord of life and light;

2. Heavy moisture.
 3. The god of sleep.

4. I.e., Proserpine.

A bold bad man, that dared to call by name
Great Gorgon, Prince of darknesse and dead night,
At which Cocytus quakes, and Styx⁵ is put to flight.

38

And forth he cald out of deepe darknesse dred
335 Legions of Sprights, the which like little flies
Fluttring about his ever damnéd hed,
A-waite whereto their service he applyes,
To aide his friends, or fray^o his enimies: frighten
Of those he chose out two, the falsest twoo,
340 And fittest for to forge true-seeming lyes;
The one of them he gave a message too,
The other by him selfe staide other worke to doo.

39

He making speedy way through sperséd^o ayre, dispersed
And through the world of waters wide and deepe, 345 To Morpheus house doth hastily repaire.
Amid the bowels of the earth full steepe,
And low, where dawning day doth never peepe,
His dwelling is; there Tethys⁶ his wet bed
Doth ever wash, and Cynthia⁷ still doth steepe
350 In silver deaw his ever-drouping hed,
Whiles sad Night over him her mantle black doth spred.

40

Whose double gates he findeth lockéd fast,
The one faire framed of burnisht Yvory,
The other all with silver overcast;
355 And wakefull dogges before them farre do lye,
Watching to banish Care their enemy,
Who oft is wont to trouble gentle Sleepe.
By them the Sprite doth passe in quietly,
And unto Morpheus comes, whom drowned deepe
360 In drowsie fit he findes: of nothing he takes keepe.^o notice

41

And more, to lulle him in his slumber soft,
A trickling streame from high rocke tumbling downe
And ever-drizling raine upon the loft,
Mixt with a murmuring winde, much like the sowne^o sound
365 Of swarming Bees, did cast him in a swowne:^o faint
No other noyse, nor peoples troublous cries,
As still^o are wont t'annoy the walléd towne, always
Might there be heard: but carelesse Quiet lyes,
Wrapt in eternall silence farre from enemyes.⁸

42

370 The messenger approaching to him spake,
But his wast^o wordes returnd to him in vaine: wasted

5. Rivers of hell.

6. The wife of Ocean.

7. I.e., Diana, the goddess of the moon.

8. Spenser is imitating descriptions of the house of Morpheus in Chaucer, Ovid, and other ancient writers, but he achieves originality, particularly by means of the sound effects in stanza 41.

So sound he slept, that nought mought him awake.
 Then rudely he him thrust, and pusht with paine,
 Whereat he gan to stretch: but he againe
 375 Shooke him so hard, that forced him to speake.
 As one then in a dreame, whose dryer braine⁹
 Is tost with troubled sights and fancies weake,
 He mumbled soft, but would not all his silence breake.

43

The Sprite then gan more boldly him to wake,
 380 And threatned unto him the dreaded name
 Of Hecate:¹ whereat he gan to quake,
 And lifting up his lumpish head, with blame
 Halfe angry asked him, for what he came.
 "Hither," quoth he, "me Archimago² sent,
 385 He that the stubborne Sprites can wisely tame,
 He bids thee to him send for his intent
 A fit false dreame, that can delude the sleepers sent."³ senses

44

The God obayde, and calling forth straight way
 A diverse⁴ dreame out of his prison darke, misleading
 390 Delivered it to him, and downe did lay
 His heaue head, deuoid of carefull carke,⁵
 Whose senses all were straight benumbd and starke.
 He backe returning by the Yvorie dore,⁴
 Remounted up as light as chearefull Larke,
 395 And on his litle winges the dreame he bore
 In hast unto his Lord, where he him left afore.

45

Who all this while with charmes and hidden artes,
 Had made a Lady of that other Spright,
 And framed of liquid ayre her tender partes
 400 So lively,⁶ and so like in all mens sight, lifelike
 That weaker⁶ sence it could have ravisht quight too weak
 The maker selfe for all his wondrous witt,
 Was nigh beguiled with so goodly sight:
 Her all in white he clad, and over it
 405 Cast a blacke stole, most like to seeme for Una⁶ fit.

46

Now when that ydle dreame was to him brought Unto that Elfin knight he bad him fly,
 Where he slept soundly void of evill thought
 And with false shewes abuse his fantasy,⁶ imagination
 410 In sort as⁶ he him schooléd privily:

9. According to the old physiology, old people and other light sleepers had too little moisture in the brain.

1. Queen of Hades.

2. Archmagician or chief deceiver.

3. Anxious concerns.

4. False dreams came through the ivory door, true dreams through the gate of horn (Homer, Odyssey XIX.562-67; Virgil, Aeneid VI.893-96).

5. Her name means "one, unity." Elizabethan readers would know the Latin Una Vera Fides (one true faith); the idea was that there can be only one true faith, though many erroneous or false ones.

6. In the way.

And that new creature borne without her dew⁷
 Full of the makers guile, with usage sly
 He taught to imitate that Lady trew,
 Whose semblance she did carrie under feigned hew.[°] form

47
 415 Thus well instructed, to their worke they hast
 And comming where the knight in slomber lay
 The one upon his hardy head him plast,
 And made him dreame of loves and lustfull play
 That nigh his manly hart did melt away,
 420 Bathéd in wanton blis and wicked joy:
 Then seeméd him his Lady by him lay,
 And to him playnd,[°] how that false wingéd boy complained
 Her chast hart had subdewd, to learne Dame pleasures toy.

48
 And she her selfe of beautie soveraigne Queene
 425 Faire Venus seemde unto his bed to bring
 Her, whom he waking evermore did weene
 To be the chastest flowre, that ay[°] did spring ever
 On earthly braunch, the daughter of a king,
 Now a loose Leman[°] to vile service bound: paramour
 430 And eke the Graces seeméd all to sing,
 Hymen iô Hymen, dauncing all around,
 Whilst freshest Flora her with Yvie girlond crownd.⁸

49
 In this great passion of unwonted[°] lust, unaccustomed
 Or wonted feare of doing ought amis,
 435 He started up, as seeming to mistrust
 Some secret ill, or hidden foe of his:
 Lo there before his face his Lady is,
 Under blake stole hyding her bayted hooke,
 And as halfe blushing offred him to kis,
 440 With gentle blandishment and lovely looke,
 Most like that virgin true, which for her knight him took.

50
 All cleane dismayd to see so uncouth[°] sight, unseemly
 And halfe enraged at her shamelesse guise,
 He thought have slaine her in his fierce despight:[°] indignation
 445 But hasty heat tempring with sufferance wise,
 He stayde his hand, and gan himselfe advise
 To prove his sense, and tempt her faigned truth.
 Wringing her hands in wemens pitteous wise,
 Tho can she⁹ weepe, to stirre up gentle ruth,[°] pity
 450 Both for her noble bloud, and for her tender youth.

51
 And said, "Ah Sir, my liege Lord and my love,
 Shall I accuse the hidden cruell fate,

7. Unnaturally.

8. The three graces of classical mythology were personifications of grace and beauty, yet here they sing a call to the pleasures of the marriage bed (Hymen was god of marriage). On Flora, cf. E.K.'s Glosse to the March eclogue: "the Goddess of flowres, but indede (as saith Tacitus) a famous harlot."

9. Then she began to.

And mightie causes wrought in heaven above,
 Or the blind God, that doth me thus amate,^o
 455 For^o hopéd love to winne me certaine hate?
 Yet thus perforce he bids me do, or die.
 Die is my dew: yet rew my wretched state
 You, whom my hard avenging destinie
 Hath made judge of my life or death indifferently.

dismay instead of 52

 460 "Your owne deare sake forst me at first to leave
 My Fathers kingdome," There she stopt with teares;
 Her swollen hart her spcach scemd to bereave,
 And then againe begun, "My weaker yeares
 Captived to fortune and frayle worldly feares,
 465 Fly to your faith for succour and sure ayde:
 Let me not dye in languor and long teares.
 "Why Dame," quoth he, "what hath ye thus dismayd?
 What frayes ye, that were wont to comfort me affrayd?"

53
 470 "Love of your selfe," she said, "and deare^o constraint
 Lets me not sleepe, but wast the wearie night
 In secret anguish and unpittied plaint,
 Whiles you in carelesse sleepe are drownéd quight."
 Her doubtfull^o words made that redoubted knight
 475 Suspect her truth: yet since no untruth he knew,
 Her fawning love with foule disdaine full spight
 He would not shend,^o but said, "Deare dame I rew,
 That for my sake unknowne such grieve unto you grew.

dire questionable reject

54
 "Assure your selfe, it fell not all to ground;
 For all so deare as life is to my hart,
 480 I deeme your love, and hold me to you bound;
 Ne let vaine feares procure your needlesse smart,
 Where cause is none, but to your rest depart."
 Not all content, yet seemd she to appease^o
 Her mournfull plaintes, beguiléd of her art,
 485 And fed with words, that could not chuse but please,
 So slyding softly forth, she turnd as to her ease.

cease

55
 Long after lay he musing at her mood,
 Much grieved to thinke that gentle Dame so light,
 For whose defence he was to shed his blood.
 490 At last dull wearinesse of former fight
 Having yrockt a sleepe his irkesome spright,^o
 That troublous dreame gan freshly tosse his braine,
 With bowres, and beds, and Ladies deare delight:
 But when he¹ saw his labour all was vaine,
 495 With that misforméd spright he backe returnd againe.

spirit

Canto II

*The guilefull great Enchaunter parts
The Redcrosse Knight from Truth:
Into whose stead faire falshood steps,
And workes him wofull ruth.*

1

By this the Northerne wagoner had set
His seven fold teame behind the stedfast starre,²
That was in Ocean waves yet never wet,
But firme is fixt, and sendeth light from farre
5 To all, that in the wide deepe wandring arre.
And chearefull Chaunticlere with his note shrill
Had warnéd once, that Phoebus fiery carre³
In hast was climbing up the Easterne hill,
Full envious that night so long his roome did fill.

2

10 When those accurséd messengers of hell,
That feigning dreame, and that faire-forgéd Spright
Came to their wicked maister, and gan tell
Their bootelesse^o paines, and ill succeeding night:
Who all in rage to see his skilfull might 15 Deluded so, gan threaten hellish paine
And sad Prosérpines wrath, them to affright.
But when he saw his threatning was but vaine,
He cast about, and searcht his balefull^o bookes againe.

useless deadly

3

Eftsoones he tooke that miscreated faire,
20 And that false other Spright, on whom he spred
A seeming body of the subtile aire,
Like a young Squire, in loves and lusty-hed
His wanton dayes that ever loosely led,
Without regard of armes and dreaded fight:
25 Those two he tooke, and in a secret bed,
Covered with darknesse and misdeeming^o night,
Them both together laid, to joy in vaine delight.

misleading

4

Forthwith he runnes with feigné^d faithfull hast
Unto his guest, who after troublous sights
30 And dreames, gan now to take more sound repast,^o
Whom suddenly he wakes with fearefull frights,
As one aghast with feends or damnéd sprights,
And to him cals, "Rise rise unhappy Swaine,
That here wex^o old in sleepe, whiles wicked wights
35 Have knit themselves in Venus shamefull chaine;
Come see, where your false Lady doth her honour staine."

rest

grows

2. I.e., by this time the Big Dipper had set behind the North Star.

3. The chariot of the sun.

5

All in amaze he suddenly up start

With sword in hand, and with the old man went;

Who soone him brought into a secret part,

40 Where that false couple were full closely ment° mingled

In wanton lust and lewd embracement:

Which when he saw, he burnt with gealous fire,

The eye of reason was with rage yblent,° blinded

And would have slaine them in his furious ire,

45 But hardly° was restréined of that aged sire.

with difficulty

6

Returning to his bed in torment great,

And bitter anguish of his guiltie sight,

He could not rest, but did his stout heart eat,

And wast his inward gall with deepe despight,

50 Yrkesome° of life, and too long lingring night.

tired

At last faire Hesperus⁴ in highest skie

Had spent his lampe, and brought forth dawning light

Then up he rose, and clad him hastily;

The Dwarfe him brought his steed: so both away do fly.⁵

7

55 Now when the rosy-fingred Morning faire,

Weary of aged Tithones⁶ saffron bed,

Had spred her purple robe through deawy aire,

And the high hils Titan° discoveréd,

the sun

The royall virgin shooke off drowsy-hed,

60 And rising forth out of her baser° bowre,

humbler

Lookt for her knight, who far away was fled,

And for her Dwarfe, that wont to wait each houre;

Then gan she waile and weepe, to see that woefull stowre.[°] affliction

8

And after him she rode with so much speede

65 As her slow beast could make; but all in vaine:

For him so far had borne his light-foot steede,

Prickéd with wrath and fiery fierce disdaine,

That him to follow was but fruitlesse paine;

Yet she her weary limbes would never rest,

70 But every hill and dale, each wood and plaine

Did search, sore grievéd in her gentle brest,

He so ungently left her, whom she lovéd best.

9

But subtill Archimago, when his guests

He saw divided into double parts,

75 And Una wandring in woods and forrests,

Th' end of his drift,° he praisd his divelish arts plot

That had such might over true meaning harts;

Yet rests not so, but other meanes doth make,

4. The evening star.

5. Reason and discrimination are defeated, and so "Holiness" is separated from the one true faith.

6. The husband of Aurora, goddess of the dawn.

How he may worke unto her further smarts:
 80 For her he hated as the hissing snake,
 And in her many troubles did most pleasure take.

10

He then devise himselfe how to disguise;
 For by his mightie science^o he could take
 As many formes and shapes in seeming wise,^o knowledge
 85 As euer Proteus to himselfe could make: in appearance
 Sometime a fowle, sometime a fish in lake,
 Now like a foxe, now like a dragon fell,^o fierce
 That of himselfe he oft for feare would quake,
 And oft would flie away. O who can tell
 90 The hidden power of herbes, and might of Magicke spell?

11

But now seemde best, the person to put on
 Of that good knight, his late beguiled guest:
 In mighty armes he was yclad anon,
 And silver shield: upon his coward brest
 95 A bloudy crosse, and on his craven crest
 A bounch of haire discoloured diversly:^o variously colored
 Full jolly knight he seemde, and well address,
 And when he sate upon his courser free,
 Saint George himself ye would have deemed him to be.

12

But he the knight, whose semblaunt^o he did beare, likeness
 The true Saint George was wandred far away.
 Still flying from^o his thoughts and gealous feare; because of
 Will was his guide,⁷ and grieve led him astray.
 At last him chaunst to meete upon the way
 105 A faithlesse Sarazin^o all armed to point, Saracen
 In whose great shield was writ with letters gay
 Sans foy: full large of limbe and every joint
 He was, and caréd not for God or man a point.⁸

13

He had a faire companion of his way,
 110 A goodly Lady clad in scarlot red,
 Purpled^o with gold and pearle of rich assay, decorated
 And like a Persian mitre on her hed
 She wore, with crownes and owches^o garnishéd, brooches
 The which her lavish lovers to her gave;
 115 Her wanton palfrey all was overspred
 With tinsell trappings, woven like a wave,
 Whose bridle rung with golden bells and bosses brave.¹

7. Will was his guide; but will, of all the human faculties, is least fitted to be one's guide; it should itself be under the guidance of intelligence or truth. Red-crosse's victory over the monster Errour did not give him the discrimination to pierce the deceptions of either Archimago or the false Una.

8. At all.

1. Handsome metal knobs.

14

With faire disport° and courting dalliaunce diversion
 She intertaine her lover all the way:

120 But when she saw the knight his speare advaunce,
 She soone left off her mirth and wanton play,
 And bad her knight addresse him to the fray:
 His foe was nigh at hand. He prickt° with pride pranced
 And hope to winne his Ladies heart that day,
 125 Forth spurred fast: adowne his coursers side
 The red bloud trickling staid the way, as he did ride.

15

The knight of the Redcrosse when him he spide,
 Spurring so hote with rage dispiteous,
 Can fairely couch° his speare, and towards ride: lower
 130 Soone meete they both, both fell and furious,
 That daunted with their forces hideous,
 Their steeds do stagger, and amazed stand,
 And eke themselves too rudely rigorous,
 Astonied° with the stroke of their owne hand, stunned
 135 Do backe rebut,° and each to other yeeldeth land. recoil

16

As when two rams stird with ambitious pride,
 Fight for the rule of the rich fleeced flocke,
 Their horned fronts so fierce on either side
 Do meete, that with the terroure of the shocke
 140 Astonied both, stand sencelesse as a blocke,° inanimate object
 Forgetfull of the hanging victory:
 So stood these twaine, unmoved as a rocke,
 Both staring fierce, and holding idely
 The broken reliques of their former cruelty.

17

145 The Sarazin sore daunted with the buffe
 Snatcheth his sword, and fiercely to him flies;
 Who well it wards, and quyteth° cuff with cuff: requites
 Each others equall puissaunce envies, looks
 And through their iron sides with cruell spies°
 150 Does secke to perce: repining courage yields
 No foote to foe. The flashing fier flies
 As from a forge out of their burning shields,
 And streames of purple bloud new dies the verdant fields.

18

“Curse on that Crosse,” quoth then the Sarazin, 155 “That keepe thy body from the bitter fit;° stroke
 Dead long ygoe I wote thou haddest bin,
 Had not that charme from thee forwarned° it: guarded
 But yet I warne thee now assuréd sitt,
 And hide thy head.” Therewith upon his crest
 160 With rigour so outrageous he smitt,
 That a large share it hewd out of the rest,
 And glauncing downe his shield, from blame him fairely blest.¹

1. Preserved him from harm.

19

Who theareat wondrous wroth, the sleeping spark
 Of native vertue° gan eftsoones revive, strength
 165 And at his haughtie helmet making mark,
 So hugely stroke, that it the steele did rive,
 And cleft his head. He tumbling downe alive,
 With bloudy mouth his mother earth did kis
 Greeting his grave: his grudging° ghost did strive complaining 170 With the fraile flesh; at last it flitted is,
 Whither the soules do fly of men, that live amis.

20

The Lady when she saw her champion fall,
 Like the old ruines of a broken towre,
 Staid not to waile his woefull funerall,
 175 But from him fled away with all her powre;
 Who after her as hastily gan scowre,° scurry
 Bidding the Dwarfe with him to bring away
 The Sarazins shield, signe of the conqueroure.
 Her soone he overtooke, and bad to stay,
 180 For present cause was none of dread her to dismay.

21

She turning backe with ruefull countenance,
 Cride, "Mercy mercy Sir vouchsafe to show
 On silly° Dame, subject to hard mischaunce, innocent
 And to your mighty will." Her humblesse low 185 In so ritche weedes and seeming glorious show,
 Did much emmove his stout heroicke heart,
 And said, "Deare dame, your suddein overthrow
 Much rueth° me; but now put feare apart,
 And tell, both who ye be, and who that tooke your part." grieves

22

Melting in teares, then gan she thus lament;
 "The wretched woman, whom unhappy howre
 Hath now made thrall to your commandement,
 Before that angry heavens list to lowre,° frown
 And fortune false betraide me to your powre
 195 Was (O what now availeth that I was!)
 Borne the sole daughter of an Emperour,
 He that the wide West under his rule has,
 And high hath set his throne, where Tiberis doth pas.²

2. The Tiber River runs through Rome. The lady's admission that she is the daughter of Rome (and hence the Roman Catholic Church) is an immediate clue to the fact that she is evil. Her appearance, as described in stanza 13, was, however, also full of clues. She resembles the Whore of Babylon (Revelation xvii.3-4): "and I saw a woman sit upon a scarlet coloured beast, full of names of blasphemy, having seven heads and ten horns. And the woman was arrayed in purple and scarlet colour, and decked with gold and precious stones and pearls, having a golden cup in her hand full of abominations and filthiness of her fornication." Her father, she says, is ruler of the West—but Una's father had the rule of both East and West (I.i.5): on the historical plane, the true church once embraced east and west whereas the false rules only the west; truth is universal and comprehends falsehood, which is partial. As the false church, she wears the pope's miter.

23

200 "He in the first flowre of my freshest age,
 Betrothed me unto the onely haire° heir
 Of a most mighty king, most rich and sage;
 Was never Prince so faithfull and so faire,
 Was never Prince so meeke and debonaire;° gracious
 But ere my hopéd day of spousall shone,
 205 My dearest Lord fell from high honours staire,
 Into the hands of his accursed fone,° foes
 And cruelly was slaine, that shall I ever mone.

24

210 "His blessed body spoild of lively breath,
 Was afterward, I know not how, convoid
 And fro me hid: of whose most innocent death
 When tidings came to me unhappy maid,
 O how great sorrow my sad soule assaid.° afflicted
 Then forth I went his woefull corse to find,
 And many yeares throughout the world I straid,
 215 A virgin widow, whose deepe wounded mind
 With love, long time did languish as the stricken hind.

25

220 "At last it chauncéd this proud Sarazin
 To meete me wandring, who perforce me led
 With him away, but yet could never win
 The fort, that Ladies hold in soveraigne dread.
 There lies he now with foule dishonour dead,
 Who whiles he livde, was calléd proud Sans foy,
 The eldest of three brethren, all three bred
 Of one bad sire, whose youngest is Sans joy,
 225 And twixt them both was borne the bloody bold Sans loy.³

26

230 "In this sad plight, friendlesse, unfortunate,
 Now miserable I Fidessa dwell,
 Craving of you in pittie of my state,
 To do none° ill, if please ye not do well." no
 He in great passion all this while did dwell,
 More busying his quicke eyes, her face to view,
 Then his dull eares, to heare what she did tell;
 And said, "Faire Lady hart of flint would rew
 The undeservéd woes and sorrowes, which ye shew.

27

235 "Henceforth in safe assuraunce may ye rest,
 Having both found a new friend you to aid,
 And lost an old foe, that did you molest:
 Better new friend than an old foe is⁴ said."
 With chaunge of cheare the seeming simple maid

3. Literally, "without law." Sans foy means "without faith"; Sans joy, "without joy." The Faerie Queene is full of characters who come in sets—opposing principles or double and triple incarnations of the same principle. Una and this lady (falsely named Fidessa, or "faith"), for example, are in opposition; the three Saracens form a triad of degenerative qualities that Holiness must defeat. For Holiness, even untried, to defeat atheism ("without faith") was comparatively easy.

 4. I.e., it is.

240 Let fall her eyen, as shamefast to the earth,
And yeelding soft, in that she nought gain-said,
So forth they rode, he feining seemely merth,
And she coy lookes: so dainty they say maketh derth.⁵

28

Long time they thus together traveléd,
245 Till weary of their way, they came at last,
Where grew two goodly trees, that faire did spred
Their armes abroad, with gray mosse overcast,
And their greene leaves trembling with every blast,⁶
Made a calme shadow far in compasse round:
250 The fearefull Shepheard often there aghast
Under them never sat, ne wont⁶ there sound
His mery oaten pipe, but shund th' unlucky ground.

breeze

29

But this good knight soone as he them can^o spie,
For the coole shade him thither hastily got:
255 For golden Phoebus now ymounted hie,
From fiery wheelles of his faire chariot
Hurléd his beame so scorching cruell hot,
That living creature mote it not abide;
And his new Lady it endured not.
260 There they alight, in hope themselves to hide
From the fierce heat, and rest their weary limbs a tide.^o

did

time

30

Faire seemely pleasaunce^o each to other makes,
With goodly purposes there as they sit:
And in his falséd fancy he her takes 265 To be the fairest wight that livéd yit;
Which to expresse, he bends his gentle wit,
And thinking of those braunches greene to frame
A girland for her dainty forehead fit,
He pluckt a bough; out of whose rift there came 270 Small drops of gory bloud, that trickled downe the same.

courtesy

31

Therewith a piteous yelling voyce was heard,
Crying, "O spare with guilty hands to teare
My tender sides in this rough rynd embard,^o
But fly, ah fly far hence away, for feare
275 Least to you hap, that happened to me heare,
And to this wretched Lady, my deare love,
O too deare love, love bought with death too deare."
Astond he stood, and up his haire did hove^o
And with that suddein horror could no member move.

imprisoned

heave, raise

32

280 At last whenas the dreadfull passion
Was overpast, and manhood well awake,
Yet musing at the straunge occasion,
And doubting much his sence, he thus bespake;

5. Proverbial: "what's dear is rare." sire."

Here, "coyness creates unsatisfied de- 6. Nor was accustomed to.

285 "What voyce of damned Ghost from Limbo⁷ lake,
Or guilefull spright wandering in empty aire,
Both which fraile men do oftentimes mistake,^o mislead
Sends to my doubtfull eares these speaches rare,
And ruefull plaints, me bidding guiltlesse bloud to spare?"

Then groning deepe, "Nor damned³³ Ghost," quoth he,
290 "Nor guilefull sprite to thee these wordes doth speake,
But once a man Fradubio,^o now a tree, Doubt
Wretched man, wretched tree; whose nature weake,
A cruell witch her curséd will to wreake,
Hath thus transformed, and plast in open plaines,
295 Where Boreas^o doth blow full bitter bleake, the North Wind
And scorching Sunne does dry my secret vaines:
For though a tree I seeme, yet cold and heat me paines."

34
"Say on Fradubio then, or^o man, or tree," whether Quoth then the knight, "by whose mischievous arts
300 Art thou misshapéd thus, as now I see?
He oft finds med'cine, who his griefe imparts;
But double griefs afflict concealing harts,
As raging flames who striveth to suppresses."
"The author then," said he, "of all my smartes,
305 Is one Duessa⁸ a false sorceresse,
That many errant^o knights hath brought to wretchednesse. wandering

35
"In prime of youthly yeares, when corage hot
The fire of love and joy of chevalree
First kindled in my brest, it was my lot
310 To love this gentlc Lady, whom ye see,
Now not a Lady, but a seeming tree;
With whom as once I rode accompanye,
Me chauncéd of a knight encountred bee,
That had a like faire Lady by his syde,
315 Like a faire Lady, but did fowle Duessa hyde.

36
"Whose forged beauty he did take in hand,⁹
All other Damcs to have exceeded farre;
I in defence of mine did likewise stand,
Mine, that did then shine as the Morning starre:
320 So both to battell fierce arraungéd arre,
In which his harder fortune was to fall
Under my speare: such is the dye^o of warre: hazard
His Lady left as a prise martiall,¹⁰
Did yield her comely person, to be at my call.

37
325 "So doubly loved of Ladies unlike faire,
Th' one seeming such, the other such indeede,

7. The abode of lost spirits.

8. Duessa means "double being, duplicity, deception."

9. He maintained.

10. Spoil of battle.

One day in doubt I cast for to compare,
Whether° in beauties glorie did exceede; which one (of two)
A Rosy girlond was the victors meede:° reward

330 Both seemde to win, and both seemde won to bee,
So hard the discord was to be agreeed.

Fraelissa° was as faire, as faire mote bee, Frailty
And ever false Duessa seemde as faire as shee.

38

335 "The wicked witch now seeing all this while
The doubtfull ballaunce equally to sway,
What not by right, she cast to win by guile,
And by her hellish science raisd streight way
A foggy mist, that overcast the day,
And a dull blast, that breathing on her face,
340 Dimmed her former beauties shining ray,
And with foule ugly forme did her disgrace:
Then was she faire alone, when none was faire in place.¹

39

345 "Then cride she out, 'Fye, fye, deformed wight,
Whose borrowed beautie now appeareth plaine
To have before bewitched all mens sight;
O leave her soone, or let her soone be slaine.'
Her lothly visage viewing with disdaine,
Eftsoones I thought her such, as she me told,
And would have kild her; but with faigned paine,
350 The false witch did my wrathfull hand withhold;
So left her, where she now is turnd to treen mould.²

40

"Thens forth I tooke Duessa for my Dame,
And in the witch unweeting° joyd long time, unknowingly
Ne ever wist, but that she was the same,
355 Till on a day (that day is every Prime,³
When Witches wont do penance for their crime)
I chaunst to see her in her proper hew,
Bathing her selfe in origane and thyme:⁴
A filthy foule old woman I did vew,
360 That ever to have toucht her, I did deadly rew.

41

"Her neather partes misshapen, monstrous,
Were hidd in water, that I could not see,
But they did seeme more foule and hideous,
Then womans shape man would beleewe to bee.
365 Thens forth from her most beastly companie
I gan refraine, in minde to slip away,
Soone as appeard safe opportunitie:
For danger great, if not assured decay° destruction
I saw before mine eyes, if I were knowne to stray.

1. Perhaps, "when nobody else was fair."

2. The form of a tree.

3. The first appearance of the new moon.

4. Two kinds of herbs; they were associated, in classical tradition, with witches like Scylla, Circe, and Medea.

370 "The divelish hag by chaunges of my cheare"⁴² countenance
 Perceived my thought, and drownd in sleepe night,
 With wicked herbes and ointments did besmeare
 My bodie all, through charmes and magicke might,
 That all my senses were bereavéd quight:
 375 Then brought she me into this desert waste,
 And by my wretched lovers side me pight,^o pitched
 Where now enclosd in wooden wals full faste,
 Banisht from living wights, our wearie dayes we waste."

380 "But how long time," said then the Elfn knight,⁴³
 "Are you in this misforméd house to dwell?"
 "We may not chaunge," quoth he, "this evil plight,
 Till we be bathéd in a living well;
 That is the terme prescribed by the spell."
 "O how," said he, "mote I that well out find, 385 That may restore you to your wonted well?"^o well-being
 "Time and suffiséd fates to former kynd
 Shall us restore, none else from hence may us unbynd."⁶

The false Duessa, now Fidessa hight,⁴⁴ called Heard how in vaine Fradubio did lament,
 390 And knew well all was true. But the good knight
 Full of sad feare and ghastly dreriment,^c gloom
 When all this speech the living tree had spent,
 The bleeding bough did thrust into the ground,
 That from the bloud he might be innocent,
 395 And with fresh clay did close the wooden wound:
 Then turning to his Lady, dead with feare her found.

Her seeming dead he found with feigned feare,⁴⁵
 As all unweeting of that well she knew,⁶
 And paynd himselfe with busie care to reare
 400 Her out of carelesse^o swowne. Her eylids blew unconscious
 And dimméd sight with pale and deadly hew
 At last she up gan lift: with trembling cheare^o demeanor
 Her up he tooke, too simple and too trew,
 And oft her kist. At length all passéd feare,⁷ 405 He set her on her steede, and forward forth did beare.

Canto III

*Forsaken Truth long seekes her love,
 And makes the Lyon mylde,*

5. The tale of a man imprisoned in a tree is paralleled by Virgil's Aeneid III. 27-42 and Ariosto's Orlando Furioso VI.26-53. His hesitation between Fraelissa and Duessa parallels Redcrosse's own spiritual state between Una and Duessa (the real name of "Fidessa," as line 388 casually informs us). The very name "Duessa" (two) reveals her falsity next to Una ("one"). Note that Fra-dubio ("brother doubt") cannot warn Redcrosse against Duessa, who is present at the whole recital: doubt is not, perhaps, a trustworthy help to Holiness. Doubt and frailty can only be helped by baptism (lines 381-82).

6. I.e., pretending ignorance of what she knew well.

7. I.e., having passed all fear.

Marres° blind Devotions mart,° and fals spoils / business
In hand of leachour vylde.

1
Nought is there under heav'ns wide hollownesse,° concavity
That moves more deare compassion of mind,
Then beautie brought t'unworthy° wretchednesse undeserved
Through envies snares or fortunes freakes° unkind: sudden changes
5 I, whether lately through her brightnesse blind,
Or through alleageance and fast fealtie,
Which I do owe unto all woman kind,
Feele my heart perst° with so great agonie, pierced
When such I see, that all for pittie I could die.

2

10 And now it is empassionéd so deepe,
For fairest Unas sake, of whom I sing,
That my fraile eyes these lines with teares do steepe,
To thinke how she through guilefull handling,° treatment
Though true as touch,° though daughter of a king, touchstone
15 Though faire as ever living wight was faire,
Though nor in word nor deede ill meriting,
Is from her knight divorcéd in despaire
And her due loves derived° to that vile witches share. diverted

3

Yet she most faithfull Ladie all this while 20 Forsaken, wofull, solitarie mayd
Farre from all peoples prease,° as in exile, press, crowd
In wildernesse and wastfull deserts strayd,
To seeke her knight; who subtilly betrayd
Through that late vision, which th' Enchaunter wrought,
25 Had her abandond. She of nought affrayd,
Through woods and wastnesse wide him daily sought;
Yet wishéd tydings none of him unto her brought.

4

One day nigh wearie of the yrkesome way,
From her unhastie beast she did alight,
30 And on the grasse her daintie limbes did lay
In secret shadow,° farre from all mens sight: shade
From her faire head her fillet she undight,⁸
And laid her stole aside. Her angels face
As the great eye of heaven shynéd bright,
35 And made a sunshine in the shadie place;
Did never mortall eye behold such heavenly grace.

5

It fortunéd out of the thickest wood
A ramping° Lyon rushéd suddainly, raging
Hunting full greedie after salvage blood;⁹
40 Soone as the royall virgin he did spy,
With gaping mouth at her ran greedily,
To have attonce devoured her tender corse;° body

8. She took off her headband.

9. Wild game.

But to the pray when as he drew more ny,
 His bloudie rage asswagéd with remorse,
 45 And with the sight amazd, forgat his furious forse.

6

In stead thereof he kist her wearie feet,
 And lickt her lilly hands with fawning tong,
 As¹ he her wrongéd innocence did weete.[°] understand
 O how can beautie maister the most strong,
 50 And simple truth subdue avenging wrong?
 Whose yeilded pride and proud submission,
 Still dreading death, when she had markéd long,
 Her hart gan melt in great compassion,
 And drizling teares did shed for pure affection.

7

“The Lyon Lord of everie beast in field,” 55 Quoth she, “his princely puissance[°] doth abate power
 And mightie proud to humble weake does yield,
 Forgetfull of the hungry rage, which late
 Him prickt, in pittie of my sad estate.[°] condition
 60 But he my Lyon, and my noble Lord,
 How does he find in cruell hart to hate
 Her that him loved, and ever most adord,
 As the God of my life? why hath he me abhord?”

8

Redounding[°] teares did choke th’end of her plaint, overflowing
 65 Which softly ecchoed from the neighbour wood;
 And sad to see her sorrowfull constraint[°] affliction
 The kingly beast upon her gazing stood;
 With pittie calmd, downe fell his angry mood.
 At last in close hart shutting up her paine,
 70 Arose the virgin borne of heavenly brood,[°] parentage
 And to her snowy Palfrey got againe,
 To seeke her strayéd Champion, if she might attaine.[°] overtake

9

The Lyon would not leave her desolate,
 But with her went along, as a strong gard
 75 Of her chast person, and a faithfull mate
 Of her sad troubles and misfortunes hard:
 Still when she slept, he kept both watch and ward,
 And when she wakt, he waited diligent,
 With humble service to her will prepard:
 80 From her faire eyes he tooke commaundement,
 And ever by her lookes conceivéd her intent.²

1. As though.

2. Whereas Redcrosse, the man, has confusedly abandoned truth, the lion, king of beasts, an animal under nature's law, follows truth instinctively. Lions revere the heroine in the romance Sir Bevis of Hamptoun and accompany the heroes of other mediæval romances; they have long been associated with the British crown.

10

Long she thus traueiled through deserts wyde,
 By which she thought her wandring knight shold pas,
 Yet never shew of living wight espyde;
 85 Till that at length she found the troden gras,
 In which the tract° of peoples footing was, track
 Under the steepe foot of a mountaine hore;° gray
 The same she followes, till at last she has
 A damzell spyde slow footing her before,
 90 That on her shoulders sad° a pot of water bore. heavy

11

To whom approching she to her gan call,
 To weet, if dwelling place were nigh at hand;
 But the rude° wench her answered nought at all, ignorant
 She could not heare, nor speake, nor understand;
 95 Till seeing by her side the Lyon stand,
 With suddaine feare her pitcher downe she threw,
 And fled away: for never in that land
 Face of faire Ladie she before did vew,
 And that dread Lyons looke her cast in deadly° hew. deathlike

12

100 Full fast she fled, ne ever lookt behynd,
 As if her life upon the wager lay,
 And home she came, whereas her mother blynd
 Sate in eternall night: nought could she say,
 But suddaine catching hold, did her dismay
 105 With quaking hands, and other signes of feare:
 Who full of ghastly fright and cold affray,° terror
 Can shut the dore. By this arrivéd there
 Dame Una, wearie Dame, and entrance did requere.° request

13

Which when none yeelded, her unruly Page
 110 With his rude clawes the wicket° open rent, door
 And let her in; where of his cruell rage
 Nigh dead with feare, and faint astonishment,
 She found them both in darkesome corner pent;° huddled
 Where that old woman day and night did pray
 115 Upon her beades devoutly penitent;
 Nine hundred Pater nosters every day,
 And thrise nine hundred Aves she was wont to say.

14

And to augment her painefull pennance more,
 Thrise every weeke in ashes she did sit,
 120 And next her wrinkled skin rough sackcloth wore,
 And thrise three times did fast from any bit:° food
 But now for feare her beads she did forget.
 Whose needlesse dread for to remove away,
 Faire Una framéd words and count'nance fit:
 125 Which hardly° doen, at length she gan them pray, with difficulty
 That in their cotage small, that night she rest her may.

15

The day is spent, and commeth drowsie night,
 When every creature shrowded is in sleepe;
 Sad Una downe her laies in wearie plight,
 130 And at her feet the Lyon watch doth keepe:
 In stead of rest, she does lament, and weepe
 For the late losse of her deare lovéd knight,
 And sighes, and grones, and evermore does steepe
 Her tender brest in bitter teares all night,
 135 All night she thinks too long, and often lookes for light.

16

Now when Aldeboran was mounted hie
 Above the shynie Cassiopeias chaire,³
 And all in deadly sleepe did drownéd lie,
 One knockéd at the dore, and in would fare;
 140 He knockéd fast,^o and often curst, and sware, insistently
 That readie entrance was not at his call:
 For on his backe a heavy load he bare
 Of nightly stelths and pillage severall,
 Which he had got abroad by purchase^o criminall. acquisition

17

He was to weete⁴ a stout and sturdie thiefe,
 Wont to robbe Churches of their ornaments,
 And poore mens boxes⁵ of their due reliefe,
 Which given was to them for good intents;
 The holy Saints of their rich vestiments
 150 He did disrobe, when all men carelesse slept, vestments
 And spoild the Priests of their habiliments,^o
 Whiles none the holy things in safety kept;
 Then he by cunning sleights in at the window crept.

18

And all that he by right or wrong could find,
 155 Unto this house he brought, and did bestow
 Upon the daughter of this woman blind,
 Abessa daughter of Corceca⁶ slow,
 With whom he whoredome usd, that few did know,
 And fed her fat with feast of offerings,
 160 And plentie, which in all the land did grow;
 Ne sparéd he to give her gold and rings:
 And now he to her brought part of his stolen things.

19

Thus long the dore with rage and threats he bet,^o beat
 Yet of those fearefull women none durst rize,
 165 The Lyon frayéd^o them, him in to let: terrify

3. Aldebaran, in the constellation Taurus, mounts over the constellation Cassiopeia.

4. In fact.

5. A box for alms for the poor, especially one placed near the door of a church.

6. Corceca means "blind heart"; her daughter Abessa's name comes from "abbess."

He would no longer stay him to advize,^o consider
 But open breakes the dore in furious wize,
 And entring is; when that disdainfull beast
 Encountring fierce, him suddaine doth surprize,
 170 And seizing^o cruell clawes on trembling brest, fastening
 Under his Lordly foot him proudly hath suppress.

20

Him booteth not resist,⁷ nor succour call,
 His bleeding hart is in the vengers hand,
 Who streight him rent in thousand peeces small,
 175 And quite dismembred hath: the thirstie land ground
 Drunke up his life; his corse left on the strand.^o
 His fearefull friends weare out the wofull night,
 Ne dare to weepe, nor seeme to understand
 The heaue hap,^o which on them is alight,^o lot / fallen
 180 Affraid, least to themselves the like mishappen might.

21

Now when broad day the world discovered^o has, revealed
 Up Una rose, up rose the Lyon eke,
 And on their former journey forward pas,
 In wayes unknowne, her wandring knight to seeke,
 185 With paines farre passing that long wandring Greeke,
 That for his love refuséd deitie;⁸
 Such were the labours of this Lady meeke,
 Still seeking him, that from her still did flie,
 Then furthest from her hope, when most she weened nie.¹

22

Soone as she parted thence, the fearetull twaine,
 That blind old woman and her daughter deare
 Came forth, and finding Kirkrapine^o there slaine, church robber
 For anguish great they gan to rend their heare,
 And beat their brests, and naked flesh to teare.
 195 And when they both had wept and wayld their fill,
 Then forth they ranne like two amazed deare,
 Halfe mad through malice, and revenging will,²
 To follow her, that was the causer of their ill.

23

Whom overtaking, they gan loudly bray,
 200 With hollow howling, and lamenting cry,
 Shamefully at her rayling all the way,
 And her accusing of dishonesty,^o unchastity
 That was the flowre of faith and chastity;
 And still amidst her rayling, she³ did pray,
 205 That plagues, and mischiefs, and long misery

7. It does no good to resist.

8. Odysseus, who renounced immortality and the love of the nymph Calypso for his wife Penelope.

1. Believed near.

2. Desire of revenge.

3. I.e., Corceca.

Might fall on her, and follow all the way,
And that in endlesse error° she might ever stray.

wandering

24

But when she saw her prayers nought prevaile,
She backe returned with some labour lost;
210 And in the way as she did weepe and waile,
A knight her met in mighty armes embost,
Yet knight was not for all his bragging bost,
But subtill Archimag, that Una sought
By traynes° into new troubles to have tost:
115 Of that old woman tydings he besought,
If that of such a Ladie she could tellen ought.

encased boasttricks

25

Therewith she gan her passion to renew,
And cry, and curse, and raile, and rend her heare,
Saying, that harlot she too lately knew,
220 That causd her shed so many a bitter teare,
And so forth told the story of her feare:
Much seeméd he to mone her haplesse chaunce,
And after for that Ladie did inquere;
Which being taught, he forward gan advaunce
225 His fair enchaunted steed, and eke his charmed launce.

26

Ere long he came, where Una traveld slow,
And that wilde Champion wayting° her besyde:
Whom seeing such, for dread he durst not show
Himselfe too nigh at hand, but turned wyde
230 Unto an hill; from whence when she him spyde,
By his like seeming shield, her knight by name
She weend it was, and towards him gan ryde:
Approching nigh, she wist° it was the same,
And with faire fearefull humblesse° towards him shee came.

attendingbelieved humility

27

And weeping said, "Ah my long lacked Lord,
Where have ye bene thus long out of my sight?
Much feared I to have bene quite abhord,
Or ought° have done, that ye displeasen might,
That should as death unto my deare hart light:
240 For since mine eye your joyous sight did mis,
My chearefull day is turnd to chearelesse night,
And eke my night of death the shadow is;
But welcome now my light, and shining lampe of blis."

ought

28

He thereto meeting⁵ said, "My dearest Dame,
Farre be it from your thought, and fro my will,
To thinke that knighthood I so much should shame,
As you to leave, that have me loved still,
And chose in Faery court of meere° goodwill,
Where noblest knights were to be found on earth:

pure

4. I.e., be as a death-blow to my sad heart. 5. Answering in like manner.

250 The earth shall sooner leave her kindly° skill natural
 To bring forth fruit, and make eternall derth,° desert
 Then I leave you, my lief, yborne of heavenly berth.

29

“And sooth to say, why I left you so long,
 Was for to seeke adventure in strange place,
 255 Where Archimago said a felon strong
 To many knights did daily worke disgrace;
 But knight he now shall never more deface:
 Good cause of mine excuse; that mote° ye please may
 Well to accept, and evermore embrace
 260 My faithfull service, that by land and seas
 Have vowd you to defend, now then your plaint appease.”

30

His lovely° words her seemd due recompence loving
 Of all her passed paines: one loving howre
 For many yeares of sorrow can dispence:° make amends
 265 A dram of sweet is worth a pound of sowre:
 She has forgot, how many a wofull stowre° trouble
 For him she late endured; she speakes no more
 Of past: true is, that true love hath no powre
 To looken backe; his eyes be fixt before.
 270 Before her stands her knight, for whom she toyld so sore.

31

Much like, as when the beaten marinere,
 That long hath wandred in the Ocean wide,
 Oft soust° in swelling Tethys° saltish teare, soaked
 And long time having tand his tawney hide
 275 With blustering breath of heaven, that none can bide,
 And scorching flames of fierce Orions hound,⁷
 Soone as the port from farre he has espide,
 His chearefull whistle merrily doth sound,
 And Nereus crownes with cups;⁸ his mates him
 pledg° around. toast

32

Such joy made Una, when her knight she found;
 And eke th'enchauter joyous seemd no lesse,
 Then the glad marchant, that does vew from ground.
 His ship farre come from watrie wildernesse,
 He hurls out voves, and Neptune oft doth blesse:
 285 So forth they past, and all the way they spent
 Discoursing of her dreadfull late distresse,
 In which he askt her, what the Lyon ment:
 Who told her all that fell° in journey as she went. befell

33

They had not ridden farre, when they might see
 290 One pricking towards them with hastie heat,

6. The wife of Ocean; here, Ocean.
 7. Sirius, the dog star, symbolizing hot weather (the “dog days”).

8. Nereus is god of the Mediterranean, to whom the mariner in gratitude makes libations.

Full strongly armd, and on a courser free,
 That through his fiercenesse fomed all with sweat,
 And the sharpe yron° did for anger eat,
 When his hot ryder spurd his chaufféd° side;
 295 His looke was sterne, and seeméd still to threat
 Cruell revenge, which he in hart did hyde,
 And on his shield Sans loy¹ in bloudie lines was dyde.

bit heated

34
 When nigh he drew unto this gentle payre
 And saw the Red-crosse, which the knight did beare,
 300 He burnt in fire, and gan eftsoones prepare
 Himselfe to battell with his couchéd speare.
 Loth was that other, and did faint through feare,
 To taste th'untryed dint of deadly steele;
 But yet his Lady did so well him cheare,
 305 That hope of new good hap he gan to feele;
 So bent° his speare, and spurnd his horse with yron heele.

lowered

35
 But that proud Paynim° forward came so fierce,
 And full of wrath, that with his sharp-head speare
 Through vainely crosséd shield² he quite did pierce,
 310 And had his staggering steede not shrunke for feare,
 Through shield and bodie eke he should him beare:°
 Yet so great was the puissance of his push,
 That from his saddle quite he did him beare:
 He tombling rudely downe to ground did rush,
 315 And from his goréd wound a well of bloud did gush.

pagan thrust

36
 Dismounting lightly from his loftie steed,
 He to him lept, in mind to reave° his life,
 And proudly said, "Lo there the worthie meed
 Of him, that slew Sans foy with bloudie knife;
 320 Henceforth his ghost freed from repining strife,
 In peace may passen over Lethe³ lake,
 When mourning altars purgd° with enemies life,
 The blacke infernall Furies⁴ doen aslake:°
 Life from Sans foy thou tookst, Sans loy shall from thee take."

take cleansed appease

37
 325 Therewith in haste his helmet gan unlace,
 Till Una cride, "O hold that heavie hand,
 Deare Sir, what ever that thou be in place:°
 Enough is, that thy foe doth vanquisht stand
 Now at thy mercy: Mercie not withstand:
 330 For he is one the truest knight alive,

1. The name means "without law." Law here is not, of course, merely state law, but the law of the cosmos, of nature, of civil government, and of man—the law that holds all life, both above the earth and on it, together. Hence "Sans loy" stands for the loss of all order, or chaos.

2. The cross on Archimago's shield was false and did not give him the protection the Redcrosse knight received in his fight with Sans foy; see I.ii.18.

3. A river in Hades.

4. Spirits of discord and revenge.

5. Whoever you are.

Though conquered now he lie on lowly land,
And whilest him fortune favoured, faire did thrive
In bloudie field: therefore of life him not deprive."

38

Her piteous words might not abate his rage,
335 But rudely rending up his helmet, would
Have slaine him straight: but when he sees his age,
And hoarie head of Archimago old,
His hastie hand he doth amazed hold,
And halfe ashaméd, wondred at the sight:
340 For the old man well knew he, though untold,
In charmes and magicke to have wondrous might,
Ne ever wont in field, ne in round lists⁶ to fight.

39

And said, "Why Archimago, lucklesse syre,
What doe I see? what hard mishap is this,
345 That hath thee hither brought to taste mine yre?
Or thine the fault, or mine the error is,
In stead of foe to wound my friend amis?"
He answered nought, but in a traunce still lay,
And on those guilefull dazed eyes of his 350 The cloud of death did sit. Which doen away,⁷
He left him lying so, ne would no lenger stay.

40

But to the virgin comes, who all this while Amaséd stands, her selfe so mockt^o to see
By him, who has the guerdon^o of his guile,
355 For so misfeigning her true knight to bee:
Yet is she now in more perplexitie,
Left in the hand of that same Paynim bold,
From whom her booteth not at all to flie;
Who by her cleanly garment catching hold,
360 Her from her Palfrey pluckt, her visage to behold.

deceived
reward

41

But her fierce servant full of kingly awe
And high disdaine, whenas his souveraine Dame
So rudely handled by her foe he sawe,
With gaping jawes full greedy at him came,
365 And ramping on his shield, did weene^o the same
Have reft away with his sharpe rending clawes
But he was stout, and lust did now inflame
His corage more, that from his griping pawes
He hath his shield redeemed,^o and foorth his swerd he drawes.

intend recovered

42

370 O then too weake and feeble was the forse
Of salvage beast, his puissance to withstand:
For he was strong, and of so mightie corse,

6. Enclosures for fighting tournaments. 7. When he recovered from the swoon.

As ever wielded speare in warlike hand,
 And feates of armes did wisely° understand. skilfully
 375 Eftsoones he perced through his chaufed chest
 With thrilling° point of deadly yron brand,° penetrating / sword
 And launcht° his Lordly hart: with death opprest pierced
 He roared aloud, whiles life forsooke his stubborne brest.

43

Who now is left to keepe the forlorne maid
 380 From raging spoile of lawlesse victors will?
 Her faithfull gard removed, her hope dismaid,
 Her selfe a yeelded pray to save or spill.° destroy
 He now Lord of the field, his pride to fill,
 With foule reproches, and disdainfull spight,
 385 Her vildly entertaines,° and will or nill, deals with Beares her away upon his courser light:
 Her prayers nought prevaile; his rage is more of might.

44

And all the way, with great lamenting paine,
 And piteous plaints she filleth his dull° eares, deaf
 390 That stony hart could riven have in twaine,
 And all the way she wets with flowing teares:
 But he enraged with rancor, nothing heares.
 Her servile beast yet would not leave her so,
 But followes her farre off, ne ought he feares,
 395 To be partaker of her wandring woe, nature
 More mild in beastly kind,° then that her beastly foe.

Canto IV

*To sinfull house of Pride, Duessa guides the faithfull knight,
 Where brothers death to wreak° Sansjoy avenge doth challenge him to fight.*

1

Young knight, what ever that dost armes professe,
 And through long labours hunttest after fame,
 Bewarc of fraud, beware of ficklenesse,
 In choice, and change of thy deare loved Dame,
 5 Least thou of her beleeve too lightly blame,
 And rash miswcening doe thy hart remove:
 For unto knight there is no greater shame,
 Then lightnesse and inconstancie in love;
 That doth this Redcrosse knights ensample° plainly prove. example

2

10 Who after that he had faire Una lorne,° lost
 Through light misdeeming° of her loialtie, misjudging
 And false Duessa in her sted had borne,
 Called Fidess', and so supposd to bee;
 Long with her traveild, till at last they see

15 A goodly building, bravely garnishéd,[°] adorned
 The house of mightie Prince it seemd to bee:
 And towards it a broad high way¹ that led,
 All bare through peoples feet, which thither travailéd.

3

Great troupes of people traveld thitherward
 20 Both day and night, of each degree and place,[°] rank
 But few returnéd, having scapéd hard,[°] with difficulty
 With balefull beggerie, or foule disgrace,
 Which ever after in most wretched case,
 Like loathsome lazars,[°] by the hedges lay. lepers
 25 Thither Duessa bad him bend his pace:
 For she is wearie of the toilesome way,
 And also nigh consuméd is the lingring day.

4

A stately Pallace built of squaréd bricke,
 Which cunningly was without mortar laid,
 30 Whose wals were high, but nothing strong, nor thick,
 And golden foile[°] all over them displaid, thin layer
 That purest skye with brightnesse they dismaid[°]: outdid
 High lifted up were many loftie towres,
 And goodly galleries farre over laid,²
 35 Full of faire windowes, and delightfull bowres;
 And on the top a Diall told the timely howres.

5

It was a goodly heape[°] for to behould,
 And spake the praises of the workmans wit,[°] building
 But full great pittie, that so faire a mould[°] skill
 40 Did on so weake foundation ever sit: structure
 For on a sandie hill, that still did flit,[°] give way
 And fall away, it mounted was full hie,
 That every breath of heaven shakéd it:
 And all the hinder parts, that few could spie,
 45 Were ruinous and old, but painted cunningly.

6

Arrivé there they passéd in forth right;
 For still to all the gates stood open wide,
 Yet charge of them was to a Porter hight[°] committed
 Cald Malvenù,³ who entrance none denide:
 50 Thence to the hall, which was on every side
 With rich array and costly arras dight:⁴
 Infinite sorts of people did abide
 There waiting long, to win the wishéd sight
 Of her, that was the Lady of that Pallace bright.

1. "Broad is the way that leadeth to destruction" (Matthew vii.13).

2. Placed above.

3. The name means "unwelcome." In courtly-love allegories, the porter is often called "Bienvenu" or "Bel-accueil" ("welcome").

4. Decorated with costly wall hangings.

7

- 55 By them they passe, all gazing on them round,
 And to the Presence^o mount; whose glorious vew reception hall
 Their frayle amazed senses did confound:
 In living Princes court none ever knew
 Such endlesse riches, and so sumptuous shew;
 60 Ne Persia selfe, the nourse of pompous pride
 Like ever saw. And there a noble crew
 Of Lordes and Ladies stood on every side,
 Which with their presence faire, the place much beautifide.

8

- High above all a cloth of State⁵ was spred,
 65 And a rich throne, as bright as sunny day,
 On which there sate most brave embellishéd⁶
 With royall robes and gorgeous array,
 A mayden Queene, that shone as Titans^o ray, the sun's
 In glistring gold, and peerelesse pretious stone:
 70 Yet her bright blazing beautie did assay^o attempt
 To dim the brightnesse of her glorious throne,
 As envying her selfe, that too exceeding shone.

9

- Exceeding shone, like Phoebus fairest childe,
 That did presume his fathers fire wayne,^o chariot
 75 And flaming mouthes of steedes unwonted^o wilde unusually
 Through highest heaven with weaker^o hand to rayne; too weak
 Proud of such glory and advancement vaine,
 While flashing beames do daze his feeble eyen,
 He leaves the welkin^o way most beaten plaine, skye
 80 And rapt^o with whirling wheelles, inflames the skyen, carried away
 With fire not made to burne, but fairely for to shyne.⁷

10

- So proud she shynéd in her Princely state,^o throne
 Looking to heaven; for earth she did disdayne,
 And sitting high; for lowly^o she did hate: lowliness
 85 Lo underneath her scornefull feete, was layne
 A dreadfull Dragon with an hideous trayne,^o tail
 And in her hand she held a mirrhour bright,⁸
 Wherein her face she often vewéd fayne,^o with pleasure
 And in her selfe-loved semblance tooke delight;
 90 For she was wondrous faire, as any living wight.

11

Of griesly Pluto she the daughter was,
 And sad Proserpina the Queene of hell;

5. Canopy.

6. Handsomely clad.

7. Phaëthon tried to drive the chariot of Phoebus, his father, but set the skies on fire and fell.

8. Pride, and figures associated with her in Renaissance literature and art, often hold a mirror, emblematic of self-love.

Yet did she thinke her pearelesse worth to pas
 That parentage, with pride so did she swell,
 95 And thundring Iove, that high in heaven doth dwell,
 And wield^o the world, she clayméd for her syre,
 Or if that any else did Iove excell:
 For to the highest she did still aspyre,
 Or if ought higher were then that, did it desyre.

govern

12

100 And proud Lucifera men did her call,
 That made her selfe a Queene, and crownd to be,
 Yet rightfull kingdome she had none at all,
 Ne heritage of native soveraintie,
 But did usurpe with wrong and tyrannie
 105 Upon the scepter, which she now did hold:
 Ne ruld her Realmes with lawes, but pollicie,^o
 And strong advizement of six wisards old,
 That with their counsels bad her kingdome did uphold.

conspiracy

13

Soone as the Elfin knight in presence came,
 110 And false Duessa seeming Lady faire,
 A gentle Husher,^o Vanitie by name
 Made rowme, and passage for them did prepaire:
 So goodly brought them to the lowest staire
 Of her high throne, where they on humble knee
 115 Making obeysance, did the cause declare,
 Why they were come, her royall state to see,
 To prove^o the wide report of her great Majestee.

usher

verify

14

With loftie eyes, halfe loth to looke so low,
 She thanked them in her disdainefull show,
 120 Ne other grace vouchsaféd them to show
 Of Princesse worthy, scarce them bad arise.
 Her Lordes and Ladies all this while devise Themselves to setten forth to straungers sight:
 Some frounce^o their curléd haire in courtly guise,
 125 Some prancke^o their ruffes, and others trimly dight^o
 Their gay attire: each others greater pride does spight.

frizzle display/adjust

15

Goodly they all that knight do entertaine,
 Right glad with him to have increast their crew:
 But to Duess' each one himselfe did paine
 130 All kindnesse and faire courtesie to shew;
 For in that court whylome^o her well they knew:
 Yet the stout Faerie mongst the middest^o crowd
 Thought all their glorie vaine in knightly vew,
 And that great Princesse too exceeding prowde,
 135 That to strange knight no better countenance allowd.

formerly

thickest

16

Suddein upriseth from her stately place
 The royall Dame, and for her coche doth call:

All hurtlen° forth, and she with Princely pace, rush
 As faire Aurora in her purple pall,° robe

140 Out of the East the dawning day doth call:
 So forth she comes: her brightnesse brode° doth blaze; abroad
 The heapes of people thronging in the hall,
 Do ride° each other, upon her to gaze: climb up
 Her glorious glitterand° light doth all mens eyes amaze. glittering

17

145 So forth she comes, and to her coche does clyme,
 Adornéd all with gold, and girlonds gay,
 That seemd as fresh as Flora in her prime,
 And strove to match, in royall rich array,
 Great Junos golden chaire,° the which they say chariot
 150 The Gods stand gazing on, when she does ride
 To Joves high house through heavens bras-pavéd way
 Drawne of faire Pecoocks, that excell in pride,
 And full of Argus eyes their tailles dispredden wide.¹

18

But this was drawne of six unequall beasts,
 155 On which her six sage Counsellours did ryde,
 Taught to obay their bestiall beheasts,
 With like conditions to their kinds applyde:²
 Of which the first, that all the rest did guyde,
 Was sluggish Idlenesse the nourse of sin;
 160 Upon a slouthfull Asse he chose to ryde,
 Arayd in habit blacke, and amis° thin, hood, cape
 Like to an holy Monck, the service to begin.

19

And in his hand his Portesse° still he bare, breviary
 That much was worne, but therein little red,
 165 For of devotion he had little care,
 Still drown'd in sleepe, and most of his dayes ded;
 Scarse could he once uphold his heavie hed,
 To looken, whether it were night or day:
 May seeme the wayne° was very evill led, chariot
 170 When such an one had guiding of the way,
 That knew not, whether right he went, or else astray.

20

From worldly cares himselfe he did esloyne,° withdraw
 And greatly shunnéd manly exercise,
 From every worke he chalengéd essayne,° excuse
 175 For contemplation sake: yet otherwise,
 His life he led in lawlesse riotisc;
 By which he grew to grievous malady;

1. The many-eyed monster Argus was set by Juno to watch Jupiter's love Io. When Mercury killed Argus, his eyes were put in the peacock's tail feathers.
 2. The "sage Counsellours" do not guide their beasts, but are guided by them

(i.e., by their bestial "kinds," or natures). This procession of the seven deadly sins—of which Pride is the queen, the chief sin—had a long tradition in medieval art and literature. And see Marlowe's Dr. Faustus (II.ii.111–64).

For in his lustlesse° limbs through evill guise° feeble/living

A shaking fever raignd continually:

180 Such one was Idlenesse, first of this company.

21

And by his side rode loathsome Gluttony,

Deforméd creature, on a filthie swyne,
His belly was up-blowne with luxury.° indulgence in rich food

185 And eke with fatnesse swollen were his eyne,° thin

With which he swallowd up excessive feast,
For want whereof poore people oft did pyne;° starve

And all the way, most like a brutish beast,

He spuéd up his gorge, that all did him deteast.

22

190 In greene vine leaves he was right fitly clad;

For other clothes he could not weare for heat,

And on his head an yvie girland had,

From under which fast trickled downe the sweat:

Still as he rode, he somewhat° still did eat, something

195 And in his hand did beare a bouzing can,

Of which he supt so oft, that on his seat

His dronken corse he scarce upholden can,

In shape and life more like a monster, then a man.

23

Unfit he was for any worldly thing,

200 And eke unliable once° to stirre or go,° at all/walk

Not meet to be of counsell to a king,

Whose mind in meat and drinke was drownéd so,

That from his friend he seldome knew his fo:

Full of diseases was his carcas blew,° livid

205 And a dry dropsie through his flesh did flow:

Which by misdiet daily greater grew:

Such one was Gluttony, the second of that crew.

24

And next to him rode lustfull Lechery,

Upon a bearded Goat, whose rugged haire,

210 And whally° eyes (the signe of gelosy,) greenish

Was like the person selfe, whom he did beare:

Who rough, and blacke, and filthy did appeare,

Unseemely man to please faire Ladies eye;

Yet he of Ladies oft was lovéd deare,

215 When fairer faces were bid standen by:° away

O who does know the bent of womens fantasy?

25

In a greene gowne he clothéd was full faire,

Which underneath did hide his filthinesse,

And in his hand a burning hart he bare,

220 Full of vaine follies, and new fanglenesse:° fickleness

For he was false, and fraught with ficklenesse,

And learned had to love with secret lookes,
 And well could daunce, and sing with ruefulness,^o
 And fortunes tell, and read in loving^o bookes, 225 And thousand other wayes, to bait his fleshly hookes.

pity erotic

26

Inconstant man, that loved all he saw,
 And lusted after all, that he did love,
 Ne would his looser life be tide to law,
 But joyd weake wemens hearts to tempt and prove^o
 230 If from their loyall loves he might them move;
 Which lewdnesse fild him with reprochfull paine
 Of that fowle evill,³ which all men reprove,
 That rots the marrow, and consumes the braine:
 Such one was Lecherie, the third of all this traine.

try

27

And greedy Avarice by him did ride,
 Upon a Camell loaden all with gold;
 Two iron coffers hong on either side,
 With precious mettall full, as they might hold,
 And in his lap an heape of coine he told;^o
 240 For of his wicked pelfe his God he made,
 And unto hell him selfe for money sold;
 Accurséd usurie was all his trade,
 And right and wrong ylike in equall ballaunce waide.⁴

counted

28

His life was nigh unto deaths doore yplast,
 245 And thread-bare cote, and cobled shoes he ware,
 Ne scarce good morsell all his life did tast,
 But both from backe and belly still did spare,
 To fill his bags, and richesse to compare;^o
 Yet chylde ne kinsman living had he none
 250 To leave them to; but thorough daily care
 To get, and nightly feare to lose his owne,
 He led a wretched life unto him selfe unknowne.

acquire

29

Most wretched wight, whom nothing might suffise,
 Whose greedy lust did lacke in greatest store,^o
 255 Whose need had end, but no end covetise,
 Whose wealth was want, whose plenty made him pore,
 Who had enough, yet wished ever more;
 A vile disease, and eke in foote and hand
 A grievous gout tormented him full sore,
 260 That well he could not touch, not go,^o nor stand:
 Such one was Avarice, the fourth of this faire band.

plenty

walk

30

And next to him malicious Envie rode,
 Upon a ravenous wolfe, and still did chaw

3. I.e., syphilis.

4. I.e., made no distinction between right and wrong.

Betweene his cankered teeth a venomous tode,
 265 That all the poison ran about his chaw;°
 But inwardly he chawéd his owne maw°
 At neighbours wealth, that made him ever sad;
 For death it was, when any good he saw,
 And wept, that cause of weeping none he had,
 270 But when he heard of harme, he wexéd wondrous glad.

jaw entrails

31

All in a kirtle of discoloured say⁵
 He clothéd was, ypainted full of eyes;
 And in his bosome secretly there lay
 An hatefull Snake, the which his taile uptyes
 275 In many folds, and mortall sting implyes.°
 Still as he rode, he gnasht his teeth, to see
 Those heapes of gold with griple° Covetysse,
 And grudgéd at the great felicitie
 Of proud Lucifera, and his owne companie.

enfolds

grasping

32

280 He hated all good workes and vertuous deeds,
 And him no lesse, that any like did use,
 And who with gracious bread the hungry feeds,
 His almes for want of faith he doth accuse;
 So every good to bad he doth abuse:°
 285 And eke the verse of famous Poets witt
 He does backebite, and spightfull poison spues
 From leprous mouth on all, that ever writt:
 Such one vile Envie was, that fite in row did sitt.

twist

33

And him beside rides fierce revenging Wrath,
 290 Upon a Lion, loth for to be led;
 And in his hand a burning brond° he hath,
 The which he brandisheth about his hed;
 His eyes did hurle forth sparkles fiery red,
 And staréd sterne on all, that him beheld,
 295 As ashes pale of hew and seeming ded;
 And on his dagger still his hand he held,
 Trembling through hasty rage, when choler° in him sweld.

sword anger

34

His ruffin° raiment all was stained with blood,
 Which he had spilt, and all to rags yrent,°
 300 Through unadvised rashnesse woxen wood,°
 For of his hands he had no government,°
 Ne cared for bloud in his avengement:
 But when the furious fit was overpast,
 His cruell facts° he often would repent;
 305 Yet wilfull man he never would forecast,
 How many mischieves should ensue his heedlesse hast.

disarranged torn control

actions

5. Jacket of many-colored wool.

6. Grown insane.

35

- Full many mischiefes follow cruell Wrath;
 Abhorred bloudshed, and tumultuous strife,
 Unmanly^o murder, and unthrifty scath,^o inhuman/damage
 310 Bitter despight, with rancours rusty knife,
 And fretting grieve the enemy of life;
 All these, and many evils moe^o haunt ire,^o more/anger
 The swelling Splene,^o and Frenzy raging rife, malice
 The shaking Palsey, and Saint Fraunces fire:⁷
 315 Such one was Wrath, the last of this ungodly tire.^o train

36

- And after all, upon the wagon beame
 Rode Sathan, with a smarting whip in hand,
 With which he forward lasht the laesie teme,
 So oft as Slowth still in the mire did stand.
 320 Huge routs of people did about them band,
 Showting for joy, and still before their way
 A foggy mist had covered all the land;
 And underneath their feet, all scattered lay
 Dead sculs and bones of men, whose life had gone astray.

37

- So forth they marchen in this goodly sort,
 To take the solace^o of the open aire, recreation
 And in fresh flowring fields themselves to sport;
 Emongst the rest rode that false Lady faire,
 The fowle Duessa, next unto the chaire
 330 Of proud Lucifera, as one of the traine:
 But that good knight would not so nigh repaire,^o approach
 Him selfe cstraunging from their joyaunce vaine,
 Whose fellowship seemd far unfit for warlike swaine.

38

- So having solacéd themselves a space
 335 With pleasaunce of the breathing^o fields yfed, fragrant
 They backe returnéd to the Princely Place;
 Whereas an errant knight in armes ycléd,^o clad
 And heathnish shield, wherein with letters red
 Was writ Sans joy, they new arrivéd find:
 340 Enflamed with fury and fiers hardy-hed,^o audacity
 He seemd in hart to harbour thoughts unkind,
 And nourish bloody vengeance in his bitter mind.⁸

39

- Who when the shaméd shield⁹ of slaine Sans foy
 He spied with that same Faery champions page,
 345 Bewraying^o him, that did of late destroy revealing

7. St. Anthony's fire, erysipelas, or the flaming itch; appropriate to Wrath.

8. Sans joy ("without joy") stands, not simply for gloom or "no fun," but for accidie, loss of heart. Redcrosse's high-mind rejection of the seven deadly sins (lines 331-33) does not protect him from this darkness of the spirit.

9. With the arms reversed. See below, line 369.

His eldest brother, burning all with rage
 He to him leapt, and that same envious gage¹
 Of victors glory from him snatcht away:
 But th'Elfin knight, which ought° that warlike owned/trophy

350 Disdained to loose the meed he wonne in fray,
 And him rencountring fierce, reskewd the noble pray.

40
 Therewith they gan to hurtlen° greedily,
 Redoubted battaile ready to darrayne,°
 And clash their shields, and shake their swords on hy,
 355 That with their sturre they troubled all the traine;
 Till that great Queene upon eternall paine
 Of high displeasure, that ensewen might,
 Commaunded them their fury to refraine,
 And if that either to that shield had right,
 360 In equall lists they should the morrow next it fight.

skirmish contest

41
 "Ah dearest Dame," quoth then the Paynim bold,
 "Pardon the errour of enragéd wight,
 Whom great griefe made forget the raines to hold
 Of reasons rule, to see this recreant knight,
 365 No knight, but treachour full of false despight
 And shamefull treason, who through guile hath slayn
 The prowtest° knight, that ever field did fight,
 Even stout Sans foy (O who can then refrayn?)
 Whose shield he beares renverst, the more to heape disdayn.

bravest

42
 370 "And to augment the glorie of his guile,
 His dearest love² the faire Fidessa loe
 Is there possessed of° the traytour vile,
 Who reapes the harvest sowed by his foe,
 Sowed in bloody field, and bought with woe:
 375 That brothers hand shall dearely well requight
 So be, O Queene, you equall favour showe."
 Him litle answerd th'angry Elfin knight:
 He never meant with words, but swords to plead his right.

by

43
 But threw his gauntlet as a sacred pledge,
 380 His cause in combat the next day to try:
 So been they parted both, with harts on edge,
 To be avenged each on his enemy.
 That night they pas in joy and jollity,
 Feasting and courting both in bowre and hall;
 385 For Steward was excessive Gluttonie,
 That of his plenty poured forth to all;
 Which doen,° the Chamberlain Slowth did to rest them call.

done

1. Envied prize.

2. I.e. Sans foy's.

44

Now whenas darkesome night had all display
 Her coleblacke curtein over brightest skye,
 390 The warlike youthes on dayntie couches layd,
 Did chace away sweet sleepe from sluggish eye,
 To muse on meanes of hopéd victory.
 But whenas Morpheus³ had with leaden mace
 Arrested all that courtly company,
 395 Up-rose Duessa from her resting place,
 And to the Paynims lodging comes with silent pace.

45

Whom broad awake she finds, in troublous fit,^o mood
 Forecasting, how his foe he might annoy,
 And him amoves with speeches seeming fit:
 400 "Ah deare Sans joy, next dearest to Sans foy,
 Cause of my new griefe, cause of my new joy,
 Joyous, to see his ymage in mine eye,
 And greeved, to thinke how foe did him destroy,
 That was the flowre of grace and chevalrye;
 405 Lo his Fidessa to thy secret faith I flye."

46

With gentle wordes he can^o her fairely greet, did
 And bad say on the secret of her hart.
 Then sighing soft, "I learne that litle sweet
 Oft tempred is," quoth she, "with muchell smart:
 410 For since my brest was launcht^o with lovely dart pierced
 Of deare Sans foy, I never joyéd howre,
 But in eternall woes my weaker hart
 Have wasted, loving him with all my powre,
 And for his sake have felt full many an heavie stowre."^o grief

47

"At last when perils all I weened past,
 415 And hoped to reape the crop of all my care,
 Into new woes unweeting^o I was cast, unknowing
 By this false faytor,^o who unworthy ware deceiver
 His worthy shield, whom he with guilefull snare
 420 Entrappéd slew, and brought to shamefull grave.
 Me silly^o maid away with him he bare, innocent
 And ever since hath kept in darksome cave,
 For that I would not yeeld, that^o to Sans foy I gave. what 48

"But since faire Sunne hath sperst^o that lowring clowd, dispersed
 425 And to my loathéd life now shewes some light,
 Under your beames I will me safely shrowd,
 From dreaded storme of his disdainfull spight:
 To you th'inheritance belongs by right
 Of brothers prayse, to you eke longs^o his love. belongs
 430 Let not his love, let not his restlesse spright^o ghost
 Be unrevenged, that calles to you above
 From wandring Stygian⁴ shores, where it doth endlesse move."

3. The god of sleep.

4. Of the river Styx, in the underworld.

49

Thereto said he, "Faïre Dame be nought dismaid
For sorrowes past; their griefe is with them gone:
435 Ne yet of present perill be affraid;
For needlesse feare did never vantage° none,
And helplesse hap it booteth not to mone.
Dead is Sans-foy, his vitall paines are past,
Though greevéd ghost for vengeance deepe do grone:
440 He lives, that shall him pay his dewties° last,
And guiltie Elfin blood shall sacrifice in hast."

aid

rites

50

"O but I feare the fickle freakes,"⁵⁰ quoth shee,
"Of fortune false, and oddes of armes in field."
"Why dame," quoth he, "what oddes can ever bee, 445 Where both do fight alike, to win or yield?"
"Yea but," quoth she, "he beares a charmed shield,
And eke enchaunted armes, that none can perce,
Ne none can wound the man, that does them wield."
"Charmd or enchaunted," answerd he then ferce,^o
450 "I no whit reck, ne you the like need to reherce."

fiercely recount

51

"But faïre Fidessa, sithens° fortunes guile,
Or enimies powre hath now captivéd you,
Returne from whence ye came, and rest a while
Till morrow next, that I the Elfe subdew,
455 And with Sans foyes dead dowry you endew."⁶
"Ay me, that is a double death," she said,
"With proud foes sight my sorrow to renew:
Where ever yet I be, my secrete aid
Shall follow you." So passing forth she him obaid.

since

Canto V

*The faithfull knight in equall field
subdewes his faithlesse foe,
Whom false Duessa saves, and for his cure to hell does goe.*

1

The noble hart, that harbours vertuous thought,
And is with child of glorious great intent,
Can never rest, untill it forth have brought Th'eternall brood of glorie excellent:⁷
5 Such restlesse passion did all night torment
The flaming corage of that Faery knight,
Devizing, how that doughtie turnament
With greatest honour he atchieven might;
Still did he wake, and still did watch for dawning light.

5. Unpredictable tricks.

6. I.e., endow you with the dowry of the dead Sans foy.

7. That good is manifested only in action, not in mere intent, is an important commonplace of Renaissance thinking.

2

- 10 At last the golden Orientall gate
 Of greatest heaven gan to open faire,
 And Phoebus fresh, as bridegrome to his mate,
 Came dauncing forth, shaking his deawie haire:
 And hurd his glistring beames through gloomy aire.
 15 Which when the wakeful Elfe perceived, streight way
 He started up, and did him selfe prepaire,
 In sun-bright armes, and battailous array:
 For with that Pagan proud he combat will that day.

3

- And forth he comes into the commune hall,
 20 Where carely waite him many a gazing eye,
 To weet what end to straunger knights may fall.
 There many Minstrales maken melody,
 To drive away the dull melancholy,
 And many Bardes, that to the trembling chord
 25 Can tune their timely^o voyces cunningly,
 And many Chroniclers, that can record
 Old loves, and warres for ladies doen by many a Lord.

measured

4

- Soone after comes the cruell Sarazin,
 In woven maile all arméd warily,
 30 And sternly lookes at him, who not a pin
 Does care for looke of living creatures eye.
 They bring them wines of Greece and Araby,
 And daintie spices fetcht from furthest Ynd,^o
 To kindle heat of courage privily:^o
 35 And in the wine a solemne oth they bynd
 T'observe the sacred lawes of armes, that are assynd.

India within

5

- At last forth comes that far renownéd Queene,
 With royall pomp and Princely majestie;
 She is ybrought unto a paléd^o greene,
 40 And placéd under stately canapee,^o
 The warlike feates of both those knights to see.
 On th'other side in all mens open vew
 Duessa placéd is, and on a tree
 Sans-foy his shield is hangd with bloody hew:
 45 Both those the lawrell girlonds to the victor dew.

fenced canopy

6

- A shrilling trompet sownded from on hye,
 And unto battaill bad them selves addresse:
 Their shining shieldes about their wrestes^o they tye,
 And burning blades about their heads do blesse,^o
 50 The instruments of wrath and heavennesse:
 With greedy force each other doth assayle,
 And strike so fiercely, that they do impresse

wrists brandish

Deepe dinted furrowes in the battred mayle;
The yron walles to ward their blowes are weake and fraile.

7

- 55 The Sarazin was stout, and wondrous strong,
And heaped blowes like yron hammers great:
For after bloud and vengeance he did long.
The knight was fiers, and full of youthly heat:
And doubled strokes, like dreaded thunders threat:
60 For all for prayse and honour he did fight.
Both stricken strike, and beaten both do beat,
That from their shields forth flyeth fire light,
And helmets hewen deepe, shew marks of eithers might.

8

- So th'one for wrong, the other strives for right:
65 As when a Gryfon⁸ seized of his pray,
A Dragon fiers encountreth in his flight,
Through widest ayre making his ydle⁹ way,
That would his rightfull ravine¹⁰ rend away:
With hideous horreur both together smight,
70 And souce¹¹ so sore, that they the heavens affray:
The wise Southsayer¹² seeing so sad sight,
Th'amazed vulgar tels of warres and mortall fight.

empty
prey strike soothsayer

9

- So th'one for wrong, the other strives for right,
And each to deadly shame would drive his foe:
75 The cruell steele so greedily doth bight
In tender flesh, that streames of bloud down flow,
With which the armes, that earst so bright did show,
Into a pure vermillion now are dyde:
Great ruth in all the gazers harts did grow,
80 Seeing the goréd woundes to gape so wyde,
That victory they dare not wish to either side.

10

- At last the Paynim chaunst to cast his eye,
His sudden¹³ eye, flaming with wrathfull fyre,
Upon his brothers shield, which hong thereby:
85 Therewith redoubled was his raging yre,
And said, "Ah wretched sonne of wofull syre,
Doe thou sit wayling by black Stygian lake,
Whilest here thy shield is hangd for victors hyre,¹⁴
And sluggish german¹⁵ doest thy forces slake, 90 To after-send his foe, that him may overtake?"

darting

reward

11

"Goe caytive¹⁶ Elfe, him quickly overtake,
And soone redeeme from his long wandring woe;
Goe guiltie ghost, to him my message make,
That I his shield have quit¹⁷ from dying foe."

wretched

rescued

8. A legendary monster, half eagle, half lion. 1. I.e., his brother.

95 Therewith upon his crest he stroke him so,
 That twise he reeléd, readie twise to fall;
 End of the doubtfull battell deeméd tho° then
 The lookers on, and lowd to him gan call
 The false Duessa, "Thine the shield, and I, and all."²

12

100 Soone as the Faerie heard his Ladie speake,
 Out of his swowning dreame he gan awake,
 And quickning° faith, that earst was woxen weake, vitalizing
 The creeping deadly cold away did shake:
 Tho moved with wrath, and shame, and Ladies sake,
 105 Of all attonce he cast° avengd to bee, determined
 And with so' exceeding furie at him strake,
 That forcéd him to stoupe upon his knee;
 Had he not stoupéd so, he should have cloven bee,

13

And to him said, "Goe now proud Miscreant, 110 Thy selfe thy message doe° to german deare, give Alone he wandring thee too long doth want:
 Goe say, his foe thy shield with his doth beare."
 Therewith his heavie hand he high gan reare,
 Him to have slaine; when loe a darkesome clowd
 115 Upon him fell: he no where doth appeare,
 But vanisht is. The Elfe him cald alowd,
 But answer none receives: the darknes him does shrowd.³

14

In haste Duessa from her place arose,
 And to him running said, "O prowest° knight, bravest
 120 That ever Ladie to her love did chose,
 Let now abate the terror of your might,
 And quench the flame of furious despight,
 And bloudie vengeance; lo th'infernall powres
 Covering your foe with cloud of deadly night,
 125 Have borne him hence to Plutoes balefull bowres.
 The conquest yours, I yours, the shield, and glory yours."

15

Not all so satisfide, with greedie eye
 He sought all round about, his thirstie blade
 To bath in bloud of faithlesse enemy;
 130 Who all that while lay hid in secret shade:
 He standes amazéd, how he thence should fade.
 At last the trumpets Triumph sound on hie,
 And running Heralds humble homage made,
 Greeting him goodly with new victorie,
 135 And to him brought the shield, the cause of enmitie.

2. Duessa is, of course, calling to Sans joy, but Redcrosse (lines 100 ff.) hears her as "Fidessa."

3. This inconclusive ending to the fight is a traditional epic device. Cf., in Iliad

III, the battle between Menelaus and Paris and Paradise Lost IV. In Tasso's Gerusalemme Liberata (VII.44-45) the enchantress Armida protects Rambaldo in like manner.

16

Wherewith he goeth to that soveraine Queene,
 And falling her before on lowly knee,
 To her makes present of his service seene;^o
 Which she accepts, with thanks, and goodly gree,^o
 140 Greatly advauncing^o his gay chevalree.
 So marcheth home, and by her takes the knight,
 Whom all the people follow with great glee,
 Shouting, and clapping all their hands on hight,
 That all the aire it fils, and flyes to heaven bright.

proved favor extolling

17

145 Home is he brought, and laid in sumptuous bed:
 Where many skilfull leaches^o him abide,^o
 To salve his hurts, that yet still freshly bled.
 In wine and oyle they wash his woundes wide,
 And softly can embalme^o on every side.
 150 And all the while, most heavenly melody
 About the bed sweet musicke did divide,⁴
 Him to beguile of grieve and agony:
 And all the while Duesza wept full bitterly.

doctors/attend

anoint

18

As when a wearie traveller that strays
 155 By muddy shore of broad seven-mouthéd Nile,
 Unweeting of the perillous wandring wayes,
 Doth meet a cruell craftie Crocodile,
 Which in false grieve hyding his harmefull guile,
 Doth weepe full sore, and sheddeth tender teares:
 160 The foolish man, that pitties all this while
 His mournefull plight, is swallowed up unwares,
 Forgetfull of his owne, that mindes anothers cares.

19

So wept Duesza untill eventide,
 That^o shyning lampes in Joves high house were light:
 165 Then forth she rose, ne lenger would abide,
 But comes unto the place, where th'Hethen knight
 In slombring swownd nigh voyd of vitall spright,
 Lay covered with inchaunted cloud all day:
 Whom when she found, as she him left in plight,
 170 To wayle his woefull case she would not stay,
 But to the easterne coast of heaven makes speedy way.

when

20

• Where griesly^o Night, with visage deadly sad,
 That Phoebus chearefull face durst never vew,
 And in a foule blacke pitchie mantle clad,
 175 She findes forth comming from her darkesome mew,^o
 Where she all day did hide her hated hew.
 Before the dore her yron charet stood,

grim, horrible

den

Alreadie harnesséd for journey new;
 And cole blacke steedes yborne of hellish brood,
 180 That on their rustie bits did champ, as they were wood.⁵

21

Who when she saw Duessa sunny bright,
 Adorn'd with gold and jewels shining cleare,
 She greatly grew amazéd at the sight,
 And th'unacquainted light began to feare:
 185 For never did such brightnesse there appeare,
 And would have backe retyred to her cave,
 Untill the witches speech she gan to heare,
 Saying, "Yet O thou dreaded Dame, I crave Abide, till I have told the message, which I have."

22

190 She stayd, and foorth Duessa gan proceede,
 "O thou most auncient Grandmother of all,
 More old then Jove, whom thou at first didst breede,
 Or that great house of Gods caclestiall,
 Which wast begot in Daemogorgons hall,⁶
 195 And sawst the secrets of the world unmade,⁷
 Why suffredst thou thy Nephewes^o deare to rall
 With Elfin sword, most shamefully betrade?
 Lo where the stout Sans joy doth sleepe in deadly shade.

grandsons

23

"And him before, I saw with bitter eyes
 200 The bold Sans foy shrinke underneath his speare;
 And new the pray of fowles in field he lyes,
 Nor wayld of friends, nor laid on groning beare,^o
 That whylome was to me too dearely deare.
 O what of Gods then boots it to be borne,
 205 If old Aveugles sonnes so evill heare?⁸
 Or who shall not great Nightes children scorne,
 When two of three her Nephews are so fowle forlorne.

bier

24

"Up then, up dreary Dame, of darknesse Queene,
 Go gather up the reliques of thy race,
 210 Or else goe them aveng, and let be seene,
 That dreaded Night in brightest day hath place,
 And can the children of faire light deface."^o
 Her feeling speeches some compassion moved
 In hart, and chaunge in that great mothers face:
 215 Yet pittie in her hart was never proved
 Till then: for evermore she hated, never loved.

destroy

25

And said, "Deare daughter rightly may I rew
 The fall of famous children borne of mee,

5. Mad. The description of night echoes not only descriptions in classical poetry but also the world of popular superstition in the English countryside.

6. I.e., in Chaos.

7. Before it was made.

8. I.e., are so badly thought of. "Aveugle" means "blind"; he is son of Night and father of Sans foy, Sans joy, and Sans loy.

And good successes, which their foes ensee:^o attend
 220 But who can turne the streame of destinee,
 Or breake the chayne of strong necessitee,
 Which fast is tyde to Joves eternall seat?⁹
 The sonnes of Day he favoureth, I see,
 And by my ruines thinkes to make them great:
 225 To make one great by others losse, is bad excheat.^o profit

26
 "Yet shall they not escape so freely all;
 For some shall pay the price of others guilt:
 And he the man that made Sans foy to fall,
 Shall with his owne bloud price that¹ he hath spilt.
 230 But what art thou, that telst of Nephews kilt?"
 "I that do seeme not I, Duessa am,"
 Quoth she, "how ever now in garments gilt,
 And gorgeous gold arayd I to thee came;
 Duessa I, the daughter of Deceit and Shame."

27
 235 Then bowing downe her agéd backe, she kist
 The wicked witch, saying; "In that faire face
 The false resemblance of Deceit, I wist"
 Did closely lurke; yet so true-seeming grace
 It carried, that I scarce in darkesome place
 240 Could it discerne, though I the mother bee
 Of falshood, and root of Duessaes race.
 O welcome child, whom I have longd to see,
 And now have seene unware. Lo now I go with thee."

28
 Then to her yron wagon she betakes,
 245 And with her beares the fowle welfavoured witch:
 Through mirkesome aire her readie way she makes.
 Her twyfold^o Teme, of which two blacke as pitch,
 And two were browne, yet each to each unlich,^o
 Did softly swim away, ne ever stampe,
 250 Unlesse she chaunst their stubborne mouths to twitch;
 Then forming tarre,² their bridles they would champe,
 And trampling the fine element,³ would fiercely rampe.^o rear

29
 So well they sped, that they be come at length
 Unto the place, whereas the Paynim lay,
 255 Devoid of outward sense, and native strength,
 Coverd with charmed cloud from vew of day,
 And sight of men, since his late luckelesse fray.
 His cruell wounds with cruddy^o bloud congealed,
 They binden up so wisely, as they may, clotted

9. The golden chain of concord or design that binds the entire universe; the image goes back as far as Homer (Iliad VIII.18-27) and was given classic statement by Boethius (Consolation of Phi- losophy II.8). Cf. ix.1.

 1. I.e., pay for what.
 2. Black froth.
 3. The air.

260 And handle softly, till they can be healed:
So lay him in her charet, close in night concealed.

30

And all the while she stood upon the ground,
The wakefull dogs did never cease to bay,
As giving warning of th'unwonted sound,
265 With which her yron wheelles did them affray,
And her darke griesly looke them much dismay;
The messenger of death, the ghastly Owle
With drearie shriekes did also her bewray;°
And hungry Wolves continually did howle,
270 At her abhorréd face, so filthy and so fowle.

reveal

31

Thence turning backe in silence soft they stole,
And brought the heavie corse with easie pace
To yawning gulfe of deepe Avernus hole.⁴
By that same hole an entrance darke and bace
275 With smoake and sulphure hiding all the place,
Descends to hell: there creature never past,
That backe returned without heavenly grace;
But dreadfull Furies, which their chaines have brast,°
And damnéd sprights sent forth to make ill° men aghast.

burst evil

32

280 By that same way the direfull dames doe drive
Their mournefull charet, fild with rusty blood,
And downe to Plutoes house are come bilive:°
Which passing through, on every side them stood
The trembling ghosts with sad amazed mood,
285 Chattring their yron teeth, and staring wide
With stonie eyes; and all the hellish brood
Of feends infernall flockt on every side,
To gaze on earthly wight, that with the Night durst ride.

quickly

33

They pas the bitter waves of Acheron,
290 Where many soules sit wailing woefully,
And come to fiery flood of Phlegeton,
Whereas the damnéd ghosts in torments fry,
And with sharpe shrilling shriekes doe bootlesse cry,
Cursing high Jove, the which them thither sent.
295 The house of endlesse paine is built thereby,
In which ten thousand sorts of punishment
The curséd creatures doe eternally torment.

34

Before the threshold dreadfull Cerberus
His three deforméd heads did lay along,°

down

4. In classical mythology, Avernus is Hell, where Pluto reigns (line 282). Acheron (line 289) and Phlegeton (line 291) are rivers in Hell. Cerberus (line 298), the three-headed dog, is guardian there. Stanzas 31–35 recall much of Aeneas's descent into Hell (Virgil, Aeneid VI.200, 239–40).

300 Curled with thousands adders venomous,
And lilléd^o forth his bloudie flaming tong:
At them he gan to reare his bristles strong,
And felly gnarre,⁵ untill dayes enemy
Did him appease; then downe his taile he hong 305 And suffered them to passen quietly:
For she in hell and heaven had power equally.

35

There was Ixion turnéd on a wheele,
For daring tempt the Queene of heaven to sin;
And Sisyphus an huge round stone did reele^o
310 Against an hill, ne might from labour lin;^o
There thirstie Tantalus hong by the chin;
And Tityus fed a vulture on his maw;^o
Typhoeus joynts were stretchéd on a gin,^o
Theseus condemned to endlesse slouth^o by law,
315 And fifty sisters water in leake^o vessels draw.⁶

36

They all beholding worldly wights in place,
Leave off their worke, unmindfull of their smart,
To gaze on them; who forth by them doe pace,
Till they be come unto the furthest part:
320 Where was a Cave ywrought by wondrous art,
Deepe, darke, uneasie, dolefull, comfortlesse,
In which sad Aesculapius farre a part
Emprisond was in chaines remedillesse,
For that Hippolytus rent corse he did redresse.⁷

37

325 Hippolytus a jolly^o huntsman was,
That wont in charet chace the foming Bore;
He all his Peeres in beautie did surpas,
But Ladies love as losse of time forbore:
His wanton stepdame⁸ lovéd him the more,
330 But when she saw her offred sweets refused
Her love she turnd to hate, and him before
His father fierce of treason false accused,
And with her gealous termes his open eares abused.

38

335 Who all in rage his Sea-god syre⁹ besought,
Some curséd vengeance on his sonne to cast:

5. Savagely growl.

6. Ixion was being punished for attempting to seduce Juno; Sisyphus for refusing to pray to the gods; Tantalus for stealing the gods' nectar; Tityus for having tried to seduce Apollo's mother; the monster Typhoeus for creating unfavorable winds; Theseus for stealing Persephone from Hades; and the daughters of King Danaus for having killed their husbands on the wedding night.

Ovid, Virgil, and Homer are Spenser's sources here.

7. Aesculapius was god of medicine. Spenser draws most closely for the story of Hippolytus upon Boccaccio's De Genealogia Deorum (X.50), although Ovid, Virgil, and Seneca also tell the story.

8. Phaedra, the wife of his father, Theseus.

9. Poseidon (Neptune).

From surging gulf two monsters straight were brought,
 With dread whereof his chasing steeds aghast,
 Both charet swift and huntsman overcast.
 His goodly corps on ragged cliffs yrent,
 340 Was quite dismembred, and his members chast
 Scattered on every mountaine, as he went,
 That of Hippolytus was left no moniment.¹

39

His cruell stepdame seeing what was donne,
 Her wicked dayes with wretched knife did end,
 345 In death avowing th'innocence of her sonne.
 Which hearing his rash Syre, began to rend
 His haire, and hastie tongue, that did offend:
 Tho gathering up the relicks of his smart²
 By Dianes meanes, who was Hippolyts frend,
 350 Them brought to Aesculape, that by his art
 Did heale them all againe, and joynd every part.

40

Such wondrous science in mans wit to raine
 When Jove avizd,^o that could the dead revive,
 And fates expired could renew againe,
 355 Of endlesse life he might him not deprive,
 But unto hell did thrust him downe alive,
 With flashing thunderbolt ywounded sore:
 Where long remaining, he did alwaies strive
 Himselfe with salves to health for to restore, 360 And slake the heavenly fire, that raged evermore.

discovered

41

There auncient Night arriving, did alight
 From her nigh wearie waine, and in her armes
 To Aesculapius brought the wounded knight:
 Whom having softly disarayd of armes,
 365 Tho gan to him discover all his harmes,
 Besecching him with prayer, and with praise,
 If either salves, or oyles, or herbes, or charmes
 A fordonne^o wight from dore of death mote raise,
 He would at her request prolong her nephews daies.

undone

42

“Ah Dame,” quoth he, “thou temptest me in vaine,
 To dare the thing, which daily yet I rew,
 And the old cause of my continued paine
 With like attempt to like end to renew.
 Is not enough, that thrust from heaven dew^o
 370 Here endlesse penance for one fault I pay,
 But that redoubled crime with vengeance new Thou biddest me to ecke?^o Can Night defray^o
 375 The wrath of thundring Jove, that rules both night and day?”

fittingincrease/appease

1. I.e., no trace of identity.

2. I.e., his remains.

43

380 "Not so," quoth she; "but sith that heavens king
 From hope of heaven hath thee excluded kight,
 Why fearest thou, that canst not hope for thing,
 And fearest not, that more thee hurten might,
 Now in the powre of everlasting Night?
 Goe to then, O thou farre renownéd sonne
 385 Of great Apollo, shew thy famous might
 In medicine, that else³ hath to thee wonne
 Great paines, and greater praise, both never to be donne."⁴ already ended

44

Her words prevaild: And then the learnéd leach⁵ doctor
 His cunning hand gan to his wounds to lay,
 390 And all things else, the which his art did teach:
 Which having seene, from thence arose away
 The mother of dread darknesse, and let stay
 Aveugles sonne there in the leaches cure,
 And backe returning tooke her wonted way,
 395 To runne her timely race,⁶ whilst Phoebus pure
 In westerne waves his wearie wagon did recure.⁶ refresh

45

The false Duessa leaving noyous⁷ Night, harmful
 Returnd to stately pallace of dame Pride;
 Where when she came, she found the Faery knight 400 Departed thence, albe⁸ his woundes wide although
 Not throughly heald, unreadie were to ride.
 Good cause he had to hasten thence away;
 For on a day his wary Dwarfe had spide,
 Where in a dongeon deepe huge numbers lay 405 Of caytive⁹ wretched thrals,⁹ that wayléd night and day. captive/slaves

46

A ruefull sight, as could be seene with eie;
 Of whom he learnéd had in secret wise
 The hidden cause of their captivitie,
 How mortgaging their lives to Covetise,
 410 Through wastfull Pride, and wanton Riotise,
 They were by law of that proud Tyrannesse⁴
 Provokt with Wrath, and Envies false surmise,
 Condemnéd to that Dongeon mercilesse,
 Where they should live in woe, and die in wretchednesse.

47

415 There was that great proud king of Babylon,⁵
 That would compell all nations to adore,
 And him as onely God to call upon,
 Till through celestiall doome⁶ throwne out of dore, judgment
 Into an Oxe he was transformed of yore:
 420 There also was king Croesus,⁶ that enhaunst⁶ exalted

3. Her measured (nightly) journey.

4. I.e., Lucifera, whose "law" is that of destruction by sin. The noble sinners named in stanzas 47-50 exemplify a theme common to Renaissance morality, the fall of princes.

5. Nebuchadnezzar (Daniel iii-iv).

6. King of Lydia, famous for his riches.

His heart too high through his great riches store;
 And proud Antiochus,⁷ the which advaunst
 His curséd hand gainst God, and on his altars daunst.

48

And them long time before, great Nimrod⁸ was,

- 425 That first the world with sword and fire warrayd;^o
 And after him old Ninus farre did pas^o
 In princely pompe, of all the world obayd;
 There also was that mightie Monarch layd
 Low under all, yet above all in pride,
 430 That name of native^o syre did fowle upbrayd,
 And would as Ammons sonne⁹ be magnifide,
 Till scornd of God and man a shamefull death he dide.

ravaged surpass

natural

49

All these together in one heape were throwne,
 Like carkases of beasts in butchers stall.

- 435 And in another corner wide were strowne
 The antique ruincs of the Romaines fall:¹
 Great Romulus the Grandsyre of them all,
 Proud Tarquin, and too lordly Lentulus,
 Stout Scipio, and stubborne Hanniball,
 440 Ambitious Sylla, and sterne Marius,
 High Caesar, great Pompey, and fierce Antonius.

50

Amongst these mighty men were wemen mixt,
 Proud wemen, vaine, forgetfull of their yoke:
 The bold Semiramis,² whose sides transfixt
 445 With sonnes owne blade, her fowle reproches spoke;
 Faire Sthenoboea,³ that her selfe did choke
 With wilfull cord, for wanting^o of her will;
 High minded Cleopatra, that with stroke
 Of Aspes sting her selfe did stoutly kill:

- 450 And thousands moe the like, that did that dongeon fill.

lacking

51

Besides the endlesse routs of wretched thralles,
 Which thither were assembled day by day,
 From all the world after their wofull falles,
 Through wicked pride, and wasted wealthes decay.
 455 But most of all, which in that Dongeon lay
 Fell from high Princes courts, or Ladies bowres,
 Where they in idle pompe, or wanton play,

7. King of Syria, who tried to stamp out the Jewish religion (I Maccabees i.20-24).

8. A mighty hunter, associated with the Tower of Babel (Genesis x.9). "Ninus": founder of Nineveh.

9. Alexander the Great, occasionally worshiped as the son of Jupiter Ammon.

1. Romulus, founder of Rome; Tarquin, Roman tyrant; Lentulus, a conspirator with Catiline; Scipio, Roman general, conqueror of Carthage; Hannibal, Carthaginian general; Sulla, Roman civil war general; Marius, Sulla's rival; Julius Caesar; Pompey the Great; and Mark Anthony. All are memorialized in Plutarch's Lives.

2. Wife of Ninus.

3. Queen of King Proetus of Argos, who fell vainly in love with Bellerophon.

Consuméd had their goods, and thriftlesse howres,
And lastly throwne themselves into these heavy stowres.° disasters

52

460 Whose case whenas the carefull Dwarfe had tould,
And made ensample of their mournfull sight
Unto his maister, he no lenger would
There dwell in perill of like painefull plight,
But early rose, and ere that dawning light
465 Discovered had the world to heaven wyde,
He by a privie Posterne° tooke his flight, gate
That of no envious eyes he mote be spyde:
For doubtlesse death ensewd, if any him descryde.

53

Scarse could he footing find in that fowle way, 470 For many corses, like a great Lay-stall° rubbish heap
Of mured men which therein strowéd lay,
Without remorse, or decent funerall:
Which all through that great Princesse pride did fall
And came to shamefull end. And them beside 475 Forth ryding underneath the castell wall,
A donghill of dead carkases he spide,
The dreadfull spectacle° of that sad house of Pride. example

Canto VI

*From lawlesse lust by wondrous grace
fayre Una is releast:*

*Whom salvage nation does adore,
and learnes her wise beheast.°* bidding

1

As when a ship, that flyes faire under saile,
An hidden rocke escapéd hath unwares,
That lay in waite her wrack for to bewaile,
The Marriner yet halfe amazéd stares
5 At perill past, and yet in doubt ne dares
To joy at his foole-happie oversight:
So doubly is distrest twixt joy and cares
The dreadlesse courage° of this Elfin knight, heart
Having escapt so sad ensamples in his sight.

2

10 Yet sad he was that his too hastie speed
The faire Duess' had forst him leave behind;
And yet more sad, that Una his deare dreed° object of reverence
Her truth had stained with treason so unkind;° unnatural
Yet crime in her could never creature find,
15 But for his love, and for her owne selfe sake,
She wandred had° from one to other Ynd, would have
Him for to seeke, ne ever would forsake,
Till her unwares the fierce Sansloy did overtake.

Who after Archimagoes fowle defeat,³
 20 Led her away into a forrest wilde,
 And turning wrathfull fire to lustfull heat,
 With beastly sin thought her to have defilde,
 And made the vassall of his pleasures vilde.[°] vile
 Yet first he cast by treatie,[°] and by traynes,[°] persuasion/tricks
 25 Her to perswade, that stubborne fort to yilde:
 For greater conquest of hard love he gaynes,
 That workes it to his will, then he that it constraines.[°] forces

With fawning wordes he courted⁴ her a while,
 And looking lovely,[°] and oft sighing sore, lovingly
 30 Her constant hart did tempt with diverse guile:
 But wordes, and lookes, and sighes she did abhore,
 As rocke of Diamond stedfast evermore.⁴
 Yet for to feed his fyrie lustfull eye,
 He snatcht the vele, that hong her face before;
 35 Then gan her beautie shine, as brightest skye,
 And burnt his beastly hart t'efforce[°] her chastitie. violate

So when he saw his flatt'ring arts to fayle,
 And subtile engines bet[°] from batteree, beaten
 With greedy force he gan the fort assayle,
 40 Whereof he wend possesséd soone to bee,
 And win rich spoile of ransackt chastetee.
 Ah heavens, that do this hideous act behold,
 And heavenly virgin thus outragéd see,
 How can ye vengeance just so long withhold,
 45 And hurle not flashing flames upon that Paynim bold?

The pitteous maden carefull[°] comfortlesse, full of cares
 Does throw out thrilling shriekes, and shrieking cryes,
 The last vaine helpe of womens great distresse,
 And with loud plaints importuneth the skyes,
 50 That molten starres do drop like weeping eyes;
 And Phoebus flying so most shamefull sight,
 His blushing face in foggy cloud implyes,[°] buries
 And hides for shame. What wit of mortall wight
 Can now devise to quit a thrall⁵ from such a plight?

7
 55 Eternall providence exceeding thought,
 Where none appeares can make her selfe a way:
 A wondrous way it for this Lady wrought,
 From Lyons clawes to pluck the gripéd pray.
 Her shrill outcryes and shriekes so loud did bray,
 60 That all the woodes and forestes did resownd;

4. The diamond, because of its hardness, was traditionally considered the perfect material.
 5. Release a victim.

A troupe of Faunes and Satyres far away
Within the wood were dauncing in a rownd,
Whiles old Sylvanus slept in shady arber sownd.⁶

8

Who when they heard that pitteous strained voice,
65 In hast forsooke their rurall meriment,
And ran towards the far rebownded noyce,
To weet, what wight so loudly did lament.
Unto the place they come incontinent:⁷
Whom when the raging Sarazin espide,
70 A rude, misshapen, monstrous rablement,
Whose like he never saw, he durst not bide,
But got his ready steed, and fast away gan ride.⁷

immediately

9

The wyld woodgods arrivéd in the place,
There find the virgin dolefull desolate,
75 With ruffled rayments, and faire blubbred face,
As her outrageous foe had left her late,
And trembling yet through feare of former hate;
All stand amazed at so uncouth⁸ sight,
And gin to pittie her unhappie state,
80 All stand astonished at her beautie bright,
In their rude eyes unworthie⁹ of so wofull plight.

strange

undeserving

10

She more amazed, in double dread doth dwell;
And every tender part for feare does shake:
As when a greedie Wolfe through hunger fell 85 A seely¹⁰ Lambe farre from the flocke does take,
Of whom he meanes his bloudie feast to make,
A Lyon spies fast running towards him,
The innocent pray in hast he does forsake,
Which quit from death yet quakes in every lim
90 With chaunge of feare, to see the Lyon looke so grim.

innocent

11

Such fearefull fit assaid¹¹ her trembling hart,
Ne word to speake, ne joynt to move she had:
The salvage nation feele her secret smart,
And read her sorrow in her count'nance sad;
95 Their frowning forheads with rough hornes yclad,
And rusticke horror¹² all a side doe lay,
And gently grenning, shew a semblance glad
To comfort her, and feare to put away,
Their backward bent knees teach¹³ her humbly to obay.

afflicted

6. Fauns and satyrs, creatures with men's bodies above the waist and goats' bodies below, noted in classical mythology for their sensuality, engage here in "rurall meriment"; Sylvanus, Roman god of the woods, is traditionally associated with fauns.

7. The "woodgods," like the Lyon of Canto iii, bear some natural goodness—unlike Sans loy, who is alien to nature.

8. Rough manner.

9. I.e., teach their knees to obey her.

12

- 100 The doubtfull Damzell dare not yet commit
 Her single^o person to their barbarous truth,^o solitary/honesty
 But still twixt feare and hope amazd does sit,
 Late learnd what harme to hastie trust ensu'th,
 They in compassion of her tender youth,
 105 And wonder of her beautie soveraine,
 Are wonne with pittie and unwonted ruth,
 And all prostrate upon the lowly plaine,
 Do kisse her feete, and fawne on her with count'nance faine.^o pleasant

13

- Their harts she ghesseth by their humble guise,
 110 And yielde her to extremitie of time;¹
 So from the ground she fearelesse doth arise,
 And walketh forth without suspect of crime:
 They all as glad, as birdes of joyous Prime,^o springtime
 Thence lead her forth, about her dauncing round,
 115 Shouting, and singing all a shepheards ryme,
 And with greene braunches strowing all the ground,
 Do worship her, as Queene, with olive girland croud.

14

- And all the way their merry pipes they sound,
 That all the woods with doubled Eccho ring,
 120 And with their hornéd feet do weare the ground,
 Leaping like wanton kids in pleasant Spring.
 So towards old Sylvanus they her bring;
 Who with the noyse awakéd, commeth out,
 To weet the cause, his weake steps governing
 125 And agéd limbs on Cypresse stadle^o stout, staff
 And with an yvie twyne his wast is girt about.

15

- Far off he wonders, what them makes so glad,
 Or^o Bacchus merry fruit² they did invent,^o whether/find
 Or Cybelcs franticke rites³ have made them mad;
 130 They drawing nigh, unto their God present
 That flowre of faith and beautie excellent.
 The God himselfe vewing that mirrhour rare,
 Stood long amazd, and burnt in his intent;⁴
 His owne faire Dryope now he thinkes not faire, 135 And Pholoe fowle, when her to this he doth compaire.⁵

16

The woodborne people fall before her flat,
 And worship her as Goddesses of the wood;
 And old Sylvanus selfe bethinkes not, what
 To thinke of wight so faire, but gazing stood,

1. I.e., necessity of the time.

2. Wine grapes.

3. Orgiastic dances in worship of Cybele, goddess of the powers of Nature.

4. Glowed with intense concentration. Una is a "mirrhour rare" in that she reflects heavenly beauty.

5. Dryope and Pholoe were nymphs loved by Faunus and Pan; for Spenser, the names "Faunus," "Pan," and "Sylvanus" were apparently interchangeable.

140 In doubt to deeme her borne of earthly brood;
 Sometimes Dame Venus selfe he seemes to see,
 But Venus never had so sober^o mood; calm, temperate
 Sometimes Diana he her takes to bee,
 But misseth bow, and shaftes, and buskins^o to her knee. soft boots

17

145 By vew of her he ginneth to revive
 His ancient love, and dearest Cyparisse,⁶
 And calles to mind his pourtraiture alive,⁷
 How faire he was, and yet not faire to this,
 And how he slew with glauncing dart amisse
 150 A gentle Hynd, the which the lovely boy
 Did love as life, above all worldly blisse;
 For grieve whereof the lad n'ould^o after joy, would not
 But pynd away in anguish and selfe-wild annoy.^o suffering

18

The wooddy Nymphes, faire Hamadryades⁸
 155 Her to behold do thither runne apace,
 And all the troupe of light-foot Naiades,⁹
 Flocke all about to see her lovely face:
 But when they vewed have her heavenly grace,
 They envie her in their malicious mind,
 160 And fly away for feare of fowle disgrace:
 But all the Satyres scorne their woody kind,
 And henceforth nothing faire, but her on earth they find.

19

Glad of such lucke, the luckelesse lucky maid,
 Did her content to please their feeble eyes,
 165 And long time with that salvage people staid,
 To gather breath in many miseries.
 During which time her gentle wit she plyes,
 To teach them truth, which worshipt her in vaine,
 And made her th'Image of Idolatryes;
 170 But when their bootlesse zeale she did restraine
 From her own worship, they her Asse would worship fayn.¹

20

It fortunéd a noble warlike knight
 By just occasion to that forrest came,
 To seeke his kindred, and the lignage right,^o true
 175 From whence he tooke his well deserved name:
 He had in armes abroad wonne muchell fame,
 And fild far landes with glorie of his might,
 Plaine, faithfull, true, and enimy of shame,
 And ever loved to fight for Ladies right,
 180 But in vaine glorious frayes he litle did delight.

6. A fair youth, beloved of Sylvanus, turned into a cypress tree.

7. I.e., his appearance when alive.

8. Nymphs whose lives depended upon the trees with which they were associated.

9. Water nymphs.

1. I.e., willingly. Natural goodness can give some recognition, albeit only externally, to Una. Though Una does her best to teach the satyrs true religion, they are idolaters even in the truth.

21

A Satyres sonne yborne in forrest wyld,
 By straunge adventure as it did betyde,^o happen
 And there begotten of a Lady myld,
 Faire Thyamis the daughter of Labryde,
 185 That was in sacred bands of wedlocke tyde
 To Therion, a loose unruly swayne;²
 Who had more joy to raunge the forrest wyde,
 And chase the salvage beast with busie payne,³
 Then serve his Ladies love, and wast^o in pleasures vayne. live idly

22

190 The forlorne mayd did with loves longing burne,
 And could not lacke^o her lovers company, be without
 But to the wood she goes, to serve her turne,
 And seeke her spouse, that from her still does fly,
 And followes other game and venery:⁴
 195 A Satyre chaunst her wandring for to find,
 And kindling coles of lust in brutish eye,
 The loyall links of wedlocke did unbind,
 And made her person thrall unto his beastly kind.

23

So long in secret cabin there he held
 200 Her captive to his sensuall desire,
 Till that with timely fruit her belly sweld,
 And bore a boy unto that salvage sire:
 Then home he suffred her for to retire,
 For ransome leaving him the late borne childe;
 205 Whom till to ryper yeares he gan aspire,^o grow up
 He noursled up in life and manners wilde,
 Emongst wild beasts and woods, from lawes of men exile.

24

For all he taught the tender ymp,^o was but child
 To banish cowardize and bastard^o feare;
 210 His trembling hand he would him force to put base
 Upon the Lyon and the rugged Beare,
 And from the she Beares teats her whelps to teare;
 And eke wyld roring Bulls he would him make
 To tame, and ryde their backes not made to beare;
 215 And the Robuckes in flight to overtake,
 That every beast for feare of him did fly and quake.

25

Thereby so fearelesse, and so fell^o he grew, fierce
 That his owne sire and maister of his guise⁵

2. "Thyamis" means "passion," "Therion," "wild beast." Their child Satyrane (he is named in line 249) ought to be a savage creature, but instead his natural goodness welcomes and reveres truth and grace in Una with a higher understanding than the lion or the woodgods can give.

3. Painstaking care.

4. The word means both "hunting" and "sexual play."

5. Teacher of his manners.

Did often tremble at his horrid° vew,
 And oft for dread of hurt would him advise,
 The angry beasts not rashly to despise,
 Nor too much to provoke; for he would learne°
 The Lyon stoup to him in lowly wise,
 (A lesson hard) and make the Libbard° sterne
 Leave roaring, when in rage he for revenge did earne°.

rough teach leopard

yearn

26

And for to make his powre approvéd° more,
 Wyld beasts in yron yokes he would compell;
 The spotted Panther, and the tuskéd Bore,
 The Pardale° swift, and the Tigre cruell;
 The Antelope, and Wolfe both fierce and fell;
 And them constraine in equall teme to draw.
 Such joy he had, their stubborne harts to quell,
 And sturdie courage tame with dreadfull aw,
 That his behest they fearéd, as a tyrans law.

extended panther

27

His loving mother came upon a day
 Unto the woods, to see her little sonne;
 And chaunst unwares to meet him in the way,
 After his sportes, and cruell pastime donne,
 When after him a Lyonesse did runne,
 That roaring all with rage, did lowd requere°
 Her children deare, whom he away had wonne:
 The Lyon whelpes she saw how he did beare,
 And lull in rugged armes, withouten childish feare.

demand

28

The fearefull Dame all quakéd at the sight,
 And turning backe, gan fast to fly away,
 Untill with love revokt° from vaine affright,
 She hardly yet perswaded was to stay,
 And then to him these womanish words gan say;
 "Ah Satyrane, my dearling, and my joy,
 I'or love of me leave off this dreadfull play;
 To dally thus with death, is no fit toy,
 Go find some other play-fellowes, mine own sweet boy."

restrained

29

In these and like delights of bloudy game
 He traynéd was, till ryper yeares he raught°,
 And there abode, whilst any beast of name
 Walkt in that forest, whom he had not taught
 To feare his force: and then his courage haught°
 Desird of forreine foemen to be knownc,
 And far abroad for straunge adventures sought:
 In which his might was never overthrowne,
 But through all Faery lond his famous worth was blown.

reached high

30

Yet evermore it was his manner faire,
 After long labours and adventures spent,
 Unto those native woods for to reaire,
 265 To see his sire and ofspring^o auncient. origin
 And now he thither came for like intent;
 Where he unwares the fairest Una found,
 Straunge Lady, in so straunge habiliment,
 Teaching the Satyres, which her sat around,
 270 Trew sacred lore, which from her sweet lips did redound.^o flow

31

He wondred at her wisdom heavenly rare,
 Whose like in womens wit he never knew;
 And when her curteous deeds he did compare,
 Can her admire, and her sad sorrowes rewe,
 275 Blaming of Fortune, which such troubles threw,
 And joyd to make proove of her crueltie
 On gentle Dame, so hurtlesse,^o and so trew: harmless
 Thenceforth he kept her goodly company,
 And leard her discipline of faith and veritie.

32

But she all vowd unto the Redcrosse knight,
 His wandring perill closely^o did lament, secretly
 Ne in this new acquaintaunce could delight,
 But her deare heart with anguish did torment,
 And all her wit in secret counsels spent,
 285 How to escape. At last in privie wise⁶
 To Satyrane she shewed her intent;
 Who glad to gain such favour, gan devise,
 How with that pensive Maid he best might thence arise.^o depart

33

So on a day when Satyres all were gone,
 290 To do their service to Sylvanus old,
 The gentle virgin left behind alone
 He led away with courage stout and bold.
 Too late it was, to Satyres to be told,
 Or ever hope recover her againe:
 295 In vaine he seekes that having cannot hold.
 So fast he carried her with carefull paine,⁷
 That they the woods are past, and come now to the plaine.

34

The better part now of the lingring day,
 They traveild had, when as they farre espide
 300 A wearie wight forwandring^o by the way, wandering along
 And towards him they gan in hast to ride,
 To weet of newes, that did abroad betide,
 Or tydings of her knight of the Redcrosse.
 But he them spying, gan to turne aside,

6. Privately.

7. Painstaking care.

305 For feare as seemid, or for some feignéd losse;° harm
More greedy they of newes, fast towards him do crosse.

35
A silly° man, in simple weedes forworne,° simple/worn out
And soild with dust of the long dried way;
His sandales were with toilesome travell tome,
310 And face all tand with scorching sunny ray,
As he had traveild many a sommers day,
Through boyling sands of Arabie and Ynde;
And in his hand a Jacobs staffe,° to stay
His wearie limbes upon: and eke behind,
315 His scrip° did hang, in which his needments he did bind. bag

36
The knight approching nigh, of him inquerd
Tydings of warre, and of adventures new;
But warres, nor new adventures none he herd.
Then Una gan to aske, if ought he knew,
320 Or heard abroad of that her champion trew,
That in his armour bare a croslet° red. small cross
“Aye me, Deare dame,” quoth he, “well may I rew
To tell the sad sight, which mine eies have red:°” beheld
These eyes did see that knight both living and eke ded.”

37
325 That cruell word her tender hart so thrild,° pierced
That suddein cold did runne through every vaine,
And stony horror all her sences fild
With dying fit, that downe she fell for paine.
The knight her lightly reared up againe,
330 And comforted with curteous kind reliefe:
Then wonne from death, she bad him tellen plaine
The further processe° of her hidden grieve; account
The lesser pangs can beare, who hath endured the chiefe.

38
Then gan the Pilgrim thus, “I chaunst this day,
335 This fatall day, that shall I ever rew,
To see two knights in travell on my way
(A sory sight) arraunged in battell new,
Both breathing vengeaunce, both of wrathfull hew:
My fearefull flesh did tremble at their strife,
340 To see their blades so greedily imbrew,° thrust
That drunke with bloud, yet thirsted after life:
What more? the Redcrosse knight was slaine with Paynim knife.”

39
“Ah dearest Lord,” quoth she, “how might that bee,
And he the stoutest knight, that ever wonne?”° fought 345 “Ah dearest dame,” quoth he, “how might I see
The thing, that might not be, and yet was donne?”
“Where is,” said Satyrane, “that Paynims sonne,
That him of life, and us of joy hath left?”

8. I.e., pilgrim's staff.

“Not far away,” quoth he, “he hence doth wonne° stay
 350 Foreby a fountaine, where I late him left Washing his bloody wounds, that through° the steele were cleft.” by

40
 Therewith the knight thence marchéd forth in hast,
 Whiles Una with huge heavennesse° opprest, grief
 Could not for sorrow follow him so fast;
 355 And soone he came, as he the place had ghest,
 Whereas that Pagan proud him selfe did rest,
 In secret shadow by a fountaine side:
 Even he it was, that earst would have supprest° violated
 Faire Una: whom when Satyrane espide,
 360 With fowle reprochfull words he boldly him defide.

41
 And said, “Arise thou curséd Miscreaunt,
 That hast with knightlesse guile and trecherous train° deceit
 Faire knighthood fowly shamed, and doest vaunt
 That good knight of the Redcrosse to have slain:
 365 Arise, and with like treason now maintain
 Thy guilty wrong, or else thee guilty yield.”
 The Sarazin this hearing, rose amain,° at once
 And catching up in hast his three square° shield,
 And shining helmet, soone him buckled to the field.

42
 370 And drawing nigh him said, “Ah misborne° Elfe, base-born
 In evill houre thy foes thee hither sent,
 Anothers wrongs to wreake upon thy selfe:
 Yet ill thou blamest me, for having blent° stained
 My name with guile and traiterous intent;
 375 That Redcrosse knight, perdie, I never slew,
 But had he beene, where earst his armes were lent,
 Th’ enchaunter vaine his errour should not rew:
 But thou his errour shalt, I hope now proven trew.”¹⁰

43
 Therewith they gan, both furious and fell,
 380 To thunder blowes, and fiersly to assaile
 Each other bent° his enemy to quell,° determined/kill
 That with their force they perst both plate and maile,
 And made wide furrowes in their fleshes fraile,
 That it would pittye° any living eie. bring pity to 385 Large floods of bloud adowne their sides did raile:° flow
 But floods of bloud could not them satisfie:
 Both hungred after death: both chose to win, or die.

9. Triangular.

10. I.e., had Redcrosse been where his arms were, the enchanter Archimago would not have to regret his error in fighting me. But you will now repeat his error in fighting me and demonstrate what an error it is.

44

So long they fight, and fell revenge pursue,
 That fainting each, themselves to breathen let,
 390 And oft refreshéd, battell oft renue:
 As when two Bores with rancling malice met,
 Their gory sides fresh bleeding fiercely fret,^o tear
 Til breathlesse both them selves aside retire,
 Where foming wrath, their cruell tuskes they whet,
 395 And trample th'earth, the whiles they may respire
 Then backe to fight againe, new breathéd and entire.^o refreshed

45

So fiersly, when these knights had breathéd once,
 They gan to fight returne, increasing more
 Their puissant force, and cruell rage attonce,
 400 With heapéd strokes more hugely, then before,
 That with their drierie^o wounds and bloudy gore dreadful
 They both deforméd, scarsely could be known.
 By this sad Una fraught with anguish sore,
 Led with their noise, which through the aire was thrown,
 405 Arrived, where they in erth their fruitles bloud had sown.

46

Whom all so soone as that proud Sarazin
 Espide, he gan revive the memory
 Of his lewd lusts, and late attempted sin,
 And left the doubtfull^o battell hastily, undecided
 410 To catch her, newly offred to his eie:
 But Satyrane with strokes him turning, staid,
 And sternely bad him other businesse plie,
 Then hunt the steps of pure unspotted Maid:
 Wherewith he all enraged, these bitter speeches said.

47

415 "O foolish faeries sonne, what furie mad
 Hath thee incenst, to hast thy dolefull fate?
 Were it not better, I that Lady had,
 Then that thou hadst repented it too late?
 Most scncelesse man he, that himselfe doth hate,
 420 To love another. Lo then for thine ayd
 Here take thy lovers token on thy pate."
 So they to fight; the whiles the royall Mayd
 Fled farre away, of that proud Paynim sore afrajd.

48

But that false Pilgrim, which that leasing^o told, falsehood
 425 Being in deed old Archimage, did stay
 In secreet shadow, all this to behold,
 And much rejoycéd in their bloudy fray:
 But when he saw the Damsell passe away
 He left his stond,^o and her pursewd apace, place

- 430 In hope to bring her to her last decay.^o
 But for to tell her lamentable cace,
 And eke this battels end, will need another place.

destruction

Canto VII

*The Redcrosse knight is captive made
 By Gyaunt proud opprest,
 Prince Arthur meets with Una greatly with those newes distrest.*

- 1
- What man so wise, what earthly wit so ware,^o
 As to descry^o the crafty cunning traine,
 By which deceit doth maske in visour faire,
 And cast her colours dyéd deepe in graine,
 5 To seeme like Truth, whose shape she well can faine,
 And fitting gestures to her purpose frame,
 The guiltlesse man with guile to entertaine?^o
 Great maistresse of her art was that false Dame,
 The false Duessa, clokéd with Fidessaes name.

wary perceive receive

- 2
- 10 Who when returning from the drery Night,
 She fownd not in that perilous house of Pryde,
 Where she had left, the noble Redcrosse knight,
 Her hopéd pray, she would no lenger bide,
 But forth she went, to seeke him far and wide.
 15 Ere long she fownd, whereas^o he wearie sate,
 To rest him selfe, foreby^o a fountaine side,
 Disarméd all of yron-coted Plate,
 And by his side his steed the grassy forage ate.

where beside

- 3
- He feedes upon the cooling shade, and bayes^o
 20 His sweatie forehead in the breathing wind,
 Which through the trembling leaves full gently playes
 Wherein the cherefull birds of sundry kind
 Do chaunt sweet musick, to delight his mind:
 The Witch approaching gan him fairely greet,
 25 And with reproch of carelesnesse unkind
 Upbrayd, for leaving her in place unmeet,^o
 With fowle words temping faire, soure gall with hony sweet.

bathes unfitting

- 4
- Unkindnesse past, they gan of solace treat,^o
 And bathe in pleasaunce of the joyous shade,
 30 Which shielded them against the boyling heat,
 And with greene boughes decking a gloomy glade,
 About the fountaine like a girlond made;
 Whose bubbling wave did ever freshly well,
 Ne ever would through fervent^o sommer fade:
 35 The sacred Nymph, which therein wont to dwell,
 Was out of Dianes favour, as it then befell.

speak

hot

5

The cause was this: one day when Phoebe¹ fayre
 With all her band was following the chace,
 This Nymph, quite tyred with heat of scorching ayre
 40 Sat downe to rest in midst of the race:
 The goddesse wroth gan fowly her disgrace,[°] scold
 And bad the waters, which from her did flow,
 Be such as she her selfe was then in place.²
 Thenceforth her waters waxéd dull and slow,
 45 And all that drunke thereof, did faint and feeble grow.

6

Hereof this gentle knight unweeting was,
 And lying downe upon the sandie graile,[°] gravel
 Drunke of the streame, as cleare as cristall glas;
 Eftsoones his manly forces gan to faile,
 50 And mightie strong was turnd to feeble fraile.
 His chaunged powres at first themselves not felt,
 Till crudled[°] cold his corage[°] gan assaile, congealing/vigor
 And chearefull bloud in faintnesse chill did melt,
 Which like a fever fit through all his body swelt.[°] raged

7

Yet goodly court he made still to his Dame,
 Poured out in loosnesse on the grassy grownd,
 Both carelesse of his health, and of his fame:
 Till at the last he heard a dreadfull sownd,
 Which through the wood loud bellowing, did rebownd,
 60 That all the earth for terrour seemed to shake,
 And trees did tremble. Th'Elfe therewith astownd,[°] amazed
 Upstartéd lightly from his looser make,[°] companion
 And his unready weapons gan in hand to take.³

8

But ere he could his armour on him dight,
 65 Or get his shield, his monstrous enemy
 With sturdie steps came stalking in his sight,
 An hideous Geant horrible and hye,
 That with his talnesse seemd to threat the skye,
 The ground eke groned under him for dreed;
 70 His living like saw never living eye,
 Ne durst behold: his stature did exceed
 The hight of three the tallest sonnes of mortall seed.

9

The greatest Earth his uncouth mother was,
 And blustring Aeolus his boasted sire,⁴
 75 Who with his breath, which through the world doth pas,
 Her hollow womb did secretly inspire,[°] breathe into

1. I.e., Diana, goddess of the moon.

2. At that time.

3. Redcrosse is weakened by his encounter with the despair of Sans joy; he has been seduced by falsehood, Duessa; he has drunk of the waters of spiritual sloth: he is thus, now, an easy victim.

4. Aeolus was keeper of the winds.

And fild her hidden caves with stormie yre,
 That she conceived; and trebling the dew time,
 In which the wombes of women do expire,[°] bring forth
 80 Brought forth this monstrous masse of earthly slime,
 Puft up with emptie wind, and fild with sinfull crime.

10

So growen great through arrogant delight
 Of th'high descent, whereof he was yborne,
 And through presumption of his matchlesse might,
 85 All other powres and knighthood he did scorne.
 Such now he marcheth to this man forlorne,
 And left to losse:[°] his stalking steps arc stayde destruction
 Upon a snaggy Oke, which he had torne
 Out of his mothers bowelles, and it made
 90 His mortall mace, wherewith his foemen he dismayde.

11

That when the knight he spide, he gan advance
 With huge force and insupportable mayne,⁵
 And towards him with dreadfull fury prounce;
 Who haplesse, and eke hopelesse, all in vaine
 95 Did to him pace, sad battaile to darrayne,[°] undertake
 Disarmd, disgrast, and inwardly dismayde,⁶
 And eke so faint in every joynt and vaine,
 Through that fraile[°] fountaine, which him feeble made, enfeebling
 That scarsely could he weeld his bootlesse[°] single blade. futile

12

100 The Geaunt strooke so maynly[°] mercilessse, mightily
 That could have overthrowne a stony towre,
 And were not heavenly grace, that him did blesse,
 He had beene pouldred[°] all, as thin as flowre: powdered
 But he was wary of that deadly stowre,[°] peril
 105 And lightly lept from underneath the blow:
 Yet so exceeding was the villeins powre,
 That with the wind it did him overthrow,
 And all his sences stound,[°] that still he lay full low. stunned

13

As when that divelish yron Engin⁷ wrought
 110 In deepest Hell, and framd by Furies skill,
 With windy Nitre and quick[°] Sulphur fraught,[°] explosive/filled
 And ramd with bullet round, ordaind to kill,
 Conceiveth fire, the heavens it doth fill
 With thundring noyse, and all the ayre doth choke, 115 That none can breath, nor see, nor heare at will,
 Through smouldry cloud of duskyish stincking smoke,
 That th'onely breath⁸ him daunts, who hath escapt the stroke.

5. Irresistible power.
 6. Dis-made, dissolved.

7. I.e., cannon.
 8. I.e., the blast alone.

14

So daunted when the Geaunt saw the knight,
His heaue hand he-heaved up on hye,
120 And him to dust thought to have battred quight,
Untill Duessa loud to him gan crye;
"O great Orgoglio,⁹ greatest under skye,
O hold thy mortall hand for Ladies sake,
Hold for my sake, and do him not to dye,
125 But vanquisht thine eternall bondslave make,
And me thy worthy meed unto thy Leman take."¹⁰

15

He hearkned, and did stay from further harmes,
To gayne so goodly guerdon,[°] as she spake: reward
So willingly she came into his armes,
130 Who her as willingly to grace[°] did take, favor
And was possessed of his new found make.[°] mate
Then up he tooke the slombred sencelesse corse,
And ere he could out of his swowne awake,
Him to his castle brought with hastie forse,
135 And in a Dongeon deepe him threw without remorse.

16

From that day forth Duessa was his deare,
And highly honourd in his haughtie eye,
He gave her gold and purple pall[°] to weare, robe
And triple crowne set on her head full hye,¹
140 And her endowd with royall majesty:
Then for to make her dreaded more of men,
And peoples harts with awfull terrour tye,
A monstrous beast ybred in filthy fen
He chose, which he had kept long time in darksome den.

17

Such one it was, as that renownéd Snake
Which great Alcides in Stremona slew,
Long fostred in the filth of Lerna lake,
Whose many heads out budding ever new,
Did breed him endlesse labour to subdew:²
150 But this same Monster much more ugly was;
For seven great heads out of his body grew,
An yron brest, and backe of scaly bras,
And all embrewd[°] in bloud, his eyes did shine as glas. stained

9. Orgoglio is Italian for "pride." That this sin, pride of the flesh, un-Christian and unreasonable, should be the son of the gross earth and the "blustering" wind seems appropriate.

10. I.e., take me, your worthy reward, as your mistress.

1. Duessa is attired like the Whore of Babylon in Revelation xvii.3-4; the triple crown is that of the papacy. See i.13, also i.22 and note.

2. The nine-headed Lernean hydra slain by Hercules (Alcides). The seven-headed monster is the red dragon of Revelation: "behold a great red dragon, having seven heads and ten horns, and seven crowns upon his heads * * * [whose] tail drew the third part of the stars of heaven, and did cast them to the earth * * * [he is] that old serpent, called the Devil, and Satan, which deceiveth the whole world" (xii.3-4,9). Pictures of the Beast of the Apocalypse illustrate medieval literature on the vices. On the historical plane, Spenser associates it with the Roman church.

18

- His taylor was stretchéd out in wondrous length, 155 That to the house of heavenly gods it raught,[°] reached
 And with extorted powre, and borrowed strength,
 The ever-burning lamps from thence it brought,
 And proudly threw to ground, as things of nought;
 And underneath his filthy feet did tread
 160 The sacred things, and holy heasts[°] foretaught. commandments
 Upon this dreadfull Beast with sevenfold head
 He set the false Duessa, for more aw and dread.

19

- The wofull Dwarfe, which saw his maisters fall,
 Whiles he had keeping of his grasing steed,
 165 And valiant knight become a caytive[°] thrall, captive
 When all was past, tooke up his forlorne weed,³
 His mightie armour, missing most at need;
 His silver shield, now idle maisterlesse;
 His poynant[°] speare, that many made to bleed, piercing
 170 The ruefull moniments[°] of heavinesse, memorials
 And with them all departes, to tell his great distresse.

20

- He had not travailld long, when on the way
 He wofull Ladie, wofull Una met,⁴
 Fast flying from the Paynims greedy pray,[°] clutch
 175 Whilste Satyrane him from pursuit did let:[°] prevent
 Who when her eyes she on the Dwarfe had set,
 And saw the signes, that deadly tydings spake,
 She fell to ground for sorrowfull regret,
 And lively breath her sad brest did forsake,
 180 Yet might her pitteous hart be seene to pant and quake.

21

- The messenger of so unhappie newes
 Would faine have dyde: dead was his hart within,
 Yet outwardly some little comfort shewes:
 At last recovering hart, he does begin
 185 To rub her temples, and to chaufe her chin,
 And every tender part does tosse and turne:
 So hardly he the flitted life does win,[°] prevail upon
 Unto her native prison⁵ to retourne:
 Then gins her grievéd ghost[°] thus to lament and mourne. spirit

22

- 190 "Ye dreary instruments of dolefull sight,
 That doe this deadly spectacle behold,
 Why do ye lenger feed on loathéd light,
 Or liking find to gaze on earthly mould,[°] form
 Sith cruell fates the carefull[°] threeds unfould, anguished
 195 The which my life and love together tyde?

3. Abandoned garment.

4. Only in Faerie Land could the Dwarfe find Una so soon after Redcrosse's fortunes are at their lowest.

5. I.e., the body.

Now let the stony dart of senselesse cold
Perce to my hart, and pas through every side,
And let eternall night so sad sight fro me hide.

23

200 "O lightsome day, the lampe of highest Jove,
First made by him, mens wandring wayes to guyde,
When darknesse he in deepest dongeon drove,
Henceforth thy hated face for ever hyde,
And shut up heavens windowes shynyn wyde:
For earthly sight can nought but sorrow breed,
205 And late repentance, which shall long abyde.
Mine eyes no more on vanitie shall feed,
But seeléd up with death, shall have their deadly meed."⁶

24

210 Then downe againe she fell unto the ground;
But he her quickly reared up againe:
Thrise did she sinke adowne in deadly swownd,
And thrise he her revived with busie paine:
At last when life recovered had the raine,^o
And over-wrestled his strong enemye,
215 With foltring tong, and trembling every vaine,
"Tell on," quoth she, "the wofull Tragedie,
The which these reliques sad present unto mine eie.

rein

25

220 "Tempestuous fortune hath spent all her spight,
And thrilling sorrow throwne his utmost dart;
Thy sad tongue cannot tell more heavy plight,
Then that I feele, and harbour in mine hart:
Who hath endured the whole, can beare each part.
If death it be, it is not the first wound,
That launchéd^o hath my brest with bleeding smart.
Begin, and end the bitter balefull stound;^o
225 If lesse, then that I feare, more favour I have found."

pierced disaster

26

230 Then gan the Dwarfe the whole discourse declare,
The subtill traines of Archimago old;
The wanton loves of false Fidessa faire,
Bought with the bloud of vanquisht Paynim bold:
The wretched payre transformed to treen mould;⁷
The house of Pride, and perils round about;
The combat, which he with Sans joy did hould;
The lucklesse conflict with the Gyant stout,
Wherein captived, of life or death he stood in doubt.

27

235 She heard with patience all unto the end,
And strove to maister sorrowfull assay,⁸
Which greater grew, the more she did contend,
And almost rent her tender hart in tway;

6. Reward of death.

7. Shape of a tree.

8. I.e., attack of sorrow.

And love fresh coles unto her fire did lay:
 240 For greater love, the greater is the losse.
 Was never Ladie lovéd dearer° day, more dearly
 Then she did love the knight of the Redcrosse;
 For whose deare sake so many troubles her did tosse.

28

At last when fervent sorrow slakéd was,
 245 She up arose, resolving him to find
 Alive or dead: and forward forth doth pas,
 All as the Dwarfe the way to her assynd:° showed
 And evermore in constant carefull mind
 She fed her wound with fresh renewéd bale;° anguish
 250 Long tost with stormes, and bet° with bitter wind, beat
 High over hils, and low adowne the dale,
 She wandred many a wood, and measurd many a vale.

29

At last she chauncéd by good hap to meet
 A goodly knight,⁹ faire marching by the way
 255 Together with his Squire, arayéd meet:° properly
 His glitterand° armour shinéd farre away, glittering
 Like glauncing light of Phoebus brightest ray;
 From top to toe no place appeared bare,
 That deadly dint of steele endanger may:
 260 Athwart his brest a bauldrick° brave he ware, sash
 That shynd, like twinkling stars, with stons most pretious rare.

30

And in the midst thereof one pretious stone
 Of wondrous worth, and eke of wondrous mights,
 Shapt like a Ladies head,¹ exceeding shone,
 265 Like Hesperus° emongst the lesser lights, evening star
 And strove for to amaze the weaker sight;
 Thereby his mortall blade full comely hong
 In yvory sheath, ycarved with curious slights;° patterns
 Whose hilts were burnisht gold, and handle strong 270 Of mother pearle, and buckled with a golden tong.° pin

31

His haughtie helmet, horrid° all with gold, bristling
 Both glorious brightnesse, and great terrour bred;
 For all the crest a Dragon did enfold
 With greedie pawes, and over all did spred

9. Prince Arthur, the supreme hero of the entire Faerie Queene. As Spenser explained to Raleigh, "So in the person of Prince Arthure I sette forth magnificence in particular, which vertue for that (according to Aristotle and the rest) it is the perfection of all the rest, and conteineth in it them all." Since, he says, "I mention [in each book] the deedes of Arthur applyable to that vertue which I write of in that booke," and since the "virtue" in Book I is Holiness, Arthur will be not unlike Christ, or the power of Christian grace, in the ensuing episodes.

1. I.e., that of the Faerie Queene, Gloriana.

275 His golden wings: his dreadfull hideous hed
Close couched on the bever,^o seemed to throw
From flaming mouth bright sparkles fierie red,
That suddeine horror to faint harts did show;
And scaly taylor was stretcht adowne his backe full low.

visor

32

280 Upon the top of all his loftie crest,
A bunch of haire discoloured^o diversly,
With sprinkled pearle, and gold full richly drest,
Did shake, and seemed to daunce for jollity,
Like to an Almond tree ymounted hye
285 On top of greene Selinis all alone,
With blossomes brave bedecked daintily;
Whose tender locks do tremble every one
At every little breath, that under heaven is blowne.

dyed

33

His warlike shield all closely covered was,
290 Ne might of mortall eye be ever seene;
Not made of steele, nor of enduring bras,
Such earthly mettals soone consumed bene:
But all of Diamond perfect pure and cleene^o
It framed was, one massie entire mould,
295 Hewen out of Adamant rocke with engines keene,
That point of speare it never percen could,
Ne dint of direfull sword divide the substance would.²

clear

34

The same to wight he never wont disclose,
But^o when as monsters huge he would dismay,
300 Or daunt unequall armies of his foes,
Or when the flying heavens he would affray;^o
For so exceeding shone his glistring ray,
That Phoebus golden face it did attaint,^o
As when a cloud his beames doth over-lay;
305 And silver Cynthia^o waxed pale and faint,
As when her face is staynd with magicke arts constraint.^o except frighten

dim

the moon force

35

No magicke arts hereof had any might,
Nor bloudie wordes of bold Enchaunters call,
But all that was not such, as seemd in sight,
310 Before that shield did fade, and suddeine fall:
And when him list the raskall routes³ appall,
Men into stones therewith he could transmew,^o
And stones to dust, and dust to nought at all;
And when him list the prouder lookes subdew,
315 He hewd them gazing blind, or turne to other hew.^o change

form

2. The diamond—unflawed, unpierceable, translucent—is emblematic of the perfect faith which is Arthur's shield. Cf. Ephesians vi.16: "Above all, taking the shield of faith, wherewith ye shall be able to quench all the fiery darts of the wicked."

3. Unruly mobs.

36

Ne let it seeme, that credence this exceedes,
 For he that made the same, was knowne right well
 To have done much more admirable deedes.
 It Merlin was, which whylome° did excell
 320 All living wightes in might of magicke spell:
 Both shield, and sword, and armour all he wrought
 For this young Prince, when first to armes he fell;°
 But when he dyde, the Faerie Queene it brought To Faerie lond, where yet it may be seene, if sought.⁴

formerly

came

37

325 A gentle youth, his dearely lovéd Squire
 His speare of heben° wood behind him bare,
 Whose harmefull head, thrice heated in the fire,
 Had riven many a brest with pikehead square;
 A goodly person, and could menage° faire
 330 His stubborne steed with curbéd canon bit,⁵
 Who under him did trample as the aire,
 And chaufft,° that any on his backe should sit;
 The yron rowels into frothy fome he bit.

ebony

control

fretted

38

When as this knight nigh to the Ladie drew,
 335 With lovely court he gan her entertaine;
 But when he heard her answers loth, he knew
 Some secret sorrow did her heart distraine:°
 Which to allay, and calme her storming paine,
 Faire feeling words he wisely gan display,
 340 And for her humour fitting purpose faire,⁶
 To tempt the cause it selfe for to bewray;
 Wherewith emmoved, these bleeding words she gan to say.

oppress

39

“What worlds delight, or joy of living speach
 Can heart, so plunged in sea of sorrowes deepe, 345 And heapéd with so huge misfortunes, reach?
 The carefull° cold beginneth for to creepe,
 And in my heart his yron arrow steepe,
 Soone as I thinke upon my bitter bale:°
 Such helpelesse harmes yts better hidden keepe,
 350 Then rip up grieffe, where it may not availe,
 My last left comfort is, my woes to weepe and waile.”

afflicting

grief

40

“Ah Ladie deare,” quoth then the gentle knight,
 “Well may I weene, your grieffe is wondrous great;
 For wondrous great grieffe groneth in my spright,°
 355 Whiles thus I heare you of your sorrowes treat.
 But wofull Ladie let me you intrete,
 For to unfold the anguish of your hart:
 Mishaps are maistred by advice discrete,

spirit

4. I.e., Arthur's virtues may be seen still in Queen Elizabeth's England.

5. Cannon-bit; a smooth, round bit.
 6. I.e., suited his manner to her mood.

And counsell mittigates the greatest smart;
 360 Found never helpe, who never would his hurts impart."

41

"O but," quoth she, "great grieve will not be tould,
 And can more easily be thought, then said."
 "Right so"; quoth he, "but he, that never would,
 Could never: will to might gives greatest aid."
 365 "But grief," quoth she, "does greater grow displaid,
 If then it find not helpe, and breeds despaire."
 "Despaire breeds not," quoth he, "where faith is staid."
 "No faith so fast," quoth she, "but flesh does paire."
 "Flesh may empaire," quoth he, "but reason can repaire."

firm impair

42

370 His goodly reason, and well guided speach
 So deepe did settle in her gracious thought,
 That her perswaded to disclose the breach,
 Which love and fortune in her heart had wrought,
 And said; "Faire Sir, I hope good hap hath brought 375 You to inquire the secrets of my grieve,
 Or that your wisdom will direct my thought,
 Or that your prowess can me yield reliefe:
 Then heare the storie sad, which I shall tell you brieve.

43

"The forlorne Maiden, whom your eyes have seene
 380 The laughing stocke of fortunes mockeries,
 Am th'only daughter of a King and Queene,
 Whose parents deare, whilest equall destinies
 Did runne about,⁷ and their felicities
 The favourable heavens did not envy,
 385 Did spread their rule through all the territories,
 Which Phison and Euphrates floweth by,
 And Gehons golden waves doe wash continually.⁸

44

"Till that their cruell curséd enemy,
 An huge great Dragon horrible in sight,
 390 Bred in the loathly lakes of Tartary,^o
 With murderous ravine,^o and devouring might
 Their kingdome spoild, and countrey wasted quight:
 Themselves, for feare into his jawes to fall,
 He forst to castle strong to take their flight,
 395 Where fast embard in mightie brasen wall,
 He has them now foure yeres besiegd to make them thrall.

Tartarus (Hell) destruction

45

"Full many knights adventurous and stout
 Have enterprizd that Monster to subdew;
 From every coast that heaven walks about,
 400 Have thither come the noble Martiall crew,
 That famous hard atchievements still pursue,

7. I.e., while impartial destinies surrounded them.

8. These three rivers flow in the Garden of Eden (Genesis ii.11-14).

Yet never any could that girlond win,
 But all still shronke,^o and still he greater grew: quailed
 All they for want of faith, or guilt of sin,
 405 The pitteous pray of his fierce crueltie have bin.

46

"At last yledd^o with farre reported praise, led
 Which flying fame throughout the world had spread,
 Of doughtie knights, whom Faery land did raise,
 That noble order hight^o of Maidenhed,⁹ called 410 Forthwith to court of Gloriane I sped,
 Of Gloriane great Queene of glory bright,
 Whose kingdomes seat Cleopolis is red,¹
 There to obtaine some such redoubted knight,
 That Parents deare from tyrants powre deliver might.

47

415 "It was my chance (my chance was faire and good)
 There for to find a fresh unprovéd knight,
 Whose manly hands imbrewed^o in guiltie blood stained
 Had never bene, ne ever by his might
 Had throwne to ground the unregarded^o right: unrespected
 420 Yet of his prowesse prooffe he since hath made
 (I witsesse am) in many a cruell fight;
 The groning ghosts of many one dismaide
 Have felt the bitter dint of his avenging blade.

48

"And ye the forlorne reliques of his powre,
 425 His byting sword, and his devouring speare,
 Which have endured many a dreadfull stowre,^o conflict
 Can speake his prowesse, that did earst you beare,
 And well could rule: now he hath left you heare,
 To be the record of his ruefull losse,
 430 And of my dolefull disaventurous deare:²
 O heavie record of the good Redcrosse,
 Where have you left your Lord, that could so well you tosse?

49

"Well hopéd I, and faire beginnings had,
 That he my captive langour should redeeme,³
 435 Till all unweeting, an Enchaunter bad
 His sence abusd, and made him to misdeeme
 My loyalty, not such as it did seeme;
 That^o rather death desire, then such despiht. I, who
 Be judge ye heavens, that all things right esteeme, 440 How I him loved, and love with all my might,
 So thought I eke of him, and thinke I thought aright.

9. Historically, the Order of the Garter. Its emblem shows St. George killing the dragon.

1. Named. "Cleopolis" means "famous city." In the historical allegory, it is London, as Gloriana is Elizabeth. In other contexts, however, it may be Camelot or the earthly counterpart of the New Jerusalem.

2. Unfortunate lover.

3. I.e., relieve my state, captive to sadness.

50

“Thenceforth me desolate he quite forsooke,
 To wander, where wilde fortune would me lead,
 And other bywaies he himselfe betooke,
 445 Where never foot of living wight did tread,
 That brought not backe the balefull body dead;⁴
 In which him chauncéd false Duessa meete,
 Mine onely foe, mine onely deadly dread,
 Who with her witchcraft and misseeming^o sweete,
 450 Inveigled him to follow her desires unmeete.”

deception improper

51

“At last by subtill sleights she him betraid
 Unto his foe, a Gyant huge and tall,
 Who him disarméd, dissolute,^o dismaid,
 Unwares surpriséd, and with mightie mall^o
 455 The monster mercillesse him made to fall,
 Whose fall did never foe before behold;
 And now in darkesome dungeon, wretched thrall,
 Remedillesse, for aie^o he doth him hold;
 This is my cause of griefe, more great, then may be told.”

enfeebled club

ever

52

Ere she had ended all, she gan to faint:
 But he her comforted and faire bespake,
 “Certes, Madame, ye have great cause of plaint,
 That stoutest heart, I weene, could cause to quake.
 But be of cheare, and comfort to you take:
 465 For till I have acquit^o your captive knight,
 Assure your selfe, I will you not forsake.”
 His chearefull words revived her chearelesse spright,
 So forth they went, the Dwarfe them guiding ever right.

freed

Canto VIII

*Faire virgin to redeeme her deare brings Arthur to the fight:
 Who slayes the Gyant, wounds the beast,
 and strips Duessa quight.*

1

Ay me, how many perils doe enfold
 The righteous man, to make him daily fall?
 Were not, that heavenly grace doth him uphold,
 And stedfast truth acquite him out of all.
 5 Her love is firme, her care continuall,
 So oft as he through his owne foolish pride,
 Or weaknesse is to sinfull bands^o made thrall:
 Else should this Redcrosse knight in bands have dyde,
 For whose deliverance she this Prince doth thither guide.

bonds

4. I.e., who returned alive.

2

- 10 They sadly traveild thus, untill they came
 Nigh to a castle builded strong and hie:
 Then cryde the Dwarfe, "lo yonder is the same,
 In which my Lord my liege doth lucklesse lie,
 Thrall to that Gyants hatefull tyrannie:
 15 Therefore, deare Sir, your mightie powres assay."
 The noble knight alighted by and by⁵
 From loftie steede, and bad the Ladie stay,
 To see what end of fight should him befall that day.

3

- So with the Squire, th'admirer of his might,
 20 He marchéd forth towards that castle wall;
 Whose gates he found fast shut, ne living wight
 To ward° the same, nor answer commers call. guard
 Then tooke that Squire an horne of bugle small,⁶
 Which hong adowne his side in twisted gold,
 25 And tassels gay. Wyde wonders over all
 Of that same hornes great vertues weren told,
 Which had approvéd° bene in uses manifold. demonstrated

4

- Was never wight, that heard that shrilling sound,
 But trembling feare did feele in every vaine;
 30 Three miles it might be easie heard around,
 And Ecchoes three answered it selfe againe:
 No false enchauntment, nor deceitfull traine° snare
 Might once abide the terror of that blast,
 But presently was voide and wholly vaine:
 35 No gate so strong, no locke so firme and fast,
 But with that percing noise flew open quite, or brast° burst

5

- The same before the Geants gate he blew,
 That all the castle quakéd from the ground,
 And every dore of freewill open flew.
 40 The Gyant selfe dismaied with that sownd,
 Where he with his Duessa dalliance° fownd, amorous play
 In hast came rushing forth from inner bowre,
 With staring countenance sterne, as one astownd,
 And staggering steps, to weet, what suddein stowre° disturbance
 45 Had wrought that horror strange, and dared his dreaded powre.

6

- And after him the proud Duessa came,
 High mounted on her manyheaded beast,
 And every head with fyrie tongue did flame,
 And every head was crownéd on his creast,
 50 And bloudie mouthéd with late cruell feast.
 That when the knight beheld, his mightie shild

5. Immediately.

6. A "bugle" is a wild ox; the "wide wonders" (marvelous tales) told of the horn connect it with the horn of Roland and the ram's horn of Joshua, with which he razed the walls of Jericho (Joshua vi.5).

Upon his manly arme he soone adrest,[°] adjusted
 And at him fiercely flew, with courage fild,
 And eger greedinesse[°] through every member thirld. desire

7

55 Therewith the Gyant buckled him to fight,
 Inflamed with sornefull wrath and high disdain,
 And lifting up his dreadfull club on hight,
 All armed with ragged snubbes[°] and knottie graine, snags
 Him thought at first encounter to have slaine.
 60 But wise and warie was that noble Pere,[°] peer
 And lightly leaping from so monstrous maine,[°] force
 Did faire avoide the violence him nere;
 It booted nought, to thinke, such thunderbolts to beare.⁷

8

Ne shame he thought to shunne so hideous might:
 65 The idle[°] stroke, enforcing furious way, inaccurate
 Missing the marke of his misayméd sight
 Did fall to ground, and with his[°] heauey sway[°] its/force
 So deeply dinted in the driven clay,
 That three yarges deepe a furrow up did throw:
 70 The sad earth wounded with so sore assay,[°] assault
 Did grone full grievous underneath the blow,
 And trembling with strange feare, did like an earthquake show.

9

As when almightie Jove in wrathfull mood,
 To wreake[°] the guilt of mortall sins is bent, punish 75 Hurles forth his thundring dart with deadly food,⁸
 Enrold in flames, and smouldring dremiment,
 Through riven cloudes and molten firmament;
 The fierce threeforkéd engin[°] making way, weapon
 Both loftie towres and highest trees hath rent,
 80 And all that might his angrie passage stay,
 And shooting in the earth, casts up a mount of clay.

10

His boystrous[°] club, so buried in the ground, huge
 He could not rearen up againe so light,[°] easily
 But that the knight him at advantage found,
 85 And whiles he strove his combred clubbe to quight[°] release
 Out of the earth, with blade all burning bright
 He smote off his left arme, which like a blocke
 Did fall to ground, deprived of native might;
 Large streames of bloud out of the trunckéd stocke
 90 Forth gushéd, like fresh water streame from riven rocke.¹

11

Dismaied with so desperate deadly wound,
 And eke impatient of² unwonted paine,
 He loudly brayd with beastly yelling sound,
 That all the fields rebellowéd againe;

7. The ensuing battle may be taken as the struggle of the Protestant against the Roman church—or that of Christian grace against evil, the Antichrist.

8. Hatred (feud).

1. Cf. Exodus xvii.6, where Moses smites the rock and water flows forth.

2. Agonized by.

95 As great a noyse, as when in Cymbrian plaine
 An heard of Bulles, whom kindly° rage doth sting, natural
 Do for the milkie mothers want complaine,³
 And fill the fields with troublous bellowing,
 The neighbour woods around with hollow murmur ring.

12

100 That when his deare Duessa heard, and saw
 The evill stownd,° that daungerd her estate, blow
 Unto his aide she hastily did draw
 Her dreadfull beast, who swolne with bloud of late
 Came ramping forth with proud presumptuous gate,
 105 And threatned all his heads like flaming brands.° torches
 But him the Squire made quickly to retrate, Encountring fierce with single° sword in hand, only
 And twixt him and his Lord did like a bulwarke stand,

13

The proud Duessa full of wrathfull spight,
 110 And fierce disdaine, to be affronted so,
 Enforst her purple beast with all her might
 That stop° out of the way to overthrow,
 Scorning the let° of so unequall foe: obstacle
 But nathemore° would that courageous swayne obstruction
 115 To her yeeld passage, gainst his Lord to goe,
 But with outrageous strokes did him restraine,
 And with his bodie bard the way atwixt them twaine. never the more

14

Then tooke the angrie witch her golden cup,
 Which still she bore, replete with magick artes; ⁴
 120 Death and despeyre did many thereof sup,
 And secret poyson through their inner parts,
 Th' eternall bale of heavie wounded harts;
 Which after charmes and some enchauntments said,
 She lightly sprinkled on his weaker° parts; too weak
 125 Therewith his sturdie courage soone was quayd,° quelled
 And all his senses were with suddaine dread dismayd.

15

So downe he fell before the cruell beast,
 Who on his necke his bloudie clawes did seize,
 That life nigh crusht out of his panting brest:
 130 No powre he had to stirre, nor will to rize.
 That when the carefull° knight gan well avise, watchful
 He lightly left the foe, with whom he fought,
 And to the beast gan turne his enterprise;
 For wondrous anguish in his hart it wrought,
 135 To see his lovéd Squire into such thraldome brought.

16

And high advauncing his bloud-thirstie blade,

3. I.e., mourn the cows' absence.

4. Cf. the golden cup of the woman in Revelation, which is "full of abominations" (xvii.4), the chalice of the Roman church, and the cup of Circe (in Odyssey X).

Stroke one of those deforméd heads so sore,⁵
 That of his puissance proud ensample made;
 His monstrous scalpe° downe to his teeth it tore 140 And that misforméd shape mis-shapéd more:
 A sea of bloud gusht from the gaping wound,
 That her gay garments staynd with filthy gore,
 And overflowéd all the field around;
 That over shoes in bloud he waded on the ground.

17

145 Thereat he roaréd for exceeding paine,
 That to have heard, great horror would have bred,
 And scourging th' emptie ayre with his long traine,
 Through great impatience° of his grievéd hed
 His gorgeous ryder from her loftie sted
 150 Would have cast downe, and trod in durtie myre,
 Had not the Gyant soone her succouréd;
 Who all enragéd with smart and franticke yre,
 Came hurtling in full fierce, and forst the knight retyre.

18

The force, which wont in two to be disperst,
 155 In one alone left hand he now unites,
 Which is through rage more strong then both were erst;
 With which his hideous club aloft he dites,^o
 And at his foe with furious rigour smites,
 That strongest Oake might seeme to overthrow:
 160 The stroke upon his shield so heaue lites,
 That to the ground it doubleth him full low:
 What mortall wight could ever beare so monstrous blow?

19

And in his fall his shield, that covered was,
 Did loose his vele° by chaunce, and open flew:
 165 The light whereof, that heavens light did pas,^o
 Such blazing brightnesse through the aier threw,
 That eye mote not the same endure to vew.
 Which when the Gyaunt spyde with staring° eye,
 He downe let fall his arme, and soft withdrew
 170 His weapon huge, that heavéd was on hie
 For to have slaine the man, that on the ground did lye.

20

And eke the fruitfull-headed° beast, amazed
 At flashing beames of that sunshiny shield,
 Became starke blind, and all his senses dazed,
 175 That downe he tumbled on the durtie field,
 And seemed himselfe as conqueréd to fall,
 Whom when his maistresse proud perceiued to fall,
 Whiles yet his feeble feet for faintnesse reeld,
 Unto the Gyant loudly she gan call,
 180 "O helpe Orgoglio, helpe, or else we perish all."

5. "I saw one of [the beast's] heads as it were wounded to death" (Revelation xiii.3).

21

At her so pitteous cry was much amoooved
 Her champion stout, and for to ayde his frend, Againe his wonted angry weapon prooved:° tried
 But all in vaine: for he has read his end
 185 In that bright shield, and all their forces spend Themselves in vaine: for since that glauncing° sight, flashing
 He hath no powre to hurt, nor to defend;
 As where th' Almightyes lightning brond does light,
 It dimmes the dazed eyen, and daunts the senses quight.

22

190 Whom when the Prince, to battell new addrest,
 And threatning high his dreadfull stroke did see,
 His sparkling blade about his head he blest,° waved
 And smote off quite his right leg by the knee,
 That downe he tumbled; as an aged tree,
 195 High growing on the top of rocky clift,
 Whose hartstrings with keene steele nigh hewen be,
 The mightie trunck halfe rent, with ragged rift
 Doth roll adowne the rocks, and fall with fearefull drift.° impact

23

Or as a Castle reared high and round,
 200 By subtile engins and malicious slight° trickery
 Is underminéd from the lowest ground,
 And her foundation forst,° and feebled quight, shattered
 At last downe falles, and with her heaped hight
 Her hastie ruine does more heaue make,
 205 And yields it selfe unto the victours might;
 Such was this Gyaunts fall, that seemed to shake
 The stedfast globe of earth, as it for feare did quake.

24

The knight then lightly leaping to the pray,
 With mortall steele him smot againe so sore,
 210 That headlesse his unweldy bodie lay,
 All wallowd in his owne fowle bloody gore,
 Which flowed from his wounds in wondrous store.
 But soone as breath out of his breast did pas,
 That huge great body, which the Gyaunt bore,
 215 Was vanisht quite, and of that monstrous mas
 Was nothing left, but like an emptie bladder was.

25

Whose grievous fall, when false Duessa spide,
 Her golden cup she cast unto the ground,
 And crownéd mitre rudely threw aside;
 220 Such percing grieve her stubborn hart did wound;
 That she could not endure that dolefull stound,° sorrow
 But leaving all behind her, fled away:
 The light-foot Squire her quickly turned around,
 And by hard meanes enforcing her to stay,
 225 So brought unto his Lord, as his deserved pray.

26

The royall Virgin, which beheld from farre,

In pensive plight, and sad perplexitie,
The whole atchievement° of this doubtfull warre, course

230 Came running fast to greet his victorie,
With sober gladnesse, and myld modestie,
And with sweet joyous cheare him thus bespake;
"Faie braunch of noblesse, flowre of chevalrie,
That with your worth the world amazed make,
How shall I quite° the paines, ye suffer for my sake?" requite

27

235 "And you⁶ fresh bud of vertue springing fast,
Whom these sad eyes saw nigh unto deaths dore,
What hath poore Virgin for such penill past,
Wherewith you to reward? Accept therefore
My simple selfe, and service evermore;
240 And he that high does sit, and all things see
With equall° eyes, their merites to restore," impartial/reward
Behold what ye this day have done for mee,
And what I cannot quite, requite with usuree." interest

28

"But sith the heavens, and your faie handling° conduct 245 Have made you maister of the field this day,
Your fortune maister eke with governing,⁷
And well begun end all so well, I pray,
Ne let that wicked woman scape away;
For she it is, that did my Lord bethrall,
250 My dearest Lord, and deepe in dongeon lay,
Where he his better dayes hath wasted all.
O heare, how piteous he to you for ayd does call."

29

Forthwith he gave in charge unto his Squire,
That scarlot whore to keepeen carefully;
255 Whiles he himselfe with greedie ° great desire eager
Into the Castle entred forcibly,
Where living creature none he did espye;
Then gan he lowdly through the house to call:
But no man cared to answere to his crye.
260 There raignd a solemne silence over all,
Nor voice was heard, nor wight was seene in bowre or hall.

30

At last with creeping crooked pace forth came
An old old man, with beard as white as snow,
That on a staffe his feeble steps did frame,"° support
265 And guide his wearie gate both too and fro:
For his eye sight him failéd long ygo,
And on his arme a bounch of keyes he bore,
The which unuséd rust did overgrow:
Those were the keyes of every inner dore,
270 But he could not them use, but kept them still in store.

6. I.e., the Squire. Una's reward to the Squire who has done such faithful service in the war against Pride is itself an exemplary act of humility.

7. Secure your good fortune also by prudent management.

31

But very uncouth sight was to behold,

How he did fashion his untoward^o pace,awkward

For as he forward mooved his footing old,

So backward still was turned his wrinckled face,

275

Unlike to men, who ever as they trace,^o*walk*

Both feet and face one way are wont to lead.

This was the auncient keeper of that place,

And foster father of the Gyant dead;

His name Ignaro did his nature right aread.⁸

32

280 His reverend haire and holy gravitie

The knight much honord, as beseméd well,¹

And gently askt, where all the people bee,

Which in that stately building wont to dwell.

Who answerd him full soft, he could not tell.

285

Againe he askt, where that same knight was layd,

Whom great Orgoglio with his puissaunce fell

Had made his caytive thrall; againe he sayde,

He could not tell: ne ever other answer made.

33

Then asked he, which way he in might pas:

290

He could not tell, againe he answered.

Thereat the curteous knight displeaséd was,

And said, "Old sire, it seemes thou hast not red^o*recognized*How ill it sits with² that same silver head

In vaine to mocke, or mockt in vaine to bee:

295

But if thou be, as thou art pourtrahéd

With natures pen, in ages grave degree,³Aread^o in graver wise, what I demaund of thee."answer

34

His answer likewise was, he could not tell.

Whose sencelesse speach, and doted ignorance

300

When as the noble Prince had markéd well,

He ghest his nature by his countenance,

And calmd his wrath with goodly temperance.

Then to him stepping, from his arme did reach

Those keyes, and made himselfe free enturance.

305

Each dore he openéd without any breach;^o*forcing*There was no barre to stop, nor foe him to empeach.^o*hinder*

35

There all within full rich arayd he found,

With royal arras^o and resplendent gold.tapestry

And did with store of every thing abound,

310

That greatest Princes presence^o might behold.person

But all the floore (too filthy to be told)

With bloud of guiltlesse babes, and innocents trew,

Which there were slaine, as sheepe out of the fold,

8. Make known. Doting ignorance ("Ignaro") is a fit servant for pride and the false church; he has his counterparts in Abessa and Corceca.

1. Seemed proper.

2. I.e., suits.

3. I.e., dignity.

Defiled was, that dreadfull was to vew,
 315 And sacred^o ashes over it was strowed new. accursed

36

And there beside of marble stone was built
 An Altare, carved with cunning imagery,
 On which true Christians bloud was often spilt,
 And holy Martyrs often doen to dye,⁴
 320 With cruell malice and strong tyranny:
 Whose blessed sprites from underneath the stone
 To God for vengeance cryde continually,⁵
 And with great grieve were often heard to grone,
 That hardest heart would bleede, to heare their piteous mone.

37

325 Through every rowme he sought, and every bowr,
 But no where could he find that wofull thrall:
 At last he came unto an yron doore,
 That fast was lockt, but key found not at all
 Amongst that bounch, to open it withall;
 330 But in the same a little grate was pight,^o placed
 Through which he sent his voyce, and lowd did call
 With all his powre, to weet, if living wight
 Were houséd therewithin, whom he enlargen^o might. release

38

Therewith an hollow, dreary, murmuring voyce
 335 These piteous plaints and dolours did resound;
 "O who is that, which brings me happy choyce"
 Of death, that here lye dying every stound,^o chance moment
 Yet live perforce in balefull darkenesse bound?
 For now three Moones have changéd thrice their hew,^o shape
 340 And have beene thrice hid underneath the ground,
 Since I the heavens chearefull face did vew,
 O welcome thou, that doest of death bring tydings trew."

39

Which when that Champion heard, with percing point
 Of pitty deare^o his hart was thrilléd sore, extreme 345 And trembling horror ran through every joynt,
 For ruth of gentle knight so fowle forlore:⁶
 Which shaking off, he rent that yron dore,
 With furious force, and indignation fell;^o fierce
 Where entred in, his foot could find no flore,
 350 But all a deepe descent, as darke as hell,
 That breathéd ever forth a filthie banefull smell.

40

But neither darkenesse fowle, nor filthy bands,
 Nor noyous^o smell his purpose could withhold, noxious, harmful
 (Entire affection hateth nicer^o hands) too fastidious

4. Put to death.

5. "And when he had opened the fifth seal, I saw under the altar the souls of them that were slain for the word of God, and for the testimony which they held: And they cried with a loud voice, saying, How long, O Lord, holy and true, dost thou not judge and avenge our blood on them that dwell on the earth?" (Revelation vi.9-10).

6. Foully deserted.

- 355 But that with constant zeale, and courage bold,
 After long paines and labours manifold,
 He found the meanes that Prisoner up to reare;
 Whose feeble thighes, unhable to uphold
 His pinéd° corse, him scarce to light could beare, 360 A ruefull spectacle of deathe and ghastly dreere.°

wasted wretchedness

- 41
- His sad dull eyes deepe sunck in hollow pits,
 Could not endure th' unwonted sunne to view;
 His bare thin cheekes for want of better bits,°
 And empty sides deceived° of their dew,
 365 Could make a stony hart his hap to rewe;
 His rawbone armes, whose mighty brawnéd bowrs°
 Were wont to rive steele plates, and helmets hew,
 Were cleane consumed, and all his vitall powres
 Decayd, and all his flesh shronk up like withered flowres.

food cheated muscles

- 42
- 370 Whom when his Lady saw, to him she ran
 With hasty joy: to see him made her glad,
 And sad to view his visage pale and wan,
 Who earst in flowres of freshest youth was clad.
 Tho° when her well of teares she wasted had,
 375 She said, "Ah dearest Lord, what evill starre
 On you hath fround, and poud his influence bad,
 That of your selfe ye thus berobbéd arre,
 And this misseeming hew⁷ your manly looks doth marre?

then

- 43
- "But welcome now my Lord, in wele or woe,
 380 Whose presence I have lackt to long a day;
 And fie on Fortune mine avowéd foe,
 Whose wrathfull wreaques° them selves do now alay.
 And for these wrongs shall treble penaunce pay
 Of treble good: good growes of evils priefe."⁸
 385 The chearelesse man, whom sorrow, did dismay,°
 Had no delight to treaten° of his grieve;
 His long endured famine needed more reliefe.

punishments

unnerve speak

- 44
- "Fairst Lady," then said that victorious knight,⁹
 "The things, that grievous were to do, or beare, 390 Them to renew,° I wote, breeds no delight;
 Best musicke breeds delight in loathing eare:
 But th'onely good, that growes of passed feare,
 Is to be wise, and ware° of like agein.
 This dayes ensample hath this lesson deare
 395 Deepe written in my heart with yron pen,
 That blisse may not abide in state of mortall men.

recall

wary

- 45
- "Henceforth sir knight, take to you wonted strength,
 And maister these mishaps with patient might;

7. Unseemly shape.
 8. Endurance of evil.

9. I.e., Arthur.

Loe where your foe lyes stretcht in monstrous length,
 400 And loe that wicked woman in your sight,¹⁰
 The roote of all your care, and wretched plight,
 Now in your powre, to let her live, or dye."
 "To do her dye," quoth Una, "were despight," spiteful
 And shame t'avenge so weake an enemy;
 405 But spoile her of her scarlot robe, and let her fly."

46

So as she bad, that witch they disaraid,
 And robd of royall robes, and purple pall,
 And ornaments that richly were displaid;
 Ne sparéd they to strip her naked all.
 410 Then when they had despoild her tire° and call,° robe/headdress
 Such as she was, their eyes might her behold,
 That her misshapéd parts did them appall,
 A loathly, wrinckled hag, ill favoured, old,
 Whose secret filth good manners biddeth not be told.

47

415 Her craftie head was altogether bald,
 And as in hate of honorable eld,° age
 Was overgrowne with scurfe and filthy scald;° scabs
 Her teeth out of her rotten gummies were feld,° fallen
 And her sowre breath abhominably smeld;
 420 Her dried dugs, like bladders lacking wind,
 Hong downe, and filthy matter from them weld;
 Her wrizled skin as rough, as maple rind,
 So scabby was, that would have loathd all womankind.

48

Her neather parts, the shame of all her kind,¹
 425 My chaster Muse for shame doth blush to write;
 But at her rompe she growing had behind
 A foxes taile, with dong all fowly dight;° covered
 And eke her feete most monstrous were in sight;
 For one of them was like an Eagles claw,
 430 With griping talaunts armd to greedy fight,
 The other like a Beares uneven° paw: rough
 More ugly shape yet never living creature saw.²

49

Which when the knights beheld, amazd they were,
 And wondred at so fowle deforméd wight.
 435 "Such ther," said Una, "as she seemeth here,
 Such is the face of falshood, such the sight
 Of fowle Duessa, when her borrowed light
 Is laid away, and counterfesaunce° knowne." disguise
 Thus when they had the witch disrobéd quight,
 440 And all her filthy feature° open showne, form
 They let her goe at will, and wander wayes unknowne.

10. Over there.

1. I.e., womankind.

2. Cf. Duessa with the House of Pride: fair above, foul below. Her filthiness is like that of Alcina in Ariosto's Orlando Furioso, VII.71-73. Cf. also Revelation xvii.16: "these shall hate the whore, and shall make her desolate and naked." Foxes (cf. line 427) were noted for cunning; eagles and bears (lines 429, 431) for rapacity, cruelty, and brutality.

- She flying fast from heavens hated face,
 And from the world that her discovered wide,
 Fled to the wastfull wildernesses apace,
 445 From living eyes her open shame to hide,
 And lurkt in rocks and caves long unespide.
 But that faire crew of knights, and Una faire
 Did in that castle afterwards abide,
 To rest them selves, and weary powres repaire,
 450 Where store they found of all, that daintie was and rare.

Canto IX

*His loves and lignage Arthur tells:
 The knights knit friendly bands:
 Sir Trevisan flies from Despayre,
 Whom Redcrosse knight withstands.*

1

- O goodly golden chaine,³ wherewith yfere° together
 The vertues linkéd are in lovely wize:
 And noble minds of yore allyéd were,
 In brave poursuit of chevalrous emprise,° adventure
 5 That none did others safety despize, begudge
 Nor aid envy° to him, in need that stands,
 But friendly each did others prayse devise
 How to advaunce with favourable hands,
 As this good Prince redeemd the Redcrosse knight from bands.*bonds

2

- 10 Who when their powres, empaird through labour long,
 With dew repast they had recured° well, restored
 And that weake captive wight now wexéd strong,
 Them list no lenger there at leasure dwell,
 But forward fare, as their adventures fell,
 15 But ere they parted, Una faire besought
 That straunger knight his name and nation tell;
 Least so great good, as he for her had wrought,
 Should die unknown, and buried be in thanklesse thought.

3

- "Faire virgin," said the Prince, "ye me require 20 A thing without the compas⁴ of my wit:
 For both the lignage and the certain Sire,
 From which I sprong, from me are hidden yit.
 For all so soone as life did me admit
 Into this world, and shewed heavens light,
 25 From mothers pap I taken was unfit:° unsuitably
 And streight delivered to a Faery knight,
 To be upbrought in gentle thewes° and martiall might. manners

3. Stanza 1 opens with an invocation of the golden chain of love or concord which binds the world and the human race together (cf. v.25 and note). It will be reaffirmed in stanza 19 when the two knights exchange symbolic gifts and shake hands in token of fellowship.

 4. I.e., beyond the reach of.

4

“Unto old Timon⁵ he me brought bylive,[°] immediately
 Old Timon, who in youthly yeares hath beene
 30 In warlike feates th’expertest man alive,
 And is the wisest now on earth I weene;
 His dwelling is low in a valley greene,
 Under the foot of Rauran mossy hore,[°] gray
 From whence the river Dee as silver cleene[°] pure
 35 His tombling billowes rolls with gentle rore:⁶
 There all my dayes he traird me up in vertuous lore.

5

“Thither the great Magicien Merlin came,
 As was his use, oftentimes to visit me:
 For he had charge my discipline to frame,
 40 And Tutours nouriture[°] to oversee. training
 Him oft and oft I askt in privitie,
 Of what loines and what lignage I did spring:
 Whose aunswere bad me still assuréd bee,
 That I was sonne and heire unto a king,
 45 As time in her just terme⁷ the truth to light should bring.”

6

“Well worthy impe,[°] said then the Lady gent,[°] offspring/gentle
 “And Pupill fit for such a Tutours hand.
 But what adventure, or what high intent
 Hath brought you hither into Faery land,
 50 Aread[°] Prince Arthur, crowne of Martiall band?” declare “Full hard it is,” quoth he, “to read[°] aright discern
 The course of heavenly cause, or understand
 The secret meaning of th’eternall might,
 That rules mens wayes, and rules the thoughts of living wight.

7

“For whither he through fatall[°] deepe foresight prophetic
 Me hither sent, for cause to me unghest,
 Or that fresh bleeding wound, which day and night
 Whilome[°] doth rangle in my riven brest, incessantly
 With forcéd fury following his[°] behest, its 60 Me hither brought by wayes yet never found,
 You to have helpt I hold my selfe yet blest.”
 “Ah curteous knight,” quoth she, “what secret wound
 Could ever find,[°] to grieve the gentlest hart on ground?” succeed

8

“Deare Dame,” quoth he, “you sleeping sparkes awake,
 65 Which trubled once, into huge flames will grow,
 Ne ever will their fervent fury slake
 Till living moysture into smoke do flow,
 And wasted[°] life do lye in ashes low. consumed
 Yet sithens[°] silence lesseneth not my fire, since

5. The name means “Honor.”

6. The hill Rauran is in Wales; the river Dee also flows in, and forms part of the boundary of Wales. The Tudors (Queen Elizabeth’s family) were originally Welsh, and the legends of Arthur had their beginnings in the Celtic mythology of early Wales.

7. Due course.

70 But told it flames, and hidden it does glow,
 I will revele, what ye so much desire:
 Ah Love, lay downe thy bow, the whiles I may respire.^o breathe

9

“It was in freshest flowre of youthly yeares,
 When courage first does creepe in manly chest,
 75 Then first the coale of kindly^o heat appeares of nature
 To kindle love in every living brest;
 But me had warnd old Timons wise behest,
 Those creeping flames by reason to subdew,
 Before their rage grew to so great unrest,
 80 As miserable lovers use to rew,
 Which still wex old in woe, whiles woe still wexeth new.

10

“That idle name of love, and lovers life,
 As losse of time, and vertues enemy
 I ever scornd, and joyd to stirre up strife,
 85 In midst of their mournfull Tragedy,
 Ay wont to laugh, when them I heard to cry,
 And blow the fire, which them to ashes brent:^o burned
 Their God himselfe, grieved at my libertie,
 Shot many a dart at me with fiers intent,
 90 But I them warded all with wary government.⁸

11

“But all in vaine: no fort can be so strong,
 Ne fleshly brest can armed be so sound,
 But will at last be wonne with battrie^o long, siege
 Or unawares at disavantage found;
 95 Nothing is sure, that growes on earthly ground:
 And who most trustes in arme of fleshly might,
 And boasts, in beauties chaine not to be bound,
 Doth soonest fall in disaventrous^o fight. disastrous
 And yeeldes his caytive neck to victours most^o despight. greatest

12

100 “Ensamble make of him your haplesse joy,
 And of my selfe now mated,^o as ye see;
 Whose prouder^o vaunt that proud avenging boy
 Did soone pluck downe, and curbd my libertie. overcome
 For on a day prickt^o forth with jollitie too proud 105 Of looser life, and heat of hardiment,^o rode Raunging the forest wide on courser free, boldness
 The fields, the floods, the heavens with one consent
 Did seeme to laugh^o on me, and favour mine intent. smile

13

110 “For-wearied with my sports, I did alight
 From loftie steed, and downe to sleepe me layd;
 The verdant gras my couch did goodly dight,^o make
 And pillow was my helmet faire displayd:

8. I.e., self-control. The descriptions here of Cupid's archery and of the siege of the castle of chastity (in the next stanza) have many echoes from the courtly-love traditions.

Whiles every sence the humour sweet embayd,[°] pervaded
 And slombring soft my hart did steale away,
 115 Me seeméd, by my side a royall Mayd
 Her daintie limbes full softly down did lay:
 So faire a creature yet saw never sunny day.

14
 "Most goodly glee[°] and lovely blandishment[°] pleasure/compliment
 She to me made, and bad me love here deare,
 120 For dearly sure her love was to me bent,
 As when just time expired⁹ should appeare.
 But whether dreames delude, or true it were,
 Was never hart so ravisht with delight,
 Ne living man like words did ever heare,
 125 As she to me delivered all that night;
 And at her parting said, She Queene of Faeries hight.¹

15
 "When I awoke, and found her place devoyd,[°] empty
 And nought but presséd gras, where she had lyen,
 I sorrowed all so much, as earst I joyd,
 130 And washéd all her place with watry eyen.
 From that day forth I loved that face divine;
 From that day forth I cast in carefull mind,
 To seeke her out with labour, and long tyne,[°] hardship
 And never vow to rest, till her I find, 135 Nine monethes I seeke in vaine yet ni'll[°] that vow unbind." will not

16
 Thus as he spake, his visage wexéd pale,
 And chaunge of hew great passion did bewray;[°] reveal
 Yet still he strove to cloke his inward bale,[°] grief
 And hide the smoke, that did his fire display, 140 Till gentle Una thus to him gan say;
 "Oh happy Queene of Faeries, that hast found
 Mongst many, one that with his prowesse may Defend thine honour, and thy foes confound:
 True Loves are often sown, but seldom grow on ground."

17
 145 "Thine, O then," said the gentle Redcrosse knight,
 "Next to that Ladies love, shalbe the place,
 O fairest virgin, full of heavenly light,
 Whose wondrous faith, exceeding earthly race,
 Was firmest fixt in mine extremest case.
 150 And you, my Lord, the Patrone[°] of my life, protector
 Of that great Queene may well gaine worthy grace:
 For onely worthy you through prowes priefe²
 Yf living man mote worthy be, to be her liefe." love

9. A fitting length of time having passed.

1. Was called. Gloriana is also, in the two principal allegories, Queen Elizabeth and Heavenly Grace. This is one of the passages where the "faery" nature of The Faerie Queene makes itself strongly felt. In the background are many folktales and ballads of a hero bewitched by the Queen of Faery. Note further the complex layering, by which Arthur, who is a character in Faery, has entered this world through a vision in a dream.

2. Demonstration of prowess.

18

So diversly discoursing of their loves,

- 155 The golden Sunne his glistring head gan shew,
 And sad remembraunce now the Prince amoves,
 With fresh desire his voyage to pursew:
 Als° Una eard° her travcill to renew.
 Then those two knights, fast friendship for to bynd,
 160 And love establish each to other trew,
 Gave goodly gifts, the signes of gratefull mynd,
 And eke as pledges firme, right hands together joynd.

so/yearned

19

- Prince Arthur gave a boxe of Diamond surc°,
 Embowd° with gold and gorgeous ornament,
 165 Wherein were closd few drops of liquor pure,
 Of wondrous worth, and vertue excellent,
 That any wound could heale incontinent:°
 Which to requite, the Redcrosse knight him gave
 A booke, wherein his Saveours testament
 170 Was writ with golden letters rich and brave;
 A worke of wondrous gracc, and able soules to save.³

flawless boundimmediately

20

- Thus beene they parted, Arthur on his way
 To seeke his love, and th'other for to fight
 With Unas foe, that all her realme did pray:°
 175 But she now weighing the decayéd plight,
 And shrunkén synewes of her chosen knight,
 Would not a while her forward course pursew,
 Ne bring him forth in face of dreadfull fight,
 Till he recovered had his former hew:
 180 For him to be yet weake and wearie well she knew.

prey upon

21

- So as they travcild, lo they gan espy
 An arméd knight towards them gallop fast,
 That seeméd from some fearéd foe to fly,
 Or other griesly thing, that him agast:°
 185 Still as he fled, his eye was backward cast,
 As if his feare still followed him behind;
 Als flew his steed, as he his bands had brast,
 And with his wingéd heeles did tread the wind,
 As he had beene a fole of Pegasus his kind.⁴

scared

22

- Nigh as he drew, they might perceive his head
 To be unarmd, and curld uncombéd heares
 Upstaring° stiffe, dismayd with uncouth dread;
 Nor drop of bloud in all his face appeares
 Nor life in limbe: and to increase his feares,
 190 In fowle reproch° of knighthoods faire degree,°
 About his neck an hempen rope he weares,

bristlingdisgrace/position

3. Medieval romances mention such healing balms, but here the "drops of liquor pure" probably represent the Eucharist; Redcrosse gives Arthur the New Testament.

4. I.e., like Pegasus (a flying horse).

That with his glistring armes does ill agree;⁵
But he of rope or armes has now no memoree.

23

The Redcrosse knight toward him crosséd fast, 200 To weet, what mister^o wight was so dismayd: kind of
There him he finds all sencelesse and aghast,
That of him selfe he seemd to be afraid;
Whom hardly he from flying forward stayd,
Till he these wordes to him deliver might;
205 "Sir knight, aread who hath ye thus arayd,
And eke from whom make ye this hasty flight:
For never knight I saw in such misseeming^o plight." unseemly

24

He answerd nought at all, but adding new Feare to his first amazment, staring wide
210 With stony eyes, and hartlesse hollow hew,
Astonisht stood, as one that had aspidé
Infernall furies, with their chaines untide.
Him yet againe, and yet againe bespake
The gentle knight; who nought to him replide,
215 But trembling every joynt did inly quake,
And foltring tongue at last these words seemd forth to shake.

25

"For Gods deare love, Sir knight, do me not stay;
For loe he comes, he comes fast after mee."
Eft^o looking backe would faine have runne away; again
220 But he him forst to stay, and tellen free
The secret cause of his perplexitie:
Yet nathemore^o by his bold hartie speach, not at all
Could his bloud-frozen hart emboldned bee,
But through his boldnesse rather feare did reach,
225 Yet forst, at last he made through silence suddein breach.

26

"And am I now in safetie sure," quoth he,
"From him, that would have forcéd me to dye?
And is the point of death now turnd fro mee,
That I may tell this haplesse history?"
230 "Feare nought:" quoth he, "no daunger now is nye."
"Then shall I you recount a ruefull cace,"
Said he, "the which with this unlucky eye
I late beheld, and had not greater grace
Me reft from it, had bene partaker of the place."⁶

27

"I lately chaunst (Would I had never chaunst)
235 With a faire knight to keopen companee,
Sir Terwin hight, that well himselfe advaunst
In all affaires, and was both bold and free,
But not so happie as mote happie bee;
240 He loved, as was his lot, a Ladie gent," noble

5. The rope around his neck suggests attempts (past and future) at suicide—the reason for which becomes clear a few stanzas later.

6. I.e., shared the same fate.

That him againe° loved in the least degree:
 For she was proud, and of too high intent,^o
 And joyd to see her lover languish and lament.

in return ambition

28

“From whom returning sad and comfortlesse,
 245 As on the way together we did fare,
 We met that villen (God from him me blesse°)
 That curséd wight, from whom I scapt why leare,^o
 A man of hell, that cals himselfe Despaire;¹
 Who first us greets, and after faire areedes°
 250 Of tydings strange, and of adventures rare:
 So creeping close, as Snake in hidden weedes,
 Inquireth of our states, and of our knightly deedes.

defend recently

tells

29

“Which when he knew, and felt our feeble harts
 Embost° with bale,° and bitter byting grieve,
 255 Which love had launchéd with his deadly darts,
 With wounding words and termes of foule reprieve°
 He pluckt from us all hope of due reliefe,
 That earst us held in love of lingring life;
 Then hopelesse hartlesse, gan the cunning thiefe
 260 Perswade us die, to stint° all further strife:
 To me he lent this rope, to him a rustie knife.

exhausted/sorrow insult end

30

“With which sad instrument of hastie death,
 That wofull lover, loathing lenger° light,
 A wide way made to let forth living breath.
 265 But I more fearefull, or more luckie wight,
 Dismayd with that deforméd dismall sight,
 Fled fast away, halfe dead with dying feare:²
 Ne yet assured of life by you, Sir knight,
 Whose like infirmitie like chaunce may beare:
 270 But God you never let his charmed speeches heare.”

longer

31

“How may a man,” said he, “with idle speach
 Be wonne, to spoyle° the Castle of his health?”
 “I wote,” quoth he, “whom triall° late did teach,
 That like would not³ for all this worldes wealth:
 275 His subtill tongue, like dropping honny, mealt°th°
 Into the hart, and searcheth every vaine,
 That ere one be aware, by secret stealth
 His powre is reft, and weaknesse doth remaine.
 O never Sir desire to try° his guilefull traine.”

destroy experience

melts

test

32

280 “Certes,”° said he, “hence shall I never rest,

surely

1. Redcrosse has hitherto been the victim of pride and rashness; here, another spiritual vice, directly contrary, is met—the temptation to the ultimate Christian sin, the despair of God's grace. Such despair was a concern to Renaissance writers of religious and medical works. Robert Burton, in his Anatomy of Melancholy (1621), wrote that the despair “which concerns God * * * [is] opposite to hope, and a most pernicious sin * * * The part affected is the whole soul” (“Religious Melancholy,” II.i.2).

 2. Fear of death.
 3. I.e., would not do the like again.

Till I that treachours art have heard and tride;
And you Sir knight, whose name mote° I request, might
Of grace do me unto his cabin guide."

"I that hight Trevisan," quoth he, "will ride
285 Against my liking backe, to doe you grace:
But nor for gold nor glee° will I abide glitter
By you, when ye arrive in that same place;
For lever° had I die, then see his deadly face." rather

33

Ere long they come, where that same wicked wight
290 His dwelling has, low in an hollow cave,
Farre underneath a craggie clift ypyght,° placed
Darke, dolefull, drearie, like a greedie grave,
That still for carrion carcasses doth crave:
On top whereof aye dwelt the ghastly Owle,
295 Shrieking his balefull note, which ever drave
Farre from that haunt all other chearefull fowle;
And all about it wandring ghostes did waile and howle.

34

And all about old stockes and stubs of trees,
Whereon nor fruit, nor leafe was ever seene,
300 Did hang upon the ragged rocky knees;° craggs
On which had many wretches hangéd beene,
Whose carcasses were scattered on the greene,
And throwne about the cliffs. Arrivé there,
That bare-head knight for dread and dolefull teene,° grief
305 Would faine have fled, ne durst approachen neare,
But th'other forst him stay, and comforted in feare.

35

That darkesome cave they enter, where they find
That curséd man, low sitting on the ground,
Musing full sadly in his sullein mind;
310 His griesie° lockes, long growen, and unbound, gray
Disordred hong about his shoulders round,
And hid his face; through which his hollow eyne
Lookt deadly dull, and staréd as astound;
His raw-bone cheekes through penurie and pine,° starvation
315 Were shronke into his jawes, as° he did never dine. as if

36

His garment nought but many ragged clouts,° cloths
With thornes together pind and patchéd was,
The which his naked sides he wrapt abouts;
And him beside there lay upon the gras
320 A drearie corse, whose life away did pas,
All wallowd in his owne yet luke-warne blood,
That from his wound yet welléd fresh alas;
In which a rustie knife fast fixé stood,
And made an open passage for the gushing flood.

37

325 Which piteous spectacle, approving° trew confirming
The wofull tale that Trevisan had told,

When as the gentle Redcrosse knight did vew,
 With frie zeale he burnt in courage bold,
 Him to avenge, before his bloud were cold,
 330 And to the villein said, "Thou damnéd wight,
 The author of this fact,° we here behold, deed
 What justice can but judge against thee right,
 With thine owne bloud to price° his bloud, here pay for shed in sight?"

"What franticke fit," quoth he,³⁸ "hath thus distraught
 335 Thee, foolish man, so rash a doome° to give? judgment
 What justice ever other judgement taught,
 But he should die, who merites not to live?
 None else to death this man despayring drive,° drove
 But his owne guiltie mind deserving death.
 340 Is then unjust to each his due to give?
 Or let him die, that loatheth living breath?
 Or let him die at ease, that liveth here unceath°? uneasily

"Who travels by the wearie wandring way,³⁹
 To come unto his wishéd home in haste,
 345 And meetes a flood, that doth his passage stay,
 Is not great grace to helpe him over past,
 Or free his feet, that in the myre sticke fast?
 Most envious man, that grieves at neighbours good,
 And fond,° that joyest in the woe thou hast, foolish
 350 Why wilt not let him passe, that long hath stood Upon the banke, yet wilt thy selfe not passe the flood?"

"He there does now enjoy eternall rest⁴⁰
 And happie ease, which thou doest want and crave,
 And further from it daily wanderest:
 355 What if some litle paine the passage have,
 That makes fraile flesh to feare the bitter wave?
 Is not short paine well borne, that brings long ease,
 And layes the soule to sleepe in quiet grave?
 Sleepe after toyle, port after stormie seas,
 360 Ease after warre, death after life does greatly please."¹

The knight much wondred at his suddeine° wit,⁴¹ quick
 And said, "The terme of life is limited,
 Ne may a man prolong, nor shorten it;
 The souldier may not move from watchfull sted,° position
 365 Nor leave his stand, untill his Captaine bed."² commands
 "Who life did limit by almightie doome," Quoth he,² "knowes best the termes established;
 And he, that points the Centonell his roomie,° station
 Doth license him depart at sound of morning droomie.

4. I.e., Despaire.

1. Despaire's arguments on behalf of suicide as against a painful life are derived, like those of Hamlet in his third soliloquy (Hamlet III.i.56-88), principally from Seneca, Marcus Aurelius, and the ancient stoics, and from Old Testament utterings on divine justice.

2. I.e., Despaire.

42

370 "Is not his deed, what ever thing is donne,
 In heaven and earth? did not he all create
 To die againe? all ends that was begonne.
 Their times in his eternall booke of fate
 Are written sure, and have their certaine date.
 375 Who then can strive with strong necessitie,
 That holds the world in his° still chaunging state, its
 Or shunne the death ordaynd by destinie?
 When houre of death is come, let none aske whence, nor why.

43

"The lenger life, I wote° the greater sin, know
 380 The greater sin, the greater punishment:
 All those great battels, which thou boasts to win,
 Through strife, and bloud-shed, and avengement,
 Now praysd, hereafter deare° thou shalt repent: bitterly
 For life must life, and bloud must bloud repay.
 385 Is not enough thy evill life forespent?
 For he, that once hath missed the right way,
 The further he doth goe, the further he doth stray.

44

"Then do no further goe, no further stray,
 But here lie downe, and to thy rest betake,
 390 Th'ill to prevent, that life ensewen may.³
 For what hath life, that may it lovéd make,
 And gives not rather cause it to forsake?
 Feare, sicknesse, age, losse, labour, sorrow, strife,
 Paine, hunger, cold, that makes the hart to quake;
 395 And ever fickle fortune rageth rife,
 All which, and thousands mo° do make a loathsome life. more

45

"Thou wretched man, of death hast greatest need,
 If in true ballance thou wilt weigh thy state:
 For never knight, that daréd warlike deede,
 400 More lucklesse disaventures did amate:° appall
 Witnesse the dongeon deepe, wherein of late
 Thy life shut up, for death so oft did call;
 And though good lucke prolonged hath thy date,° span of life
 Yet death then, would the like mishaps forestall,
 405 Into the which hereafter thou maiest happen fall.

46

"Why then doest thou, O man of sin, desire
 To draw thy dayes forth to their last degree?
 Is not the measure of thy sinfull hire⁴
 High heaped up with huge iniquitie,
 410 Against the day of wrath,⁵ to burden thee?
 Is not enough that to this Ladie milde
 Thou falséd hast thy faith with perjurie,
 And sold thy selfe to serve Duessa vilde,° vile
 With whom in all abuse thou hast thy selfe defilde?

3. I.e., to prevent the evil that will ensue in the rest of your life.

4. Service to sin.

5. Judgment Day.

415 "Is not he just, that all this doth behold⁴⁷
 From highest heaven, and beares an equall° eye?
 Shall he thy sins up in his knowledge fold,
 And guiltie be of thine impietie?
 Is not his law, Let every sinner die:
 420 Die shall all flesh? what then must needs be donne,
 Is it not better to doe willinglie,
 Then linger, till the glasse be all out ronne?
 Death is the end of woes: die soone, O faeries sonne."

impartial

The knight was much enmovéd with his speech,⁴⁸
 425 That as a swords point through his hart did perse,
 And in his conscience made a secret breach,
 Well knowing true all, that he did reherse°
 And to his fresh remembrance did reverse°
 The ugly vew of his deforméd crimes,
 430 That all his manly powres it did disperse,
 As he were charméd with inchaunted rimes,
 That oftentimes he quakt, and fainted oftentimes.

*recount
bring back*

In which amazement, when the Miscreant⁴⁹
 Perceivéd him to waver weake and fraile,
 435 Whiles trembling horror did his conscience dant,°
 And hellish anguish did his soule assaile,
 To drive him to despaire, and quite to quaile,°
 He shewed him painted in a table° plaine,
 The damnéd ghosts, that doe in torments waile,
 440 And thousand feends that doe them endlesse paine
 With fire and brimstone, which for ever shall remaine.

daunt be dismayed picture

The sight whereof so throughly him dismaid,⁵⁰
 That nought but death before his eyes he saw,
 And ever burning wrath before him laid,
 445 By righteous sentence of th'Almighties law:
 Then gan the villein him to overcraw,°
 And brought unto him swords, ropes, poison, fire,
 And all that might him to perdition draw;
 And bad him choose, what death he would desire:
 450 For death was due to him, that had provokt Gods ire.

exult over

But when as none of them he saw him take,⁵¹
 He to him raught° a dagger sharpe and keene,
 And gave it him in hand: his hand did quake,
 And tremble like a leafe of Aspin greene,
 455 And troubled bloud through his pale face was seene
 To come, and goe with tydings from the hart,
 As it a running messenger had beene.
 At last resolved to worke his finall smart,
 He lifted up his hand, that backe againe did start.

reached

52

460 Which when as Una saw, through every vaine
 The crudled° cold ran to her well of life,° congealing/heart
 As in a swowne: but soone relived° againe, revived
 Out of his hand she snatcht the curséd knife,
 And threw it to the ground, enragéd rife,° deeply
 465 And to him said, "Fie, fie, faint harted knight,
 What meanest thou by this reprochfull strife?
 Is this the battell, which thou vauntst to fight
 With the fire-mouthéd Dragon, horrible and bright?

53

470 "Come, come away, fraile, feeble, fleshly wight,
 Ne let vaine words bewitch thy manly hart,
 Ne diuclish thoughts dismay thy constant spright.
 In heavenly mercies hast thou not a part?
 Why shouldst thou then despeire, that chosen art?
 Where justice growes, there grows eke greater grace,
 475 The which doth quench the brond of hellish smart,
 And that accurst hand-writing doth deface.° blot out
 Arise, Sir knight arise, and leave this curséd place."°

54

So up he rose, and thence amounted streight.
 Which when the carle° beheld, and saw his guest churl
 480 Would safe depart, for all his subtill sleight,
 He chose an halter from among the rest,
 And with it hung himselfe, unbid° unblest. unprayed for
 But death he could not worke himselfe thereby;
 For thousand times he so himselfe had drest,° made ready
 485 Yet nathelesse it could not doe him die,
 Till he should die his last, that is eternally.

Canto X

*Her faithfull knight faire Una brings to house of Holinesse,
 Where he is taught repentance, and the way to heavenly blesse.°*

bliss

1

What man is he, that boasts of fleshly might,
 And vaine assurance of mortality,° mortal life
 Which all so soone, as it doth come to fight,
 Against spirituall foes, yeelds by and by,¹
 5 Or from the field most cowardly doth fly?
 Ne let the man ascribe it to his skill,
 That thorough grace hath gainéd victory.
 If any strength we have, it is to ill,

6. Una reminds Redcrosse of God's mercy, the "greater grace" conspicuously missing from Despaire's eloquent speeches.

1. Immediately.

But all the good is Gods, both power and eke will.²

- 2
- 10 By that, which lately hapned, Una saw,
 That this her knight was feeble, and too faint;
 And all his sinews woxen weake and raw,^o unready
 Through long enprisonment, and hard constraint,
 Which he endured in his late restraint,
 15 That yet he was unfit for bloudie fight:
 Therefore to cherish him with diets daint,^o dainty
 She cast to bring him, where he chearen^o might, be cheered
 Till he recovered had his³ late decayéd plight.

- 3
- 20 There was an auntient house not farre away,
 Renowmd throughout the world for sacred lore,
 And pure unspotted life: so well they say
 It governd was, and guided evermore,
 Through wisdom of a matrone grave and hore;^o gray-haired
 Whose onely joy was to relieve the needes
 25 Of wretched soules, and helpe the helpelesse pore:
 All night she spent in bidding of her bedes,⁴
 And all the day in doing good and godly deedes.

- 4
- Dame Caelia⁵ men did her call, as thought
 From heaven to come, or thither to arise,
 30 The mother of three daughters, well upbrought
 In goodly thewes,^o and godly exercise: habits
 The eldest two most sober, chaste, and wise,
 Fidelia and Speranza virgins were,
 Though spousd,^o yet wanting wedlocks solemnize; bethrothed
 35 But faire Charissa to a lovely fere^o mate
 Was linckéd, and by him had many pledges dere.⁶

- 5
- Arrivé there, the dore they find fast lockt;
 For it was warely watchéd night and day,
 For feare of many foes: but when they knockt,
 40 The Porter opened unto them streight way:
 He was an agéd syre, all hory gray,
 With lookes full lowly cast, and gate full slow,
 Wont on a staffe his feeble steps to stay,
 Hight Humilta.^o They passe in stouping low; humility
 45 For streight and narrow was the way, which he did show.⁷

2. "For by grace are ye saved through faith; and that not of yourselves: it is the gift of God: Not of works, lest any men should boast" (Ephesians ii.8-9).

3. I.e., from his.

4. Saying prayers.

5. The name means "heavenly."

6. I.e., many children. The daughters' names mean "faith," "hope," and "charity." Cf. with them the three Saracens, Sans foy, Sans joy, and Sans loy: "faith" is the answer to atheism; "hope," the answer to empty despair; and "charity" (the highest law that embraces all other laws) the answer to chaos. "And now abideth faith, hope, charity, these three; but the greatest of these is charity" (I Corinthians xiii.13). Canto x, in which Spenser's didactic purpose is expressed with particular directness, is especially rich in scriptural references and echoes. Many aspects of the House of Holiness oppose their counterparts in the House of Pride (Canto iv).

7. "Strait is the gate, and narrow is the way, which leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it" (Matthew vii.14).

6

Each goodly thing is hardest to begin,
 But entred in a spacious court they see,
 Both plaine, and pleasant to be walkéd in,
 Where them does meete a francklin^o faire and free, freeholder
 50 And entertaines with comely courteous glee,
 His name was Zele, that him right well became,
 For in his speeches and behaviour hee
 Did labour lively to expresse the same,
 And gladly did them guide, till to the Hall they came.

7

55 There fairely them receives a gentle Squire,
 Of milde demeanure, and rare courtesie,
 Right cleanly clad in comely sad^o attire; sober
 In word and deede that shewed great modestie,
 And knew his good^o to all of each degree, proper respect
 60 Hight Reverence. He them with speeches meet
 Does faire entreat; no courting nicetie,^o affectation
 But simple true, and eke unfainéd sweet,
 As might become a Squire so great persons to greet.

8

And afterwards them to his Dame he leades,
 65 That agéd Dame, the Ladie of the place:
 Who all this while was busie at her beades:
 Which doen, she up arose with seemely grace,
 And toward them full matronely did pace.
 Where when that fairest Una she beheld,
 70 Whom well she knew to spring from heavenly race,
 Her hart with joy unwonted inly sweld,
 As feeling wondrous comfort in her weaker eld.^o older age

9

And her embracing said, "O happie earth,
 Whereon thy innocent feet doe ever tread,
 75 Most vertuous virgin borne of heavenly berth,
 That to redeeme thy woefull parents head,
 From tyrans rage, and ever-dying dread,⁸
 Hast wandred through the world now long a day;
 Yet ceapest not thy wearie soles to lead,
 80 What grace hath thee now hither brought this way?
 Or doen thy feeble feet unweeting hither stray?

10

"Strange thing it is an errant^o knight to see wandering
 Here in this place, or any other wight,
 That hither turnes his steps. So few there bee,
 85 That chose the narrow path, or seeke the right:
 All keepe the broad high way, and take delight
 With many rather for to go astray,
 And be partakers of their evill plight,
 Then with a few to walke the rightest way;
 90 O foolish men, why haste ye to your owne decay?"

8. Continuing fear of death.

11

"Thy selfe to see, and tyred limbs to rest,
 O matrone sage," quoth she, "I hither came,
 And this good knight his way with me adrest,
 Led with thy prayes and broad-blazéd fame,
 95 That up to heaven is blowne." The auncient Dame
 Him goodly greeted in her modest guise,
 And entertaynd them both, as best became,
 With all the court'sies, that she could devise,
 Ne wanted ought, to shew her bounteous or wise.

12

100 Thus as they gan of sundry things devise,^o talk
 Loe two most goodly virgins came in place,
 Ylinkéd arme in arme in lovely^o wise, loving
 With countenance demure, and modest grace,
 They numbred even steps and equall pace:
 105 Of which the eldest, that Fidelia hight,
 Like sunny beames threw from her Christall face,
 That could have dazd the rash beholders sight,
 And round about her head did shine like heavens light.

13

She was araiéd all in lilly white,
 110 And in her right hand bore a cup of gold,
 With wine and water fild up to the hight,
 In which a Serpent did himselfe enfold,
 That horror made to all, that did behold;
 But she no whit did chaunge her constant mood:¹
 115 And in her other hand she fast did hold
 A booke, that was both signd and seald with blood,
 Wherein darke things were writ, hard to be understood.²

14

Her younger sister, that Speranza hight,
 Was clad in blew, that her beseméd well;
 120 Not all so chearefull seeméd she of sight,³
 As was her sister; whether dread did dwell,
 Or anguish in her hart, is hard to tell:
 Upon her arme a silver anchor⁴ lay,
 Whereon she leanéd ever, as befell:
 125 And ever up to heaven, as she did pray,
 Her stedfast eyes were bent, ne swarvéd other way.

15

They seeing Una, towards her gan wend,

1. Expression. The serpent in the cup is a symbol of St. John the Evangelist, whose faith was so great he could drink venom without harm. The symbolic details in these portraits appear also in the allegorical figures in other works of Renaissance literature and art—particularly the emblem books.

2. The New Testament. See II Peter iii.16: "in which are some things hard to be understood, which they that are unlearned and unstable wrest, as they do also the other scriptures, unto their own destruction." Peter says this of St. Paul's writings, but it could also be said of many other parts of the New Testament—which is "signed and sealed with [the] blood" of Christ and the martyrs.

3. In appearance.

4. The iconographic symbol of hope.

Who them encounters with like courtesie;
 Many kind speeches they betwene them spend,
 130 And greatly joy each other well to see:
 Then to the knight with shamefast^o modestie
 They turne themselves, at Unas meeke request,
 And him salute with well beseeming glee;
 Who faire them quites,^o as him beseeméd best, returns the salute
 135 And goodly gan discourse of many a noble gest.^o achievement

16

Then Una thus; "But she your sister deare;
 The deare Charissa where is she become?
 Or wants she health, or busie is elsewhere?"
 "Ah no," said they, "but forth she may not come:
 140 For she of late is lightned of her wombe,
 And hath encreast the world with one sonne more,⁵
 That her to see should be but troublesome."
 "Indeede," quoth she, "that should her trouble sore,
 But thank't be God, that her encrease so evermore."^{5a}

17

145 Then said the aged Caelia, "Dcare dame,
 And you good Sir, I wote that of your toyle,
 And labours long, through which ye hither came,
 Ye both forwearied^o be: therefore a while tired out
 I read^o you rest, and to your bowres recoyle."⁶ suggest 150 Then calléd she a Groome, that forth him led Into a goodly lodge, and gan despoile^o disrobe
 Of puissant armes, and laid in casie bed;
 His name was meeke Obedience rightfully aréd.^o understood

18

Now when their wearie limbes with kindly^o rest, natural 155 And bodies were refresht with due repast,
 Faire Una gan Fidelia faire request,
 To have her knight into her schoolehouse plaste,
 That of her heavenly learning he might taste,
 And heare the wisdom of her words divine.
 160 She graunted, and that knight so much agraste,^o favoréd
 That she him taught celestially discipline,
 And opened his dull eyes, that light mote in them shine.

19

And that her sacred Booke, with bloud⁷ ywrit,
 That none could read, except she did them teach,
 165 She unto him discloséd every whit,
 And heavenly documents^o thereout did preach, doctrines
 That weaker wit of man could never reach,
 Of God, of grace, of justice, of free will,
 That wonder was to heare her goodly spcach:
 170 For she was able, with her words to kill,
 And raise againe to life the hart, that she did thrill.^o pierce

5. Charity, the fruitful virtue, is often depicted pictorially as a mother with children.

5a. And may he keep on encreasing her in this way.

6. Retire to your rooms.

7. I.e., the blood of Christ.

20

And when she list poure out her larger spright,⁸
 She would commaund the hastie Sunne to stay,
 Or backward turne his course from heavens hight;
 175 Sometimes great hostes of men she could dismay,
 Dry-shod to passe, she parts the fouds in tway;
 And eke huge mountaines from their native seat
 She would commaund, themselves to beare away,
 And throw in raging sea with roaring threat.
 180 Almighty God her gave such powre, and puissance great.⁹

21

The faithfull knight now grew in litle space,
 By hearing her, and by her sisters lore,
 To such perfection of all heavenly grace,
 That wretched world he gan for to abhore,
 185 And mortall life gan loath, as thing forelore,[°]
 Greeved with remembrance of his wicked wayes,
 And prickt with anguish of his sinnes so sore,
 That he desirde to end his wretched dayes:
 So much the dart of sinfull guilt the soule dismayes.

abandoned

22

But wise Speranza gave him comfort sweet,
 And taught him how to take assuréd hold
 Upon her silver anchor, as was meet;
 Else had his sinnes so great, and manifold
 Made him forget all that Fidelia told.
 195 In this distressed doubtfull agonie,
 When him his dearest Una did behold,
 Disdeining life, desiring leave to die,
 She found her selfe assayld with great perplexitie.

23

And came to Caelia to declare her smart,
 200 Who well acquainted with that commune plight,
 Which sinfull horror¹ workes in wounded hart,
 Her wisely comforted all that she might,
 With goodly counsell and advisement right;
 And streightway sent with carefull diligence,
 205 To fetch a Leach,[°] the which had great insight
 In that disease of grievéd conscience,
 And well could cure the same; His name was Patience.

doctor

24

Who comming to that soule-diseaséd knight,
 Could hardly him intreat, to tell his griefe:
 210 Which knowne, and all that noyd[°] his heavie spright
 Well searcht, eftsoones he gan apply reliefe
 Of salves and med'cines, which had passing priefe,² troubled

8. Full spiritual power.

9. Joshua made the sun stand still (Joshua x.12); Hezekiah made it turn backwards (II Kings xx.10); Gideon was victorious over the Midianites (Judges vii.7); Moses led the Israelites through the parted waters of the Red Sea (Exodus xiv.21-31); faith, said Christ, can move mountains (Matthew xxi.21). All these are miracles of faith.

1. Horror of sin.

2. Which had extraordinary power.

And thereto added words of wondrous might:³

By which to ease he him recured brieft,[°]

speedily suffering

215 And much asswaged the passion[°] of his plight,
That he his paine endured, as seeming now more light.

25

But yet the cause and root of all his ill,

Inward corruption, and infected sin,

Not purged nor heald, behind remainéd still,

220 And festring sore did rankle yet within,
Close[°] creeping twixt the marrow and the skin.

*secretly
extirpate*

Which to extirpe,[°] he laid him privily

Downe in a darkesome lowly place farre in,

Whereas he meant his corrosives to apply,

225 And with streight[°] diet tame his stubborne malady.

strict

26

In ashes and sackcloth he did array

His daintie corse, proud humors⁴ to abate,

And dieted with fasting every day,

The swelling of his wounds to mitigate,

230 And made him pray both earely and eke late:

And ever as superfluous flesh did rot

Amendment readie still at hand did wayt,

To pluck it out with pincers frie whot,[°]

hot

That soone in him was left no one corrupted jot.

27

235 And bitter Penance with an yron whip,

Was wont him once to disple[°] every day:

discipline

And sharpe Remorse his hart did pricke and nip,

That drops of bloud thence like a well did play;

And sad Repentance used to embay[°]

bathe

240 His bodie in salt water smarting sore,

The filthy blots of sinne to wash away.⁵

So in short space they did to health restore

The man that would not live, but earst[°] lay at deathes dore. formerly

28

In which his torment often was so great,

245 That like a Lyon he would cry and rore,

And rend his flesh, and his owne synewes eat.

His own deare Una hearing evermore

His ruefull shriekes and gronings, often tore

Her guiltlesse garments, and her golden heare,

250 For pittie of his paine and anguish sore;

Yet all with patience wisely she did beare;

For well she wist, his crime could else be never cleare.[°]

cleansed

29

Whom thus recovered by wise Patience,

And trew Repentance they to Una brought:

255 Who joyous of his cured conscience,

Him dearely kist, and fairely eke besought

3. I.e., absolution, or spiritual counseling generally.

4. Passions—i.e., pride.

5. "Wash me thoroughly from mine iniquity, and cleanse me from my sin"
(Psalms li.2).

Himselfe to chearish,⁶ and consuming thought
To put away out of his carefull brest.

cheer

By this Charissa, late in child-bed brought,
260 Was woxen strong, and left her fruitfull nest;
To her faire Una brought this unacquainted guest.

30

She was a woman in her freshest age,
Of wondrous beauty, and of bountie^o rare,
With goodly grace and comely personage,
265 That was on earth not easie to compare;
Full of great love, but Cupids wanton snare
As hell she hated, chaste in worke and will;
Her necke and breasts were ever open bare,
That ay thereof her babes might sucke their fill;
270 The rest was all in yellow robes arayéd still.⁶

virtue

31

A multitude of babes about her hong,
Playing their sports, that joyd her to behold,
Whom still she fed, whiles they were weake and young,
But thrust them forth still, as they wexéd old:
275 And on her head she wore a tyre^o of gold,
Adorn'd with gemmes and owches^o wondrous faire,
Whose passing^o price uneath^o was to be told;
And by her side there sate a gentle paire
Of turtle doves, she sitting in an yvorie chaire.

headdressjewelssurpassing/scarcely

32

280 The knight and Una entring, faire her greet,
And bid her joy of that her happie brood;
Who them requites with court'sies seeming meet,^o
And entertaines with friendly chearefull mood.
Then Una her besought, to be so good,
285 As in her vertuous rules to schoole her knight,
Now after all his torment well withstood,
In that sad^o house of Penaunce, where his spright
Had past the paines of hell, and long enduring night.

appropriatesolemn

33

She was right joyous of her just request,
290 And taking by the hand that Faeries sonne,
Can him instruct in every good behest,
Of love, and righteousness, and well to donne,⁷
And wrath, and hatred warely to shonne,
That drew on men Gods hatred, and his wrath,
295 And many soules in dolours^o had fordonne:^o
In which when him she well instructed hath,
From thence to heaven she teacheth him the ready path.

misery/destroyed

34

Wherein his weaker^o wandring steps to guide,
An auncient matrone she to her does call,

too weak

6. Her yellow (saffron) robe is the emblem of fruitfulness. That she is "chaste in work and will" and hates "Cupids wanton snare" does not contradict her

"multitude of babes"; Spenser is distinguishing between eros and agape, sexual love and Christian love. ~~which is~~
7. I.e., right action.

~~But~~ Christians can have sexual love.

300 Whose sober looks her wisdoms well describe:° made known
 Her name was Mercie, well knowne over all,
 To be both gracious, and eke liberall:
 To whom the carefull charge of him she gave,
 To lead aright, that he should never fall
 305 In all his wayes through this wide worldés wave,° expanse
 That Mercy in the end his righteous soule might save.

35
 The godly Matrone by the hand him beares
 Forth from her presence, by a narrow way,
 Scattered with bushy thornes, and ragged breares,° briers
 310 Which still before him she removed away,
 That nothing might his ready passage stay:
 And ever when his feet encombred were,
 Or gan to shrink, or from the right to stray,
 She held him fast, and firmly did upbears,
 315 As carefull Nourse her child from falling oft does reare.

36
 Eftsoones unto an holy Hospitall,° retreat
 That was fore° by the way, she did him bring, close
 In which seven Bead-men⁸ that had vowed all
 Their life to service of high heavens king
 320 Did spend their dayes in doing godly thing:
 Their gates to all were open evermore,
 That by the wearie way were traveling,
 And one sate wayting ever them before,
 To call in commers-by, that needy were and pore.

37
 325 The first of them that eldest was, and best,° chief
 Of all the house had charge and government,
 As Guardian and Steward of the rest:
 His office was to give entertainment
 And lodging, unto all that came, and went:
 330 Not unto such, as could him feast againe,
 And double quite,° for that he on them spent,
 But such, as want of harbour° did constraîne:
 Those for Gods sake his dewty was to entertaine.

38
 The second was as Almner° of the place, almoner
 335 His office was, the hungry for to feed,
 And thirsty give to drinke, a worke of grace:
 He feared not once him selfe to be in need,
 Ne cared to hoord for those, whom he did breede:°
 The grace of God he layd up still in store, 340 Which as a stocke° he left unto his seede; resource
 He had enough, what need him care for more?
 And had he lesse, yet some he would give to the pore.

39
 The third had of their wardrobe custodie,
 In which were not rich tyres,° nor garments gay, robes

8. Men of prayer.

9. I.e., his children.

- 345 The plumes of pride, and wings of vanitie,
 But clothes meet to keepe keene could° away, cold
 And naked nature seemely to aray;
 With which bare wretched wights he dayly clad,
 The images of God in earthly clay;
 350 And if that no spare clothes to give he had,
 His owne coate he would cut, and it distribute glad.

- 40
- The fourth appointed by his office was,
 Poore prisoners to relieve with gracious ayd,
 And captives to redeeme with price of bras,° money
 355 From Turkes and Sarazins, which them had stayd;° held captive
 And though they faultie were, yet well he wayd,
 That God to us forgiveth every howre
 Much more then that, why° they in bands were layd, for which
 And he that harrowd hell¹ with heavie stowre,° encounter
 360 The faultie soules from thence brought to his heavenly bowre.

- 41
- The fift had charge sicke persons to attend,
 And comfort those, in point of death which lay;
 For them most needeth comfort in the end,
 When sin, and hell, and death do most dismay
 365 The feeble soule departing hence away.
 All is but lost, that living we bestow,° store up
 If not well ended at our dying day.
 O man have mind of that last bitter throw;° throe
 For as the tree does fall, so lyes it ever low.

- 42
- 370 The sixt had charge of them now being dead,
 In seemely sort their courses to engrave,° bodies to bury
 And deck with dainty flowres their bridall bed,
 That to their heavenly spouse both sweet and brave° fair
 They might appeare, when he their soules shall save.
 375 The wondrous workmanship of Gods owne mould,° image
 Whose face he made, all beasts to feare, and gave
 All in his hand, even dead we honour should.
 Ah dearest God me graunt, I dead be not defould.° abused

- 43
- The seventh now after death and buriall done,
 380 Had charge the tender Orphans of the dead
 And widowes ayd, least they should be undone:
 In face of judgement² he their right would plead,
 Ne ought the powre of mighty men did dread
 In their defence, nor would for gold or fee
 385 Be wonne their rightfull causes downe to tread:
 And when they stood in most necessitee,
 He did supply their want, and gave them ever free.³ freely

1. I.e., Christ, who journeyed to hell to deliver those good people who lived before his time, according to a popular story in the Middle Ages. It originated in the apocryphal gospel of Nicodemus.

2. I.e., in court.

3. Always freely. The seven Bead-men here correspond to, and perform, the seven works of charity, or corporal mercy: lodging the homeless, feeding the hungry, clothing the naked, redeeming the captive, comforting the sick, honoring the dead, and succoring the orphan.

44

- There when the Elfin knight arrivéd was,
 The first and chiefest of the seven, whose care
 390 Was guests to welcome, towards him did pas:
 Where seeing Mercie, that his steps up bare,^o supported
 And alwayes led, to her with reverence rare
 He humbly louted^o in meeke lowlinesse, bowed
 And seemely welcome for her did prepare:
 395 For of their order she was Patronesse, Albe^o Charissa were their chiefest founderesse. although 45

- There she awhile him stayes, him selfe to rest,
 That to the rest more able he might bee:
 During which time, in every good behest
 400 And godly worke of Almes and charitee
 She him instructed with great industree;
 Shortly therein so perfect he became,
 That from the first unto the last degree,
 His mortall life he learnéd had to frame
 405 In holy righteousness, without rebuke or blame.

46

- Thence forward by that painfull way they pas,
 Forth to an hill, that was both steepe and hy;
 On top whereof a sacred chappell was,
 And eke a litle Hermitage thereby,
 410 Wherein an agéd holy man did lye,^o live
 That day and night said his devotion,
 Ne other worldly busines did apply;
 His name was heavenly Contemplation;
 Of God and goodnesse was his meditation.

47

- Great grace that old man to him given had;
 For God he often saw from heavens hight,
 All^o were his earthly eyen both blunt^o and bad, although/dim
 And through great age had lost their kindly^o sight, natural
 Yet wondrous quick and persant^o was his spright, piercing
 420 As Eagles eye, that can behold the Sunne:
 That hill they scale with all their powre and might,
 That his frayle thighes nigh wearie and fordonne^o exhausted
 Can faile, but by her helpe the top at last he wonne.

48

- There they do finde that godly agéd Sire,
 425 With snowy lockes adowne his shoulders shed,
 As hoarie frost with spangles doth attire
 The mossy braunches of an Oke halfe ded.
 Each bone might through his body well be red,^o observed
 And every sinew seene through^o his long fast: because of 430 For nought he cared his carcas long unfed;
 His mind was full of spirituall repast,
 And pyned^o his flesh, to keepe his body low^o and chast. starved/thin

49

Who when these two approaching he aspide,
 At their first presence grew agrievéd sore,

- 435 That forst him lay his heavenly thoughts aside;
 And had he not that Dame respected more,^o greatly
 Whom highly he did reverence and adore,
 He would not once have movéd for the knight.
 They him saluted standing far afore;^o away
 440 Who well them greeting, humbly did requight,
 And asked, to what end they clomb^o that tedious height. had climbed

- 50
- “What end,” quoth she, “should cause us take such paine,
 But that same end, which every living wight
 Should make his marke, high heaven to attaine?
 445 Is not from hence the way, that leadeth right
 To that most glorious house, that glistreth bright
 With burning starres, and everliving fire,
 Whercof the keyes are to thy hand behight^o entrusted
 By wise Fidelia? she doth thee require,
 450 To shew it to this knight, according his desire.”

- 51
- “Thrise happy man,” said then the father grave,
 “Whose staggering steps thy steady hand doth lead,
 And shewes the way, his sinfull soule to save.
 Who better can the way to heaven aread^o direct
 455 Then thou thy selfe, that was both borne and bred
 In heavenly throne, where thousand Angels shine?
 Thou doest the prayers of the righteous sead^o offspring
 Present before the majestie divine,
 And his avenging wrath to clemencie incline.

- 52
- 460 “Yet since thou bidst, thy pleasure shalbe donne.
 Then come thou man of earth, and see the way,
 That never yet was seene of Faeries sonne,
 That never leads the traveiler astray,
 But after labours long, and sad delay,
 465 Brings them to joyous rest and endlesse blis.
 But first thou must a season fast and pray,
 Till from her bands the spright assoilé^o is, released
 And have her strength recured^o from fraile infirmitis.” recovered

- 53
- That done, he leads him to the highest Mount;
 470 Such one, as that same mighty man of God,
 That bloud-red billowes like a walléd front
 On either side disparted with his rod,
 Till that his army dry-foot through them yod,^o went
 Dwelt fortie dayes upon; where writ in stone
 475 With bloody letters by the hand of God,
 The bitter doome^o of death and balefull mone judgment
 He did receive, whiles flashing fire about him shone.

- 54
- Or like that sacred hill, whose head full hie,
 Adorned with fruitfull Olives all arownd,

480 Is, as it were for endlesse memory
 Of that deare Lord, who oft thereon was fownd,
 For ever with a flowring girland crownd:
 Or like that pleasaunt Mount, that is for ay
 Through famous Poets verse each where° renownd, everywhere
 485 On which the thrise three learned Ladies play
 Their heavenly notes, and make full many a lovely lay.⁴

55

From thence, far off he unto him did shew
 A litle path, that was both steepe and long,
 Which to a goodly Citie led his vew;
 490 Whose wals and towres were builded high and strong
 Of perle and precious stone, that earthly tong
 Cannot describe, nor wit of man can tell;
 Too high a ditty° for my simple song; subject
 The Citie of the great king hight it well,
 495 Wherein eternall peace and happinesse doth dwell.

56

As he thereon stood gazing, he might see
 The blessed Angels to and fro descend
 From highest heaven, in gladsome companee,
 And with great joy into that Citie wend,
 500 As commonly° as friend does with his frend.⁵ generally
 Whereat he wondred much, and gan enquire,
 What stately building durst so high extend
 Her loftie towres unto the starry sphere,
 And what unknownen nation there empeopled were.

57

505 "Faire knight," quoth he, "Hierusalem that is,
 The new Hierusalem, that God has built
 For those to dwell in, that are chosen his,
 His chosen people purged from sinfull guilt,
 With pretious blood, which cruelly was spilt
 510 On curséd tree, of that unspotted lam,
 That for the sinnes of all the world was kilt:
 Now are they Saints all in that Citie sain,° together
 More deare unto their God, then younglings to their dam."⁶

58

515 "Till now," said then the knight, "I weened well,
 That great Cleopolis,⁷ where I have beene,

4. The mountain is successively compared to Mount Sinai (lines 469-77), where Moses, after parting the "bloud-red billowes" of the Red Sea, received the tablets of the laws of Judaism; to the Mount of Olives (lines 478-82), associated with Christ; and to Mount Parnassus (lines 483-86), where dwelled the nine muses of art and poetry. This last has the effect of equating poetry with the profoundest religious experience—a tradition that Sidney's Apology also incorporates.

5. Cf. Jacob's ladder: "And he dreamed, and beheld a ladder set up on the earth, and the top of it reached to heaven; and behold the angels of God ascending and descending on it" (Genesis xxviii.12).

6. The New Jerusalem is described in Revelation xxi-xxii; "the nations of them which are saved shall walk in the light of it" (xxi.24).

7. London, Camelot—and here, the earthly counterpart of the Heavenly Kingdom.

In which that fairest Faerie Queene doth dwell,
 The fairest Citie was, that might be seene;
 And that bright towre all built of christall cleene,[°] clear
 Panthea,⁸ seemd the brightest thing, that was:
 520 But now by prooffe all otherwise I weene;
 For this great Citie that does far surpas,
 And this bright Angels towre quite dims that towre of glas."

59
 "Most trew," then said the holy aged man;
 "Yet is Cleopolis for earthly frame,[°] structure
 525 The fairest peece, that eye beholden can:
 And well beseemes all knights of noble name,
 That covet in th'immortall booke of fame
 To be eternized, that same to haunt,[°] frequent
 And doen their service to that soveraigne Dame,
 530 That glorie does to them for guerdon[°] graunt: reward
 For she is heavenly borne, and heaven may justly vaunt.[°] claim

60
 "And thou faire ymp, sprong out from English race,
 How ever now accompted[°] Elfins sonne, accounted
 Well worthy doest thy service for her grace,[°] favor
 535 To aide a virgin desolate foredonne.
 But when thou famous victorie hast wonne,
 And high emongst all knights has hong thy shield,
 Thenceforth the suit[°] of earthly conquest shonne, pursuit
 And wash thy hands from guilt of bloody field:
 540 For bloud can nought but sin, and wars but sorrowes yield.

61
 "Then seeke this path, that I to thee presage,[°] point out
 Which after all to heaven shall thee send;
 Then peaceably thy painefull pilgrimage
 To yonder same Hierusalem do bend,
 545 Where is for thee ordaind a blessed end:
 For thou emongst those Saints, whom thou doest see,
 Shalt be a Saint, and thine owne nations frend
 And Patrone: thou Saint George shalt calléd bee,
 Saint George of mery England, the signe of victoree."⁹

62
 550 "Unworthy wretch," quoth he, "of so great grace,
 How dare I thinkc such glory to attaine?"
 "These that have it attained, were in like cace," Quoth he, "as wrtched, and lived in like paine."
 "But deeds of armes must I at last be faine, 555 And Ladies love to leave so dearly bought?"
 "What need of armes, where peace doth ay remaine,"
 Said he, "and battailes none are to be fought?
 As for loose loves are¹⁰ vaine, and vanish into nought."

8. Reminiscent of the temple of glass in Chaucer's House of Fame; perhaps intended to represent Richmond Palace or Westminster Abbey.

9. Spenser's conception of St. George, patron saint of England, draws on the Legenda Aurea (translated by Caxton in 1487); on pictures, tapestries, and pageants; and on folklore.

10. I.e., they are.

63

“O let me not,” quoth he, “then turne againe
 560 Backe to the world, whose joyes so fruitlesse are;
 But let me here for aye in peace remaine,
 Or streight way on that last long voyage fare,
 That nothing may my present hope empare.”^o impair
 “That may not be,” said he, “ne maist thou yit
 565 Forgo that royall maides bequeathed care,^o charge
 Who did her cause into thy hand commit,
 Till from her curséd foe thou have her freely quit.”^o released

64

“Then shall I soone,” quoth he, “so God me grace,
 Abet^o that virgins cause disconsolatc,
 570 And shortly backe returne unto this place
 To walke this way in Pilgrims poore estate.
 But now aread, old father, why of late
 Didst thou behight^o me borne of English blood, Whom all a Faeries sonne doen nominate?”^o call 575 “That word shall I,” said he, “avouchen^o good, Sith to thee is unknowne the cradle of thy brood. name prove

65

“For well I wote,^o thou springst from ancient race know
 Of Saxon kings, that have with mightie hand
 And many bloudie battailes fought in place^o there
 580 High reard their royall throne in Britane land,
 And vanquisht them, unable to withstand:
 From thence a Faerie thee unweeting reft,¹
 There as thou slepst in tender swadling band,
 And her base Elfin brood there for thee left.
 585 Such men do Chaungelings call, so chaungd by Faeries theft.

66

“Thence she thee brought into this Faerie lond,
 And in an heapéd furrow did thee hyde,
 Where thee a Ploughman all unweeting fond,
 As he his toylesome teme that way did guyde,
 590 And brought thee up in ploughmans state to byde,
 Whereof Georgos he thee gave to name;²
 Till prickt with courage, and thy forces pryde,
 To Faery court thou cam’st to seeke for fame,
 And prove thy puisaunt armes, as seemes thee best became.”^o suited

67

“O holy Sire,” quoth he, “how shall I quight^o repay
 The many favours I with thee have found,
 That has my name and nation red aright,
 And taught the way that does to heaven bound?”^o go
 This said, adowne he looked to the ground,
 600 To have returnd, but dazéd were his eyne,
 Through passing^o brightnesse, which did quite confound surpassing
 His feeble sence, and too exceeding shyne.
 So darke are earthly things compar’d to things divine.

1. Secretly stole.

2. Georgos is Greek for “farmer” (cf. Virgil’s Georgics, on farming).

- At last whenas himselfe he gan to find,^o
 605 To Una back he cast him to retire;
 Who him awaited still with pensive mind.
 Great thanks and goodly meed^o to that good syre,
 He thence departing gave for his paines hyre.^o
 So came to Una, who him joyd to see,
 610 And after litle rest, gan him desire,
 Of her adventure mindfull for to bee.
 So leave they take of Caelia, and her daughters three.

recover gift reward

Canto XI

*The knight with that old Dragon fights
 two dayes incessantly:
 The third him overthrowes, and gayns
 most glorious victory.*

- High time now gan it wex^o for Una faire,
 To thinke of those her captive Parents deare,
 And their forwasted kingdome to repaire:³
 Whereto whenas they now approachéd neare,
 5 With hartie words her knight she gan to cheare,
 And in her modest manner thus bespake;
 "Deare knight, as deare, as ever knight was deare,
 That all these sorrowes suffer for my sake,
 High heaven behold the tedious toyle, ye for me take.

develop

- 10 "Now are we come unto my native soyle,
 And to the place, where all our perils dwell;
 Here haunts that feend, and does his dayly spoyle,
 Therefore henceforth be at your keeping well,⁴
 And ever ready for your foeman fell.
 15 The sparke of noble courage now awake,
 And strive your excellent selfe tð excell;
 That shall ye evermore renouméd make,
 Above all knights on earth, that batteill undertake."

- And pointing forth, "lo yonder is," said she,
 20 "The brasen towre in which my parents deare
 For dread of that huge feend emprisond be,
 Whom I from far see on the walles appeare,
 Whose sight my feeble^o soule doth greatly cheare:
 And on the top of all I do espye
 25 The watchman wayting tydings glad to heare,
 That O my parents might I happily
 Unto you bring, to ease you of your misery."

melancholy

4
 With that they heard a roaring hideous sound,

3. I.e., to restore their kingdom, laid waste (by the dragon), to health.

4. I.e., be alert to your responsibilities.

That all the ayre with terrour filléd wide,
 30 And seemd unceath° to shake the stedfast ground. almost Eftsoones that dreadfull Dragon they espide,
 Where stretcht he lay upon the sunny side
 Of a great hill, himselfe like a great hill.
 But all so soone, as he from far descride
 35 Those glistring armes, that heaven with light did fill,
 He roud himselfe full blith,° and hastned them eagerly/untill.° toward

Then bad the knight his Lady yede⁵ aloofe, step
 And to an hill her selfe withdraw aside,
 From whence she might behold that battailles proof° outcome
 40 And eke be safe from daunger far descryde:
 She him obeyd, and turnd a little wyde.° aside
 Now O thou sacred Muse,⁵ most learned Dame,
 Faire ympe° of Phoebus, and his aged bride,⁶ child
 The Nourse of time, and everlasting fame,
 45 That warlike hands ennoblest with immortall name;

6
 O gently come into my feeble brest,
 Come gently, but not with that mighty rage,
 Wherewith the martiall troupes thou doest infest,° arouse
 And harts of great Heroës doest enrage,
 50 That nought their kindled courage may aswage,
 Soone as thy dreadfull trompe begins to sownd;
 The God of warre with his fiers equipage
 Thou doest awake, sleepe never he so sownd,
 And scaréd nations doest with horreur sterne astown.° appall

7
 55 Faire Goddess lay that furious fit° aside, mood
 Till I of warres and bloody Mars do sing⁷
 And Briton fields with Sarazin bloud bedyde,
 Twixt that great faery Queene and Paynim king,
 That with their horreur heaven and earth did ring,
 60 A worke of labour long, and endlesse prayse:
 But now a while let downe that haughtie string,
 And to my tunes thy second tenor rayse,⁸
 That I this man of God his godly armes may blaze.° describe

8
 By this the dreadfull Beast drew nigh to hand,
 65 Halfe flying, and halfe footing in his hast,
 That with his largenesse measuréd much land,
 And made wide shadow under his huge wast;° girth
 As mountaine doth the valley overcast.
 Approching nigh, he reared high afore
 70 His body monstrous, horrible, and vast,
 Which to increase his wondrous greatnesse more,
 Was swolne with wrath, and poyson, and with bloody gore.

5. Calliope, muse of epic poetry, or Clio, muse of history.

6. I.e., Mnemosyne (memory).

7. Spenser refers to a projected book of The Faerie Queene which he never wrote.

8. The "haughtie" (high-pitched) mode would be appropriate to a large-scale epic war; the "second tenor" (lower in pitch) to this present battle.

9

And over, all with brasen scales was armd,

Like plated coate of steele, so couchéd neare,⁹

75 That nought mote perce, ne might his corse be harmd

With dint of sword, nor push of pointed speare;

Which as an Eagle, seeing pray appeare,

His acry Plumes doth rouze,[°] full rudely dight,[°] shake/arrayed

So shakéd he, that horreur was to heare,

80 For as the clashing of an Armour bright,

Such noyse his rouzéd scales did send unto the knight.

10

His flaggy[°] wings when forth he did display,drooping

Were like two sayles, in which the hollow wynd

Is gathered full, and worketh speedy way:

85 And eke the pennes,[°] that did his pineons bynd,quills

Were like mayne-yards, with flying canvas lynd,

With which whenas him list the ayre to beat,

And there by force unwonted passage find,

The cloudes before him fled for terrour great,

90 And all the heavens stood still amazed with his threat.

11

His huge long tayle wound up in hundred foldes,

Does overspred his long bras-scaly backe,

Whose wreathéd boughts[°] when ever he unfolds,coils

And thicke entangled knots adown does slacke,

95 Bspotted as with shields of red and blacke,

It sweepeth all the land behind him farre,

And of three furlongs does but litle lacke;

And at the point two stings in-fixéd arre,

Both deadly sharpe, that sharpest steele exceeden farre.

12

100 But stings and sharpest steele did far exceed¹

The sharpnesse of his cruell rending clawes;

Dead was it sure, as sure as death in deed,

What ever thing does touch his ravenous pawes,

Or what within his reach he ever drawes.

105 But his most hideous head my tounge to tell

Does tremble: for his deepe devouring jawes

Wide gapéd, like the griesly mouth of hell,

Through which into his darke abisse all ravin[°] fell.²*prey, booty*

13

And that[°] more wondrous was, in either jaw*what*

110 Three ranckes of yron teeth enraungéd were,

In which yet trickling bloud and gobbets raw

Of late devouréd bodics did appeare,

That sight thereof bred cold congealéd feare:

Which to increase, and all at once to kill,

115 A cloud of smothering smoke and sulphur seare[°]burning

9. Closely overlaid.

1. I.e., were far exceeded by.

2. In emphasizing the deathly, hellish aspects of the dragon, this stanza reveals the stakes of the battle: holiness v. sin, the Protestant v. the Catholic churches, life v. death.

Out of his stinking gorge° forth steeméd still, maw
That all the ayre about with smoke and stench did fill.

14

His blazing eyes, like two bright shining shields,
Did burne with wrath, and sparkled living fyre;
120 As two broad Beacons, set in open fields,
Send forth their flames farre off to every shyre,
And warning give, that enemies conspyre,
With fire and sword the region to invade;
So flamed his eyne with rage and rancorous yre:
125 But farre within, as in a hollow glade,
Those glaring lampes were set, that made a dreadfull shade.³

15

So dreadfully he towards him did pas,
Forelifting up aloft his speckled brest,
And often bounding on the bruséd gras,
130 As for great joyance of his newcome guest.
Eftsoones he gan advance his haughtie crest,
As chaufféd° Bore his bristles doth upreare, vexed
And shoke his scales to battell readie drest;
That made the Redcrosse knight nigh quake for feare,
135 As bidding bold defiance to his foeman neare.

16

The knight gan fairely couch° his steadie speare, rest, aim
And fiercely ran at him with rigorous might:
The pointed steele arriving rudely theare,
His harder hide would neither perce, nor bight,
140 But glauncing by forth passéd forward right;
Yet sore amovéd with so puissant push,
The wrathfull beast about him turnéd light,° quickly
And him so rudely passing by, did brush
With his long tayle, that horse and man to ground did rush.

17

Both horse and man up lightly rose againe,
And fresh encounter towards him address:
But th' idle stroke yet backe recoyld in vaine,
And found no place his° deadly point to rest. its Exceeding rage enflamed the furious beast,
150 To be avengéd of so great despight;° outrage
For never felt his imperceable brest
So wondrous force, from hand of living wight;
Yet had he proved° the powre of many a puissant knight. tested

18

Then with his waving wings displayéd wyde,
155 Himselfe up high he lifted from the ground,
And with strong flight did forcibly divide
The yielding aire, which nigh too feeble found
Her flitting partes, and element unsound,° weak

3. Cf. among other echoes, the great beast of Revelation (xiii.2): "And the beast which I saw was like unto a leopard, and his feet were as the feet of a bear, and his mouth as the mouth of a lion: and the dragon gave him his power, and his seat, and great authority."

To beare so great a weight: he cutting way
 160 With his broad sayles, about him soaréd round:
 At last low stouping with unwelddie sway,⁴
 Snatcht up both horse and man, to beare them quite away.

19

Long he them bore above the subject plaine,⁵
 So farre as Ewghen⁶ bow a shaft may send,
 165 Till struggling strong did him at last constraine,
 To let them downe before his flightés end:
 As hagd^o hauke presuming to contend untrained
 With hardie fowle, above his hable might,⁷
 His wearie pounces^o all in vaine doth spend, claws
 170 To trusse^o the pray too heauey for his flight; seize
 Which comming downe to ground, does free it selfe by fight.

20

He so disseizéd of his gryping grosse,⁸
 The knight his thrillant^o speare againe assayd piercing
 In his bras-plated body to embosse,^o plunge
 175 And thre mens strength unto the stroke he layd;
 Wherewith the stiffe beame quakéd, as affrayd,
 And glauncing from his scaly necke, did glyde
 Close under his left wing, then broad displayd.
 The percing steele there wrought a wound full wyde,
 180 That with the uncouth^o smart the Monster lowdly cryde. unusual

21

He cryde, as raging seas are wont to rore,
 When wintry storme his wrathfull wreck does threat,
 The rolling billowes beat the ragged shore,
 As they the earth would shoulder from her seat,
 185 And greedie gulfe does gape, as he would eat
 His neighbour element⁹ in his revenge:
 Then gin the blustering brethren¹ boldly threat,
 To move the world from off his stedfast henge,^o axis
 And boystrous battell make, each other to avenge.

22

The steely head stucke fast still in his flesh,
 Till with his cruell clawes he snatcht the wood,
 And quite a sunder broke. Forth flowéd fresh
 A gushing river of blacke goarie blood,
 That drownéd all the land, whereon he stood;
 195 The stream thereof would drive a water-mill.
 Trebly augmented was his furious mood
 With bitter sense of his deepe rooted ill,
 That flamcs of fire he threw forth from his large nosétrill.

23

His hideous taylor then hurléd he about,
 200 And therewith all enwrapt the nimble thyes

4. Ponderous force.

5. I.e., the ground below.

6. Yewen, of yew.

7. Able power.

8. Freed from his formidable grip.

9. I.e., earth.

1. I.e., the winds.

Of his froth-fomy steed, whose courage stout
Striving to loose the knot, that fast him tyes,
Himselfe in streighter bandes too rash implyes,²

That to the ground he is perforce constraind

205 To throw his rider: who can^o quickly ryse began to

From off the earth, with durty bloud distaynd,

For that reprochfull fall right fowly he disdaynd.

24

And fiercely tooke his trenchand^o blade in hand, sharp

With which he stroke so furious and so fell,

210 That nothing seemd the puissance could withstand:

Upon his crest the hardned yron fell,

But his more hardned crest was armd so well,

That deeper dint therein it would not make;

Yet so extremely did the buffe him quell,^o dismay

215 That from thenceforth he shund the like to take,

But when he saw them come, he did them still forsake.^o avoid

25

The knight was wrath to see his stroke beguylde,

And smote againe with more outrageous might;

But backe againe the sparekling steele recoyld,

220 And left not any marke, where it did light;

As if in Adamant rocke it had bene pight.^o struck against

The beast impatient of his smarting wound,

And of so fierce and forcible despight,^o injury

Thought with his wings to stye^o above the ground; mount

225 But his late wounded wing unserviceable found.

26

Then full of griefe and anguish vehement,

He lowdly brayd, that like was never heard,

And from his wide devouring oven sent

A flake^o of fire, that flashing in his beard, flash

230 Him all amazd, and almost made affeard;

The scorching flame sore swingéd^o all his face, singed

And through his armour all his bodie seard,

That he could not endure so cruell cace,

But thought his armes to leave, and helmet to unlace.

27

235 Not that great Champion of the antique world,

Whom famous Poetes verse so much doth vaunt,

And hath for twelve huge labours high extold,

So many furies and sharpe fits did haunt,

When him the poysoned garment did enchaunt

240 With Centaures bloud, and bloudie verses charmed,

As did this knight twelve thousand dolours^o daunt, sufferings

Whom fyrie steele now burnt, that earst^o him armed, formerly

That erst him goodly armed, now most of all him harmed.³

2. I.e., too suddenly entangles.

3. Redcrosse's fire-baptism is compared to the burning shirt of Nessus, which killed Hercules, "that great Champion of the antique world" (line 235).

28

Faint, wearie, sore, emboyléd, grievéd, brent°

burned

245 With heat, toyle, wounds, armes, smart, and inward fire
That never man such mischiefs did torment;
Death better were, death did he oft desire,
But death will never come, when needes require.

Whom so dismayd when that his foe beheld,

250 He cast to suffer him no more respire,°

rest

But gan his sturdie sterne° about to weld,° tail/lash

And him so strongly stroke, that to the ground him feld.

29

It fortunéd (as faire it then befell)

255 Behind his backe unweeting,° where he stood, unnoticed

Of auncient time there was a springing well,

From which fast trickled forth a silver flood,

Full of great vertues, and for med'cine good.

Whylome,° before that curséd Dragon got formerly

That happie land, and all with innocent blood

260 Defyld those sacred waves, it rightly hot° was called

The Well of Life, ne yet his° vertues had forgot.

its

30

For unto life the dead it could restore,

And guilt of sinfull crimes cleane wash away,

265 Those that with sicknesse were infected sore,

It could recure, and aged long decay

Renew, as one were borne that very day.

Both Silo this, and Jordan did excell,

And th' English Bath, and eke the german Spau,

Ne can Cephise, nor Hebrus match this well:

270 Into the same the knight backe overthrown, fell.⁴

31

Now gan the golden Phoebus for to steepe

His fierie face in billowes of the west,

And his faint steedes watred in Ocean deepe,

275 Whiles from their journall° labours they did rest,

daily

When that infernall Monster, having kest°

cast

His wearie foe into that living well,

Can° high advaunce his broad discoloured brest,

did

Above his wonted pitch,° with countenance fell,° height/sinister

And clapt his yron wings, as victor he did dwell.°

remain

32

280 Which when his pensive Ladie saw from farre,

Great woe and sorrow did her soule assay,° attack

As weening that the sad end of the warre,

And gan to highest God entirely° pray, earnestly

That fearéd chaunce° from her to turne away;

fate

4. In the old English metrical romance Sir Bevis of Hampton, the hero is saved in his fight with a dragon by a healing well; "a pure river of water of life" is also described in Revelation xxii.1-2. The Well of Life, with its baptismal powers of renewal, is successively compared to waters of the Bible, of England and Europe, and of classical antiquity.

In Siloam (Silo) a blind man was cured by Christ (John ix.7); the crossing of the river Jordan saved the Jews (Deuteronomy xxvii.2-9), and Christ was baptized therein (Matthew iii.16); "Bath" and "Spau" (Spa) were famed for their medicinal waters; "Cephise" and "Hebrus" in Greece were noted for their clear streams.

385 With folded hands and knees full lowly bent
All night she watcht, ne once adowne would lay
Her daintie limbs in her sad dreriment,
But praying still did wake, and waking did lament.

33

The morrow next gan early to appeare,
290 That Titan⁵ rose to runne his daily race;
But early ere the morrow next gan reare
Out of the sea faire Titans deawy face,
Up rose the gentle virgin from her place,
And lookéd all about, if she might spy
295 Her loved knight to move his manly pace:
For she had great doubt of his safety,
Since late she saw him fall before his enemy.

34

At last she saw, where he upstarted brave
Out of the well, wherein he drenchéd lay;
300 As Eagle fresh out of the Ocean wave,
Where he hath left his plumes all hoary gray,
And deekt himselfe with feathers youthly gay,
Like Eyas⁶ hauke up mounts unto the skies,
His newly budded pineons to assay,
305 And marveiles at himselfe, still as he flies:
So new this new-borne knight to battell new did rise.¹

young

35

Whom when the damnéd feend so fresh did spy,
No wonder if he wondred at the sight,
And doubted, whether his late enemy
310 It were, or other new suppliéd knight.
He, now to prove his late renewéd might,
High brandishing his bright deaw-burning blade,
Upon his crested scalpe so sore did smite,
That to the scull a yawning wound it made:
315 The deadly dint his dulléd senses all dismaid.

36

I wote not, whether the revenging steele
Were hardnéd with that holy water dew,
Wherein he fell, or sharper edge did feele,
Or his baptizéd hands now greater⁷ grew;
320 Or other secret vertue did ensew;
Else never could the force of fleshly arme,
Ne molten mettall in his bloud embrew:⁸
For till that stownd⁹ could never wight him harme,
By subtilty, nor slight,¹⁰ nor might, nor mighty charme.

stronger plunge stunning blow trickery

37

325 The cruell wound enragéd him so sore,
That loud he yelléd for exceeding paine;
As hundred ramping Lyons seemed to rore,
Whom ravenous hunger did there to constraîne:
Then gan he tosse aloft his stretchéd traine,
330 And therewith scourge the buxome¹¹ aire so sore, yielding

5. When the sun.

1. The ancient notion that the eagle could renew its youth by bathing in a spring is embodied in Psalm ciii.5.

but not mention stated

That to his force to yeelden it was faine;
 Ne ought° his sturdie strokes might stand afore,
 That high trees overthrew, and rocks in peeces tore.

38

The same advauncing high above his head,
 335 With sharpe intended° sting so rude him smot,
 That to the earth him drove, as stricken dead,
 Ne living wight would have him life behot:°
 The mortall sting his angry needle shot
 Quite through his shield, and in his shoulder seasd, 340 Where fast it stucke, ne would there out be got:
 The grieve thereof him wondrous sore diseasd,°
 Ne might his ranckling paine with patience be appeasd.

39

But yet more mindfull of his honour deare,
 Then of the grievous smart, which him did wring,°
 345 From loathéd soile he can° him lightly reare,
 And strove to loose the farre infixéd sting:
 Which when in vaine he tryde with struggeling,
 Inflamed with wrath, his raging blade he heft,
 And strooke so strongly, that the knotty string
 350 Of his huge taile he quite a sunder cleft,
 Five joynts thereof he hewd, and but the stump him left.

40

Hart cannot thinke, what outrage, and what cries,
 With foule enfouldred² smoake and flashing fire,
 The hell-bred beast threw forth unto the skyes,
 355 That all was covered with darknesse dire:
 Then fraught with rancour, and engorgéd° ire,
 He cast at once him to avenge for all,
 And gathering up himselfe out of the mire,
 With his uneven wings did fiercely fall
 360 Upon his sunne-bright shield, and gript it fast withall.

41

Much was the man encombred with his hold,
 In feare to lose his weapon in his paw,
 Ne wist yet, how his talents° to unfold;
 Nor harder was from Cerberus greedie jaw
 365 To plucke a bone, then from his cruell claw
 To reave° by strength the gripéd gage° away:
 Thrise he assayd it from his foot to draw,
 And thrise in vaine to draw it did assay,
 It booted nought to thinke, to robbe him of his pray.

42

Tho° when he saw no power might prevaile,
 370 His trustie sword he cald to his last aid,
 Wherewith he fiercely did his foe assaile,
 And double blowes about him stoutly laid,
 That glauncing fire out of the yron plaid;
 375 As sparckles from the Andvile use to fly,

When heaue hammers on the wedge are swaid;° struck
 Therewith at last he forst him to unty° loosen
 One of his grasping feete, him to defend thereby.

43

The other foot, fast fixé on his shield,
 380 Whenas no strength, nor stroks mote him constrain
 To loose, ne yet the warlike pledge to yield,
 He smot thereat with all his might and maine,
 That nought so wondrous puissance might sustaine;
 Upon the joynt the lucky steele did light,
 385 And made such way, that hewd it quite in twaine;
 The paw yet missed not his minisht° might, lessened
 But hong still on the shield, as it at first was pight.° placed

44

For griefe thereof, and diuelish despight,
 From his infernall founace forth he threw 390 Huge flames, that dimmed all the heavens light,
 Enrold in duskish smoke and brimstone blew;
 As burning Aetna from his boyling stew° cauldron
 Doth belch out flames, and rockes in peeces broke,
 And ragged ribs of mountaines molten new 395 Enwrapt in coleblacke clouds and filthy smoke,
 That all the land with stench, and heaven with horror choke.

45

The heate whereof, and harmefull pestilence
 So sore him noyd,° that forst him to retire troubled
 A little backward for his best defence,
 400 To save his bodie from the scorching fire,
 Which he from hellish entrailes did expire.° breathe out
 It chaunst (eternall God that chaunce did guide)
 As he recoyléd backward, in the mire
 His nigh forweared feeble feet did slide,
 405 And downe he fell, with dread of shame sore terrifide.

46

There grew a goodly tree him faire beside,
 Loaden with fruit and apples rosie red,
 As they in pure vermilion had beene dide,
 Whereof great vertues over all were red:° declared
 410 For happie life to all, which thereon fed,
 And life eke everlasting did befall:
 Great God it planted in that blessed sted° place
 With his almightie hand, and did it call
 The Tree of Life, the crime of our first fathers fall.³

47

415 In all the world like was not to be found,
 Save in that soile, where all good things did grow,
 And freely sprong out of the fruitfull ground,
 As incorrupted Nature did them sow,

3. In Genesis ii.9 appears the Tree of Life which God planted in the Garden of Eden. The "crime of our first fathers fall" is that Adam, in being banished from Eden, separated himself—and us—from the tree. The tree appears again in the New Jerusalem (Revelation xxii.2).

Till that dread Dragon all did overthrow.
 420 Another like faire tree eke grew thereby,
 Whereof who so did cat, eftsoones did know
 Both good and ill: O mornefull memory:
 That tree through one mans fault hath doen us all to dy.⁴

48

From that first tree forth flowd, as from a well,
 425 A trickling streame of Balme, most soveraine
 And daintie deare,⁵ which on the ground still fell,
 And overflowed all the fertill plaine,
 As it had deawéd bene with timely^o raine:
 Life and long health that gracious^o ointment gave,
 430 And deadly woundes could heale, and reare againe
 The senselesse corse appointed^o for the grave.
 Into that same he fell: which did from death him save.¹

seasonable full of grace

made ready

49

For nigh thercto the ever damnéd beast
 Durst not approch, for he was deadly made,²
 435 And all that life preservéd, did detest:
 Yet he it oft adventured to invade.
 By this the drouping day-light gan to fade,
 And yeeld his roome to sad succeeding night,
 Who with her sable mantle gan to shade
 440 The face of earth, and wayes of living wight,
 And high her burning torch set up in heaven bright.

50

When gentle Una saw the second fall
 Of her deare knight, who wearie of long fight,
 And faint through losse of blood, moved not at all,
 445 But lay as in a dreame of deepe delight,
 Besmeard with pretious Balme, whose vertuous might
 Did heale his wounds, and seorching heat alay,
 Againe she stricken was with sore affright,
 And for his safetic gan devoutly pray;
 450 And watch the noyous^o night, and wait for joyous day.

afflicting

51

The joyous day gan early to appeare,
 And faire Aurora from the dewy bed
 Of aged Tithone gan her selfe to reare,³
 With rosie cheekes, for shame as blushing red;
 455 Her golden lockes for haste were loosely shed
 About her cares, when Una her did marke
 Clymbe to her charet, all with flowers spred,
 From heaven high to chase the chearelesse darkc;
 With merry note her loud salutes the mounting larke.

4. I.e., killed us. The tree described here is the Tree of Knowledge of Good and Evil in the Garden of Eden.

5. Precious.

1. A healing balm flowing from the tree of mercy is used by Seth to anoint Adam in the apocryphal Gospel of Nicodemus. This same balm is used later by Christ and is understood to be His blood. Christ's blood was shed to redeem mankind from eternal damnation.

2. I.e., a child of death.

3. Aurora is goddess of the dawn, Tithonus her husband ("aged" because he was granted everlasting life without everlasting youth).

52

- 460 Then freshly up arose the doughtie knight,
 All healéd of his hurts and woundés wide,
 And did himselfe to battell readie dight;
 Whose early foe awaiting him beside
 To have devourd, so soone as day he spyde,
 465 When now he saw himselfe so freshly reare,
 As if late fight had nought him damnifyde,^o injured
 He woxe dismayd, and gan his fate to feare;
 Nathlesse^o with wonted rage he him advauncéd neare. nevertheless

53

- And in his first encounter, gaping wide,
 470 He thought atonce him to have swallowed quight,
 And rusht upon him with outrageous pride;
 Who him r'encountring fierce, as hauke in flight, Perforce rebutted^o backe. The weapon bright drove Taking advantage of his open jaw,
 475 Ran through his mouth with so importune^o might, violent
 That deepe emperst his darksome hollow maw,
 And back retyrd,^o his life bloud forth with all did draw. withdrawn

54

- So downe he fell, and forth his life did breath,
 That vanisht into smoke and cloudés swift;
 480 So downe he fell, that th' earth him underneath
 Did grone, as feeble so great load to lift;
 So downe he fell, as an huge rockie clift,
 Whose false^o foundation waves have washt away, insecure
 With dreadfull poyse^o is from the mayneland rift, falling weight
 485 And rolling downe, great Neptune doth dismay;
 So downe he fell, and like an heapéd mountaine lay.

55

- The knight himselfe even trembled at his fall,
 So huge and horrible a masse it seemed;
 And his deare Ladie, that beheld it all,
 490 Durst not approch for dread, which she misdeemed,^o misjudged
 But yet at last, when as the direfull feend
 She saw not stirre, off-shaking vaine affright,
 She nigher drew, and saw that joyous end:
 Then God she prayds, and thankt her faithfull knight, 495 That had atchieved so great a conquest by his might.

Canto XII

*Faire Una to the Redcrosse knight betrouthéd is with joy:
 Though false Duessa it to barre her false sleights doe imploy.*

1

Behold I see the haven nigh at hand,
 To which I meane my wearie course to bend;

Vere the maine shete, and beare up with the land,⁴
 The which afore is fairely to be kend,⁵
 5 And seemeth safe from stormes, that may offend;
 There this faire virgin wearie of her way
 Must landed be, now at her journeyes end:
 There eke my feeble barke⁶ a while may stay,
 Till merry wind and weather call her thence away.

recognized

ship

2

10 Scarsely had Phoebus in the glooming East
 Yet harnesséd his frie-footed teeme,
 Ne reard above the earth his flaming creast,
 When the last deadly smoke aloft did steeme,
 That signe of last outbreathéd life did seeme
 15 Unto the watchman on the castle wall;
 Who thereby dead that balefull Beast did deeme,
 And to his Lord and Ladie lowd gan call,
 To tell, how he had seene the Dragons fatall fall.

3

Uprose with hastie joy, and feeble speed
 20 That aged Sire, the Lord of all that land,
 And lookéd forth, to weet, if true indeede
 Those tydings were, as he did understand,
 Which whenas true by tryall he out fond,
 He bad to open wyde his brazen gate,
 25 Which long time had bene shut, and out of hond⁵
 Proclayméd joy and peace through all his state;
 For dead now was their foe, which them forrayéd late.⁶

4

Then gan triumphant Trompets sound on hie,
 That sent to heaven the ecchoéd report
 30 Of their new joy, and happie victorie
 Gainst him, that had them long opprest with tort,⁷
 And fast imprisoned in siegéd fort.
 Then all the people, as in solemne feast,
 To him assembled with one full consort,⁷
 35 Rejoycing at the fall of that great beast,
 From whose eternall bondage now they were releast.

wrong

5

Forth came that auncient Lord and aged Queenc,
 Arayd in antique robes downe to the ground,
 And sad⁸ habiliments right well beseene;⁸
 40 A noble crew about them waited round
 Of sage and sober Peres, all gravely gownd;
 Whom farre before did march a goodly band
 Of tall young men, all hable armes to sownd,⁸
 But now they laurell braunches bore in hand;
 45 Glad signe of victorie and peace in all their land.

dignified / proper

4. Release the mainsail line and sail toward the land. The metaphor in this stanza echoes many classical authors and Chaucer's Troilus and Criseyde (II.1-7).

5. Straightway.

6. Had recently ravaged.

7. All together.

8. Able to fight with weapons.

6

Unto that doughtie Conquerour they came,
 And him before themselves prostrating low,
 Their Lord and Patrone loud did him proclame,
 And at his feet their laurell boughes did throw.
 50 Soone after them all dauncing on a row
 The comely virgins came, with girlands dight,
 As fresh as flowres in meadow greene do grow,
 When morning deaw upon their leaves doth light:
 And in their hands sweet Timbrels° all upheld tambourines on hight.

7

55 And them before, the fry° of children young crowd
 Their wanton° sports and childish mirth did play, playful
 And to the Maydens sounding tymbrels sung
 In well attuned notes, a joyous lay,
 And made delightfull musicke all the way,
 60 Untill they came, where that faire virgin stood;
 As faire Diana in fresh sommers day
 Beholds her Nymphes, enraunged in shadie wood,
 Some wrestle, some do run, some bathe in christall flood.

8

So she beheld those maydens meriment
 65 With chearefull vew; who when to her they came,
 Themselves to ground with gracious humblesse bent,
 And her adored by honorable name,
 Lifting to heaven her everlasting fame:
 Then on her head they set a girland greene,
 70 And crownéd her twixt earnest and twixt game;°
 Who in her selfe-resemblance well beseene,¹
 Did seeme such, as she was, a goodly maiden Queene.

9

And after all, the raskall many° ran, mob
 Heapéd together in rude rablement,° confusion
 75 To see the face of that victorious man:
 Whom all admired, as from heaven sent,
 And gazd upon with gaping wonderment.
 But when they came, where that dead Dragon lay,
 Stretcht on the ground in monstrous large extent,
 80 The sight with idle° feare did them dismay, baseless
 Ne durst approach him nigh, to touch, or once assay.

10

Some feard, and fled; some feard and well it faynd;° concealed
 One that would wiser seeme, then all the rest,
 Warnd him not touch, for yet perhaps remaynd
 85 Some lingring life within his hollow brest,
 Or in his wombe might lurke some hidden nest
 Of many Dragonets, his fruitfull seed;
 Another said, that in his eyes did rest
 Yet sparckling fir, and bad thereof take heed;
 90 Another said, he saw him move his eyes indeed.

9. I.e., half in fun.

1. I.e., looking appropriately like herself.

11

One mother, when as her foolehardie chyld
 Did come too neare, and with his talants play,
 Halfe dead through feare, her litle babe revyld,^o scolded
 And to her gossips^o gan in counsell say; women friends
 95 "How can I tell, but that his talants may Yet scratch my sonne, or rend his tender hand?"
 So diversly themselves in vaine they fray;^o scare
 Whiles some more bold, to measure him nigh stand,
 To prove^o how many acres he did spread of land. determine

12

100 Thus flockéd all the folke him round about,
 The whiles that hoarie^o king, with all his traine, gray-haired
 Being arrivéd, where that champion stout
 After his foes defeasance^o did remaine, defeat
 Him goodly greetes, and faire does entertaine,
 105 With princely gifts of yvorie and gold,
 And thousand thankes him yeelds for all his paine.
 Then when his daughter deare he does behold,
 Her dearly doth imbrace, and kisseth manifold.^o many times

13

And after to his Pallace he them brings,
 110 With shaumes,² and trompets, and with Clarions sweet;
 And all the way the joyous people sings,
 And with their garments strowes the pavéd street:
 Whence mounting up, they find purveyance^o meet provisions
 Of all, that royall Princes court became,^o suitéd
 115 And all the floore was underncath their feet
 Bespred with costly scarlot of great name,³
 On which they lowly sit, and fitting purpose frame.

14

What needs me tell their feast and goodly guize,^o mode of life
 In which was nothing riotous nor vaine?
 120 What needs of daintie dishes to devise,^o talk
 Of comely services, or courtly trayne?
 My narrow leaves cannot in them containe
 The large discourse⁴ of royall Princes state.
 Yet was their manner then but bare and plaine:
 125 For th' antique world excesse and pride did hate;⁵
 Such proud luxurious pompe is swollen up but late.

15

Then when with meates and drinkes of every kinde
 Their fervent appetites they quenched had,
 That auncient Lord gan fit occasion finde,
 130 Of straunge adventures, and of perils sad,
 Which in his travell him befallen had,
 For to demandaund of his renownéd guest:
 Who then with utt'rance grave, and count'nance sad,
 From point to point, as is before exprest,
 135 Discourst his voyage long, according his request.

2. Ancient wind instrument like an oboe.

3. I.e., famous scarlet cloth.

4. I.e., full description.

5. The question of "excesse" will be paramount in Book II, "The Legend of Sir Guyon, or of Temperance."

16

Great pleasure mixt with pittifull^o regard,
 That godly King and Queene did passionate,⁶
 Whiles they his pittifull adventures heard,
 That oft they did lament his lucklesse state,
 140 And often blame the too importune^o fate,
 That heaped on him so many wrathfull wreakes:^o
 For never gentle knight, as he of late,
 So tosséd was in fortunes cruell freakes;^o
 And all the while salt teares bedcawd the hearers cheeks.

sympathetic

severe injuries

whims

17

145 Then said that royall Pere in sober wise:
 "Deare Sonne, great beene the evils, which ye bore
 From first to last in your late enterprise,
 That I note,^o whether prayse, or pittie more:
 For never living man, I weene, so sore
 150 In sea of deadly daungers was distrest;
 But since now safe ye seised^o have the shore,
 And well arrivéd are (high God be blest),
 Let us devize of ease and everlasting rest."

know not reached

18

"Ah dearest Lord," said then that doughty knight,
 155 "Of ease or rest I may not yet devize;
 For by the faith, which I to armes have plight,
 I bounden am streight after this emprise,^o
 As that your daughter can ye well advize,
 Backe to returne to that great Faerie Queene,
 160 And her to serve six yeares in warlike wize,
 Gains't that proud Paynim king, that workes her teene:^o
 Therefore I ought crave pardon, till I there have beene."⁷ enterprise

sorrow

19

"Unhappie falles that hard necessitie," Quoth he, "the troubler of my happie peace,
 165 And vowéd foe of my felicitie;
 Ne I against the same can justly preace:^o
 But since that band^o ye cannot now release,
 Nor doen undo (for vowes may not be vaine),
 Soone as the terme of those six yeares shall cease,
 170 Ye then shall hither backe returne againe,
 The marriage to accomplish vovd betwix you twain.

press obligation

20

"Which for my part I covet to performe,
 In sort as through the world I did proclame,
 That who so kild that monster most deforme,
 175 And him in hardy battaile overcame,
 Should have mine onely daughter to his Dame,^o

wife

6. I.e., did feel and express.

7. That the marriage of Redcrosse and Una cannot be made final here and now signifies primarily that the final Christian triumph, the marriage of Christ and the true church will be achieved only at the end of time, the Day of Judgment. Meanwhile, the struggle against evil (and the Roman Church) continues.

And of my kingdome heire apparaunt bee:
 Therefore since now to thee pertaines^o the same, belongs
 By dew desert of noble chevalree,
 180 Both daughter and eke kingdome, lo I yield to thee."

21

Then forth he calléd that his daughter faire,
 The fairest Un' his onely daughter deare,
 His onely daughter, and his onely heyre;
 Who forth proceeding with sad^o sober cheare,^o grave/countenance
 185 As bright as doth the morning starre appeare
 Out of the East, with flaming lockes bedight,^o bedecked
 To tell that dawning day is drawing neare,
 And to the world does bring long wishéd light;
 So faire and fresh that Lady shewd her selfe in sight.

22

190 So faire and fresh, as freshest flowre in May;
 For she had layd her mournfull stole aside,
 And widow-like sad wimple^o throwne away, veil
 Wherewith her heavenly beautie she did hide,
 Whiles on her wearie journey she did ride;
 195 And on her now a garment she did weare,
 All lilly white, withoutten spot, or pride,^o ornament
 That seemed like silke and silver woven neare,^o tightly
 But neither silke nor silver therein did appeare.⁸

23

The blazing brightnesse of her beauties beame,
 200 And glorious light of her sunshyny face⁹
 To tell, were as to strive against the streame.
 My ragged rimes are all too rude and bace,
 Her heavenly lineaments for to enchace.^o adorn
 Ne wonder; for her owne deare lovéd knight, 205 All^o were she dayly with himselfe in place, although
 Did wonder much at her celestially sight:
 Oft had he seene her faire, but never so faire dight.

24

So fairly dight, when she in presence came,
 She to her Sire made humble reverence,
 210 And bowéd low, that her right well became,
 And added grace unto her excellence:
 Who with great wisdom, and grave cloquence
 Thus gan to say. But eare^o he thus had said, ere
 With flying speede, and seeming great pretence,^o importance
 215 Came running in, much like a man dismayd,
 A Messenger with letters, which his message said.

8. "The marriage of the Lamb is come, and his wife hath made herself ready. And to her was granted that she should be arrayed in fine linen, clean and white: for the fine linen is the righteousness of saints" (Revelation xix.7-8).

9. Revelation xxi.9, 11 describes the

New Jerusalem as "the bride, the Lamb's wife * * * her light was like unto a store most precious." Contemplation showed Redcrosse the "real New Jerusalem" (xi.505-13); by these allusions, Spenser associates it with Una and her father's kingdom, Eden (now restored).

25
 All in the open hall amazed stood,
 At suddennesse of that unwarie° sight, unexpected
 And wondred at his breathlesse hastie mood.
 But he for nought would stay his passage right° direct
 Till fast° before the king he did alight; close
 Where falling flat, great humblesse he did make,
 And kist the ground, whereon his foot was pight;° placed
 Then to his hands that writ° he did betake, document
 Which he disclosing, red thus, as the paper spake.

26
 "To thee, most mighty king of Eden faire,
 Her greeting sends in these sad lines address,
 The wofull daughter, and forsaken heire
 Of that great Emperour of all the West;
 And bids thee be advized for the best, direct
 Ere thou thy daughter linck in holy band
 Of wedlocke to that new unknownen guest:
 For he already plighted his right hand
 Unto another love, and to another land.

27
 "To me sad mayd, or rather widow sad,
 He was affiauncéd long time before,
 And sacred pledges he both gave, and had,
 False erraunt knight, infamous, and forswore:
 Witnesse the burning Altars, which° he swore, by which
 And guiltie heavens of¹ his bold perjury,
 Which though he hath polluted oft of yore,
 Yet I to them for judgement just do fly,
 And them conjure t' avenge this shamefull injury.

28
 "Therefore since mine he is, or° free or bond, whether
 Or false or trew, or living or else dead,
 Withhold, O soveraine Prince, your hasty hond
 From knitting league with him, I you aread;° advise
 Ne wene° my right with strength adowne to tread, think
 Through weakenesse of my widowhed, or woe:
 For truth is strong, her rightfull cause to plead,
 And shall find friends, if need requireth soe,
 So bids thee well to fare, Thy neither friend, nor foe, Fidessa."

29
 When he these bitter byting words had red,
 The tydings straunge did him abashed make,
 That still he sate long time astonished
 As in great muse, ne word to creature spake.
 At last his solemne silence thus he brake,
 With doubtfull eyes fast fixed on his guest:
 "Redoubted knight, that for mine onely sake
 Thy life and honour late adventarest,
 Let nought be hid from me, that ought to be exprest.

1. I.e., and heavens polluted by.

30

“What meane these bloody vowes, and idle threats,
 Throwne out from womanish impatient mind?
 What heavens? what altars? what enragéd heates
 Here heapéd up with termes of love unkind,^o
 My conscience cleare with guilty bands² would bind?
 High God be witnesse, that I guiltlesse ame.
 But if your selfe, Sir knight, ye faultie find,
 Or wrappéd be in loves of former Dame,
 With crime do not it cover, but disclose the same.”

265 unnatural

31

To whom the Redcrosse knight this answere sent,
 “My Lord, my King, be nought hereat dismayd,
 Till well ye wote by grave intendiment,³
 What woman, and wherefore doth me upbrayd
 With breach of love, and loyalty betrayd.
 It was in my mishaps, as hitherward
 I lately traveild, that unwares I strayd
 Out of my way, through perils straunge and hard;
 That day should faile me, ere I had them all declard.

275

32

“There did I find, or rather I was found
 Of this false woman, that Fidessa hight,
 Fidessa hight the falsest Dame on ground,
 Most false Duessa, royall richly dight,
 That easie was t’ invegle^o weaker sight:
 Who by her wicked arts, and wylie skill,
 Too false and strong for earthly skill or might,
 Unwares me wrought unto her wicked will,
 And to my foe betrayd, when least I fearéd ill.”

280

285 deceive

33

Then steppéd forth the goodly royall Mayd,
 And on the ground her selfe prostrating low,
 With sober countenaunce thus to him sayd:
 “O pardon me, my soveraigne Lord, to show
 The secret treasons, which of late I know
 To have bene wrought by that false sorceresse.
 She onely she it is, that earst did throw
 This gentle knight into so great distresse,
 That death him did awaite in dayly wretchednesse.

290

295

34

“And now it seemes, that she subornéd hath
 This craftie messenger with letters vaine,
 To worke new woe and improvidéd scath,⁴
 By breaking of the band betwixt us twaine;
 Wherein she uséd hath the practicke paine⁵
 Of this false footman, clokt with simplenesse,
 Whom if ye please for to discover plaine,
 Ye shall him Archimago find, I ghesse,
 The falsest man alive; who tries shall find no lesse.”

300

305

2. I.e., bonds of guilt.
 3. I.e., serious investigation.

4. Unexpected harm.
 5. Treacherous skill.

35

The king was greatly movéd at her speach,
 And all with suddain indignation fraight,
 Bad° on that Messenger rude hands to reach.
 Eftsoones the Gard, which on his state did wait,
 Attacht that faitor° false, and bound him strait:
 Who seeming sorely chaufféd° at his band,
 As chained Beare, whom cruell dogs do bait,
 With idle force did faine them to withstand,
 And often semblaunce made to scape out of their hand.

filled bade impostor angered

36

But they him layd full low in dungeon deepe,
 And bound him hand and foote with yron chains.
 And with continuaull watch did warely keepe;
 Who then would thinke, that by his subtile trains
 He could escape fowle death or deadly paines?⁶
 Thus when that Princes wrath was pacifide,
 He gan renew the late forbidden banes,⁷
 And to the knight his daughter deare he tyde,
 With sacred rites and vowes for ever to abyde.

37

His owne two hands the holy knots did knit,
 That none but death for ever can devide;
 His owne two hands, for such a turne most fit,
 The housling° fire did kindle and provide,
 And holy water thereon sprinkled wide;⁸
 At which the bushy Teade° a groome did light,
 And sacred lampe in secret chamber hide,
 Where it should not be quenched day nor night,
 For feare of evill fates, but burnen ever bright.

sacramental

marriage torch

38

Then gan they sprinkle all the posts with wine,
 And made great feast to solemnize that day;
 They all perfumde with frankensense divine,
 And precious odours fetcht from far away,
 That all the house did sweat with great aray:
 And all the while sweete Musicke did apply
 Her curious° skill, the warbling notes to play,
 To drive away the dull Melancholy;
 The whiles one sung a song of love and jollity.

intricate

39

During the which there was an heavenly noise
 Heard sound through all the Pallace pleasantly,

6. "And he laid hold on the dragon, that old serpent, which is the Devil, and Satan, and bound him a thousand years, And cast him into the bottomless pit, and shut him up, and set a seal upon him, that he should deceive the nations no more, till the thousand years should be fulfilled: and after that he must be loosed a little season" (Revelation xx.2-3).

7. Banns, i.e., announcements of marriage.

8. So marriages in ancient times were solemnized with sacramental fire and water. Plutarch (Roman Questions 1) explains the practice on four counts, of which two may especially have interested Spenser: (a) fire is masculine and active, water feminine and relatively passive; (b) as fire and water are most usefully productive in combination, so the joining of male and female in marriage appropriately completes society.

345 Like as it had bene many an Angels voice,
 Singing before th' eternall majesty,
 In their trinall triplicities⁹ on hye;
 Yet wist no creature, whence that heavenly sweet°
 Proceeded, yet each one felt secretly°
 350 Himselfe thereby reft of his sences meet,°
 And ravished with rare impression in his sprite.¹⁰

delight inwardly proper

40

Great joy was made that day of young and old,
 And solemne feast proclaimed throughout the land,
 That their exceeding merth may not be told:
 355 Suffice it heare by signes to understand
 The usuall joyes at knitting of loves band.
 Thrise happy man the knight himselfe did hold,
 Possessed of his Ladies hart and hand,
 And ever, when his eye did her behold,
 360 His heart did seeme to melt in pleasures manifold.

41

Her joyous presence and sweet company
 In full content he there did long enjoy,
 Ne wicked envie, ne vile gealosy
 His deare delights were able to annoy:
 365 Yet swimming in that sea of blisfull joy,
 He nought forgot, how he whilome had sworne,
 In case he could that monstrous beast destroy,
 Unto his Faerie Queene backe to returne:
 The which he shortly did, and Una left to mourne.

42

370 Now strike your sailes ye jolly Mariners,
 For we be come unto a quiet rode,°
 Where we must land some of our passengers,
 And light this wearie vessell of her lode.
 Here she a while may make her safe abode,
 375 Till she repaired have her tackles spent,°
 And wants supplide. And then againe abroad
 On the long voyage whereto she is bent:
 Well may she speede and fairely finish her intent.

harbor

worn out

9. The "trinall triplicities" are the nine angelic orders, divided, according to the pseudo-Areopagite, into three groups of three, the whole hierarchy corresponding to the nine spheres of the universe; what is heard in this stanza is, therefore, the music of the spheres.

10. Spirit. "Let us be glad and rejoice, and give honor to him: for the marriage of the Lamb is come" (Revelation xix.6). In Revelation, the marriage of Christ and the New Jerusalem signalizes the general redemption.

From The Second Booke of the Faerie Queene¹

CONTAYNING

The Legend of Sir Guyon,

OR

OF TEMPERAUNCE

1

Right well I wote° most mighty Sovereaine, know
 That all this famous antique history,
 Of some th'abundance of an idle braine
 Will judgéd be, and painted forgery,
 5 Rather then matter of just° memory, well-founded
 Sith none, that breatheth living aire, does know,
 Where is that happy land of Faéry,
 Which I so much do vaunt, yet no where show,
 But vouch° antiquities, which no body can know. assert

2

10 But let that man with better sence advize,° consider
 That of the world least part to us is red:° read, revealed
 And dayly how through hardy enterprize,
 Many great Regions are discoveréd,
 Which to late age² were never mentionéd.
 15 Who ever heard of th' Indian Peru?
 Or who in venturous vessell measuréd

1. Book II is the story of Guyon, who represents and becomes the virtue of Temperance (or moderation, self-control) as Redcrosse represented, and became, Holiness. Guyon's companion is a "palmer," a "sage and sober" pilgrim, who represents Reason, and accordingly is left behind on some adventures which lead Guyon into sensuality. For example, though Guyon can overcome enemies which represent anger, fury, wrath, he is more vulnerable to the seductions of Acrasia's servant Phaedria, "immodest Merth," who conducts him across her Idle Lake. He doesn't stay, but in this adventure he loses the help of the Palmer, Reason. There are not as many battles and jousts in Book II as in Book I, because Temperance is a virtue which consists mainly of not doing things. The trials are appeals to the senses, so the eminent qualities of Book II are descriptive rather than narrative. Canto vii, the Cave of Mammon, corresponds roughly to the encounters with Orgoglio and Despair in Book I, but it is much more elaborately worked out and the atmosphere is especially notable. Guyon is not really tempted by Mammon's blandishments: there are some similarities here to the temptation of Christ by Satan. As Graham Hough says, (A Preface to "The Faerie Queene," p. 157)

"Guyon never seems to be in danger from Mammon, and if he faints at the end it is not that his virtue has been shaken but that he is exhausted by long dwelling in a life-destroying atmosphere. The strength of the Mammon scenes partly depends on this; they depart from the conventional pattern of temptations presented and overcome to the subtler horror of a poisoned atmosphere, an air that suffocates while it repels." The Mammon episode gave Spenser the opportunity to present a trip to the underworld, conventional in the epic, and in typical Renaissance fashion he mixes classical and Christian motifs: among those seen in Hell are Tantalus and Pontius Pilate. Sir Guyon stays below three days, as Jonah had spent three days in the whale's belly and Jesus three days in the tomb. There is much of the old folklore element in the Cave of Mammon episode, also: Guyon must not eat anything while he is there, for fear an "ugly feend" who follows in his footsteps will tear him into a thousand pieces (stanzas 27 and 64). So Proserpina in the classical myth had to spend time in Hell because she ate something there, and in the ancient Eleusinian mystery rites initiates were followed by "furies" to make sure they followed the ritual exactly.

2. To recent times.

The Amazons huge river now found trew?
Or fruitfulest Virginia who did ever vew?³

3

Yet all these were, when no man did them know;
20 Yet have from wisest ages hidden beene:
And later times things more unknowne shall show.
Why then should witless man so much misweene° think wrongly
That nothing is, but that which he hath seene?
What if within the Moones faire shining spheare?
25 What if in every other starre unseene
Of other worldes he happily° should heare? by chance
He wonder would much more: yet such to some appeare.

4

Of Faerie lond yet if he more inquire,
By certaine signes here set in sundry place
30 He may it find; ne let him then admire,° wonder
But yield his sence to be too blunt and bace,
That n'ote° without an hound fine footing trace. cannot
And thou, O fairest Princesse under sky,
In this faire mirrhour maist behold thy face,
35 And thine owne realmes in lond of Faery,
And in this antique Image⁴ thy great auncestry.

5

The which O pardon me thus to enfold
In covert vele,⁵ and wrap in shadowes light,
That feeble eyes your glory may behold,
40 Which else could not endure those beamés bright:
But would be dazled with exceeding light.
O pardon, and vouchsafe with patient eare
The brave adventures of this Faery knight
The good Sir Guyon gratically to heare,
45 In whom great rule of Temp'raunce goodly doth appeare.

Canto VII. [The Cave of Mammon]

Guyon findes Mammon in a delve,° pit, den
Sunning his treasure hore:° ancient
Is by him tempted, and led downe,
To see his secret store.

1

As Pilot well expert in perilous wave,
That to a stedfast starre his course hath bent,
When foggy mistes, or cloudy tempests have

3. In 1584 Sir Walter Raleigh laid at the feet of the Virgin Queen his claim to newly discovered lands in North America; she named the country "Virginia." In the second edition of The

Faerie Queene the dedication calls Elizabeth "Queene of England, Fraunce and Ireland, and of Virginia."

4. I.e., the poem.

5. Concealing veil.

5 The faithfull light of that faire lampe yblent,⁶ blinded
 And cover'd heaven with hideous dremment,
 Upon his card^o and compas firmes his eye, chart, map
 The maisters of his long experiment,^o experience
 And to them does the steddý helme apply,
 Bidding his wingéd vessell fairely forward fly.

2

10 So Guyon having lost his trusty guide,⁶
 Late left beyond that Ydle lake, proceedes
 Yet on his way, of none accompanide;
 And evermore himselfe with comfort feedes,
 Of his owne vertues, and prayse-worthy deedes.
 15 Long so he yode,^o yet no adventure found, went
 Which fame of her shrill trompet worthy reedes:^o considers
 For still he traveild through wide wastfull ground,
 That nought but desert wilderness shew'd all around.

3

At last he came unto a gloomy glade,
 20 Cover'd with boughes and shrubs from heavens light,
 Whereas he sitting found in secret shade
 An uncouth, salvage,^o and uncivile^o wight, savage / wild
 Of griesly hew, and fowle ill favour'd sight;
 His face with smoke was tand, and eyes were beard,
 25 His head and beard with sout^o were ill bedight,^o soot / covered
 His cole-blacke hands did seeme to have been seard
 In smithes fire-spitting forge, and nayles like clawes appeard.

4

His yron coate all overgrowne with rust,
 Was underneath envelopéd with gold,
 30 Whose glistring glosse darkned with filthy dust,
 Well it appeared, to have beenc of old
 A worke of rich entayle,^o and curious mould,⁷ carving
 Woven with antickes^o and wild Imagery: fantastic figures
 And in his lap a masse of coyne he told,^o counted
 35 And turned upsidowne, to feed his eye
 And covetous desire with his huge treasury.

5

And round about him lay on every side
 Great heapes of gold, that never could be spent:
 Of which some were rude owre,^o not purifide ore
 40 Of Mulcibers devouring clement;⁸
 Some others were new driven,^o and distent^o beaten / drawn out
 Into great Ingoes,^o and to wedges square; ingots
 Some in round plates withouten moniment;^o impression
 But most were stamp't, and in their metall bare 45 The antique shapes of kings and kesars^o straunge and rare. caesars

6. Guyon's guide, the Palmer, was left behind when Phaedria ferried Guyon over the Idle Lake in Canto vi.

7. Intricate design.

8. Mulciber, also known as Hephaestus and Vulcan, was the classical god of fire.

6

- Soone as he Guyon saw, in great affright
 And hast he rose, for to remove aside
 Those pretious hils from straungers envious sight,
 And downe them poured through an hole full wide,
 50 Into the hollow earth, them there to hide.
 But Guyon lightly to him leaping, stayd
 His hand, that trembled, as one terrifyde;
 And though him selfe were at the sight dismayd,
 Yet him perforce restrayd, and to him doubtfull sayd.

7

- 55 What art thou man, (if man at all thou art)
 That here in desert hast thin habitaunce,
 And these rich heapes of wealth doest hide apart
 From the worldes eye, and from her right usaunce?° usage
 Thereat with staring eyes fixéd askaunce° as if 60 In great disdaine, he answered, "Hardy Elfe,
 That darest vew my direfull countenaunce,
 I read° thee rash, and heedlesse of thy selfe, consider
 To trouble my still seate,° and heapes of pretious pelfe.° residence / plunder

8

- "God of the world and worldlings I me call,
 65 Great Mammon, greatest god below the skye,
 That of my plenty poure out unto all,
 And unto none my graces do enuye:° begrudge
 Riches, renowme, and principality,
 Honour, estate, and all this worldés good,
 70 For which men swinck° and sweat incessantly, labor
 Fro me do flow into an ample flood,
 And in the hollow earth have their eternall brood.° breeding place

9

- Wherefore if me thou deigne to serve and sew,° follow
 At thy commaund lo all these mountaines bee;
 75 Or if tq thy great mind, or greedy vew
 All these may not suffise, there shall to thee
 Ten times so much be numbred francke and free."
 "Mammon," said he, "thy godheades vaunt° is vaine, boast
 And idle offers of thy golden fee;° reward
 80 To them, that covet such eye-glutting gaine,
 Proffer thy giftes, and fitter servaunts entertaine.

10

- "Me ill besits, that in der-doing° armes, courageous
 And honours suit° my vowed dayes do spend, pursuit
 Unto thy bounteous baytes, and pleasing charmes,
 85 With which weake men thou witchest,° to attend: bewitchest
 Regard of worldly mucke doth fowly blend,° defile
 And low abase the high heroicke spright,° spirit

That joyes for crownes and kingdomes to contend;
 Faire shields, gay steedes, bright armes be my delight:
 90 Those be the riches fit for an advent'rous knight."

11

"Vaine glorious Elfe," said he, "doest not thou weet,^o know
 That money can thy wantes at will supply?
 Sheilds, steedes, and armes, and all things for thee meet
 It can purvay in twinckling of an eye;
 95 And crownes and kingdomes to thee multiply.
 Do not I kings create, and throw the crowne
 Sometimes to him, that low in dust doth ly?
 And him that raignd, into his rowme^o thrust downe, place
 And whom I lust,^o do heape with glory and renowne? please

12

100 "All otherwise," said he, "I riches read,^o interpret
 And deeme them roote of all disquietnesse;
 First got with guile, and then preserv'd with dread,
 And after spent with pride and lavishnesse,
 Leaving behind them grieve and heavinesse.
 105 Infinite mischiefes of them do arize,
 Strife, and debate, bloudshed, and bitternesse,
 Outrageous wrong, and hellish covetize,^o covetousness
 That noble heart as great dishonour doth despize.

13

"Ne thine be kingdomes, ne the scepters thine;
 110 But realmes and rulers thou doest both confound,
 And loyall truth to treason doest incline;
 Witnessse the guiltlesse bloud poud oft on ground,
 The crownéd often slaine, the slayer croud,
 The sacred Diademe in peecees rent,
 115 And purple robe goréd with many a wound;
 Castles surprizd, great cities sackt and brent:^o burned
 So mak'st thou kings, and gaynest wrongfull governement.

14

"Long were to tell the troublous stormes, that tosse
 The private state,^o and make the life unsweet: condition
 120 Who^o swelling sayles in Caspian sea doth crosse, he who with
 And in frayle wood on Adrian^o gulfe doth fleet,^o Adriatic / float
 Doth not, I weene, so many evils meet."
 Then Mammon waxing wroth, "And why then," said.
 Arc mortall men so fond^o and undiscрет, foolish
 125 So evill thing to seeke unto their ayd,
 And having not complaine, and having it upbraid?

15

"Indeede," quote he, "through fowle intemperaunce.
 Frayle men are oft capitiv'd to covetise:
 But would they thinke, with how small allowaunce
 130 Untroubled Nature doth her selfe suffice,

Such superfluities they would despise,
 Which with sad cares empeach° our native joyes: impair
 At the well head the purest streames arise:
 But mucky filth his braunching armes annoyes,
 135 And with uncomely weedes the gentle wave accloyes°. clogs

16

"The antique° world, in his first flowring youth,⁹ ancient
 Found no defect in his Creatours grace,
 But with glad thanks, and ureproved truth,
 The gifts of soveraigne bountie did embrace:
 140 Like Angels life was then mens happy cace;
 But later ages pride, like corn-fed steed,
 Abusd her plenty, and fat swolne encrease
 To all licentious lust, and gan exceed
 The measure of her meane,¹ and naturall first need.

17

145 "Then gan a curséd hand the quiet wombe
 Of his great Grandmother with steele to wound,
 And the hid treasures in her sacred tombe,
 With Sacriedge to dig. Therein he found
 Fountaines of gold and silver to abound,
 150 Of which the matter of his huge desire
 And pompous pride eftsoones° he did compound;
 Then avarice gan through his veines inspire° presently
 His greedy flames, and kindled life-devouring fire." breathe

18

"Sonne," said he then, "let by thy bitter scorne.
 155 And leave the rudenesse of that antique age
 To them, that liv'd therein in state forlorne;
 Thou that doest live in later times, must wage° barter
 Thy workes for wealth, and life for gold engage°. hire out
 If then thee list my offred grace to use,
 160 Take what thou please of all this surplusage;
 If thee list not, leave have thou to refuse:
 But thing refused, do not afterward accuse."

19

"Me list not," said the Elfin inight, "receave
 Thing offred, till I know it well be got, 165 Ne wote° I, but thou didst these goods bereave° know / remove
 From rightfull owner by unrighteous lot,²
 Or that bloud guiltinesse or guile them blot.
 "Perdy,"° quoth he. "yet never eye did vew, truly
 Ne tounge did tell,° ne hand these handled not, count
 170 But safe I have them kept in secret mew,° cave
 From heavens sight, and powre of all which them pursew."

9. Stanzas 16 and 17 present a traditional picture of the Golden Age, before technology, pride, and avarice had turned man into what he now is. The next ages, Silver, Brazen, and Iron (the present) showed gradual deterioration.

1. Limit of moderation.

2. Partition of plunder.

20

- "What secret place," quoth he,²⁰ "can safely hold
 So huge a masse, and hide from heavens eye?
 Or where hast thou thy wonne,^o that so much gold home
 175 Thou canst preserve from wrong and robbery?
 "Come thou," quoth he. "and see." So by and by Through that thicke covert he him led, and found
 A darkesome way, which no man could descry,^o discover
 That deepe descended through the hollow ground,
 180 And was with dread and horror compasséd around.

21

- At length they came into a larger space,
 That stretcht it selfe into an ample plaine,
 Through which a beaten broad high way did trace,
 That streight did lead to Plutoes griesly raine:³
 185 By that wayes side, there sate infernall Payne,
 And fast beside him sat tumultuous Strife:
 The one in hand an vron whip did straine,^o grip
 The other brandishéd a bloody knife,
 And both did gnash their teeth, and both did threaten life.

22

- 190 On thother side in one consort^o there sate, group
 Cruell Revenge, and rancorous Despight,
 Disloyall Treason, and hart-burning Hate,
 But gnawing Gealosie out of their sight
 Sitting alone, his bitter lips did bight,
 195 And trembling Feare still to and fro did fly,
 And found no place, where safe he shroud^o him might, hide
 Lamenting Sorrow did in darknesse lye.
 And Shame his ugly face did hide from living eye.

23

- And over them sad Horrour with grim hew,^o aspect
 200 Did alwayes sore, beating his vron wings;
 And after him Owles and Night-ravens flew,
 The hatefull messengers of heavy^o things, doleful
 Of death and dolour telling sad tidings;
 Whiles sad Celeno,⁴ sitting on a clift,
 205 A song of bale^o and bitter sorrow sings, misfortune
 That hart of flint a sunder could have rift:^o torn
 Which having ended, after him she flyeth swift.

24

- All these before the gates of Pluto lay,
 By whom the passing, spake unto them nought.
 210 But th' Elfin knight with wonder all the way

3. I.e., Pluto's horrible kingdom. Mammon was associated in Christian thought with wealth. According to the Sermon on the Mount, "where your treasure is, there will your heart be also. Ye cannot serve God and Mammon." The classical Plutus, god of wealth, and Pluto, god of the underworld, were often confused.

4. Celeno was a harpy in Virgil's Aeneid III.245-46. Harpies had the faces and breasts of women, but the wings and talons of birds. They were monsters of ill omen.

Did feed his eyes, and fild his inner thought.
 At last him to a litle dore he brought,
 That to the gate of Hell, which gaped wide,
 Was next adjoyning, ne them parted ought:⁵
 215 Betwixt them both was but a litle stride,
 That did the house of Richesse from hell-mouth divide.

25

Before the dore sat selfe-consuming Care,
 Day and night keeping wary watch and ward,
 For feare least Force or Fraud should unaware 220 Breake in, and spoile^o the treasure there in gard: steal
 Ne would he suffer Sleepe once thither-ward Approach, albe^o his drowsie den were next; although
 For next to death is Sleepe to be compar'd:
 Therefore his house is unto his annex;

225 Here Sleep, there Richesse, and Hel-gate them both betwext.

26

So soone as Mammon there arriv'd, the dore
 To him did open, and afforded way;
 Him followed eke Sir Guyon evermore,
 Ne darknesse him, ne daunger might dismay.
 230 Soone as he entred was, the dore streight way
 Did shut, and from behind it forth there lept
 An ugly feend, more fowle then dismall day,⁶
 The which with monstrous stalke behind him stept,
 And ever as he went, dew^o watch upon him kept. due, proper

27

235 Well hopéd he, ere long that hardy guest,
 If ever covetous hand, or lustfull eye,
 Or lips he layd on thing, that likt^o him best, pleased
 Or ever sleepe his eye-strings did untye,
 Should be his prav. And therefore still^o on hye always 240 He over him did hold his cruell clawes,
 Threatning with greedy gripe to do him dye
 And rend in peeces with his ravenous pawes,
 If ever he transgrest the fatall Stygian lawes.⁷

28

That houses forme within was rude and strong 245 Like an huge cave, hewne out of rocky clift,
 From whose rough vault the ragged breaches^o hong, stalactites
 Embost with massy gold of glorious gift,^o quality
 And with rich metall loaded every rift,
 That heavv ruine they did seeme to threat;
 250 And over them Arachne⁸ high did lift
 Her cunning web, and spread her subtile net,
 Enwrappéd in fowle smoke and clouds more blacke then jet.

5. Nothing separated them.

6. Latin dies mali, "evil days." There were two in each month, the first and the seventh from last.

7. Laws of the underworld, so called from Styx, its boundary.

8. For her arrogance and excessive pride in her weaving, she was turned into a spider by Athena (Ovid, Metamorphoses).

29

Both rooffe, and floore, and wals were all of gold,
 But overgrowne with dust and old decay,
 255 And hid in darkenesse, that none could behold
 The hew thereof: for vew of chearefull day
 Did never in that house it selfe display,
 But a faint shadow of uncertain light;
 Such as a lamp, whose life does fade away:
 260 Or as the Moone cloathed with clowdy night,
 Does shew to him, that walkes in feare and sad affright.

30

In all that rowme was nothing to be seene,
 But huge great yron chests and coffers strong,
 All bard with double bends,^o that none could weene^o bands/think
 265 Them to efforce^o by violence or wrong; force open
 On every side they placéd were along.
 But all the ground with sculs was scatteréd,
 And dead mens bones, which round about were flong,
 Whose lives, it seeméd, whilome^o there were shed, in the past
 270 And their vile carcases now left unburiéd.

31

They forward passe, ne Guyon yet spoke word,
 Till that they came unto an yron dore,
 Which to them opened of his owne accord,
 And shewd of richesse such exceeding store,
 275 As eye of man did never see before;
 Ne ever could within one place be found,
 Though all the wealth, which is, or was of yore,
 Could gathered be through all the world around,
 And that above were added to that under ground.

32

280 The charge thereof unto a covetous Spright
 Commaunded was, who thereby did attend,
 And warily awaited day and night,
 From other covetous feends it to defend,
 Who it to rob and ransacke did intend.
 285 Then Mammon turning to that warriour, said;
 "Loe here^o the worldés blis, loe here the end,
 To which all men do ayme, rich to be made:
 Such grace now to be happy, is before thee laid."

33

"Certes," said he, "I n'ill^o thine offred grace, will not accept 290 Ne to be made so^o happy do intend: thus
 Another blis before mine eyes I place,
 Another happinesse, another end.
 To them, that list, these base regards^o I lend:^o aims / relinquish
 But I in armes, and in atchievements brave,
 295 Do rather choose my flitting houres to spend,
 And to be Lord of those that riches have,
 Then them to have my selfe, and be their servile slave."

34

- Thereat the feend his gnashing teeth did grate,
 And griev'd, so long to lacke his greedy pray;⁹
 300 For well he weened,^o that so glorious bayte supposed
 Would tempt his guest, to take thereof assay:^o trial
 Had he so doen, he had him snatcht away,
 More light then Culver^o in the Faulcons fist. dove
 Eternall God thee save from such decay.^o ruin
 305 But whenas Mammon saw his purpose mist,
 Him to entrap unwares another way he wist.^o thought of 35

- Thence forward he him led, and shortly brought Unto another rowme, whose dore forthright,
 To him did open, as it had beene taught:
 310 Therein an hundred raunges weren pight,^o placed
 And hundred fornaces all burning bright;
 By every fornace many feends did bide,
 Deformed creatures, horrible in sight,
 And every feend his busie paines applide,
 315 To melt the golden metall, ready to be tride.^o refined

36

- One with great bellows gathered filling aire,
 And with forst wind the fewell did inflame;
 Another did the dying bronds^o repaire burning logs
 With yron touns, and sprinkled oft the same
 320 With liquid waves, fiers Vulcans rage to tame,
 Who maistring them, renewd his former heat;
 Some scumd the drosse, that from the metall came;
 Some stird the molten owre with ladles great;
 And every one did swincke,^o and every one did sweat. work

37

- But when as earthly wight they present saw,
 Glistring in armes and battailous^o aray, warlike
 From their whot worke they did themselves withdraw
 To wonder at the sight: for till that day,
 They never creature saw, that came that way.
 330 Their staring eyes sparckling with fervent fire,
 And ugly shapes did nigh the man dismay,
 That were it not for shame, he would retire,
 Till that him thus bespake their soveraigne Lord and sire.

38

- Behold, thou Faeries sonne, with mortall eye, 335 That^o living eye before did never see: what
 The thing, that thou didst crave so earnestly,
 To weet, whence all the wealth late shewd by mee,
 Proceeded, lo now is reveald to thee.
 Here is the fountaine of the worldés good:

9. To be denied for so long the prey he desired.

340 Now therefore, if thou wilt enrichéd bee,
 Advise thee° well, and chaunge thy wilfull mood, consider Least thou perhaps hereafter wish, and be withstood."

39

"Suffise it then, thou Money God," quoth hee,
 "That all thine idle offers I refuse.

345 All that I need I have; what needeth mee
 To covet more, then I have cause to use?
 With such vaine shewes thy worldlings vile abuse:° delude
 But give me leave to follow mine emprise."° enterprise
 Mammon was much displeased, yet no'te° he chuse, might not 350 But beare the rigour of his bold mesprise,° contempt
 And thence him forward led, him further to entise.

40

He brought him through a darksome narrow strait,
 To a broad gate, all built of beaten gold:
 The gate was open, but therein did wait
 355 A sturdy villein, striding stiffe and bold,
 As if that highest God defie he would;
 In his right hand an yron club he held,
 But he himselfe was all of golden mould,
 Yet had both life and sence, and well could weld° wield
 360 That curséd weapon, when his cruell foes he queld.° killed

41

Disdayne he calléd was, and did disdainé
 To be so cald, and who so did him call:
 Sterne was his looke, and full of stomacke° vaine, arrogance
 His portance° terrible, and stature tall, bearing
 365 Far passing th' hight of men terrestriall;
 Like an huge Gyant of the Titans race,
 That made him scorne all creatures great and small,
 And with his pride all others powre deface:° destroy
 More fit amongst blacke fiendes, then men to have his place.

42

370 Soone as those glitterand° armes he did espye, glittering
 That with their brightnesse made that darknesse light,
 His harmefull club he gan to hurtle° hye, brandish
 And threaten batteill to the Faery knight;
 Who likewise gan himselfe to batteill dight,° prepare 375 Till Mammon did his hasty hand withhold,
 And counseld him abstaine from perilous fight:
 For nothing might abash the villein bold,
 Ne mortall steele emperce his miscreated mould.

43

So having him with reason pacífide,
 380 And the fiers Carle° commaunding to forbearé, churl
 He brought him in. The rowme was large and wide,
 As it some Gyeld° or solemne Temple weare: guild, guild-hall

Many great golden pillours did upbeare
 The massy rooffe, and riches huge sustayne,
 385 And every pillour deckéd was full deare° richly
 With crownes and Diademes, and titles vaine,
 Which mortall Princes wore, whiles they on earth did rayne.

44
 A route° of people there assembled were, crowd
 Of every sort and nation under skye,
 390 Which with great uprore preacéd° to draw nere pressed
 To th' upper part, where was advancéd hye
 A stately siege° of soveraigne majesty; seat
 And thereon sat a woman gorgeous gay,
 And richly clad in robes of rovaltye,
 395 That never earthly Prince in such aray
 His glory did enhaunce, and pompous pride display.

45
 Her face right wondrous faire did seeme to bee,
 That her broad beauties beam great brightness threw
 Through the dim shade, that all men might it see:
 400 Yet was not that same her owne native hew,
 But wrought by art and counterfettéd shew,
 Thereby more lovers unto her to call;
 Nath'lesse most heavenly faire in deed and vew
 She by creation was, till she did fall;
 405 Thenceforth she sought for helps, to cloke her crime withall.

46
 There, as in glistring glori she did sit,
 She held a great gold chaine vlincked well,¹
 Whose upper end to highest heaven was knit,
 And lower part did reach to lowest Hell;
 410 And all that preace° did round about her swell, crowd
 To catchen hold of that long chaine, thereby
 To clime aloft, and others to excell:
 That was Ambition, rash desire to sty,° rise
 And every lincke thereof a step of dignity.

47
 415 Some thought to raise themselves to high degree,
 By riches and unrighteous reward,
 Some by close shouldring,² some by flatteree;
 Others through friends, others for base regard;° bribes
 And all by wrong waves for themselves prepard.
 420 Those that were up themselves, kept others low,
 Those that were low themselves, held others hard,
 Ne suffred them to rise or greater grow,
 But every one did strive his fellow downe to throw.

48
 Which whenas Guyon saw, he gan inquire,
 425 What meant that preace about that Ladies throne,

1. The golden chain reaching to heaven appears in the Iliad VIII.19-22. Renaissance mythographers such as Natalis

Comes took it to represent ambition.
 2. Thrusting aside.

And what she was that did so high aspire.

Him Mammon answeréd: "That goodly one,
Whom all that folke with such contention,
Do flocke about, my deare, my daughter is;

430 Honour and dignitie from her alone,
Derivéd are, and all this worldés blis
For which ye men do strive: few get, but many mis.

49

"And faire Philotimé³ she rightly hight,"

is called lives

The fairest wight that wonneth⁴ under skye,
435 But that this darksome neather world her light
Doth dim with horreur and deformitie,
Worthy of heaven and hve felicitie,
From whence the gods have her for envy thrust:

But sith thou hast found favour in mine eye,

440 Thy spouse I will her make, if that thou lust,"

wish

That she may thee advance for workes and merites just."

50

"Gramercy⁵ Mammon," said the gentle knight,

Thanks

"For so great grace and offred high estate;
But I, that am fraile flesh and earthly wight,

445 Unworthy match for such immortall mate

My selfe well wote, and mine unequall fate;

And were I not, yet is my trouth yplight,

And love avowed to other Lady late,"

recently

That to remove the same I have no might:

450 To chaunge love causelesse is reproch to warlike knight."

51

Mammon emmovéd was with inward wrath;

Yet forcing it to faine,⁴ him forth thence led

Through griesly shadowes by a beaten path,

Into a gardin goodly garnishéd

455 With hearbs and fruits, whose kinds mote not be red:"

told

Not such, as earth out of her fruitfull wombe

Throwes forth to men, sweet and well savouréd,

But direfull deadly blacke both leafe and bloom,

Fit to adorne the dead, and decke the drery toombe.

52

460 There mournful Cypresse grew in greatest store,

And trees of bitter Gall, and Heben sad,

Dead sleeping Poppy, and blacke Hellebore,

Cold Coloquintida, and Tetra mad,

Mortall Samnitis, and Cicuta bad,⁵

465 With which th' unjust Atheniens made to dy

Wise Socrates, who thereof quaffing glad

Pourd out his life, and last Philosophy

To the faire Critias his dearest Belamy.

good friend

3. The name, in Greek, means love of distinction or ambition.

4. Hiding his anger.

5. Cicuta is hemlock. The other plants mentioned are poisonous or associated with death.

53

- The Gardin of Proserpina this hight;° is called 470 And in the midst thereof a silver seat,°
 With a thicke Arber goodly over dight,° spread
 In which she often vsd from open heat
 Her selfe to shroud, and pleasures to entreat.° enjoy
 Next thereunto did grow a goodly tree,
 475 With braunches broad disprede° and body great, spread out
 Clothed with leaves, that none the wood mote see
 And loaden all with fruit as thicke as it might bee.

54

- Their fruit were golden apples glistring bright,
 That goodly was their glory to behold,
 480 On earth like never grew, ne living wight
 Like ever saw, but° they from hence were sold;° unless / brought
 For those, which Hercules with conquest bold
 Got from great Atlas daughters, hence began,
 And planted there, did bring forth fruit of gold:
 And those with which th' Eubaeen young man wan° won
 Swift Atalanta, when through craft he her out ran.⁷

55

- Here also sprong that goodly golden fruit,
 With which Acontius got his lover trew,
 Whom he had long time sought with fruitlesse suit:
 490 Here eke that famous golden Apple grew,
 The which emongst the gods false Ate threw;
 For which th' Idaean Ladies disagreed,
 Till partiall° Paris dempt° it Venus dew, prejudiced / judged
 And had of her, faire Helen for his meed,° reward
 495 That many noble Greekes and Trojans made to bleed.

56

- The warlike elfe, much wondred at this tree,
 So faire and great, that shadowed all the ground,
 And his broad braunches, laden with rich fee,° bounty
 Did stretch themselves without the utmost bound 500 Of this great gardin, compast° with a mound, surrounded
 Which over-hanging, they themselves did steepe,
 In a blacke flood which flow'd about it round;
 That is the river of Cocytus deepe,⁸
 In which full many soules do endlesse waile and weepe.

57

- 505 Which to behold, he clomb up to the banke,
 And looking downe, saw many damned wights,

6. The seat (mentioned again in Stanza 63) on which Theseus was condemned to sit in endless sloth. See Book I, Canto v, Stanza 35.

7. The famous golden apples from classical legend mentioned in these two stanzas are the apples of the Hesperides which Hercules had to steal as his eleventh labor; the apples tossed to the ground by Melanion of Euboea, causing the swift Atalanta to stop and pick them up, thereby losing the race to him; and finally, the apple which Ate, goddess of discord, tossed into a feast of the gods. It was marked "For the Fairest," and a contest arose among Venus, Juno, and Minerva, here called "Idaeen Ladies" because the decision in favor of Venus was made on Mt. Ida by the prejudiced ("partiall") shepherd Paris.

8. A river of hell. The name means "lamentation" in Greek.

In those sad waves, which direfull deadly stanke,
 Plongéd continually of° cruell Sprights,
 That with their pitteous cryes, and yelling shrights,° by shrieks
 510 They made the further shore resounden wide:
 Emongst the rest of those same ruefull sights,
 One cursed creature, he by chaunce espide,
 That drenchéd lay full deepe, under the Garden side.

58

Deepe was he drenchéd to the upmost chin,
 515 Yet gaped still, as coveting to drinke
 Of the cold liquor, which he waded in,
 And stretching forth his hand, did often thinke
 To reach the fruit, which grew upon the brincke:
 But both the fruit from hand, and floud from mouth
 520 Did flie abacke, and made him vainely swinke:° labor
 The whiles he sterv'd° with hunger and with starved /
 drouth° thirst
 He daily dyde, yet never throughly° dyen couth.° thoroughly / could

59

The knight him seeing labour so in vaine,
 Askt who he was, and what he ment thereby:
 525 Who groning deepe, thus answerd him againe;
 "Most curséd of all creatures under skye,
 Lo Tantalus, I here tormented lye:
 Of whom high Jove wont whylome feasted bee,⁹
 Lo here I now for want of food doe dye:
 530 But if that thou be such, as I thee see,
 Of grace I pray thee, give to eat and drinke to mee."

60

"Nay, nay, thou greedie Tantalus," quoth he,
 "Abide the fortune of thy present fate,
 And unto all that live in high degree,° rank
 535 Ensamle be of mind intemperate,
 To teach them how to use their present state."
 Then gan the cursed wretch aloud to cry,
 Accusing highest Jove and gods ingrate,
 And eke blaspheming heaven bitterly,
 540 As authour of unjustice, there to let him dye.

61

He lookt a little further, and espyde
 Another wretch, whose carkasse deepe was drent° submerged
 Within the river, which the same did hyde:
 But both his hands most filthy feculent,° feces-laden
 545 Above the water were on high extent,° extended
 And faynd° to wash themselves incessantly;
 Yet nothing cleaner were for such intent,
 But rather fowler seemed to the eye;
 So lost his labour vaine and idle° industry. futile

9. By whom Jove was formerly feasted. According to the Renaissance mythographer Natalis Comes, Tantalus was condemned to perpetual thirst because avaricious people can never get enough no matter how much wealth they have.

62

- 550 The knight him calling, asked who he was,
 Who lifting up his head, him answered thus:
 I Pilate am the falsest Judge, alas,
 And most unjust, that by unrighteous
 And wicked doome,° to Jewes despitous° verdict / cruel
 555 Delivered up the Lord of life to die,
 And did acquite a murdrer felonous;
 The whiles my hands I washt in puritie,¹⁰
 The whiles my soule was soyld with foule iniquitie.”

63

- Infinite moe,° tormented in like paine more
 560 He there beheld, too long here to be told:
 Ne Manumon would there let him long remaine,
 For terrour of the tortures manifold,
 In which the damnéd soules he did behold,
 But roughly him bespake. “Thou fearefull foole,
 565 Why takest not of that same fruit of gold,
 Ne sittest downe on that same silver stoole,
 To rest thy wearie person, in the shadow coole?”

64

- All which he did, to doe him deadly fall
 In frayle intemperance through sinfull bayt;
 570 To which if he inclinéd had at all,
 That dreadfull feend, which did behind him wayt,
 Would him have rent in thousand peeces strayt:° straightaway
 But he was warie wise in all his way,
 And well perceivéd his deceptfull sleight,° trick
 575 Ne suffred lust° his safetie to betray; greed
 So goodly did beguile the Guyler° of the pray. deceiver

65

- And now he has so long remainéd there,
 That vitall powres gan waxe both weake and wan,° faint
 For want of food, and sleepe, which two upheare,
 580 Like mightie pillours, this fraile life of man,
 That none without the same endure can.
 For now three dayes of men were full outwrought,° completed
 Since he this hardie enterprize began:
 For thy° great Mammon fairely he besought, therefore 585 Into the world to guide him backe, as he him brought.

66

- The God, though loth, yet was constrained t’ obay,
 For lenger time, then that, no living wight
 Below the earth, might suffred° be to stay; allowed
 So backe againe, him brought to living light.
 590 But all so soone as his enfeebled spright° spirit
 Gan sucke this vitall aire into his brest,
 As overcome with too exceeding might,
 The life did flit away out of her nest,
 And all his senses were with deadly fit oppress.

10. In token of purity. See Matthew xxvii.24.

From Canto XII. [The Bower of Bliss]¹

- 42
- 370 Thence passing forth, they shortly do arrive,
Whereas the Bowre of Blisse was situate;
A place pickt out by choice of best alive,²
That natures worke by art can imitate:
In which what ever in this worldly state
375 Is sweet, and pleasing unto living sense,
Or that may dayntiest fantasie aggrate,³
Was poured forth with plentiful dispençe,⁴
And made there to abound with lavish affluence.
- 43
- 380 Goodly it was enclosed round about,
Aswell their entred guesstes to keepe within,
As those unruly beasts to hold without;
Yet was the fence thereof but weake and thin;
Nought feard their force, that fortilage⁵ to win,
But wisdomes powre, and temperaunces might,⁶
385 By which the mightiest things efforced bin:⁷
And eke the gate was wrought of substaunce light,
Rather for pleasure, then for battery or fight.
- 44
- Yt framed was of precious yvory,
That seemd a worke of admirable wit;
390 And therein all the famous history
Of Jason and Medaea was ywrit;
Her mighty charmes, her furious loving fit,

please, satisfy liberality

fortalice, fort were

1. In the present selection from the last Canto, Sir Guyon and the Palmer visit and destroy the Bower of Bliss. The Bower functions, much as Lucifera's palace or Orgoglio's dungeon did in Book I, as an allegorical locale where a symbolic action takes place. Spenser had first shown his readers the Bower in Canto v; there Cymochles is found reclining "amidst a flock of Damzelles"; they are half-naked, wantonly flirtatious, while he, "like an Adder lurking in the weedes, / His wandring thought in deep desire does steepe." That was, however, only a preliminary glimpse.

The "Bower of Bliss," perhaps the most famous of Spenser's "set pieces," has been variously interpreted. In The Allegory of Love, C. S. Lewis argues convincingly that the Bower "is not a picture of lawless, that is, unwedded love as opposed to lawful love. It is a picture, one of the most powerful ever painted, of the whole sexual nature in disease. There is not a kiss or an embrace in the island: only male prurience and female provocation" (p. 332). This is especially true of Acrasia, the mistress of the Bower, whose name means both "excess" and "impotence"; she is seen (stanzas 77-79) statically posed, doing nothing, only appearing as the archetypal seductress. The Bower is certainly a place where sexuality is sterile. Some readers may find, however, that imagery partly overflows moral intention. For example, the two girls bathing in a pool (stanzas 63-68) are assuredly pin-ups out of a man's magazine of the mid-20th century—and yet Spenser compares them to the morning star and to the Venus of Cyprus (lines 577-80).

2. I.e., the best living artists. The imitating of nature by art had been foreshadowed in Canto v, where "art, striving to compare / with nature, did an Arber greene disprede" (II.v.272-73). Nature is important to Sir Guyon, as it was not to Redcrosse, because temperance is attainable by unaided nature, whereas holiness requires the help of grace.

3. The fear is not of the physical force of Guyon and the Palmer but of the virtuous power of their temperance and wisdom.

His goodly conquest of the golden fleece,
 His falséd faith, and love too lightly flit,
 395 The wondred° Argo, which in venturous peece admired
 First through the Euxine seas bore all the flowr of Greece.

45
 Ye might have seene the frothy billowes fry° foam
 Under the ship, as thorough them she went,
 That seemd the waves were into yvory,
 400 Or yvory into the waves were sent;
 And other where the snowy substaunce sprent° sprinkled
 With vermell,° like the boyes bloud therein shed, vermilion
 A piteous spectacle did represent,
 And otherwhiles° with gold besprinkeléd; elsewhere
 405 Yt seemd th' enchaunted flame, which did Creüsa wed.⁴

46
 All this, and more might in that goodly gate
 Be red; that ever open stood to all,⁵
 Which thither came: but in the Porch there sate
 A comely personage of stature tall,
 410 And semblaunce° pleasing, more than naturall, appearance
 That travellers to him seemd to entize;
 His looser° garment to the ground did fall, too loose
 And flew about his heeles in wanton wize,
 Not fit for speedy pace, or manly exercise.

47
 415 They in that place him Genius° did call: guiding spirit
 Not that celestiaall powre, to whom the care
 Of life, and generation of all
 That lives, pertaines in charge particulare,
 Who wondrous things concerning our welfare,
 420 And straunge phantomes doth let us oft forsee,
 And oft of secret ill bids us beware:
 That is our Selfe, whom though we do not see,
 Yet each doth in him selfe it well perceive to bee.

48
 Therefore a God him sage Antiquity
 425 Did wisely make, and good Agdistes call:
 But this same was to that quite contrary,
 The foe of life, that good envyes° to all, grudges
 That secretly doth us procure to fall,
 Through guilefull semblaunts,° which he makes us see. illusions

4. Jason, in his ship the Argo, sought the Golden Fleece of the king of Colchis; the witch Medea, the king's daughter, fell in love with him and used "her mighty charmes" to help him obtain it (lines 392-93). The "boyes bloud" (line 402) refers to Absyrtus, Medea's younger brother, whose body she cut into pieces and scattered, to delay her father's pursuit by making him stop to collect the fragments. Later, Jason deserted

Medea for Creüsa; in revenge, Medea gave the girl a dress which burst into fire when she put it on; the flame consumed and thus "wed" her (line 405). This tale of unnatural "furious loving," with all its attendant violence, is appropriate to the Bower.

5. "Wide is the gate, and broad is the way, that leadeth to destruction, and many there be which go in thereat" (Matthew vii.13).

430 He of this Gardin had the governall,
And Pleasures porter was devizd° to bee, considered
Holding a staffe in hand for more formalitee.

49

With diverse flowres he daintily was deckt,
And strowéd round about, and by his side
435 A mighty mazer° bowle of wine was set, drinking
As if it had to him bene sacrifice;
Wherewith all new-come guests he gratifide:
So did he eke Sir Guyon passing by:
But he his idle curtesie defide,
440 And overthrew his bowle disdainfully;
And broke his staffe, with which he charméed semblants sly.⁶

50

Thus being entred, they behold around
A large and spacious plaine, on every side
Strowed with pleasauns,° whose faire grassy ground gardens
445 Mantled with greene, and goodly beautifide
With all the ornaments of Floraes pride,
Wherewith her mother Art, as halfe in scorne
Of niggard Nature, like a pompous bride
Did decke her, and too lavishly adorne,
450 When forth from virgin bowre she comes in th' early morne.⁷

51

Thereto the Heavens alwayes Joviall,° propitious
Lookt on them lovely,° still in stedfast state, lovingly
Ne suffred storme nor frost on them to fall,
Their tender buds or leaves to violate,
455 Nor scorching heat, nor cold intemperate
T' afflict the creatures, which therein did dwell,
But the milde aire with season moderate
Gentlv attempted, and disposd so well,
That still it breathéd forth sweet spirit and wholesome smell.

52

460 More sweet and wholesome, then the pleasaunt hill
Of Rhodope, on which the Nimphe, that bore
A gyaunt babe, her selfe for griefe did kill;
Or the Thessalian Tempe, where of yore
Faie Daphne Phoebus hart with love did gore;
465 Or Ida, where the Gods loved to repaire,
When ever they their heavenly bowres forlore;⁸

6. I.e., raised deceitful apparitions. The rod and bowl are traditional emblems of enchantment (cf. for example, Dues-sa's cup, in I.viii.14).

7. Art no longer merely imitates nature but undertakes to supplant it, by excess.

8. Deserted. The nymph Rhodope, who had a "gyaunt babe," Athos, by Neptune (lines 460-62), was turned into a mountain; Daphne, another nymph, charmed Apollo so that he pursued her until she prayed for aid and was turned into a laurel tree; Mount Ida was the scene of the rape of Ganymede and the judgment of Paris, and the gods watched the Trojan War from its heights. These are all allusions to violent and unhappy passion—and yet the Bower is also compared to Mt. Parnassus, home of the Muses, and to the Garden of Eden.

Or sweet Parnasse, the haunt of Muses faire;
Or Eden selfe, if ought with Eden mote compaire.

53

Much wondred Guyon at the faire aspect
470 Of that sweet place, yet suffred no delight
To sincke into his sence, nor mind affect,
But passéd forth, and lookt still forward right,[°] straight ahead
Bridling his will, and maistering his might:
Till that he came unto another gate;
475 No gate, but like one, being goodly dight
With boughes and braunches, which did broad dilate[°] spread out
Their claspings armes, in wanton wreathings intricate.

54

So fashionéd a Porch with rare device,
Archt over head with an embracing vine,
480 Whose bounches hanging downe, seemed to entice
All passers by, to tast their lushious wine
And did themselves into their hands incline,
As freely offering to be gathered:
Some deepe empurpled as the Hyacint,[°] jacinth
485 Some as the Rubine,[°] laughing sweetly red, ruby
Some like faire Emeraudes, not yet well ripened.

55

And them amongst, some were of burnisht gold,
So made by art, to beautifie the rest,
Which did themselves amongst the leaves enfold,
490 As lurking from the vew of covetous guest,
That the weake bowes, with so rich load opprest,
Did bowe adowne, as over-burdenéd.
Under that Porch a comely dame did rest,
Clad in faire weedes,[°] but fowle disorderéd, garments
495 And garments loose, that seemd unmeet for womanhed.[°] womanhood

56

In her left hand a Cup of gold she held,
And with her right the riper[°] fruit did reach, overripe
Whose sappy liquor, that with fulnesse sweld,
Into her cup she scruzd,[°] with daintie breach crushed
500 Of her fine fingers, without fowle empeach,[°] hindrance
That so faire wine-presse made the wine more sweet:
Thereof she usd to give to drinke to each,
Whom passing by she happenéd to meet:
It was her guise,[°] all Straungers goodly so to greet. custom

57

505 So she to Guyon offred it to tast;
Who taking it out of her tender hond,
The cup to ground did violently cast,
That all in peeces it was broken fond,[°] found
And with the liquor stained all the lond.[°] land
510 Whereat Excesse exceedingly was wroth,
Yet no'te[°] the same amend, ne yet withstond, knew not how to

But suffered him to passe, all° were she loth; although
 Who nought regarding her displeasure forward goth.

58

There the most daintie Paradise on ground,
 515 It selfe doth offer to his sober eye,
 In which all pleasures plenteously abound,
 And none does others happinesse envye:
 The painted⁹ flowres, the trees upshooting hye,
 The dales for shade, the hilles for breathing space,
 520 The trembling groves, the Christall running by;
 And that, which all faire workes doth most aggrace,[°] add grace to
 The art, which all that wrought, appeared in no place.

59

One would have thought (so cunningly, the rude,
 And scornéd parts were mingled with the fine)
 525 That nature had for wantonnesse ensude[°] imitated complain
 Art, and that Art at nature did repine;[°]
 So striving each th' other to undermine,
 Each did the others worke more beautifie;
 So diff'ring both in willes, agreed in fine:¹
 530 So all agreed through sweete diversitie,
 This Gardin to adorne with all varietie.

60

And in the midst of all, a fountaine stood,
 Of richest substaunce, that on earth might bee,
 So pure and shiny, that the silver flood
 535 Through every channell running one might see;
 Most goodly it with curious imageree
 Was over-wrought, and shapes of naked boyes,
 Of which some seemd with lively jollitee,
 To fly about, playing their wanton toyes,[°]
 540 Whilste others did them selves embay[°] in liquid joyes. sports drench

61

And over all, of purest gold was spred,
 A trayle of yvie in his native hew:
 For the rich metall was so colouréd,
 That wight, who did not well avised it vew,
 545 Would surely deeme it to be yvie trew:²
 Low his lascivious armes adown did creepe,
 That themselves dipping in the silver dew,
 Their fleecy flowres they tenderly did steepe,
 Which[°] drops of Christall seemd for wantones[°] on which/wantonness to weepe.

62

550 Infinit streames continually did well
 Out of this fountaine, sweet and faire to see,

9. I.e., in bright colors (figurative).

1. I.e., at the end. Art and nature harmonize with each other in effect, although antagonistic in intention.

2. The golden ivy has attracted much critical comment as an image of artifice with a touch of the repellent about it.

The which into an ample laver^o fell,
 And shortly grew to so great quantitie,
 That like a little lake it seemd to bee;
 Whose depth exceeded not three cubits hight,
 That through the waves one might the bottom see,
 All pavéd beneath with Jasper shining bright,
 That seemd the fountaine in that sea did sayle upright.

basin

63

And all the margent round about was set,
 With shady Laurell trees, thence to defend^o
 The sunny beames, which on the billowes bet,
 And those which therein bathéd, mote offend.
 As Guyon hapned by the same to wend,
 Two naked Damzelles he therein espyde,
 Which therein bathing, seeméd to contend,
 And wrestle wantonly, ne cared to hyde,
 Their dainty parts from vew of any, which them eyde.

ward off

64

Sometimes the one would lift the other quight
 Above the waters, and then downe againe
 Her plong, as over maisteréd by might,
 Where both awhile would coveréd remaine,
 And each the other from to rise restraine;
 The whiles their snowy limbes, as through a vele,
 So through the Christall waves appearéd plaine:
 Then suddainly both would themselves unhele,^o
 And th' amarous sweet spoiles to greedy eyes revele.

uncover

65

As that faire Starre, the messenger of morne,
 His deawy face out of the sea doth reare:
 Or as the Cyprian goddess^e,³ newly borne
 Of th' Oceans fruitfull froth, did first appeare:
 Such seeméd they, and so their yellow heare
 Christalline humour⁴ droppéd downe apace.
 Whom such when Guyon saw, he drew him neare,
 And somewhat gan relent his earnest pace,
 His stubborne brest gan secret pleasaunce to embrace.

66

The wanton Maidens him espying, stood
 Gazing a while at his unwonted guise;^o
 Then th' one her selfe low duckéd in the flood,
 Abasht, that her a straunger did avise:^o
 But th' other rather higher did arise,
 And her two lilly paps aloft displayd,
 And all, that might his melting hart entise
 To her delights, she unto him bewrayed:^o
 The rest hid underneath, him more desirous made.

mannerseerevealed

3. Venus (one of whose principal shrines was on the island of Cyprus). 4. Clear liquid.

67

595 With that, the other likewise up arose,
 And her faire lockes, which formerly were bownd
 Up in one knot, she low adowne did lose: ° loosen
 Which flowing long and thick, her clothed arownd,
 And th' yvorie in golden mantle gownd:
 600 So that faire spectacle from him was reft,
 Yet that, which reft it, no lesse faire was fownd:
 So hid in lockes and waves from lookers theft,
 Nought but her lovely face she for his looking left.

68

Withall she laughéd, and she blusht withall,
 605 That blushing to her laughter gave more grace,
 And laughter to her blushing, as did fall:
 Now when they spide the knight to slacke his pace,
 Them to behold, and in his sparkling face
 The secret signes of kindled lust appeare,
 610 Their wanton meriments they did encrease,
 And to him beckned, to approach more neare,
 And shewd him many sights, that courage cold could reare.⁵

69

On which when gazing him the Palmer saw,
 He much rebukt those wandring eyes of his,
 615 And counseld well, him forward thence did draw.
 Now are they come nigh to the Bowre of blis
 Of her fond favorites so named amis:
 When thus the Palmer: "Now Sir, well advise;° take care
 For here the end of all our travell is:
 620 Here wonnes° Acrasia, whom we must surprise, Else she will slip away, and all our drift° despise." dwells
plan, effort

70

Eftsoones they heard a most melodious sound,
 Of all that mote delight a daintie eare,
 Such as attonce might not on living ground,
 625 Save in this Paradise, be heard elsewhere:
 Right hard it was, for wight, which did it heare,
 To read, what manner musicke that mote bee:
 For all that pleasing is to living eare,
 Was there consorted in one harmonie,
 630 Birdes, voyces, instruments, windes, waters, all agree.

71

The joyous birdes shrouded in chearefull shade,
 Their notes unto the voyce attempted° sweet; attuned
 Th' Angelicall soft trembling voyces made
 To th' instruments divine responsiveness meet:° fitting
 635 The silver sounding instruments did meet° join
 With the base murmure of the waters fall:
 The waters fall with difference discreet,° suitable

5. That could arouse a cold spirit.

Now soft, now loud, unto the wind did call:
The gentle warbling wind low answered to all.⁶

72

- 640 There, whence that Musick seemed heard to bee,
Was the faire Witch her selfe now solacing,
With a new Lover, whom through sorcerree
And witchcraft, she from farre did thither bring:
There she had him now layd a slombering,
645 In secret shade, after long wanton joyes:
Whilst round about them pleasauntly did sing
Many faire Ladies, and lascivious boyes,
That ever mixt their song with light licentious toyes.⁷

games

73

- And all that while, right over him she hong,
650 With her false⁸ eyes fast fixed in his sight,
As seeking medicine, whence she was stong,
Or greedily depasturing⁹ delight:
And oft inclining downe with kisses light,
For feare of waking him, his lips bedewd,
655 And through his humid eyes did sucke his spright,
Quite molten into lust and pleasure lewd;
Wherewith she sighéd soft, as if his case she rewd.¹⁰ deceitful feeding on pitied

74

- The whiles some one did chaunt this lovely lay:
"Ah see, who so faire thing doest faine¹¹ to see 660 In springing flowre the image of thy day;
Ah see the Virgin Rose, how sweetly shee
Doth first peepe forth with bashfull modestee
That fairer seemes, the lesse ye see her may;
Lo see soone after, how more bold and free
665 Her baréd bosome she doth broad display;
Loe see soone after, how she fades, and falles away.

delight

75

- "So passeth, in the passing of a day,
Of mortall life the leafe, the bud, the flowre,
Ne more doth flourish after first decay,
670 That earst was sought to decke both bed and bowre,
Of many a Ladie, and many a Paramowre: ¹²
Gather therefore the Rose, whilst yet is prime
For soone comes age, that will her pride deflowre:
Gather the Rose of love, whilst yet is time, 675 Whilst loving thou mayst lovéd be with equal crime."¹³ lover

sin

6. Taste, sight, smell, and sound are all titillated here; little is said, however, of touching. Acrasia, whom we are about to see, bears many resemblances to Circe (not only the cool figure of Odyssey X, but the much more witchlike and seductive creature painted by Ovid) and to the enchantresses of Italian romance who derive from Circe, such as Acratia in Trissino's L'Italia Liberata and Armida in Tasso's Gerusalemme Liberata. In fact, much of the description in Canto xii is imitated from Armida's garden in that poem, and the rose song of stanzas 74 and 75 (a classic statement of the carpe-diem theme) is a direct translation.

76

He ceast, and then gan all the quire of birdes
 Their diverse notes t' attune unto his lay,
 As in approvance of his pleasing words.
 The constant paire heard all, that he did say,
 680 Yet swarved not, but kept their forward way,
 Through many covert groves, and thickets close,
 In which they creeping did at last display°
 That wanton Ladie, with her lover lose,° Whose sleepeie head she in her lap did soft dispose.

discover wanton

77

685 Upon a bed of Roses she was layd,
 As faint through heat, or dight to pleasant sin,
 And was arayd, or rather disarayd,
 All in a vele of silke and silver thin,
 That hid no whit her alabaster skin,
 690 But rather shewd more white, if more might bee:
 More subtile web Arachne° cannot spin,
 Nor the fine nets, which oft we woven see
 Of scorched dew, do not in th' aire more lightly flee.°

the spider float

78

Her snowy brest was bare to readie spoyle
 695 Of hungry eies, which n'ote° therewith be fild,
 And yet through languor of her late sweet toyle,
 Few drops, more cleare than Nectar, forth distild,
 That like pure Orient perles adowne it trild,°
 And her faire eyes sweet smyling in delight,
 700 Moystened their fierie beames, with which she thild
 Fraile harts, yet quenched not; like starry light
 Which sparckling on the silent waves, does seeme more bright.

could not trickled

79

The young man sleeping by her, seemd to bee
 Some goodly swayne of honorable place,°
 705 That certés it great pittie was to see Him his nobilitie so foule deface;°
 A sweet regard, and amiable grace,
 Mixed with manly sternnesse did appeare
 Yet sleeping, in his well proportioned face,
 710 And on his tender lips the downy heare
 Did now but freshly spring, and silken blossomes beare.

rank disgrace

80

His warlike armes, the idle instruments
 Of sleeping praise,° were hong upon a tree,
 And his brave shield, full of old moniments,°
 715 Was fowly ra'st,⁷ that none the signes might see;
 Ne for them, ne for honour caréd hee,
 Ne ought, that did to his advauncement tend,

*worthiness
marks of honor*

7. Erased. The removal of the emblems from his shield was the last disgrace of a knight.

But in lewd loves, and wastfull luxuree,
His days, his goods, his bodie he did spend:

720 O horrible enchantment, that him so did blend.° blind

81

The noble Elfe,⁸ and carefull Palmer drew
So nigh them, minding nought, but lustfull game,
That suddain forth they on them rusht, and threw
A subtile net, which onely for the same
725 The skilfull Palmer formally° did frame. scientifically
So held them under fast, the whiles the rest
Fled all away for feare of fowler shame.

The faire Enchauntresse, so unwares opprest,° surprised
Tryde all her arts, and all her sleights, thence out to wrest.

82

730 And eke her lover strove: but all in vaine;
For that same net so cunningly was wound,
That neither guile, nor force might it distraine.° tear
They tooke them both, and both them strongly bound
In captive bandes, which there they readie found:
735 But her in chaines of adamant he tyde;
For nothing else might keepe her safe and sound;
But Verdant⁹ (so he hight) he soone untyde,
And counsell sage in steed thereof to him applyde.

83

But all those pleasant bowres and Pallace brave,° splendid 740 Guyon broke downe, with rigour pittillesse;
Ne ought their goodly workmanship might save
Them from the tempest of his wrathfulnesse,
But that their blisse he turned to balefulnesse:
Their groves he feld, their gardins did deface,
745 Their arbers spoyle, their Cabinets° suppress, summerhouses
Their banket houses burne, their buildings race,° raze
And of the fairest late, now made the fowlest place.

84

Then led they her away, and eke that knight
They with them led, both sorrowfull and sad:
750 The way they came, the same retourned they right,
Till they arrivéd, where they lately had
Charmed those wild-beasts, that raged with furie mad.
Which now awaking, fierce at them gan fly,
As in their mistresse reskew, whom they lad;° lead
755 But them the Palmer soone did pacify.
Then Guyon askt, what meant those beastes, which there did ly.

85

Said he, "These seeming beasts are men indeed,
Whom this Enchauntresse hath transforméd thus,
Whylome her lovers, which her lusts did feed,
760 Now turned into figures hideous,

8. Knight of fairyland.

9. The name means "green" and may refer, therefore, to a young man in the springtime of his sensuality.

According to their mindes like monstrous."¹⁰

"Sad end," quoth he, "of life intemperate,
And mournfull meed of joyes delicious:

But Palmer, if it mote thee so aggrate," please

765 Let them returned be unto their former state."

86

Streight way he with his vertuous staffe them strooke,

And streight of beasts they comely men became;

Yet being men they did unmanly looke,

And staréd ghastly, some for inward shame,

770 And some for wrath, to see their captive Dame:

But one above the rest in speciall,

That had an hog beene late, hight Grille by name,

Repined greatly, and did him miscall," abuse

That had from hoggish forme him brought to naturall.

87

775 Said Guyon, "See the mind of beastly man,

That hath so soone forgot the excellence

Of his creation, when he life began,

That now he chooseth, with vile difference,"

change

To be a beast, and lacke intelligence."

780 To whom the Palmer thus, "The donghill kind

Delights in filth and foule incontinence:

Let Grille be Grille, and have his hoggish mind,

But let us hence depart, whilest wether serves and wind."

Book VII. Two Cantos of Mutabilitie¹

Canto VI

Proud Change (not pleas'd, in mortall things, beneath the Moon, to raigne)

Pretends,° as well of Gods, as Men,

attempts

To be the Sovereaine.

1

What man that sees the ever-whirling wheele

Of Change, the which all mortall things doth sway," rule

But that thereby doth find, and plainly feele,

How MUTABILITY in them doth play

10. Circe had changed Odysseus' companions into swine, but Odysseus was empowered to release them. Cf. also the animals upon which the sins rode in I.v.
1. Two cantos and two stanzas of another, called "the Mutability Cantos," were first published in 1609, ten years after Spenser's death. According to the title page, they "appear to be parcel of some following book of The Faerie Queene, under the legend of Constance." If so, they are a longer digression from the story than any now in the poem. These cantos give Spenser's reflections, influenced perhaps by Lucretius, on change and permanence in the world—a subject which fascinated the Elizabethan imagination.

- 5 Her cruell sports, to many mens decay?^o destruction
 Which that to all may better yet appeare,
 I will rehearse that whylome^o I heard say, formerly
 How she at first her selfe began to reare,
 Gainst all the Gods, and th' empire sought from them to beare.

2

- 10 But first, here falleth fittest to unfold
 Her antique race and linage ancient,
 As I, have found it registred of old,
 In Faery Land mongst records permanent:
 She was, to weet,^o a daughter by descent wit
 15 Of those old Titans,² that did whylome strive rule
 With Saturnes sonne for heavens regiment.^o
 Whom though high Jove of kingdome did deprive,
 Yet many of their stemme long after did survive.

3

- And many of them, afterwards obtained
 20 Great power of Jove, and high authority;
 As Hecaté,³ in whose almighty hand,
 He plac't all rule and principality,
 To be by her disposéd diversly,
 To Gods, and men, as she them list^o divide: wished to 25 And drad Bellona,⁴ that doth sound on hie
 Warres and allarums unto Nations wide,
 That makes both heaven and earth to tremble at her pride.

4

- So likewise did this Titanesse aspire,
 Rule and dominion to her selfe to gaine;
 30 That as a Goddesse, men might her admire,^o wonder at
 And heavenly honours yield, as to them twaine.
 At first, on earth she sought it to obtaine;
 Where she such prooffe and sad examples shewed
 Of her great power, to many ones great paine,
 35 That not men onely (whom she soone subdued)
 But eke all other creatures, her bad dooings rewed.

5

- For she the face of earthly things so changed,
 That all which Nature had establisht first
 In good estate, and in meet^o order ranged, fitting
 40 She did pervert, and all their statutes burst:
 And all the worlds faire frame (which none yet durst
 Of Gods or men to alter or misguide)
 She altered quite, and made them all accurst
 That God had blest; and did at first provide 45 In that still happy state for ever to abide.

2. The Titans were the sons and daughters of sky and earth; their king was Cronus (time). Jove, Cronus' son, de-throned him and established the rule of the gods. But some descendants of the original Titans, such as Prometheus, Hecate, and others, survived. Spenser invents another, a Titaness called Mutability.

3. A triple goddess, in heaven known as Luna, on earth Diana, in hell Hecate.

4. Patroness of war and conflict.

6

Ne shee the lawes of Nature only brake,

But eke of Justice, and of Policie;^o prudent rule

And wrong of right, and bad of good did make,

And death for life exchanged foolishlie;

50 Since which, all living wights have learned to die.

And all this world is woxen^o daily worse.

grown

O pittious worke of MUTABILITIE!

By which, we all are subject to that curse,

And death in stead of life have suckéd from our Nurse.

7

55 And now, when all the earth she thus had brought

To her behest,^o and thralléd to her might, bidding

She gan to cast^o in her ambitious thought, resolve

T' attempt the empire of the heavens hight,

And Jove himself to shoulder from his right.

60 And first, she past the region of the ayre,

And of the fire, whose substance thin and slight,

Made no resistance, ne could her contraire,^o oppose

But ready passage to her pleasure did prepare.

8

Thence, to the Circle of the Moone she clambe,^o climbed

65 Where Cynthia raignes in everlasting glory,⁵

To whose bright shining palace straight she came,

All fairely deckt with heavens goodly story;⁶

Whose silver gates (by which there sate an hory

Old aged Sire, with hower-glasse in hand,

70 Hight Tyme) she entred, were he liefe or sory;⁷

Ne staide till she the highest stage^o had scand,^o

level/reached

Where Cynthia did sit, that never still did stand.

9

Her sitting on an Ivory throne shee found,

Drawne of two steeds, th' one black, the other white,

75 Enviroind with tenne thousand starres around,

That duly her attended day and night;

And by her side, there ran her Page, that hight

Vesper, whom we the Evening-starre intend:^o

call

That with his Torche, still twinkling like twilight,

80 Her lightened all the way where she should wend,

And joy to weary wandring travellers did lend:

10

That when the hardy Titanesse beheld

The goodly building of her Palace bright,

Made of the heavens substance, and up-held

85 With thousand Crystall pillars of huge hight,

Shee gan to burne in her ambitious spright,^o

spirit

5. Cynthia, Diana, or Phoebe, the moon goddess, often associated with Queen Elizabeth in poetry.

6. I.e., rows of stars.
7. I.e., whether he liked it or not.

- And t' envie her that in such glorie raigned.
 Eftsoones she cast by force and tortious^o might, wrongful
 Her to displace; and to her self to have gained 90 The kingdome of the Night, and waters by her wained.^o moved

11

- Boldly she bid the Goddesse downe descend,
 And let her selfe into that Ivory throne;
 For, shee her selfe more worthy thereof wend,^o thought
 And better able it to guide alone:
 95 Whether to men, whose fall she did bemone,
 Or unto Gods, whose state she did maligne,^o envy
 Or to th' infernall powers, her need give lone^o loan
 Of her faire light, and bounty most benigne,
 Her selfe of all that rule shee deeméd most condigne.^o worthy

12

- 100 But shee that had to her that soveraigne seat
 By highest Jove assigned, therein to beare
 Nights burning lamp, regarded not her threat,
 Ne yielded ought for favour or for feare;
 But with sterne countenaunce and disdainfull cheare,^o expression
 105 Bending her hornéd browes, did put her back:
 And boldly blaming her for comming there,
 Bade her attonce from heavens coast to pack,
 Or at her peril bide the wrathfull Thunders wrack.^o destruction

13

- Yet nathemore^o the Giantesse forbare: not at all 110 But boldly preacing-on, raught^o forth her hand reached
 To pluck her downe perforce^o from off her chaire by force
 And there-with lifting up her golden wand,
 Threatened to strike her if she did with-stand.
 Where-at the starres, which round about her blazed, 115 And eke^o the Moones bright wagon, still did stand, also
 All beeing with so bold attempt amazed.
 And on her uncouth^o habit and sterne looke still gazed. strange

14

- Meane-while, the lower World, which nothing knew
 Of all that chauncéd here, was darkned quite;
 120 And eke the heavens, and all the heavenly crew
 Of happy wights,^o now unpurvaide^o of light, beings/deprived
 Were much afraid, and wondred at that sight;
 Fearing least^o Chaos broken had his chaine, lest
 And brought againe on them eternall night:
 125 But chiefly Mercury, that next doth raigne,⁸ Ran forth in haste, unto the king of Gods to plaine.^o complain

15

All ran together with a great out-cry,
 To Joves faire Palace, fixt in heavens hight;

8. In the Ptolemaic system, the sphere of Mercury was next beyond that of the moon; in mythology, Mercury was the messenger of the gods. His Greek name was Hermes.

- And beating at his gates full earnestly,
 130 Can call to him aloud with all their might,
 To know what meant that suddaine lack of light.
 The father of the Gods when this he heard,
 Was troubled much at their so strange affright,
 Doubting least Typhon⁹ were againe upreared,
 135 Or, other his old foes, that once him sorely feared.[°] frightened

16

- Eftsoones the sonne of Maia¹ forth he sent
 Downe to the Circle of the Moone, to knowe
 The cause of this so strange astonishment,
 And why shee did her wonted course forslowe,[°] delay
 140 And if that any were on earth belowe
 That did with charmes or Magick her molest,
 Him to attache,[°] and downe to hell to throwe: seize
 But, if from heaven it were, then to arrest
 The Author, and him bring before his presence prest.[°] immediately

17

- The wingd-foot God, so fast his plumes did beat,
 That soone he came where-as the Titanesse
 Was striving with fair Cynthia for her seat:
 At whose strange sight, and haughty hardinesse,[°] boldness
 He wondred much, and fearéd her no lesse.
 150 Yet laying feare aside to doe his charge,[°] assignment
 At last, he bade her, with bold stedfastnesse,
 Cease to molest the Moone to walke at large,²
 Or come before high Iove, her dooings to discharge.[°] justify

18

- And there-with-all, he on her shoulder laid
 155 His snaky-wreathéd Mace,³ whose awfull power
 Doth make both Gods and hellish fiends affraid;
 Where-at the Titanesse did sternely lower,[°] scowl
 And stoutly answered, that in evill hower
 He from his Iove such message to her brought,
 160 To bid her leave faire Cynthias silver bower;
 Sith shee his Iove and him esteeméd nought,
 No more than Cynthia's selfe; but all their kingdoms sought.

19

- The Heavens Herald staid not to reply,
 But past away, his doings to relate
 165 Unto his Lord; who now in th' highest sky,
 Was placéd in his principall Estate,
 With all the Gods about him congregat:
 To whom when Hermes had his message told,
 It did them all exceedingly amate,[°] dismay
 170 Save Iove; who, changing nought his count'nance bold,
 Did unto them at length these speeches wise unfold:

9. A giant who had rebelled against Jove.

1. I.e., Mercury.

2. I.e., stop interfering with the moon's free movement.

3. I.e., the caduceus, Mercury's rod which could bring spirits from the underworld.

20

- "Harken to mee awhile yee heavenly Powers;
 Ye may remember since° th' Earth's curséd seed before this
 Sought to assaile the heavens eternall towers,
 175 And to us all exceeding feare did breed:
 But how we then defeated all their deed,
 Yee all doe knowe, and them destroyéd quite;
 Yet not so quite, but that there did succeed
 An off-spring of their bloud, which did alite
 180 Upon the fruitfull earth, which doth us yet despise.°
treat with contempt

21

- "Of that bad seed is this bold woman bred,
 That now with bold presumption doth aspire
 To thrust faire Phoebe from her silver bed,
 And eke ourselves from heavens high Empire,
 185 If that her might were match to her desire:
 Wherefore, it now behoves us to advise° consider
 What way is best to drive her to retire;
 Whether by open force, or counsell wise,
 Areed° ye sonnes of God, as best ye can devise." advise

22

- 190 So having said, he ceast; and with his brow,
 His black eye-brow, whose doomefull dreaded beek⁴
 Is wont to wield the world unto his vow,° will
 And even the highest Powers of heaven to check,
 Made signe to them in their degrees to speake:
 195 Who straight gan cast their counsell grave and wise.
 Meane-while, th' Earths daughter,⁵ thogh she nought did reck
 Of Hermes message, yet gan now advise
 What course were best to take in this hot bold emprise.° undertaking

23

- Eftsoones she thus resolved; that whilst the Gods,
 200 After return of Hermes Embassie,
 Were troubled, and amongst themselves at ods,
 Before they could new counsels re-allie,° reorganize
 To set upon them in that extasie;° disorder
 And take what fortune time and place would lend:
 205 So, forth she rose, and through the purest sky
 To Joves high Palace straight cast° to ascend resolved
 To prosecute her plot: Good on-set boads good end.

24

- Shee there arriving, boldly in did pass;
 Where all the Gods she found in counsell close,° secluded
 210 All quite unarmed, as then their manner was.
 At sight of her they suddaine all arose,
 In great amaze, ne wist what way to chose.

4. I.e., his awesome nod of judgment. 5. I.e., Mutability.

But Jove, all fearlesse, forced them to aby;^o remain

And in his souveraine throne, gan straight dispose

²¹⁵ Himselfe more full of grace and Majestie,
That mote^o encheare^o his friends, and foes mote terrifie.
might/encourage

25

That, when the haughty Titanessè beheld

All^o were she fraught with pride and impudence, although

Yet with the sight thereof was almost queld;^o killed

²²⁰ And inly quaking, seemed as reft of sense,
And void of speech in that drad^o audience; dread

Untill that Jove himself, herself bespake:

"Speake thou fraile woman, speake with confidence, Whence art thou, and what doost thou here now make?" do

²²⁵ What idle errand hast thou, earth's mansion to forsake?"

26

Shee, halfe confuséd with his great commaund,

Yet gathering spirit of her natures pride,

Him boldly answered thus to his demand:

"I am a daughter, by the mothers side

²³⁰ Of her that is Grand-mother magnifide" glorified

Of all the Gods, great Earth, great Chaos child.⁶

But by the fathers (be it not envide)

I greater am in bloud, whereon I build," argue

Then all the Gods, though wrongfully from heaven exiled.

27

²³⁵ "For Titan, as ye all acknowledge must,

Was Saturnes elder brother by birth-right,

Both sonnes of Uranus: but by unjust

And guilefull meanes, through Corybantes slight," trickery

The younger thrust the elder from his right:⁷

²⁴⁰ Since which, thou Jove, injuriously hast held

The Heavens rule from Titans sonnes by might;

And them to hellish dungeons downe hast feld:" thrown Witnesse ye Heavens the truth of all that I have told."

28

Whilst she thus spake, the Gods that gave good eare

²⁴⁵ To her bold words, and markéd well her grace,

Beeing of stature tall as any there

Of all the Gods, and beautifull of face,

As any of the Goddesses in place,

Stood all astonied, like a sort^o of Steeres herd

²⁵⁰ Mongst whom, some beast of strange and forraine race,

Unwares is chaunc't, far straying from his peeres:

So did their ghastly gaze bewray^o their hidden feares. reveal

6. Earth is the offspring of Chaos in Hesiod and later mythologies.

7. Titan, eldest son of Uranus, abdicated in favor of his younger brother Saturn on condition that Saturn would eat all his own children. When Jove was born to Rhea, Saturn's wife, she gave Saturn a stone to swallow instead of the baby, and her attendants, the Corybantes, beat on their shields to drown out the baby's cries. Eventually Jove deposed his father.

29

- Till having pauzed awhile, Jove thus bespake;
 "Will never mortall thoughts cease to aspire,
 255 In this bold sort, to Heaven claime to make,
 And touch celestiall seates with earthly mire?
 I would have thought, that bold Procrustes hire,° reward
 Or Typhons fall, or proud Ixions paine,
 Or great Prometheus,⁸ tasting of our ire,
 260 Would have suffized, the rest for to restraîne;
 And warned all men by their example to refraine;

30

- "But now, this off-scum of that curséd fry,° progeny
 Dare to renew the like bold enterprize,
 And chalenge th' heritage of this our skie;
 265 Whom what should hinder, but that we likewise
 Should handle as the rest of her allies,
 And thunder-drive to hell?" With that, he shooke
 His Nectar-deawéd⁹ locks, with which the skyes
 And all the world beneath for terror quooke,° quaked 270 And eft° his burning levin-brond° in hand he tooke.
then/lightning-bolt

31

- But when he looked on her lovely face,
 In which, faire beames of beauty did appeare,
 That could the greatest wrath soone turne to grace
 (Such sway doth beauty even in Heaven beare)
 275 He staide his hand; and having changed his cheare,° mood
 He thus againe in milder wise began;
 "But ah! if Gods should strive with flesh yfere,° together
 Then shortly should the progeny of Man
 Be rooted out, if Jove should doe still° what he can. always

32

- "But thee faire Titans child, I rather weene,° suppose
 Through some vaine error or inducement light,
 To see that° mortall eyes have never scene; that which
 Or through ensample of thy sisters might,
 Bellona;¹ whose great glory thou dost spight,° envy
 285 Since thou hast scene her dreadfull power belowe,
 Mongst wretched men, dismaide with her affright,
 To bandie Crownes, and Kingdomes to bestowe;
 And sure thy worth, no less then hers doth seem to showe.

33

- "But wote° thou this, thou hardy Titanesse, know
 290 That not the worth of any living wight

8. Procrustes was a robber who way-laid strangers and made them fit his bed by cutting or stretching them (Spenser includes him among those punished by Jove). Ixion tried to seduce Jove's wife and was punished by being bound to a wheel of fire in hell. Prometheus stole fire from heaven and gave it to man, for which Jove punished him by chaining him to a cliff where an eagle consumed his liver, which grew back every night. Typhon was a giant who had rebelled against Jove.

9. I.e., sprinkled with a fragrant balm; "nectar" more often referred to the drink of the gods.

1. Goddess of war, not a Titan in classical literature.

May challenge ought in Heavens interesse;²

Much lesse the Title of old Titans Right:

For we by Conquest of our sovaine might,

And by eternail doome of Fates decree,

395 Have wonne the Empire of the Heavens bright;

Which to our selves we hold, and to whom wee

Shall worthy deeme partakers of our blisse to bee.

34

"Then cease thy idle claime thou foolish gerle,

And seeke by grace and goodnesse to obtaine

300 That place from which by folly Titan fell;

There-to thou maist perhaps, if so thou faine^o

wish

Have Jove thy gracious Lord and Sovereigne."

So, having said, she thus to him replide,

"Cesse Saturnes sonne, to seeke by proffers vaine

305 Of idle hopes t' allure me to thy side,

For^o to betray my Right, before I have it tride.

in order

35

"But thee, O Jove, no equall^o Judge I deeme

impartial

Of my desert, or of my dewfull^o Right;

due

That in thine owne behalfe maist partiall seeme:

310 But to the highest him, that is beight

Father of Gods and men by equall might;³

To weet,^o the God of Nature, I appeale."

wit

There-at Jove wexéd wroth, and in his spright

Did inly grudge, yet did it well conceale;

315 And bade Dan Phoebus Scribe⁴ her Appellation^o scale.

appeal

36

Eftsoones the time and place appointed were,

Where all, both heavenly Powers, and earthly wights,

Before great Natures presence should appeare,

For triall of their Titles and best Rights:

320 That was, to weet, upon the highest hights

Of Arlo-hill⁵ (Who knowes not Arlo-hill?)

That is the highest head, in all mens sights,

Of my old father Mole, whom Shepherds quill

Renowméd hath with hymnes fit for a rurall skill.

37

325 And, were it not ill fitting for this file,^o narrative

To sing of hilles and woods, mongst warres and Knights,

I would abate the sternenesse of my stile,

Mongst these sterne stounds^o to mingle soft delights;

clashes

And tell how Arlo through Dianaes spights

330 (Being of old the best and fairest Hill

2. I.e., no living person, however worthy, can claim any title to power or authority in heaven.

3. I.e., who is called father of gods and men, with equal authority over both.

4. Phoebus (Apollo) is called "scribe" or secretary of the gods because he is the god of poetry.

5. I.e., Galtymore, a peak in the mountain range Spenser calls "my old father Mole," near Kilcolman Castle where he lived in Ireland. The last two lines of the stanza refer to Spenser's praise of Mole in his pastoral eclogue, Colin Clouts Come Home Againe.

That was in all this holy-Islands⁶ hights)
 Was made the most unpleasant, and most ill.
 Meane while, O Clio, lend Calliope⁷ thy quill.

38

- Whylome,⁸ when Ireland florished in fame formerly
 335 Of wealths and goodnesse, far above the rest
 Of all that beare the British Islands name,
 The Gods then used, for pleasure and for rest,
 Oft to resort there-to, when seemed them best:
 But none of all there-in more pleasure found,
 340 Then Cynthia;⁹ that is soveraine Queene profest[°] acknowledged
 Of woods and forrests, which therein abound,
 Sprinkled with wholsom waters, more then most on ground.[°] earth

39

- But mongst them all, as fittest for her game,[°] recreation
 Either for chace of beasts with hound or boawe,
 345 Or for to shroude in shade from Phoebus flame,
 Or bathe in fountaines that doe freshly flowe,
 Or from high hilles, or from the dales belowe,
 She chose this Arlo; where she did resort
 With all her Nymphes enrangéd on a rowe,
 350 With whom the woody Gods did oft consort:
 For with the Nymphes, the Satyres love to play and sport.⁹

40

- Amongst the which, there was a Nymph that hight
 Molanna;¹ daughter of old father Mole,
 And sister unto Mulla, faire and bright:
 355 Unto whose bed false Bregog whylome stole,
 That Shepheard Colin dearely[°] did condole,[°] earnestly/lament
 And made her lucklesse loves well knowne to be.
 But this Molanna, were she not so shole,[°] shallow
 Were no lesse faire and beautifull then shee:
 360 Yet as she is, a fairer flood may no man see.

41

- For, first, she springs out of two marble Rocks,
 On which, a grove of Oakes high mounted growes,
 That as a girlond seemes to deck the locks
 Of som faire Bride, brought forth with pompous[°] showes with pomp
 365 Out of her bowre, that many flowers strowes:
 So, through the flowry Dales she tumbling downe,

6. Ireland is called the "holy-Island" because according to legend, Christianity first found a foothold there and thence spread to the other British isles.
 7. Clio was the muse of history, Calliope of epic poetry.

8. I.e., Diana, goddess of the forest, fond of hunting.

9. Nymphs in Greek mythology were minor female deities of streams, springs, trees, and other parts of nature. Satyrs were minor male gods of the woods, given to drinking and sensual pleasure. The Romans identified them with their goat-footed fauni; hence "Faunus" (line 376) and "Faune" (line 411).

1. The shallow, rocky river Behanna; Mulla is the river Awbeg, whose joining with the river Bregog is told in Colin Clouts Come Home Againe.

Through many woods, and shady covert flowes,
That on each side her silver channell crowne,
Till to the Plaine she come, whose Valleys shee doth drowne.

42

- 370 In her sweet streames, Diana used oft,
After her sweatie chace and toilsome play,
To bathe her selfe; and after, on the soft
And downy grasse, her dainty limbes to lay
In covert shade, where none behold her may:
375 For much she hated sight of living eye.
Foolish God Faunus, though full many a day
He saw her clad, yet longed foolishly
To see her naked mongst her Nymphes in privy.²

43

- No way he found to compasse³ his desire, accomplish
380 But to corrupt Molanna, this her maid,
Her to discover for some secret hire:^o bribe
So, her with flattering words he first assaid;
And after, pleasing gifts for her purvaid,
Queene-apples,³ and red Cherries from the tree,
385 With which he her allured and betraid
To tell what time he might her Lady see
When she her selfe did bathe, that he might secret^o bee. hidden

44

- There-to hee promist, if shee would him pleasure
With this small boone, to quit^o her with a better; repay
390 To weet, that where-as shee had out of measure
Long loved the Fanchin, who by nought did set her,⁴
That he would undertake, for this to get her
To be his Love, and of him liked well:
Besides all which, he vowed to be her debter
395 For many moe good turnes then he would tell:
The least of which, this little pleasure should excell.

45

- The simple maid did yield to him anone;
And eft him placed where he close^o might view secretly
That^o never any saw, save onely one; that which 400 Who, for his hire to so foole-hardy dew,
Was of his hounds devoured in Hunters hew.⁵
Tho^o as her manner was on sunny day, then
Diana, with her Nymphes about her, drew
To this sweet spring; where, doffing her array, 405 She bathed her lovely limbes, for Jove a likely pray.^o prey

2. Spenser here adapts the classical story of Actaeon with local Irish geographical references. Actaeon while hunting happened to see Diana bathing; he was turned into a stag and pursued and killed by his own hounds.

3. Probably quinces.

4. I.e., who cared nothing for her. Fanchin is the river Funsheon.

5. I.e., as a deserved punishment for his foolhardiness was devoured by his hunting dogs.

46

- There Faunus saw that pleaséd much his eye,
 And made his hart to tickle in his brest,
 That for great joy of some-what° he did spy, something
 He could him not contain in silent rest,
 410 But breaking forth in laughter, loud profest
 His foolish thought. A foolish Faune indeed,
 That couldst not hold thy selfe so° hidden blest, thus
 But wouldest needs thine own conceit areed.° declare
 Babblers unworthy been of so divine a meed.° reward

47

- 415 The Goddesse, all abashéd with that noise,
 In haste forth started from the guilty brooke;
 And running straight where-as she heard his voice,
 Enclosed the bush about, and there him tooke,
 Like darréd° Larke; not daring up to looke cowering
 420 On her whose sight before so much he sought.
 Thence, forth they drew him by the hornes, and shooke
 Nigh all to peeces, that they left him nought;
 And then into the open light they forth him brought.

48

- Like as an huswife, that with busie care
 425 Thinks of her Dairie to make wondrous gaine,
 Finding where-as some wicked beast unware° unobserved
 That breakes into her Dayr'house, there doth draine
 Her creaming pannes, and frustrate all her paine;
 Hath in some snare or gin° set close behind, trap
 430 Entrappéd him, and caught into her traine,° snare
 Then thinkes what punishment were best assigned,
 And thousand deathes deviseth in her vengefull mind:

49

- So did Diana and her maydens all
 Use silly Faunus, now within their baile;° custody
 435 They mocke and scorne him, and him foule miscall;° revile
 Some by the nose him pluckt, some by the taile,
 And by his goatish beard some did him haile:° pull
 Yet he, poore soule, with patience all did beare;
 For, nought against their wils might countervaille:
 440 Ne ought he said, what ever he did heare;
 But hanging downe his head, did like a Mome° appeare. fool

50

- At length, when they had flouted him their fill,
 They gan to cast what penance him to give.
 Some would have gelt° him, but that same would spill° gelded/destroy 445 The Wood-gods breed, which must for ever live:
 Others would through the river him have drive,
 And duckéd deepe; but that seemed penance light;
 But most agreed and did this sentence give,

Him in Deares skin to clad; and in that plight, 450 To hunt him with their hounds, him selfe save how hee might.

51

But Cynthia's selfe, more angry then the rest,
 Thought not enough, to punish him in sport,
 And of her shame to make a gamesome jest;
 But gan examine him in straighter^o sort, stricter
 455 Which of her Nymphes, or other close consort,^o companion
 Him thither brought, and her to him betraid?
 He, much affeard, to her confesséd short,
 That 'twas Molanna which her so bewraid,
 Then all attonce their hands upon Molanna laid.

52

460 But him, according as they had decreed,
 With a Deeres-skin they covered, and then chaste
 With all their hounds that after him did speed;
 But he more speedy, from them fled more fast
 Then any Deere: so sore him dread aghast.
 465 They after followed all with shrill outcry,
 Shouting as they the heavens would have brast: burst
 That all the woods and dales where he did flie,
 Did ring againe, and loud reeccho to the skie.

53

So they him followed till they weary were,
 470 When, back returning to Molann' againe,
 They, by commaundment of Diana, there
 Her whelmed with stones.⁶ Yet Faunus, for her pain,^o trouble
 Of her beloved Fanchin did obtaine,
 That her he would receive unto his bed.
 475 So now her waves passe through a pleasant Plaine,
 Till with the Fanchin she her selfe doe wed,
 And, both combined, themselves in one faire river spred.

54

Nath'lesse, Diana, full of indignation,
 Thence-forth abandoned her delicious brooke;
 480 In whose sweet streame, before that bad occasion,
 So much delight to bathe her limbes she tooke:
 Ne onely her, but also quite forsooke
 All those faire forrests about Arlo hid,
 And all that Mountaine, which doth over-looke
 485 The richest champion^o that may else be rid,^o country/seen
 And the faire Shure,⁷ in which are thousand Salmons bred.

55

Them all, and all that she so deare did way,^o esteem
 Thence-forth she left; and parting from the place,
 There-on an heavy haplesse curse did lay,

6. I.e., filled with stones (an allusion to the shallowness of the river, mentioned in line 358).

7. The river Suir.

- 490 To weet, that Wolves, where she was wont to space,^o roam
 Should harboured be, and all those Woods deface,
 And Thieves should rob and spoile that Coast^o around. territory
 Since which, those Woods, and all that goodly Chase,^o hunting-ground

Doth to this day with Wolves and Thieves abound:
 495 Which too-too true that lands in-dwellers since have found.

Canto VII

*Pealing, from Jove, to Natur's Bar, bold Alteration¹ pleades
 Large Evidence: but Nature soone her righteous Doome areads.²*

1

- Ah! whither doost thou now thou greater Muse³
 Me from these woods and pleasing forrests bring?
 And my fraile spirit (that dooth oft refuse
 This too high flight, unfit for her weake wing)
 5 Lift up aloft, to tell of heavens King
 (Thy sovaine Sire)⁴ his fortunate successe,
 And victory, in bigger noates to sing,
 Which he obtained against that Titanesse,
 That him of heavens Empire sought to dispossesse.

2

- 10 Yet sith I needs must follow thy behest,
 Doe thou my weaker wit with skill inspire,
 Fit for this turne,^o and in my feeble brest
 Kindle fresh sparks of that immortall fire,
 Which learned minds inflameth with desire
 15 Of heavenly things: for, who but thou alone,
 That art vborne of heaven and heavenly Sire,
 Can tell things doen in heaven so long ygone;
 So farre past memory of man that may be knowne.

verse of praise

3

- Now, at the time that was before agreed,
 20 The Gods assembled all on Arlo hill;⁵
 As well those that are sprung of heavenly seed,
 As those that all the other world⁶ doe fill,
 And rule both sea and land unto their will:
 Onely th' infernall Powers might not appeare;
 25 Aswell for horror of their count'naunce ill,
 As for th' unruly fiends which they did feare;
 Yet Pluto and Proserpina were present there.

1. I.e., Mutabilitie.

2. Proclaims judgment.

3. I.e., Clio, muse of history.

4. Jove, father of Apollo, hence grandfather of the Muses.

5. Galtymore in southern Ireland, near Spenser's home, Kilcolman Castle.

6. I.e., the Earth.

4

And thither also came all other creatures,
 What-ever life or motion doe retaine,
 30 According to their sundry kinds of features;
 That Arlo scarsly could them all containe;
 So full they filléd every hill and Plaine:
 And had not Natures Sergeant (that is Order)
 Them well disposéd by his busie paine,
 35 And raungéd farre abroad in every border,
 They would have causéd much confusion and disorder.

5

Then forth issewed (great goddesse) great dame Nature,
 With goodly port and gracious Majesty:
 Being far greater and more tall of stature
 40 Then any of the gods or Powers on hie:
 Yet certés by her face and physnomy,^o countenance
 Whether she man or woman inly were,
 That could not any creature well descry:
 For, with a veile that wimpled^o every where, lay in folds
 45 Her head and face was hid, that mote to none appeare.

6

That some doe say was so by skill devized,
 To hide the terror of her uncouth hew,⁷
 From mortall eyes that should be sore agrieved^o horrified
 For that her face did like a Lion shew,
 50 That eye of wight would not indure to view:
 But others tell that it so beautious was,
 And round about such beames of splendor threw,
 That it the Sunne a thousand times did pass,^o surpass
 Ne could be seene, but like an image in a glass.

7

That well may seemen true: for, well I weene
 That this same day, when she on Arlo sat,⁸
 Her garment was so bright and wondrous sheene,^o beautiful
 That my fraile wit cannot devise to what
 It to compare, nor finde like stufte to that,
 60 As those three sacred Saints, though else most wise,
 Yet on mount Thabor quite their wits forgat,
 When they their glorious Lord in strange disguise
 Transfigured sawe; his garments so did daze their eyes.⁹

8

In a fayre Plaine upon an equal^o Hill, symmetrical
 65 She placéd was in a pavilion;
 Not such as Crafts-men by their idle^o skill vain
 Are wont for Princes states^o to fashion: thrones
 But th' earth her self of her owne motion,
 Out of her fruitfull bosome made to growe

7. Strange appearance.

8. I.e., sat in judgment.

9. Peter, James, and John saw Jesus

transfigured on a mountain. See Matthew xvii.1-8.

- 70 Most dainty trees; that, shooting up anon,
Did seeme to bow their bloosming heads full lowe,
For homage unto her, and like a throne did shew.

- 9
- So hard it is for any living wight,
All her array and vestiments to tell,
75 That old Dan° Geffrey (in whose gentle spright° Sir / spirit
The pure well head of Poesie did dwell)
In his Foules parley durst not with it mel,° meddle
But it transferd to Alane, who he thought
Had in his Plaint of kindes described it well:¹
80 Which who will read set forth so as it ought,
Go seek he out that Alane where he may be sought.

- 10
- And all the earth far underneath her feete
Was dight° with flowres, that voluntary grew decked out
Out of the ground, and sent forth odours sweet;
85 Tenne thousand mores° of sundry sent and hew, plants
That might delight the smell, or please the view:
The which, the Nymphes, from all the brooks thereby
Had gatheréd, which they at her foot-stoole threw;
That richer seemed then any tapestry,
90 That Princes bowres adorne with painted imagery.

- 11
- And Mole² himselfe, to honour her the more,
Did deck himself in freshest faire attire,
And his high head, that seemeth alwaies hore
With hardned frosts of former winters ire,
95 He with an Oaken girlond now did tire,° adorn his head
As if the love of some new Nymph late seene,
Had in him kindled youthfull fresh desire,
And made him change his gray attire to greene;
Ah gentle Mole! such joyance hath thee well beseene.° beautified

- 12
- 100 Was never so great joyance since the day,
That all the gods whylome assembled were,
On Haemus hill in their divine array,
To celebrate the solemne bridall cheare,
Twixt Peleus, and dame Thetis pointed° there:³ appointed
105 Where Phoebus self, that god of Poets hight,
They say did sing the spousall hymne full cleere,
That all the gods were ravisht with delight
Of his celestiall song, and Musicks wondrous might.

- 13
- This great Grandmother of all creatures bred
110 Great Nature, ever young yet full of eld,° age

1. Chaucer, in his Parliament of Fowls, lines 316-18, refers to Alanus de Insulis' De Placitu Naturae as Aleyn's Pleynt of Kind ("Complaint of Nature").

2. The mountain range of which Arlo is the highest peak.

3. Mortal king and sea goddess, the parents of Achilles. "Pointed": appointed.

- Still mooving, yet unmoved from her sted;° place
 Unseene of any, yet of all beheld;
 Thus sitting in her throne as I have teld,
 Before her came dame Mutabilitie;
 115 And being lowe before her presence feld,° prostrated
 With meek obaysance and humilitie,
 Thus gan her plaintif Plea, with words to amplifie:
- 14
- “To thee O greatest goddesse, onely° great, uniquely
 An humble suppliant loe, I lowely fly
 120 Seeking for Right, which I of thee entreat;
 Who Right to all dost deal indifferently,° impartially
 Damning all Wrong and tortious° Injurie, wrongful
 Which any of thy creatures doe to other (Oppressing them with power, unequally)
 125 Sith of them all thou art the equall mother,
 And knittest each to each, as brother unto brother.
- 15
- “To thee therefore of this same Jove I plaine,
 And of his fellow gods that faine° to be, pretend
 That challenge° to themselves the whole worlds raigin: claim
 130 Of which, the greatest part is due to me,
 And heaven it selfe by heritage in Fee:⁴
 For, heaven and earth I both alike do deeme,
 Sith heaven and earth are both alike to thee;
 And, gods no more than men thou doest esteeme:
 135 For, even the gods to thee, as men to gods do seeme.
- 16
- “Then weigh, O soveraigne goddesse, by what right
 These gods do claime the worlds whole sovereignty;
 And that° is onely dew unto thy might that which
 Arrogate to themselves ambitiously:
 140 As for the gods owne principality,
 Which Jove usurpes unjustly; that to be
 My heritage, Jove’s self cannot deny,
 From my great Grandsire Titan, unto mee,
 Derived by dew descent; as is well known to thee.
- 17
- 145 “Yet mauger° Jove, and all his gods beside, despite
 I doe possesse the worlds most regiment,° control
 As, if ye please it into parts divide,
 And every parts inholders° to convent,° occupants / assemble
 Shall to your eyes appeare incontinent.° immediately
 150 And first, the Earth (great mother of us all)
 That only seems unmoved and permanent,
 And unto Mutability not thrall;
 Yet is she changed in part, and ecke in generall.

18

- "For, all that from her springs, and is ybredde,
 155 How-ever fayre it flourish for a time,
 Yet see we soone decay; and, being dead,
 To turne again unto their earthly slime:
 Yet, out of their decay and mortall crime," corruption
 We daily see new creatures to arize;
 160 And of their Winter spring another Prime," springtime
 Unlike in forme, and changed by strange disguise:
 So turne they still about, and change in restlesse wise.

19

- "As for her tenants; that is, man and beasts,
 The beasts we daily see massácred dy,
 165 As thralls and vassalls unto mens beheasts:
 And men themselves doe change continually
 From youth to eld, from wealth to poverty,
 From good to bad, from bad to worst of all.
 Ne doe their bodies only flit and fly:
 170 But ecke their minds (which they immortall call)
 Still change and vary thoughts, as new occasions fall.

20

- "Ne is the water in more constant case;
 Whether those same on high;⁵ or these belowe.
 For, th' Ocean moveth stil, from place to place;
 175 And every River still⁶ doth ebbe and flowe: continually
 Ne any Lake, that seems most still and slowe,
 Ne Poole so small, that can his smoothnesse holde,
 When any winde doth under heaven blowe;
 With which, the clouds are also tost and rolled;
 180 Now like great Hills; and, streight,⁶ like sluces, them unfold. suddenly

21

- "So likewise are all watry living wights
 Still tost, and turnéd, with continuall change,
 Never abyding in their stedfast plights.
 The fish, still floting, doe at randon range,
 185 And never rest; but evermore exchange
 Their dwelling places, as the streames them carrie:
 Ne have the watry foules a certaine grange,⁶ dwelling place
 Wherein to rest, ne in one stead⁶ do tarry;
 But flitting still doe flie, and still their places vary.

22

- "Next is the Ayre: which who feeles not by sense
 (For, of all sense it is the middle meane⁶)
 To flit still? and, with subtill influence
 Of his thin spirit,⁶ all creatures to maintaine, essence
 In state of life? O weake life! that does leane
 195 On thing so tickle⁶ as th' unsteady ayre; uncertain
 Which evrv howre is changed, and altdred cleane

5. I.e., the clouds.

6. The conductor or medium.

With every blast that bloweth fowle or faire:
The faire doth it prolong; the fowle doth it impaire.

23

"Therein the changes infinite beholde,
200 Which to her creatures every minute chaunce;
Now, boyling hot: streight, friezing deadly cold:
Now, faire sun-shine, that makes all skip and daunce:
Streight, bitter storms and balefull countenance,
That makes them all to shiver and to shake:
205 Rayne, havle, and snowe do pay them sad penance,
And dreadful thunder-claps (that make them quake)
With flames and flashing lights that thousand changes make.

24

"Last is the fire: which, though it live for ever,
Ne can be quenched quite; yet, every day,
210 Wee see his parts, so soone as they do sever,
To lose their heat, and shortly to decay;
So, makes himself his owne consuming pray.
Ne any living creatures doth he breed:
But all, that are of others bredd, doth slay;
215 And, with their death, his cruell life dooth feed;
Nought leaving but their barren ashes, without seede.

25

"Thus, all these fower° (the which the ground-work bee four
Of all the world, and of all living wights)
To thousand sorts of Change we subject see.
220 Yet are they changed (by other wondrous slights°) tricks
Into themselves, and lose their native might;
The Fire to Aire, and th' Ayre to Water sheere,° clear
And Water into Earth: yet Water fights
With Fire, and Aire with Earth approaching neere:
225 Yet all are in one body, and as one appeare.

26

"So, in them all raignes Mutabilitie;
How-ever these, that Gods themselves do call,
Of them doe claime the rule and soverainty:
As, Vesta, of the fire aethereall;
230 Vulcan, of this, with us so usuall;⁷
Ops, of the earth; and Juno of the Ayre;
Neptune, of Seas; and Nymphes, of Rivers all.
For, all those Rivers to me subject are:
And all the rest, which they usurp, be all my share.

27

235 "Which to approven° true, as I have told, prove Vouchsafe, O goddesse, to thy presence call
The rest which doe the world in being hold:° maintain

7. Vesta, Roman goddess of the hearth, is assigned by Spenser to rule over the fire that is above the air, as Vulcan rules over earthly fire ("this, with us so usuall"). Ops, Roman goddess of plenty and fertility, rules the earth.

- As, times and seasons of the yere that fall:
 Of all the which, demand in generall,
 240 Or judge thy selfe, by verdit of thine eye,
 Whether to me they are not subject all."
 Nature did yeeld thereto; and by-and-by,
 Bade Order call them all, before her Majesty.

28

- So, forth issewed the Seasons of the yere;
 245 First, lusty Spring, all dight in leaves of flowres
 That freshly budded and new bloosmes did beare
 (In which a thousand birds had built their bowres
 That sweetly sung, to call forth Paramours):
 And in his hand a javelin he did beare,
 250 And on his head (as fit for warlike stoures°) combats
 A guilt engraven morion° he did weare; helmet
 That as some did him love, so others did him feare.

29

- Then came the jolly Sommer, being dight
 In a thin silken cassock coloured greene,
 255 That was unlynéd all, to be more light:
 And on his head a girlond well beseene
 He wore, from which as he had chaufféd° been heated
 The sweat did drop; and in his hand he bore
 A boawe and shaftes, as he in forrest greene
 260 Had hunted late the Libbard° or the Bore, leopard
 And now would bathe his limbes, with labor heated sore.

30

- Then came the Autumne all in yellow clad,
 As though he joyéd in his plentious store,
 Laden with fruits that made him laugh, full glad 265 That he had banislt hunger, which to-fore
 Had by the belly oft him pinchéd sore.
 Upon his head a wreath that was enrold
 With eares of corne, of every sort he bore:
 And in his hand a sickle he did holde,
 270 To reape the ripened fruits the which the earth had yold.° yielded

31

- Lastly, came Winter cloathéd all in frize,⁸
 Chattering his teeth for cold that did him chill,
 Whil'st on his hoary beard his breath did freeze;
 And the dull drops that from his purpled bill° nose
 275 As from a limbeck did adown distill.
 In his right hand a tippéd staffe he held,
 With which his feeble steps he stayéd still:
 For, he was faint with cold, and weak with eld;
 'That scarce his looséd° limbes he hable was to weld.° feeble/control

32

- 280 These, marching softly,° thus in order went, slowly
 And after them, the Monthes all riding came;

8. A coarse woolen cloth.

First, sturdy March⁹ with brows full sternly bent,
 And arméd strongly, rode upon a Ram,
 The same which over Hellespontus swam:¹
 285 Yet in h's hand a spade he also hent,[°]
 And in a bag all sorts of seeds ysame,[°]
 Which on the earth he strowéd as he went,
 And fild her womb with fruitfull hope of nourishment.

held together

33

Next came fresh Aprill full of lustyhed,[°]
 290 And wanton as a Kid whose home new buds:
 Upon a Bull he rode, the same which led Europa floting through th' Argolick fluds:²
 His hornes were gilden all with golden studs
 And garnishéd with garlonds goodly dight
 295 Of all the fairest flowres and freshest buds
 Which th' earth brings forth, and wet he seemed in sight
 With waves, through which he waded for his loves³ delight.

vigor

34

Then came faire May, the favrest mayd on ground,
 Deckt all with dainties of her seasons pryde,
 300 And throwing flowres out of her lap around:
 Upon two brethrens shoulders she did ride,
 The twinnes of Leda;⁴ which on eyther side
 Supported her like to their soveraine Queene.
 Lord! how all creatures laught, when her they spide,
 305 And leapt and daunc't as they had ravisht[°] beene!
 And Cupid selfe about her fluttred all in greene.

entranced

35

And after her, came jolly June, arrayd
 All in greene leaves, as he a Player were;
 Yet in his time, he wrought as well as playd,
 310 That by his plough-vrons mote right well appeare:
 Upon a Crab he rode, that him did beare
 With crooked crawling steps an uncouth pase,
 And backward yode,[°] as Bargemen wont to fare
 Bending their force contrary to their face,
 315 Like that ungracious crew which faines demurest grace.

went

36

Then came hot July boyling like to fire,
 That all his garments he had cast away:
 Upon a Lyon raging yet with ire
 He boldly rode and made him to obay:
 320 It was the beast that whylome did forray
 The Nemaean forrest, till th' Amphytionide⁵
 Him slew, and with his hide did him array;

9. In the old calendar, the year began in March.

1. The ram with the golden fleece, on which Helle and her brother Phrixus flew through the air to escape an evil stepmother. Helle fell off into a body of water that was named after her: the Hellespont.

2. The bull was Jupiter in disguise. He swam with Europa to Crete. "Argolick": Greek.

3. I.e., Europa's.

4. Castor and Pollux (the zodiacal sign of Gemini). Each month brings its zodiacal sign to the conference.

5. I.e., Hercules.

Behinde his back a sithe, and by his side
Under his belt he bore a sickle circling wide.

37

- 325 The sixt was August, being rich arrayd
In garment all of gold downe to the ground
Yet rode he not, but led a lovely Mayd
Forth by the lilly hand, the which was cround
With eares of corne, and full her hand was found;
330 That was the righteous Virgin,⁶ which of old
Lived here on earth, and plenty made abound;
But, after Wrong was loved and Justice solde,
She left th' unrighteous world and was to heaven extold.^o raised

38

- Next him, September marchéd eeke on foote;
335 Yet was he heavy laden with the spoyle
Of harvests riches, which he made his boot,^o booty
And him enricht with bounty of the soyle:
In his one hand, as fit for harvests toyle,
He held a knife-hook; and in th' other hand
340 A paire of waights, with which he did assoyle^o weigh
Both more and lesse, where it in doubt did stand,
And equall gave to each as Justice duly scanned.

39

- Then came October full of merry glee:
For, yet his noule was totty of the must,⁷
345 Which he was treading in the wine-fats see,
And of the joyous oyle, whose gentle gust^o taste
Made him so frolick and so full of lust:^o pleasure
Upon a dreadfull Scorpion he did ride,
The same which by Dianaes doom unjust
350 Slew great Orion:⁸ and eeke by his side
He had his ploughing share, and coulter⁹ ready tyde.

40

- Next was November, he full grosse and fat,
As fed with lard, and that right well might seeme;
For, he had been a fatting hogs of late,
355 That yet his browes with sweat, did reek and steem,
And yet the season was full sharp and breem;^o bitter
In planting eeke he took no small delight:
Whereon he rode, not easie was to deeme;
For it a dreadfull Centaure was in sight,
360 The seed of Saturne and faire Naïs, Chiron hight.

41

And after him, came next the chill December:
Yet he through merry feasting which he made,
And great bonfires, did not the cold remember;

6. Astraea, who symbolized Justice.

7. I.e., his head was unsteady from the wine-mash. "Wine-fats see": wine vats' sea.

8. According to one legend, Orion boasted that he could kill anything that came from the earth. Indignant at his arrogance, Diana sent a scorpion which stung and killed him.

9. Cutting edge of a plow.

His Saviours birth his mind so much did glad:

- 365 Upon a shaggy-bearded Goat he rode,
The same wherewith Dan Jove in tender yeares,
They say, was nourisht by th' Idaean mayd;¹
And in his hand a broad deepe boawle he beares;
Of which, he freely drinks an health to all his peeres.

42

- 370 Then came old January, wrappéd well
In many weeds to keep the cold away;
Yet did he quake and quiver like to quell,^o curdle
And blowe his nayles to warme them if he may:
For, they were numbd with holding all the day
375 An hatchet keene, with which he felléd wood,
And from the trees did lop the needlesse spray:
Upon an huge great Earth-pot steane² he stood;
From whose wide mouth, there flowéd forth the Romane flood.³

43

- And lastly, came cold February, sitting 380 In an old wagon, for he could not ride;
Drawne of two fishes for the season fitting,
Which through the flood before did softly slyde
And swim away: yet had he by his side
His plough and harness fit to till the ground,
385 And tooles to prune the trees, before the pride
Of hasting Prime did make them burgein^o round: bud
So past the twelve Months forth, and their dew places found.

44

- And after these, there came the Day, and Night,
Riding together both with equall pase,
390 Th' one on a Palfrey blacke, the other white;
But Night had covered her uncomely face
With a black veile, and held in hand a mace,
On top whereof the moon and stars were pight,^o placed
And sleep and darknesse round about did trace:
395 But Dav did beare, upon his scepters hight,
The goodly Sun, encompass all with beamés bright.

45

- Then came the Howres, faire daughters of high Jove,
And timely^o Night, the which were all endowed passing
With wondrous beauty fit to kindle love;
400 But they were Virgins all, and love eschewed,
That might forslack^o the charge to them foreshewed cause neglect of

By mighty Jove; who did them Porters make
Of heavens gate (whence all the gods issued)
Which they did davly watch, and nightly wake

- 405 By even turnes, ne ever did their charge forsake.

1. Jove was saved by his mother Rhea from being eaten by Cronus, his father. He was brought up in Crete and suckled by a goat. The "Idaeon mayd" is the nymph of a Mt. Ida in Crete.

2. Jar (here standing for the constellation Aquarius).

3. I.e., the Tiber River.

46

- And after all came Life, and lastly Death;
 Death with most grim and griesly visage seene,
 Yet is he nought but parting of the breath;
 Ne ought to see, but like a shade to weene,^o be imagined
 410 Unbodiéd, unsouled, unheard, unseene.
 But Life was like a faire young lusty boy,
 Such as they faine Dan Cupid to have beene,
 Full of delightfull health and lively joy,
 Deckt all with flowres, and wings of gold fit to employ.

47

- 415 When these were past, thus gan the Titanesse:
 "Lo, mighty mother, now be judge and say,
 Whether in all thy creatures more or lesse
 CHANGE doth not raign and beare the greatest sway:
 For, who sees not, that Time on all doth pray?
 420 But Times do change and move continually.
 So nothing here long standeth in one stay:
 Wherefore, this lower world who can deny
 But to be subject still to Mutabilitie?"

48

- Then thus gan Jove: "Right true it is, that these 425 And all things else that under heaven dwell
 Are chaunged of Time, who doth them all disseise^o deprive
 Of being: But, who is it (to me tell)
 That Time himselve doth move and still compell
 To keepe his course? Is not that namely^o wee only 430 Which poure that vertue^o from our heavenly cell, power
 That moves them all, and makes them changéd be?
 So them we gods doe rule, and in them also thee."

49

- To whom, thus Mutability: "The things
 Which we see not how they are moved and swayd,
 435 Ye may attribute to your selves as Kings,
 And say they by your secret powre are made:
 But what we see not, who shall us perswade?
 But were they so, as ve them faine to be,
 Moved by your might, and ordred by your ayde;
 440 Yet what if I can prove, that even yee
 Your selves are likewise changed, and subject unto mee?"

50

- "And first, concerning her that is the first,⁴
 Even you faire Cvnthia, whom so much ve make Joves dearest darling, she was bred and nurst
 445 On Cvnthus hill, whence she her name did take:
 Then is she mortall borne, how-so ye crake;^o hoast
 Besides, her face and countenance every day
 We changéd see, and sundry forms partake,

4. The moon is first because its orbit is closest to the earth.

Now horned, now round, now bright, now brown and gray:
450 So that as changefull as the Moone men use to say.

51

"Next, Mercury, who though he lesse appeare
To change his hew, and alwayes seeme as one;
Yet, he his course doth altar every yeare,
And is of late far out of order gone:
455 So Venus eeke, that goodly Paragone,
Though faire all night, yet is she darke all day;
And Phoebus self, who lightsome is alone,⁵
Yet is he oft eclipséd by the way,⁶
And fills the darkned world with terror and dismay.

52

460 "Now Mars that valiant man is changéd most:
For, he some times so far runs out of square,
That he his way doth seem quite to have lost,
And cleane without his usuall sphere to fare;
That even these Star-gazers stonisht are 465 At sight thereof, and damne their lying bookes:
So likewise, grim Sir Saturne oft doth spare
His sterne aspect, and calme his crabbed lookes:
So many turning cranks^o these have, so many crookes.^o twists/bends

53

"But you Dan Jove, that only constant are,
470 And King of all the rest, as ye do clame,
Are you not subject eeke to this misfare?^o
Then let me aske you this withouten blame,
Where were ye borne? some say in Crete by name,
Others in Thebes, and others other-where;
475 But wheresoever they comment^o the same,
They all consent that ye begotten were,
And borne here in this world, ne other can appeare.

mishap

invent

54

"Then are ye mortall borne, and thrall to me,
Unlesse the kingdome of the sky yee make 480 Immortall, and unchangeable to bee;
Besides, that power and vertue which ye spake,
That ye here worke, doth many changes take,
And your owne natures change: for, each of you
That vertue have, or this, or that to make,
Is checkt and changéd from his nature trew,
485 By others opposition or obliquid view.⁷

55

"Besides, the sundry motions of your Spheares,
So sundry waies and fashions as clerkes^o faine,
Some in short space, and some in longer yeares;

learned men

5. Alone is radiant.

6. In his course.

7. A reference to the central idea of astrology—that each planet has a "virtue" that it sheds on earth; the effect is dependent upon its position and the position of other planets.

What is the same but alteration plaine?

- 490 Onely the starrie skie doth still remaine:
 Yet do the Starres and Signes therein still move,
 And even it self is moved, as wizards saine.⁸
 But all that moveth, doth mutation love:
 Therefore both you and them to me I subject prove.

56

- 495 "Then since within this wide great Universe
 Nothing doth firme and permanent appeare,
 But all things tost and turned by transverse:⁹
 What then should let,^o but I aloft should reare hinder
 My Trophee, and from all, the triumph beare?
 500 Now judge then (O thou greatest goddesse trew!)
 According as thv selfe doest see and heare,
 And unto me addoom^o that is my dew; decree, award
 That is the rule of all, all being ruled by you."

57

- So having ended, silence long ensewed,
 505 Ne Nature to or fro spake for a space,
 But with firme eyes affixt, the ground still viewed.
 Meane while, all creatures, looking in her face,
 Expecting th' end of this so doubtfull case,
 Did hang in long suspence what would ensue, 510 To whether^o side should fall the soveraigne place: which
 At length, she looking up with chearefull view,
 The silence brake, and gave her doome^o in speeches few. judgment

58

- "I well consider all that ye have sayd,
 And find that all things stedfastnes doe hate
 515 And changéd be: vet being rightly wayd^o weighed
 They are not changéd from their first estate;
 But by their change their being doe dilate:^o develop
 And turning to themselves at length againe,
 Doe worke their owne perfection so by fate:
 520 Then over them Change doth not rule and raigne;
 But they raigne over change, and doe their states maintaine.

59

- "Cease therefore daughter further to aspire,
 And thee content thus to be ruled by me:
 For thy decay thou seekst by thy desire;
 525 But time shall come that all shall changéd bee,
 And from thenceforth, none no more change shall see."
 So was the Titaness put downe and whist,^o silenced
 And Jove confirmed in his imperiall see.^o throne
 Then was that whole assembly quite dismiss,
 530 And Natur's selfe did vanish, wither no man wist.^o knew

8. As scientists say.

9. Haphazardly.

The VIII Canto, Unperfite

1

When I bethinke me on that speech whyleare,^o recent
 Of Mutability, and well it way:
 Me seemes, that though she all unworthy were
 Of the Heav'ns Rule; yet very sooth to say,
 5 In all things else she beares the greatest sway.
 Which makes me loath this state of life so tickle,^o precarious
 And love of things so vaine to cast away;
 Whose flowring pride, so fading and so fickle,
 Short^o Time shall soon cut down with his consuming sickle.

fleeing

2

10 Then gin I thinke on that which Nature sayd,
 Of that same time when no more Change shall be.
 But stedfast rest of all things firmly stayd
 Upon the pillours of Eternity,
 That is contrayv to Mutabilitie:
 15 For, all that moveth, doth in Change delight:
 But thence-forth all shall rest eternally
 With Him that is the God of Sabbaoth hight:
 O that great Sabbaoth God, graunt me that Sabaoths¹⁰ sight.

1590, 1596, 1609

From Amoretti¹

Sonnet 1

Happy ye leaves when as those lilly hands,
 Which hold my life in their dead doing² might,
 Shall handle you and hold in loves soft bands,
 Lyke captives trembling at the victors sight.
 5 And happy lines, on which with starry light,
 Those lamping^o eyes will deigne sometimes to look flashing
 And reade the sorrowes of my dying spright,^o spirit
 Written with teares in harts close^o bleeding book. secret
 And happy rymes bathed in the sacred brooke,
 10 Of Helicon³ whence she derivéd is,

10. Spenser here confuses, perhaps intentionally, the Hebrew words for "armies, hosts" and for "rest."

1. I.e., "little loves" or "little love poems." They are sonnets to a woman named Elizabeth—probably Elizabeth Boyle, who became Spenser's second wife. The sequence, or cycle, tells of a courtship (Epithalamion, with which they were published, is a song for a wedding). The Amoretti draws, like other sonnet cycles, upon characteristic and conventional themes and conceits; what is characteristically Spenserian about them is his understanding, and yoking, of the spirit and the flesh; see, for example, lines 9–12 of Sonnet 1. The rhyme scheme is abab bcbc cdcd ee, a difficult pattern requiring four words for two of the rhymes.

2. I.e., killing.

3. The "sacred brooke" is the Hippocrene, which flows from Mount Helicon, the mountain sacred to the Muses. It not only inspires the poet but here represents heaven, where his beloved originated.

When ye behold that Angels blessed looke,
 My soules long lackéd foode, my heavens blis.
 Leaves, lines, and rymes, seeke her to please alone,
 Whom if ye please, I care for other none.

Sonnet 15

Ye tradefull merchants, that with weary toyle
 Do seeke most pretious things to make your gain,
 And both the Indias⁴ of their treasures spoile,
 What needeth you to seeke so farre in vaine?
 5 For loe my love doth in her selfe containe
 All this world's riches that may farre^o be found. anywhere
 If saphyres, loe her eyes be saphyres plaine;
 If rubies, loe her lips be rubies sound;
 If pearls, her teeth be pearls both pure and round;
 10 If yvorie, her forehead yvory weene;^o suppose
 If gold, her locks are finest gold on ground;^o earth
 If silver, her faire hands are silver sheene.
 But that which fairest is, but few behold:
 Her mind, adorn'd with vertues manifold.

Sonnet 34

Lyke as a ship that through the ocean wyde,
 By conduct of some star doth make her way,
 Whenas a storme hath dimd her trusty guyde,
 Out of her course doth wander far astray.
 5 So I whose star, that wont with her bright ray,
 Me to direct, with cloudes is overcast,
 Doe wander now in darknesse and dismay,
 Through hidden perils round about me plast.^o placed
 Yet hope I well, that when this storme is past
 10 My Helice⁵ the lodestar of my lyfe
 Will shine again, and looke on me at last,
 With lovely light to cleare my cloudy grief.
 Till then I wander carefull^o comfortlesse, full of cares
 In secret sorow and sad pensivenesse.

Sonnet 37

What guyle is this, that those her golden tresses,
 She doth attyre under a net of gold:
 And with sly^o skill so cunningly them dresses, clever
 That which is gold or heare, may scarce be told?
 5 Is it that mens frayle eyes, which gaze too bold,
 She may entangle in that golden snare:
 And being caught may craftily enfold,
 Theyr weaker harts, which are not wel aware?
 Take heed therefore, myne eyes, how ye doe stare
 10 Henceforth too rashly on that guilefull net,
 In which if ever ye entrappéd are,
 Out of her bands ye by no means shall get.

4. I.e., India and the West Indies.

5. The Big Dipper or North Star.

Fondnesse° it were for any being free,
To covet fetters, though they golden bee.

foolishness

Sonnet 54

Of this worlds theatre in which we stay,
My love like the spectator ydly sits
Beholding me that all the pageants° play, roles
Disguysing diversly my troubled wits.
5 Sometimes I joy when glad occasion fits,
And mask in myrth lyke to a comedy:
Soone after when my joy to sorrow flits,
I waile and make my wocs a tragedy.
Yet she, beholding me with constant eye,
10 Delights not in my merth nor rues my smart:
But when I laugh she mocks, and when I cry
She laughs and hardens evermore her heart.
What then can move her? if nor merth nor mone,° moan
She is no woman, but a sencelesse stone.

Sonnet 64⁶

Comming to kisse her lyps (such grace I found)
Me seemd I smelt a gardin of sweet flowres
That dainty odours from them threw around
For damzels fit to decke their lovers bowres.
5 Her lips did smell lyke unto gillyflowers,° carnations
Her ruddy cheeks like unto roses red;
Her snowy browes lyke budded bellamoures,° bellflowers
Her lovely eyes like pincks but newly spread,
Her goodly bosome lyke a strawberry bed,
10 Her neck lyke to a bounch of cullambynes;
Her brest lyke lillyes ere they leaves be shed,
Her nipples lyke yong blossomd jessemynes.° jasmynes
Such fragrant flowres doe give most odorouse smell,
But her sweet odour did them all excell.

Sonnet 68

Most glorious Lord of lyfe, that on this day,⁷
Didst make thy triumph over death and sin:
And having harrowed hell,¹ didst bring away
Captivity thence captive us to win:
5 This joyous day, deare Lord, with joy begin,
And grant that we for whom thou diddest dye
Being with thy deare blood clene washt from sin,
May live for ever in felicity.
And that thy love we weighing worthily,
10 May likewise love thee for the same againe:

6. Much of the imagery of this sonnet is imitated from the Song of Solomon iv.10-16.

7. Easter Day.

1. In the apocryphal gospels, Christ descended into hell and led out those who had lived before his time that deserved to be saved. "Captivity thence captive" is a Biblical phrase, as in Judges v.12 and Ephesians iv.8.

And for thy sake that all lyke deare didst buy,
 With love may one another entertayne.
 So let us love, deare love, lyke as we ought,
 Love is the lesson which the Lord us taught.²

Sonnet 70

Fresh spring the herald of loves mighty king,
 In whose cote armour³ richly are displayd
 All sorts of flowers the which on earth do spring
 In goodly colours gloriously arrayd.
 5 Goe to my love, where she is carelesse layd,
 Yet in her winters bowre not well awake:
 Tell her the joyous time wil not be staid
 Unlesse she doe him by the forelock take.
 Bid her therefore her selfe soone ready make,
 10 To wayt on love amongst his lovclly crew:
 Where every one that misseth then her make,[°] mate, lover
 Shall be by him amearest with penance dew.⁴
 Make hast therefore sweet love, whilst it is prime,^{°early morning}
 For none can call againe the passéd time.

Sonnet 74

Most happy letters fram'd by skilfull trade,[°] practice
 With which that happy name was first desynd:
 The which three times thrise happy hath me made,
 With guifts of body, fortune and of mind.
 5 The first my being to me gave by kind,[°] nature
 From mothers womb deriv'd by dew descent,
 The second is my sovereigne Queene most kind,
 That honour and large riches to me lent.
 The third my love, my lives last ornament,
 10 By whom my spirit out of dust was rayسد:
 To speake her prayse and glory excellent,
 Of all alive most worthy to be prayسد.
 Ye three Elizabeths for ever live,
 That three such graces did unto me give.

Sonnet 75⁵

One day I wrote her name upon the strand,[°] beach
 But came the waves and washéd it away:
 Agayne I wrote it with a second hand,
 But came the tyde, and made my paynes his pray.[°] prey
 5 "Vayne man," sayd she, "that doest in vaine assay,
 A mortall thing so to immortalize,
 For I my selve shall lyke to this decay,
 And eek my name bee wypéd out lykewize."

2. Cf. John xv.12: "This is my commandment, That ye love one another, as I have loved you."

3. Coat of arms.

4. I.e., have suitable penance imposed upon him.

5. The theme here expressed is an ancient and traditional one. Cf. Shakespeare's Sonnet 55, "Not marble, nor the gilded monuments,"

- “Not so,” quod° I, “let baser things devise,° quoth/contrive
 10 To dy in dust, but you shall live by fame:
 My verse your vertues rare shall eternize,
 And in the heavens wryte your glorious name.
 Where whenas death shall all the world subdew,
 Our love shall live, and later life renew.”

Sonnet 79

- Men call you fayre, and you doe credit° it, believe
 For that your selfe ye dayly such doe see:
 But the trew fayre,° that is the gentle wit, beauty
 And vertuous mind, is much more praysd of me.
 5 For all the rest, how ever fayre it be,
 Shall turne to nought and loose that glorious hew:° form
 But onely that is permanent and free
 From frayle corruption, that doth flesh ensew.° outlast
 That is true beautie: that doth argue you
 10 To be divine and borne of heavenly seed:
 Derived from that fayre Spirit,° from whom al true
 And perfect beauty did at first proceed.
 He onely fayre, and what he fayre hath made:
 All other fayre, lyke flowres, untymely fade.

1595

Epithalamion¹

Ye learned sisters which have oftentimes
 Beene to me ayding, others to adorne:²

6. I.e., the Holy Spirit.

1. An epithalamion is a wedding song or poem; its Greek name conveys that it was sung on the threshold of the bridal chamber. The genre was widely practiced by the Latin poets, particularly Catullus. Catullus wrote two kinds of epithalamion: one in an elevated ceremonial style, the other in a more private, lyric style; it is the latter style that Spenser follows. Common elements are the invocation to the Muses, the bringing home of the bride, the singing and dancing at the wedding party, and the preparations for the wedding night. The reader should be aware that the poem's merit is not in its "originality" but in its evocative, many-layered commingling of the conventions. Spenser blends with these conventional elements his own Irish setting and native folklore.

In addition, the Epithalamion is highly structured. First there is an introductory stanza, then two 10-stanza sections on each side of the two central stanzas about the church ceremony itself. Each of the 10-stanza sections is divided into units of 3-4-3. As A. Kent Hieatt has pointed out in his book, Short Time's Endless Monument (1960), the poem also has a surprising and complex numerical structure that reinforces the motif of the passage of time. For example, the poem has exactly 365 long lines (composed of five or more metrical feet) matching the number of days in the year. There are 24 stanzas, counting the envoy, matching the hours of one day and night. Of these stanzas, the first 16 describe the course of the day, in which the woods echo the various sounds; the last 8 describe the night, a time of silence in which the woods no longer echo. At the summer solstice (cf. line 266 and note) in the latitude of Ireland, night in fact falls after 16 hours of daylight.

To point to these elements of high artistry is not, of course, to explain why the Epithalamion is one of the great poems of the language. The subtle time structure serves to reinforce the idea implicit throughout the poem that this marriage has reference to all marriages; it emphasizes the endless cycle of time, measured by the passing of the hours and the years—as against which marriage, as a Christian sacrament, stands firm, “eterne in mutabilitie.”

2. I.e., to write poems in praise of others (e.g., Queen Elizabeth in The Faerie Queene). The “learned sisters” are the Muses.

- Whom ye thought worthy of your gracefull rymes,
 That even the greatest did not greatly scorne
 5 To heare theyr names sung in your simple layes,
 But joyéd in theyr prayse.
 And when ye list your owne mishaps to mourne,
 Which death, or love, or fortunes wreck did rayse,
 Your string could soone to sadder tenor^o turne, mood
 10 And teach the woods and waters to lament
 Your dolefull dreriment.^o sorrow
 Now lay those sorrowfull complaints aside,
 And having all your heads with girland crownd,
 Helpe me mine owne loves prayes to resound,
 15 Ne let the same of^o any be envide: by
 So Orpheus did for his owne bride,³
 So I unto my selfe alone will sing,
 The woods shall to me answer and my Eccho ring.
 Early before the worlds light giving lampe,
 20 His golden beame upon the hils doth spred,
 Having disperst the nights unchearefull dampe,
 Doe ye awake, and with fresh lustyhed^o vigor
 Go to the bowre^o of my beloved love, bedchamber
 My truest turtle dove,
 25 Bid her awake; for Hymen⁴ is awake,
 And long since ready forth his maske to move,
 With his bright Tead⁵ that flames with many a flake,^o spark
 And many a bachelor to waite on him,
 In theyr fresh garments trim.
 30 Bid her awake therefore and soone her dight,^o dress
 For lo the wished day is come at last,
 That shall for al the paynes and sorrowes past,
 Pay to her usury^o of long delight: interest
 And whylest she doth her dight,
 35 Doe ye to her of joy and solace sing,
 That all the woods may answer and your eccho ring.
 Bring with you all the Nymphes that you can heare⁶
 Both of the rivers and the forrests greene:
 And of the sea that neighbours to her neare,
 40 Al with gay girlands goodly wel beseene.⁷
 And let them also with them bring in hand,
 Another gay girland
 For my fayre love of lillyes and of roses,
 Bound truelove wize⁸ with a blew silke riband.
 45 And let them make great store of bridale poses,^o posies
 And let them eeke bring store of other flowers

3. Orpheus, the most famous musician of classical antiquity, was equally famous for his love for his wife Eurydice.

4. The god of marriage, who leads a "maske" or procession at weddings.

5. A ceremonial torch, associated with marriages since classical times.

6. I.e., that can hear you.

7. I.e., beautified.

8. I.e., in a love knot.

To deck the bridale bowers.
 And let the ground whereas her foot shall tread,
 For feare the stones her tender foot should wrong
 Be strewed with fragrant flowers all along,
 And diapred lyke the discolored mead.⁹

- 50 Which done, doe at her chamber dore awayt,
 For she will waken strayt,^o
 The whiles doe ye this song unto her sing,
 55 The woods shall to you answer and your Eccho ring.

straightway

Ye Nymphes of Mulla¹ which with careful heed,
 The silver scaly trouts doe tend full well,
 And greedy pikes which use therein to feed,
 (Those trouts and pikes all others doo excell)

- 60 And ye likewise, which keepe the rushy lake,
 Where none doo fishes take,

Bynd up the locks the which hang scatterd light,
 And in his waters which your mirror make,
 Behold your faces as the christall bright,

- 65 That when you come whereas my love doth lie,
 No blemish she may spie.

And eke ye lightfoot mayds which keepe the deere,²

That on the hoary mountayne use to towre,
 And the wylde wolves which seeke them to devoure,

- 70 With your steele darts doo chace from comming neer
 Be also present heere,

To helpe to decke her and to help to sing,
 That all the woods may answer and your eccho ring.

Wake, now my love, awake; for it is time,

- 75 The Rosy Morne long since left Tithones bed,

All ready to her silver coche to clyme,

And Phoebus gins to shew his glorious hed.

Hark how the cheerefull birds do chaunt theyr laies

And carroll of loves praise.

- 80 The merry Larke hir mattins^o sing aloft,

morning prayers

The thrush replyes, the Mavis descant³ playes,

The Ouzell shrills, the Ruddock warbles soft,

So goodly all agree with sweet consent,

To this dayes merriment.

- 85 Ah my deere love why doe ye sleepe thus long,

When meeter^o were that ye should now awake,

more fitting

T' awayt the comming of your joyous make,^o

mate

And hearken to the birds lovelearnéd song,

The deawy leaves among.

9. I.e., ornamented like the many-colored meadow.

1. The vale of Mulla, near Spenser's home in Ireland.

2. I.e., all wild animals, kept by the forest nymphs. To "towre" (a falconry term) is to occupy heights.

3. A melody or counterpoint written above a musical theme—a soprano obbligato. The "Mavis" is the thrush. The "Ouzell" is the blackbird (which sings in England); the "Ruddock," the European robin. The birds' concert is a convention of medieval love poetry.

- 90 For they of joy and pleasance to you sing,
 That all the woods them answer and theyr eccho ring.
 My love is now awake out of her dreame,
 And her fayre eyes like stars that dimmed were
 With darksome cloud, now shew theyr goodly beams
 95 More bright then Hesperus^o his head doth rere. evening star
 Come now ye damzels, daughters of delight,
 Helpe quickly her to dight,^o adorn
 But first come ye fayre houres which were begot
 In Joves sweet paradice, of Day and Night,
 100 Which doe the seasons of the yeare allot,
 And al that ever in this world is fayre
 Doe make and still repayre.⁴
 And ye three handmayds of the Cyprian Queene,⁵
 The which doe still adorne her beauties pride,
 105 Helpe to addorne my beautifullest bride:
 And as ye her array, still throw betweene^o now and then
 Some graces to be seene,
 And as ye use to Venus, to her sing,
 The whiles the woods shal answer and your eccho ring.
 110 Now is my love all ready forth to come,
 Let all the virgins therefore well awayt,
 And ye fresh boyes that tend upon her groome
 Prepare your selves; for he is comming strayt.
 Set all your things in seemely good aray^o order
 115 Fit for so joyfull day,
 The joyfult day that ever sunne did see.
 Faire Sun, shew forth thy favourable ray,
 And let thy lifull^o heat not fervent be lifegiving
 For feare of burning her sunshyny face,
 120 Her beauty to disgrace.
 O fayrest Phoebus, fathcr of the Muse,
 If ever I did honour thee aright,
 Or sing the thing, that mote^o thy mind delight, might
 Doe not thy servants simple boone^o refuse, request
 125 But let this day let this one day be myne,
 Let all the rest be thine.
 Then I thy soverayne prayses loud wil sing,
 That all the woods shal answer and theyr eccho ring.
 Harke how the Minstrels gin to shrill aloud
 130 Their merry Musick that resounds from far,
 The pipe, the tabor, and the trembling Croud,⁶
 That well agree withouten breach or jar.^o discord
 But most of all the Damzels doe delite,

4. In the passage of the hours, all things on earth change. "Still": continuously.
 5. The Graces attending on Venus ("Cyprian Queene"), representing brightness, joy, and bloom.

6. Primitive fiddle; the "tabor" is a small drum. Spenser here designates Irish, not classical, instruments and music for the classical masque or ballet.

tambourines

- When they their tymbrels° smyte,
 135 And thereunto doe daunce and carrol sweet,
 That all the sences they doe ravish quite,
 The whyles the boyes run up and downe the street,
 Crying aloud with strong confuséd noyce,
 As if it were one voyce.
 140 *Hymen ió Hymen, Hymen*⁷ they do shout,
 That even to the heavens they shouting shrill
 Doth reach, and all the firmament doth fill,
 To which the people standing all about,
 As in approvance doe thereto applaud
 145 And loud advaunce her laud,°
 And evermore they Hymen Hymen sing,
 That all the woods them answer and their eccho ring.

praise

- Loe where she comes along with portly° pace
 Lyke Phoebe from her chamber of the East,
 150 Aysing forth to run her mighty race,⁸
 Clad all in white, that seemes° a virgin best.
 So well it her beseems that ye would weene
 Some angell she had beene.

stately suits

Alliteration
polyptoton

- Her long loose yellow locks lyke golden wyre,
 155 Sprinckled with perle, and perling° flowres a tweene,
 Doe lyke a golden mantle her attyre,
 And being crownéd with a girland greene,
 Seeme lyke some mayden Queene.
 Her modest eyes abashéd to behold
 160 So many gazers, as on her do stare,
 Upon the lowly ground affixéd are.
 Ne dare lift up her countenance too bold,
 But blush to heare her prayes sung so loud,
 So farre from being proud.
 165 Nathlesse doe ye still loud her prayes sing.
 That all the woods may answer and your eccho ring.

winding

- Tell me ye merchants daughters did ye see
 So fayre a creature in your towne before,
 So sweet, so lovely, and so mild as she,
 170 Adorn'd with beautyes grace and vertues store,
 Her goodly eyes lyke Saphyres shining bright,
 Her forehead ivory white,
 Her cheekes lyke apples which the sun hath rudded,°
 Her lips lyke cherries charming men to byte,
 175 Her brest like to a bowle of creame uncrudded,°
 Her paps lyke lillies budded,
 Her snowie necke lyke to a marble towre,
 And all her body like a pallacc fayre,
 Ascending uppe with many a stately stayre,

made red

uncurdled

7. The name of the god of marriage, used as a conventional exclamation at weddings.

8. Phoebe is the moon, a virgin like the bride; the reference to her anticipates the night.

- 180 To honors seat and chastities sweet bowre.⁹
 Why stand ye still ye virgins in amaze,
 Upon her so to gaze,
 Whiles ye forget your former lay to sing,
 To which the woods did answer and your eccho ring.
- 185 But if ye saw that which no eyes can see,
 The inward beauty of her lively spright,^o soul
 Garnisht with heavenly guifts of high degree,
 Much more then would ye wonder at that sight,
 And stand astonisht lyke to those which red^o saw
- 190 Medusaes mazeful hed.¹
 There dwels sweet love and constant chastity,
 Unspotted fayth and comely womanhood,
 Regard of honour and mild modesty,
 There vertue raynes as Queene in royal throne,
- 195 And giveth lawes alone. lower
 The which the base^o affections doe obay,
 And yeld theyr services unto her will,
 Ne thought of thing uncomely ever may Thereto approach to tempt her mind to ill.
- 200 Had ye once seene these her celestial thrasures,
 And unrevealéd pleasures,
 Then would ye wonder and her prayscs sing,
 That al the woods should answer and your eccho ring.
- Open the temple gates unto my love,
 205 Open them wide that she may enter in,
 And all the postes adome as doth behove,²
 And all the pillours deck with girlands trim,
 For to recyve this Saynt with honour dew,
 That commeth in to you.
- 210 With trembling steps and humble reverence,
 She commeth in, before th' almighties vew,
 Of her ye virgins learne obedience,
 When so ye come into those holy places,
 To humble your proud faces:
- 215 Bring her up to th' high altar, that she may
 The sacred cercomies there partake,
 The which do endless matrimony make,
 And let the roring Organs loudly play
 The praises of the Lord in lively notes,
- 220 The whiles with hollow throates
 The Choristers the joyous Antheme sing,
 That al the woods may answere and their eccho ring.

9. The head, where the higher faculties are. The catalogue of qualities is a convention in love poetry. Cf. also The Song of Solomon iv–viii.

1. Medusa, one of the Gorgons, had serpents instead of hair (hence a “maze-ful hed”): the effect on a beholder was to turn him to stone.

2. As is proper. The doorposts were trimmed for weddings in classical times, and the custom was often referred to in classical and medieval love poetry.

- Behold whiles she before the altar stands
 Hearing the holy priest that to her speakes
 225 And blesseth her with his two happy hands,
 How the red roses flush up in her cheekes,
 And the pure snow with goodly vermill^o stayne, vermilion
 Like crimson dyde in grayne,^o fast color
 That even th' Angels which continually,
 230 About the sacred Altare doe remaine,
 Forget their service and about her fly,
 Ofte peeping in her face that seemes more fayre,
 The more they on it stare.
 But her sad^o eyes still fastened on the ground, modest
 235 Are governéd with goodly modesty,
 That suffers not one looke to glaunce awry,
 Which may let in a little thought unsownd.
 Why blush ye love to give to me your hand,
 The pledge of all our band?^o bond, tie
 240 Sing ye sweet Angels, Alleluya sing,
 That all the woods may answere and your eccho ring.
- Now al is done; bring home the bride againe,
 Bring home the triumph of our victory,
 Bring home with you the glory of her gaine,³
 245 With joyance bring her and with jollity.
 Never had man more joyfull day then this,
 Whom heaven would heape with blis.
 Make feast therefore now all this live long day,
 This day for ever to me holy is,
 250 Poure out the wine without restraint or stay,
 Poure not by cups, but by the belly full,
 Poure out to all that wull,^o want it
 And sprinkle all the postes and wals with wine,
 That they may sweat, and drunken be withall.
 255 Crowne ye God Bacchus with a coronall,^o flower garland
 And Hymen also crowne with wreathes of vine,
 And let the Graces daunce unto the rest;
 For they can doo it best:
 The whiles the maydens doe theyr carroll sing,
 260 To which the woods shal answer and theyr eccho ring.
 Ring ye the bells, ye young men of the towne,
 And leave your wonted^o labors for this day: usual
 This day is holy; doe ye write it downe,
 That ye for ever it remember may.
 265 This day the sunne is in his chieftest hight,
 With Barnaby the bright,⁴
 From whence declining daily by degrees,
 He somewhat loseth of his heat and light,

3. I.e., the glory of gaining her.

4. St. Barnabas' Day, at the time of the summer solstice.

- When once the Crab⁵ behind his back he sees.
 270 But for this time it ill ordained was,
 To chose the longest day in all the yeare,
 And shortest night, when longest fitter weare:
 Yet never day so long, but late^o would passe. at last
 Ring ye the bells, to make it weare away,
 275 And bonefiers make all day,
 And daunce about them, and about them sing:
 That all the woods may answer, and your eccho ring.
 Ah when will this long weary day have end,
 And lende me leave to come unto my love?
 280 How slowly do the houres theyr numbers spend?
 How slowly does sad Time his feathers move?
 Hast thee O fayrest Planet to thy home
 Within the Westerne fome:
 Thy tyred steedes long since have need of rest.
 285 Long though it be, at last I see it gloome,
 And the bright evening star with golden creast
 Appeare out of the East.
 Fayre childe of beauty, glorious lampe of love
 That all the host of heaven in rankes doost lead, 290 And guydest lovers through the nightés dread,
 How chearefully thou lookest from above,
 And seemst to laugh atweene thy twinkling light
 As joying in the sight
 Of these glad many which for joy doe sing,
 295 That all the woods them answer and their echo ring.
 Now ceasse ye damsels your delights forepast;
 Enough is it, that all the day was youre:
 Now day is doen, and night is nighing fast:
 Now bring the Bryde into the brydall boures.
 300 Now night is come, now soone her disaray,
 And in her bed her lay;
 Lay her in lillies and in violets,
 And silken courteins over her display,^o spread
 And odour sheetes, and Arras^o coverlets. tapestry
 305 Behold how goodly my faire love does ly
 In proud humility;
 Like unto Maia,⁶ when as Jove her tooke,
 In Tempe, lying on the flowry gras,
 Twixt sleepe and wake, after she weary was,
 310 With bathing in the Acidalian brooke.
 Now it is night, ye damsels may be gon,
 And leave my love alone,
 And leave likewise your former lay to sing:
 The woods no more shal answeare, nor your echo ring.

5. The constellation Cancer between Gemini and Leo. The sun, passing through the zodiac, leaves the Crab behind toward the end of July.

6. The eldest and most beautiful of the Pleiades.

315 Now welcome night, thou night so long expected,
 That long daies labour doest at last defray,^o pay
 And all my cares, which cruell love collected,
 Hast sumd in one, and cancelléd for aye:
 Spread thy broad wing over my love and me,
 320 That no man may us see,
 And in thy sable mantle us enwrap,
 From feare of perrill and foule horror free.
 Let no false treason seeke us to entrap,
 Nor any dread disquiet once annoy
 325 The safety of our joy:
 But let the night be calme and quietsome,
 Without tempestuous storms or sad af ray:
 Lyke as when Jove with fayre Alcmena⁷ lay,
 When he begot the great Tiryntian groome:
 330 Or lyke as when he with thy selfe⁸ did lie,
 And begot Majesty.
 And let the mayds and yongmen cease to sing:
 Ne let the woods them answer, nor theyr eccho ring.

Let no lamenting cryes, nor dolefull teares,
 335 Be heard all night within nor yet without.
 Ne let false whispers, breeding hidden feares,
 Breake gentle sleepe with misconceivéd dout.^o fear
 Let no deluding dreames, nor dreadful sights
 Make sudden sad affrights;
 340 Ne let housefyres, nor lightnings helpelesse harmes,
 Ne let the Pouke,⁹ nor other evill sprights,
 Ne let mischivous witches with theyr charmes,
 Ne let hob Goblins, names whose sence we see not,
 Fray^o us with things that be not. terrify
 345 Let not the shriech Oule, nor the Storke be heard:
 Nor the night Raven that still^o deadly yels,¹ continuously
 Nor damnéd ghosts cald up with mighty spels,
 Nor griesly vultures make us once affeard:
 Ne let th'unpleasant Quayre of Frogs still croking
 350 Make us to wish theyr choking.
 Let none of these theyr drery accents sing;
 Ne let the woods them answer, nor theyr eccho ring.

But let stil Silence trew night watches keepe,
 That sacred peace may in assurance rayne,
 355 And tymely sleep, when it is tyme to sleepe,
 May poure his limbs forth on your² pleasant playne,
 The whiles an hundred little wingéd loves,³

7. The mother of Hercules ("the great Tiryntian groome").

8. I.e., night.

9. Puck, Robin Goodfellow—here more powerful and evil than Shakespeare made him.

1. The owl and the night raven were birds of ill omen; the stork, in Chaucer's Parliament of Fowls, is called an avenger of adultery. "Still": always.

2. I.e., Night's.

3. Cupids (or amoretti).

- Like divers fethered doves,
 Shall fly and flutter round about your bed,
 360 And in the secret darke, that none reproves,
 Their prety stealthes shal worke, and snares shal spread
 To filch away sweet snatches of delight,
 Conceald through covert night.
 Ye sonnes of Venus, play your sports at will,
 365 For greedy pleasure, carelesse of your toyes,^o frivolities
 Thinks more upon her paradise of joyes,
 Then what ye do, albe it good or ill.
 All night therefore attend your merry play,
 For it will soone be day:
 370 Now none doth hinder you, that say or sing,
 Ne will the woods now answer, nor your Eccho ring.
- Who is the same, which at my window peepes?
 Or whose is that faire face, that shines so bright,
 Is it not Cinthia,⁴ she that never sleepes,
 375 But walkes about high heaven al the night?
 O fayrest goddesse, do thou not envy
 My love with me to spy:
 For thou likewise didst love, though now unthought,^o unsuspected
 And for a fleece of woll,^o which privily, wool
 380 The Latmian shephard⁵ once unto thee brought,
 His pleasures with thee wrought,
 Therefore to us be favorable now;
 And sith of wemens labours thou hast charge,⁶
 And generation goodly dost enlarge,
 385 Encline thy will t' effect our wishfull vow,
 And the chast wombe informe^o with timely seed, give life to
 That may our comfort breed:
 Till which we cease our hopefull hap to sing,
 Ne let the woods us answeare, nor our Eccho ring.
- And thou great Juno, which with awful might 390 The lawes of wedlock still dost patronize,
 And the religion of the faith first plight
 With sacred rites hast taught to solemnize:
 And eeke for comfort often calléd art
 395 Of women in their smart,^o labor
 Eternally bind thou this lovely band,
 And all thy blessings unto us impart.
 And thou glad Genius,⁷ in whose gentle hand,
 The bridale bowre and geniall bed remaine,
 400 Without blemish or staine,
 And the sweet pleasures of theyr loves delight
 With secret ayde doest succour and supply,

4. I.e., the moon.

5. Endymion, beloved by the moon. The "fleece of woll," however, comes from another story—that of Pan's enticement of the moon.

6. Diana (the moon, "Cinthia") is, as Lucina, patroness of births; the "labours" are, of course, those of child-birth.

7. Patron of sex, pregnancy, reproduction.

- Till they bring forth the fruitfull progeny,
 Send us the timely fruit of this same night.
 405 And thou fayre Hebe,⁸ and thou Hymen free,
 Grant that it may so be.
 Til which we cease your further prayse to sing,
 Ne any woods shal answer, nor your Eccho ring.
- And ye high heavens, the temple of the gods,
 410 In which a thousand torches flaming bright
 Doe burne, that to us wretched earthly clods,
 In dreadful darknesse lend desired light;
 And all ye powers which in the same remayne,
 More than we men can fayne,
 415 Poure out your blessing on us plentiously,
 And happy influence upon us raine,
 That we may raise a large posterity,
 Which from the earth, which they may long possesse,
 With lasting happinesse,
 420 Up to your haughty pallaces may mount,
 And for the guerdon of theyr glorious merit
 May heavenly tabernacles there inherit,
 Of blessed Saints for to increase the count.
 So let us rest, sweet love, in hope of this,
 425 And cease till then our tymely joyes to sing,
 The woods no more us answer, nor our eccho ring.
- Song made in lieu of many ornaments,
 With which my love should duly have bene dect,^o adorned
 Which cutting off through hasty accidents,
 430 Ye would not stay your dew time to expect,^o await
 But promist both to recompens,
 Be unto her a goodly ornament,
 And for short time an endlesse monument.⁹

1595

8. Patron of youth and freedom.

9. The envoy is traditionally apologetic in tone: the poem is offered as a substitute for wedding presents ("ornaments") that did not arrive in time for the wedding. But this elaborate poem is itself a "goodly ornament," for (in a final reference to the theme of time and eternity) it stands as a timeless monument of art to the passing day which it celebrates.

CHRISTOPHER MARLOWE

(1564-1593)

ca. 1587: Tamburlaine produced, introducing blank verse,
 "Marlowe's mighty line," to the stage.ca. 1592-93: Dr. Faustus, Hero and Leander.

Christopher Marlowe was born two months before William Shakespeare. He was the son of a Canterbury shoemaker; in 1580 he went to Corpus Christi College, Cambridge, on a scholarship which was ordinarily awarded to students preparing for the ministry. He held the scholarship for the maximum time, six years, but did not take holy orders. Instead, he began to write plays. When he came to supplicate for his Master of Arts degree in 1587, the university was about to deny it to him on the grounds that he intended to go abroad to Reims, the center of Catholic intrigue and propaganda against Elizabeth, and remain there. But the Privy Council intervened and requested that, since Marlowe had done the queen good service, he be granted his degree at the next commencement "because it is not Her Majesty's pleasure that anyone employed as he had been in matters touching the benefit of his country should be defamed by those that are ignorant in the affairs he went about." Although much sensational information about Marlowe has been discovered in modern times, we are still "ignorant in the affairs he went about."

Before he left Cambridge, he had certainly written his tremendously successful play Tamburlaine and perhaps also, in collaboration with his younger Cambridge contemporary, Thomas Nashe, the tragedy of Dido, Queen of Carthage. Tamburlaine, which soon was followed by a sequel (Tamburlaine, Part II), dramatizes the exploits of a 14th-century Scythian shepherd who conquered much of the known world, as Alexander had before him. In some 16th-century narratives Tamburlaine is represented as the type of modern (i.e., Renaissance) man, and in others he is portrayed as God's Scourge. In Marlowe's play he is the vehicle for the expression of boundless energy and ambition, the impulse to strive constantly upward to absolute power. When one of his victims accuses him of bloody cruelty, Tamburlaine answers that ambition to rule is embedded in the laws of nature and in basic human psychology:

Nature, that framed us of four elements
Warring within our breasts for regiment,
Doth teach us all to have aspiring minds;
Our souls, whose faculties can comprehend
The wondrous architecture of the world
And measure every planet's wandering course,
Still climbing after knowledge infinite,
And always moving as the restless spheres,
Wills us to wear ourselves and never rest
Until we reach the ripest fruit of all,
That perfect bliss and sole felicity,
The sweet fruition of an earthly crown.

The English theater had heard nothing like this before. Here is a resonant, rhetorical blank verse, eminently suited to projection from the stage, and appropriate also, as it turned out, for the robust talents of the actor Edward Alleyn who happily appeared in time to portray Marlowe's heroes.

From the time of his first great success, when he was 23, Marlowe had only six years to live. They were not calm years. In 1589 he was involved in a brawl with one William Bradley, in which the poet Thomas Watson intervened and killed Bradley. Both poets were jailed, but Watson got off on a plea of self-defense and Marlowe was released. In 1591 Marlowe was living in London with the playwright Thomas Kyd, who later gave information to the Privy Council accusing Marlowe of atheism and treason. On May 30, 1593, at the inn of the Widow Bull in Deptford, Marlowe was killed by a dagger thrust in an argument over the bill. In these six violent years, Marlowe composed five more plays: his sequel to Tamburlaine; The Massacre at Paris; two major tragedies, The Jew of Malta and Dr. Faustus; and a chronicle history play, Edward II.

Hero and Leander¹

On Hellespont, guilty of true-loves'² blood,
In view and opposite, two cities stood,
Sea-borderers, disjoined by Neptune's might;
The one Abydos, the other Sestos hight.³
At Sestos Hero dwelt; Hero the fair,
Whom young Apollo courted for her hair,
And offered as a dower his burning throne,
Where she should sit for men to gaze upon.
The outside of her garments were of lawn,⁴
The lining purple silk, with gilt stars drawn;
Her wide sleeves green, and bordered with a grove
Where Venus in her naked glory strove

5

10

1. Marlow's mythological-erotic poem, Hero and Leander, cannot be dated precisely. It was entered in the Stationers' Register on September 28, 1593, just four months after the poet's death, but the earliest known edition was not published until 1598. The poem has something in common with Marlowe's translation of Ovid's Elegies, generally thought to be early work, possibly done while he was still at Cambridge. The same verse form, the closed couplet, is used in both, though the versification is much more expert in Hero and Leander. Not much can be inferred about the interrelationship of Marlowe's poem with Shakespeare's Venus and Adonis, probably composed in late 1592. They are different in verse form (Shakespeare used a six-line stanza) and somewhat different in tone, though they belong to the same genre of erotic narrative, along with about a dozen other Elizabethan poems.

Hero and Leander is a free and original treatment of a classic tale of two tragic lovers. The story had been told by the 5th-century Alexandrian poet Musaeus. Marlowe's poem, however, is in the manner of Ovid, who had told the story in two epistles of his Heroides and who refers to it in one of his Elegies that Marlowe translated.

George Chapman, the playwright and translator of Homer, undertook to complete Marlowe's poem. His continuation, with his division of the poem into "Sestiads" (named after Sestos, where Hero lived) and verse summaries preceding each, was published shortly after the first surviving edition of Marlowe's poem. For a long time Chapman's altered version remained the standard form of the poem. Thanks to Louis L. Martz, however, Marlowe's poem has recently been freed of its accretions and can now be read as a single unified work. As Martz points out, the poem has a three-part structure: the meeting of the lovers at the Feast of Adonis; the inserted tale of Mercury and the Fates; and the concluding narrative of the consummation.

The narrative serves mainly as a framework on which to hang the poetry, and the characters are not intended to be consistent or psychologically credible, they inhabit a world of fancy and delight, of strange contrasts between innocence and the wild riot of amorous intrigues among the gods which is Ovid's subject matter. Hero is paradoxically a nun vowed to chastity and a devotee of Venus, the love goddess; Leander is both a sharp, sophisticated seducer and an incredibly innocent novice in sex. The gravely spoken asides, sometimes platitudes and sometimes cynical remarks about women, in the manner of Ovid, give a distance or disengagement to the experience of reading about the ill-fated lovers. The poem is rich in many ways: it is comic, erotic, decorative, now swiftly narrative, now deliberate and, in a light way, philosophical.

2. Sweethearts'.

3. Called.

4. A kind of fine linen or thin cambric.

To please the careless and disdainful eyes
 Of proud Adonis, that before her lies;⁵
 Her kirtle blue, whereon was many a stain, 15
 Made with the blood of wretched lovers slain.⁶
 Upon her head she ware a myrtle wreath,
 From whence her veil reached to the ground beneath.
 Her veil was artificial flowers and leaves,
 Whose workmanship both man and beast deceives; 20
 Many would praise the sweet smell as she passed,
 When 'twas the odor which her breath forth cast;
 And there for honey, bees have sought in vain,
 And, beat from thence, have lighted there again.
 About her neck hung chains of pebble-stone, 25
 Which, lightened⁷ by her neck, like diamonds shone.
 She ware no gloves, for neither sun nor wind
 Would burn or parch her hands, but to her mind⁸
 Or warm or cool them, for they took delight
 To play upon those hands, they were so white. 30
 Buskins⁹ of shells all silvered, used she,
 And branched with blushing coral to the knee,
 Where sparrows perched, of hollow pearl and gold,
 Such as the world would wonder to behold;
 Those with sweet water oft her handmaid fills, 35
 Which, as she went, would chirrup through the bills.
 Some say, for her the fairest Cupid pined,
 And looking in her face, was strooken blind.
 But this is true: so like was one the other,
 As he imagined Hero was his mother;¹ 40
 And oftentimes into her bosom flew,
 About her naked neck his bare arms threw,
 And laid his childish head upon her breast,
 And with still² panting rocked, there took his rest.
 So lovely fair was Hero, Venus' nun,³ 45
 As Nature wept, thinking she was undone,
 Because she took more from her than she left
 And of such wondrous beauty her bereft;
 Therefore, in sign her treasure suffered wrack,
 Since Hero's time hath half the world been black. 50
 Amorous Leander, beautiful and young,
 (Whose tragedy divine Musaeus⁴ sung)
 Dwelt at Abydos; since him dwelt there none

5. Venus's love for the young hunter, Adonis, and his death in the boar hunt are told by Ovid and by Shakespeare in Venus and Adonis. "Kirtle": skirt.

6. The extravagant claim is made that many "wretched lovers" had committed suicide at her feet because Hero would not have them.

7. Illuminated.

8. As she wished.

9. High shoes or boots.

1. I.e., Venus.

2. Continual.

3. The connotations of these two words are contradictory; Marlowe gets a similar effect elsewhere in the poem. Hero is a maiden in attendance at the temple of Venus, who is, of course, the goddess of love.

4. I.e., the author of the Greek poem upon which Hero and Leander is remotely based. He was sometimes confused with a legendary early Musaeus, supposed son of Orpheus—hence Marlowe calls him "divine."

For whom succeeding times make greater moan.
 His dangling tresses that were never shorn, 55
 Had they been cut and unto Colchos⁵ borne,
 Would have allured the vent'rous youth of Greece
 To hazard more than for the Golden Fleece.
 Fair Cynthia⁶ wished his arms might be her sphere;
 Grief makes her pale, because she moves not there. 60
 His body was as straight as Circe's wand;⁷
 Jove might have sipped out nectar from his hand.
 Even as delicious meat is to the taste,
 So was his neck in touching, and surpassed
 The white of Pelops' shoulder.⁸ I could tell ye 65
 How smooth his breast was, and how white his belly,
 And whose immortal fingers did imprint
 That heavenly path, with many a curious⁹ dint,
 That runs along his back; but my rude pen
 Can hardly blazon forth the loves of men, 70
 Much less of powerful gods; let it suffice
 That my slack¹ muse sings of Leander's eyes,
 Those orient cheeks and lips, exceeding his
 That leapt into the water for a kiss
 Of his own shadow, and despising many, 75
 Died ere he could enjoy the love of any.²
 Had wild Hippolytus³ Leander scen,
 Enamored of his beauty had he been;
 His presence made the rudest peasant melt,
 That in the vast uplandish country dwelt; 80
 The barbarous Thracian soldier, moved with naught,
 Was moved with him, and for his favor sought.
 Some swore he was a maid in man's attire,
 For in his looks were all that men desire:
 A pleasant smiling cheek, a speaking⁴ eye, 85
 A brow for love to banquet royally;
 And such as knew he was a man, would say,
 "Leander, thou art made for amorous play;
 Why art thou not in love, and loved of all?
 Though thou be fair, yet be not thine own thrall." 90
 The men of wealthy Sestos every year,
 For his sake whom their goddess held so dear,
 Rose-cheeked Adonis, kept a solemn feast.
 Thither resorted many a wandering guest
 To meet their loves; such as had none at all 95
 Came lovers home from this great festival;
 For every street, like to a firmament,

5. A country in Asia where the Argonauts ("the vent'rous youth of Greece") found the Golden Fleece.

6. The moon; "sphere": orbit.

7. The wand with which Circe, in the Odyssey, turned men into beasts.

8. Pelops, according to Ovid, had a shoulder of ivory.

9. Exquisite.

1. Dull. "Orient": shining.

2. An allusion to Narcissus.

3. Like Adonis, he preferred hunting to love.

4. Expressive.

Glistered with breathing stars, who, where they went,
 Frighted the melancholy earth, which deemed
 Eternal heaven to burn, for so it seemed 100
 As if another Phaëton⁵ had got
 The guidance of the sun's rich chariot.
 But, far above the loveliest, Hero shined,
 And stole away th' enchanted gazer's mind;
 For like sea nymphs' inveigling harmony, 105
 So was her beauty to the standers by.
 Nor that night-wandering pale and watery star⁶
 (When yawning dragons draw her thirling⁷ car
 From Latmus' mount up to the gloomy sky,
 Where, crowned with blazing light and majesty, 110
 She proudly sits) more over-rules⁸ the flood
 Than she the hearts of those that near her stood.
 Even as when gaudy nymphs pursue the chase,
 Wretched Ixion's shaggy-footed race,⁹
 Incensed with savage heat, gallop amain 115
 From steep pine-bearing mountains to the plain,
 So ran the people forth to gaze upon her,
 And all that viewed her were enamored on her.
 And as in fury of a dreadful fight,
 Their fellows being slain or put to flight, 120
 Poor soldiers stand with fear of death dead-strooken,
 So at her presence all, surprised and taken,
 Await the sentence of her scornful eyes;
 He whom she favors lives, the other dies.
 There might you see one sigh, another rage, 125
 And some, their violent passions to assuage,
 Compile sharp satires; but alas, too late,
 For faithful love will never turn to hate.
 And many, seeing great princes were denied,
 Pined as they went, and thinking on her, died. 130
 On this feast day, oh, curséd day and hour!
 Went Hero thorough¹ Sestos, from her tower
 To Venus' temple, where unhappily,
 As after chanced, they did each other spy.
 So fair a church as this had Venus none; 135
 The walls were of discolored² jasper stone,
 Wherein was Proteus carved, and o'erhead
 A lively³ vine of green sea-agate spread,
 Where, by one hand, light-headed Bacchus hung,
 And with the other, wine from grapes out-wrung. 140

5. A son of the sun god, he drove his father's chariot across the sky and almost burned up the world.

6. The moon.

7. Flying like a spear. Latmus was the mountain where the moon visited her lover, Endymion.

8. Rules over.

9. I.e., the centaurs, fathered by Ixion upon a cloud. For his presumption in loving Juno, Ixion was chained to a wheel—hence "wretched."

1. Through.

2. Of various colors.

3. Lifelike.

Of crystal shining fair the pavement was;
 The town of Sestos called it Venus' glass;
 There might you see the gods in sundry shapes,
 Committing heady⁴ riots, incest, rapes;
 For know that underneath this radiant floor
 Was Danaë's statue in a brazen tower;⁵ 145
 Jove slyly stealing from his sister's bed
 To dally with Idalian Ganymed,⁶
 And for his love Europa bellowing loud,
 And tumbling with the rainbow in a cloud; 150
 Blood-quaffing Mars heaving the iron net
 Which limping Vulcan and his Cyclops set;⁷
 Love kindling fire to burn such towns as Troy;
 Silvanus weeping for the lovely boy⁸
 That now is turned into a cypress tree, 155
 Under whose shade the wood-gods love to be.
 And in the midst a silver altar stood;
 There Hero sacrificing turtles'⁹ blood,
 Veiled to the ground, veiling her eyelids close,
 And modestly they opened as she rose; 160
 Thence flew love's arrow with the golden head,¹
 And thus Leander was enamored.
 Stone still he stood, and evermore he gazed,
 Till with the fire that from his countenance blazed,
 Relenting Hero's gentle heart was strook; 165
 Such force and virtue hath an amorous look.
 It lies not in our power to love or hate,
 For will in us is overruled by fate.
 When two are stripped, long ere the course² begin
 We wish that one should lose, the other win; 170
 And one especially do we affect³
 Of two gold ingots, like in each respect.
 The reason no man knows, let it suffice,
 What we behold is censured⁴ by our eyes.
 Where both deliberate, the love is slight; 175
 Who ever loved, that loved not at first sight?⁵
 He kneeled, but unto her devoutly prayed.
 Chaste Hero to herself thus softly said,
 "Were I the saint he worships, I would hear him,"
 And as she spake those words, came somewhat near him. 180

4. Passionate, violent. In the next lines, specific examples of the "riots, incest, rapes" are given.

5. Danaë, imprisoned in a tower, was visited by Jove in the form of a shower of gold. "His sister's": i.e., Juno's; she was also Jove's wife.

6. A beautiful youth whom Jove kidnapped from Mt. Ida (hence "Idalian"). In order to seduce Europa, Jove took the form of a "bellowing" bull.

7. Vulcan used a net to trap Venus, his wife, and Mars, "blood-quaffing" god of war, in the act of love.

8. I.e., Cyparissus, beloved of the wood god Sylvanus.

9. Turtledoves, symbolic of constancy in love.

1. The "golden head" of some of Cupid's arrows produced love; he had others, of lead, that produced dislike.

2. Race.

3. Have affection for.

4. Judged.

5. Shakespeare quotes this line in As You Like It (III.v.82).

He started up; she blushed as one ashamed,
 Wherewith Leander much more was inflamed.
 He touched her hand; in touching it she trembled:
 Love deeply ground⁶ hardly⁷ is dissembled.
 These lovers parléd⁸ by the touch of hands; 185
 True love is mute, and oft amazéd stands.
 Thus, while dumb signs their yielding hearts entangled,
 The air with sparks of living fire was spangled,
 And Night, deep drenched in misty Acheron,⁸
 Heaved up her head, and half the world upon 190
 Breathed darkness forth. (Dark night is Cupid's day.)
 And now begins Leander to display
 Love's holy fire, with words, with sighs and tears,
 Which like sweet music entered Hero's ears,
 And yet at every word she turned aside 195
 And always cut him off as he replied.
 At last, like to a bold sharp sophister,⁹
 With cheerful hope thus he accosted her:
 "Fair creature, let me speak without offense;
 I would my rude words had the influence 200
 To lead my thoughts, as thy fair looks do mine,
 Then shouldst thou be his prisoner who is thine.
 Be not unkind and fair—misshapen stuff¹
 Are of behavior boisterous and rough.
 O shun me not, but hear me ere you go; 205
 God knows I cannot force² love, as you do.
 My words shall be as spotless as my youth,
 Full of simplicity and naked truth.
 This sacrifice, whose sweet perfume descending
 From Venus' altar to your footsteps bending,³ 210
 Doth testify that you exceed her far
 To whom you offer and whose nun you are.
 Why should you worship her? Her you surpass
 As much as sparkling diamonds flaring⁴ glass.
 A diamond set in lead his worth retains; 215
 A heavenly nymph, beloved of human swains,
 Receives no blemish but oftentimes more grace;
 Which makes me hope, although I am but base—
 Base in respect of thee, divine and pure,
 Dutiful service may thy love procure, 220
 And I in duty will excel all other,
 As thou in beauty dost exceed Love's mother.
 Nor heaven, nor thou, were made to gaze upon;
 As heaven preserves all things, so save thou one.
 A stately builded ship, well rigged and tall, 225
 The ocean maketh more majestic.

6. With difficulty.

7. Parleyed, spoke.

8. One of the rivers of Hades.

9. A second- or third-year Cambridge student, trained in logic and argument.

"Accosted": wooed.

1. Persons.

2. Compel.

3. Turning.

4. Gaudy.

Why vowest thou then to live in Sestos here,
 Who on Love's seas more glorious wouldst appear?
 Like untuned golden strings all women are,
 Which long time lie untouched, will harshly jar.⁵ 230
 Vessels of brass, oft handled, brightly shine.
 What difference betwixt the richest mine⁶
 And basest mold, but use, for both not used
 Are of like worth. Then treasure is abused
 When misers keep it; being put to loan, 235
 In time it will return us two for one.
 Rich robes themselves and others do adorn;
 Neither themselves nor others, if not worn.
 Who builds a palace and rams up the gate
 Shall see it ruinous and desolate. 240
 Ah, simple Hero, learn thyself to cherish;
 Lone women, like to empty houses, perish.
 Less sins the poor rich man that starves himself
 In heaping up a mass of drossy pelf,
 Than such as you: his golden earth remains, 245
 Which after his decease some other gains.
 But this fair gem, sweet in the loss alone,
 When you fleet hence can be bequeathed to none.
 Or if it could, down from th' enameled⁷ sky
 All heaven would come to claim this legacy, 250
 And with intestine⁸ broils the world destroy
 And quite confound Nature's sweet harmony.
 Well therefore by the gods decreed it is,
 We human creatures should enjoy that bliss.
 One is no number;⁹ maids are nothing then 255
 Without the sweet society of men.
 Wilt thou live single still? One shalt thou be,
 Though never-singling¹ Hymen couple thee.
 Wild savages, that drink of running springs,
 Think water far excels all earthly things; 260
 But they that daily taste neat² wine despise it.
 Virginity, albeit some highly prize it,
 Compared with marriage, had you tried them both,
 Differs as much as wine and water doth.
 Base bullion for the stamp's sake³ we allow: 265
 Even so for men's impression do we you;
 By which alone, our reverend fathers⁴ say,
 Women receive perfection every way.
 This idol which you term Virginity,
 Is neither essence,⁵ subject to the eye— 270

5. I.e., instruments not played upon will be out of tune and harsh.

6. Ore; "mold": earth.

7. Beautiful, many-colored.

8. Internal, civil.

9. A traditional concept, going back to Aristotle.

1. I.e., who never separates, but always joins. Hymen was the god of marriage.

2. Undiluted.

3. For the impression which makes metal ("bullion") into a coin.

4. Ancient philosophers, like Aristotle.

5. Something that exists, is real.

No, nor to any one exterior sense,
 Nor hath it any place of residence,
 Nor is 't of earth or mold⁶ celestial,
 Or capable of any form at all.
 Of that which hath no being do not boast: 275
 Things that are not at all are never lost.
 Men foolishly do call it virtuous:
 What virtue is it that is born with us?⁷
 Much less can honor be ascribed thereto:
 Honor is purchased by the deeds we do. 280
 Believe me, Hero, honor is not won
 Until some honorable deed be done.
 Seek you for chastity, immortal fame,
 And know that some have wronged Diana's name?⁸
 Whose name is it, if she be false or not, 285
 So she be fair, but some vile tongues will blot?
 But you are fair, aye me! so wondrous fair,
 So young, so gentle, and so debonair,⁹
 As Greece will think, if thus you live alone,
 Some one or other keeps you as his own. 290
 Then, Hero, hate me not, nor from me fly
 To follow swiftly-blasting infamy.
 Perhaps thy sacred priesthood makes thee loath.
 Tell me, to whom madest thou that heedless oath?"
 "To Venus," answered she, and as she spake, 295
 Forth from those two tralucēt cisterns¹ brake
 A stream of liquid pearl, which down her face
 Made milk-white paths whereon the gods might trace²
 To Jove's high court. He thus replied: "The rites 300
 In which Love's beauteous empress most delights
 Are banquets, Doric music,³ midnight revel,
 Plays, masques, and all that stern age counteth evil.
 Thee as a holy idiot doth she scorn;
 For thou, in vowing chastity, hast sworn
 To rob her name and honor, and thereby 305
 Commit'st a sin far worse than perjury—
 Even sacrilege against her Deity,
 Through regular and formal purity.
 To expiate which sin, kiss and shake hands;
 Such sacrifice as this Venus demands." 310
 Thereat she smiled and did deny him so
 As, put⁴ thereby, yet might he hope for mo.
 Which makes him quickly reinforce his speech

6. Form.

7. I.e., a virtue is not a virtue unless it is acquired.

8. I.e., no fame for chastity is secure. Even Diana, goddess of chastity, has been slandered.

9. Affable, agreeable.

1. Translucent eyes; "stream": i.e., of tears.

2. Go.

3. A solemn, military mode. Marlowe presumably meant "Lydian" (as in Milton's L'Allegro, line 136); Lydian music was soft and sensual.

4. Put off; "mo": more.

And her in humble manner thus beseech:

"Though neither gods nor men may thee deserve, 315
Yet for her sake whom you have vowed to serve,
Abandon fruitless, cold Virginitie,
The gentle Queen of Love's sole enemy.
Then shall you most resemble Venus' nun,
When Venus' sweet rites are performed and done. 320
Flint-breasted Pallas⁵ joys in single life,
But Pallas and your mistress are at strife.
Love, Hero, then, and be not tyrannous,
But heal the heart that thou hast wounded thus,
Nor stain thy youthful years with avarice; 325
Fair fools delight to be accounted nice.⁶
The richest corn dies, if it be not reaped;
Beauty alone is lost, too warily kept."

These arguments he used, and many more,
Wherewith she yielded; that was won before. 330
Hero's looks yielded, but her words made war:
Women are won when they begin to jar.⁷
Thus, having swallowed Cupid's golden hook,
The more she strived, the deeper was she strook.
Yet, evilly feigning anger, strove she still 335
And would be thought to grant against her will.
So having paused a while, at last she said:
"Who taught thee rhetoric to deceive a maid?
Aye me, such words as these should I abhor,
And yet I like them for the orator." 340

With that, Leander stooped to have embraced her,
But from his spreading arms away she cast her,⁸
And thus bespake him: "Gentle youth, forbear
To touch the sacred garments which I wear.

"Upon a rock, and underneath a hill, 345
Far from the town, where all is whist⁹ and still,
Save that the sea, playing on yellow sand,
Sends forth a rattling murmur to the land,
Whose sound allures the golden Morpheus¹
In silence of the night to visit us, 350
My turret stands, and there, God knows, I play
With Venus' swans and sparrows² all the day.
A dwarfish beldame³ bears me company,
That hops about the chamber where I lie
And spends the night, that might be better spent, 355
In vain discourse and apish⁴ merriment.
Come thither." As she spake this, her tongue tripped,

5. Athena, a rival goddess, usually portrayed in armor.

6. Shy, reluctant.

7. Dispute.

8. Withdrew.

9. Silent.

1. God of sleep; "golden slumbers" was a common expression.

2. Venus was often portrayed in a chariot drawn by swans, and sparrows were associated with her because of their traditional lechery.

3. Old hag.

4. Silly.

For unawares "Come thither" from her slipped;
 And suddenly her former color changed
 And here and there her eyes through anger ranged. 360
 And like a planet, moving several ways,⁵
 At one self instant, she, poor soul, assays⁶
 Loving, not to love at all, and every part
 Strove to resist the motions of her heart;
 And hands so pure, so innocent, nay, such 365
 As might have made heaven stoop to have a touch,
 Did she uphold to Venus, and again
 Vowed spotless chastity, but all in vain.
 Cupid beat down her prayers with his wings;
 Her vows above the empty air he flings. 370
 All deep enraged, his sinewy⁷ bow he bent,
 And shot a shaft that burning from him went,
 Wherewith she, strooken, looked so dolefully
 As made Love sigh to see his tyranny.
 And as she wept, her tears to pearl he turned, 375
 And wound them on his arm, and for her mourned.
 Then towards the palace of the Destinies,⁸
 Laden with languishment and grief, he flies,
 And to those stern nymphs humbly made request
 Both might enjoy each other and be blessed. 380
 But with a ghastly dreadful countenance,
 Threatening a thousand deaths at every glance,
 They answered Love, nor would vouchsafe so much
 As one poor word, their hate to him was such.
 Harken a while, and I will tell you why: 385
 Heaven's wingéd herald, Jove-born Mercury,
 The selfsame day that he asleep had laid
 Enchanted Argus,⁹ spied a country maid
 Whose careless hair, instead of pearl t' adorn it,
 Glistered with dew, as one that seemed to scorn it,¹ 390
 Her breath as fragrant as the morning rose,
 Her mind pure, and her tongue untaught to glose.²
 Yet proud she was, for lofty pride that dwells
 In towered courts is oft in shepherds' cells,³
 And too-too well the fair vermilion knew 395
 And silver tincture of her cheeks, that drew
 The love of every swain. On her, this god
 Enamored was, and with his snaky rod⁴
 Did charm her nimble feet and made her stay;
 The while upon a hillock down he lay, 400

5. In Ptolemaic astronomy each planet moved in its own orbit or sphere, but was also carried in other directions by a surrounding sphere.

6. Attempts.

7. Strong.

8. The Fates.

9. Mercury, or Hermes, the messenger god with winged feet, put to sleep

Argus, the hundred-eyed monster whom Juno had placed as a guard over Io, with whom her husband Jupiter was in love.

1. I.e., pearl or other jewelry.

2. Speak insincerely.

3. Huts.

4. Caduceus (now the symbol of medicine).

And sweetly on his pipe began to play,
 And with smooth speech, her fancy to assay,
 Till in his twining arms he locked her fast,
 And then he wooed with kisses, and at last,
 As shepherds do, her on the ground he laid, 405
 And tumbling in the grass, he often strayed
 Beyond the bounds of shame, in being bold
 To eye those parts which no eye should behold;
 And, like an insolent commanding lover,
 Boasting his parentage, would needs discover 410
 The way to new Elysium; but she,
 Whose only dower was her chastity,
 Having striven in vain, was now about to cry
 And crave the help of shepherds that were nigh.
 Herewith he stayed his fury,⁵ and began 415
 To give her leave to rise. Away she ran;
 After went Mercury, who used such cunning
 As she, to hear his tale, left off her running.
 Maids are not won by brutish force and might
 But speeches full of pleasure and delight. 420
 And knowing Hermes courted her, was glad
 That she such loveliness and beauty had
 As could provoke his liking, yet was mute,
 And neither would deny nor grant his suit.
 Still vowed he love; she, wanting no excuse 425
 To feed him with delays, as women use,⁶
 Or thirsting after immortality
 (All women are ambitious naturally),
 Imposed upon her lover such a task
 As he ought not perform, nor yet she ask. 430
 A draft of flowing nectar she requested
 Wherewith the king of gods and men is feasted.
 He, ready to accomplish what she willed,
 Stole some from Hebe (Hebe Jove's cup filled),
 And gave it to his simple rustic love, 435
 Which being known (as what is hid from Jove?)
 He inly stormed and waxed more furious
 Than for the fire filched by Prometheus
 And thrusts him down from heaven. He, wandering here,
 In mournful terms,⁷ with sad and heavy cheer 440
 Complained to Cupid. Cupid for his sake,
 To be revenged on Jove did undertake;
 And those on whom heaven, earth, and hell relies
 (I mean the adamant⁸ Destinies)
 He wounds with love and forced them equally 445
 To dote upon deceitful Mercury.
 They offered him the deadly fatal knife

5. Passion.

6. Practice.

7. Condition; "cheer": countenance.

8. Of extreme hardness (so called because the Destinies' decrees were irrevocable).

That shears the slender threads of human life;⁹
 At his fair feathered feet the engines laid
 Which th' earth from ugly Chaos' den upweighed.¹ 450
 These he regarded not, but did entreat
 That Jove, usurper of his father's seat,
 Might presently be banished into hell
 And aged Saturn in Olympus dwell.
 They granted what he craved, and once again 455
 Saturn and Ops began their golden reign.
 Murder, rape, war, lust, and treachery
 Were with Jove closed in Stygian empery.
 But long this blessed time continued not;
 As soon as he his wished purpose got, 460
 He, reckless of his promise, did despise
 The love of th' everlasting Destinies.
 They seeing it, both Love and him abhorred
 And Jupiter unto his place restored.²
 And but that Learning, in despite of Fate, 465
 Will mount aloft and enter heaven gate,
 And to the seat of Jove itself advance,
 Hermes had slept in hell with Ignorance.
 Yet as a punishment they added this,
 That he and Poverty should always kiss.³ 470
 And to this day is every scholar poor;
 Gross gold from them runs headlong to the boor.
 Likewise the angry sisters, thus deluded,
 To venge themselves on Hermes, have concluded
 That Midas' brood⁴ shall sit in Honor's chair, 475
 To which the Muses' sons are only heir.
 And fruitful wits that inaspiring⁵ are
 Shall discontent run into regions far;
 And few great lords in virtuous deeds shall joy,
 But be surprised with every garish toy, 480
 And still enrich the lofty servile clown⁶
 Who, with encroaching guile, keeps learning down.

9. According to classical mythology, the Fates spun and cut the threads that measure each human life.

1. The Fates also controlled the supports ("beams") that had supported ("upweighed") the earth since it arose out of Chaos, the yawning abyss from which all things came.

2. The story in lines 451-64 may be summarized as follows: Mercury scorns the gifts offered by the Fates but asks instead that Jove be dethroned (Jove had overthrown his father Saturn, who ruled heaven during the Golden Age). Mercury persuades the Fates to reverse this revolution, so Saturn and his wife Ops return to Olympus and Jove is thrust down into "Stygian empery" (line 458) or Hades. During the Golden Age there was no murder, rape, war, lust, or treachery; these came in with Jove, so when he is sent to Hades these crimes go with him. But this second Golden Age did not last long, because once he got what he wanted, Mercury (Hermes) forgot the Destinies and they restored Jove.

3. Marlowe invents the mythology that Mercury, the god of learning, would have slept in hell with Ignorance, but Learning is so divine that it always mounts up, even to heaven, the "seat of Jove." But it was not beyond the Fates' power to make learning and poverty go together, which they decreed in revenge for Mercury's neglect.

4. The rich, since everything Midas touched turned to gold.

5. Not ambitious for riches or power.

6. Ignorant person.

Then muse not⁷ Cupid's suit no better sped,
 Seeing in their loves the Fates were injuréd.
 By this, sad Hero, with love unacquainted, 485
 Viewing Leander's face, fell down and fainted.
 He kissed her and breathed life into her lips,
 Wherewith, as one displeased, away she trips.
 Yet as she went, full often looked behind,
 And many poor excuses did she find 490
 To linger by the way, and once she stayed
 And would have turned again, but was afraid
 In offering parley to be counted light.
 So on she goes, and in her idle flight
 Her painted fan of curléd plumes let fall, 495
 Thinking to train⁸ Leander therewithal.
 He, being a novice, knew not what she meant
 But stayed, and after her a letter sent,
 Which joyful Hero answered in such sort
 As he had hope to scale the beauteous fort 500
 Wherein the liberal Graces⁹ locked their wealth,
 And therefore to her tower he got by stealth.
 Wide open stood the door; he need not climb,
 And she herself before the pointed¹ time
 Had spread the board,² with roses strewed the room, 505
 And oft looked out, and mused he did not come.
 At last he came; O who can tell the greeting
 These greedy lovers had at their first meeting?
 He asked, she gave, and nothing was denied;
 Both to each other quickly were affied.³ 510
 Look how their hands, so were their hearts united,
 And what he did, she willingly requited.
 (Sweet are the kisses, the embracements sweet,
 When like desires and affections meet,
 For from the earth to heaven is Cupid raised 515
 Where fancy is in equal balance peised.)⁴
 Yet she this rashness suddenly repented
 And turned aside and to herself lamented,
 As if her name and honor had been wronged
 By being possessed of him for whom she longed. 520
 Ay, and she wished, albeit not from her heart,
 That he would leave her turret and depart.
 The mirthful god of amorous pleasure smiled
 To see how he this captive nymph beguiled,
 For hitherto he did but fan the fire 525
 And kept it down that it might mount the higher.
 Now waxed she jealous⁵ lest his love abated,

7. I.e., don't be surprised.

8. Entice.

9. Three goddesses associated with everything beautiful.

1. Appointed.

2. Set the table.

3. Affianced, engaged. "Look how": just as.

4. Weighed.

5. Fearful.

Fearing her own thoughts made her to be hated.
 Therefore unto him hastily she goes
 And, like light Salmacis,⁶ her body throws 530
 Upon his bosom where, with yielding eyes,
 She offers up herself a sacrifice
 To slake his anger; if he were displeased,
 O what god would not therewith be appeased?
 Like Aesop's cock,⁷ this jewel he enjoyed, 535
 And as a brother with his sister toyed,
 Supposing nothing else was to be done
 Now he her favor and good will had won.
 But know you not that creatures wanting sense⁸
 By nature have a mutual appetite,⁹ 540
 And wanting organs to advance a step,
 Moved by love's force, unto each other leap?
 Much more in subjects having intellect,
 Some hidden influence breeds like effect.
 Albeit Leander, rude in¹ love and raw, 545
 Long dallying with Hero, nothing saw
 That might delight him more, yet he suspected
 Some amorous rites or other were neglected.
 Therefore unto his body, hers he clung;
 She, fearing on the rushes² to be flung, 550
 Strived with redoubled strength. The more she strived,
 The more a gentle, pleasing heat revived,
 Which taught him all that elder lovers know.
 And now the same gan so to scorch and glow,
 As, in plain terms, yet cunningly,³ he craved it. 555
 (Love always makes those eloquent that have it.)
 She, with a kind of granting, put him by it
 And, ever as he thought himself most nigh it,
 Like to the tree of Tantalus,⁴ she fled
 And, seeming lavish, saved her maidenhead. 560
 Ne'er king more sought to keep his diadem
 Than Hero this inestimable gem.
 Above our life we love a steadfast friend;
 Yet, when a token of great worth we send,
 We often kiss it, often look thereon, 565
 And stay the messenger that would be gone.
 No marvel then, though Hero would not yield
 So soon to part from that she dearly held.
 Jewels being lost are found again, this never;
 'Tis lost but once and once lost, lost forever. 570
 Now had the Morn espied her lover's steeds,⁵

6. An amorous nymph in Ovid's Metamorphoses.

7. In the Aesopic fable a cock, scratching in the barnyard, uncovers a jewel, but prefers a barley corn to it.

8. Intelligence.

9. Attraction, as iron to a magnet.

1. Untutored.

2. Reeds used as carpeting in Elizabethan homes.

3. Skillfully.

4. Tantalus was punished in Hades by constantly reaching for fruit from a tree that eluded him.

5. The chariot of the sun.

Whereat she starts, puts on her purple weeds,⁶
 And, red for anger that he stayed so long,
 All headlong throws herself the clouds among.
 And now Leander, fearing to be missed, 575
 Embraced her suddenly, took leave, and kissed;
 Long was he taking leave, and loath to go,
 And kissed again, as lovers use to do.
 Sad Hero wrung him by the hand and wept,
 Saying, "Let your vows and promises be kept." 580
 Then, standing at the door, she turned about,
 As loath to see Leander going out.
 And now the sun that through th' horizon peeps,
 As pitying these lovers, downward creeps,
 So that in silence of the cloudy night, 585
 Though it was morning, did he take his flight.
 But what the secret trusty night concealed,
 Leander's amorous habit⁷ soon revealed.
 With Cupid's myrtle⁸ was his bonnet crowned;
 About his arms the purple riband⁹ wound 590
 Wherewith she wreathed her largely spreading hair;
 Nor could the youth abstain but he must wear
 The sacred ring wherewith she was endowed
 When first religious chastity she vowed;
 Which made his love through Sestos to be known, 595
 And thence unto Abydos sooner blown
 Than he could sail, for incorporeal Fame,
 Whose weight consists in nothing but her name,
 Is swifter than the wind, whose tardy plumes
 Are reeking water and dull earthly fumes.¹ 600
 Home when he came, he seemed not to be there,
 But like exiléd air thrust from his sphere,
 Set in a foreign place, and straight from thence,
 Alcides-like,² by mighty violence
 He would have chased away the swelling main 605
 That him from her unjustly did detain.
 Like as the sun in a diameter³
 Fires and inflames objects removéd far,
 And heateth kindly, shining lat'rally;
 So beauty sweetly quickens when 'tis nigh. 610
 But being separated and removed,
 Burns where it cherished, murders where it loved.⁴
 Therefore, even as an index to a book,
 So to his mind was young Leander's look.
 O none but gods have power their love to hide: 615
 Affection by the count'nance is descried.
 The light of hidden fire itself discovers,

6. Clothes.

7. Dress.

8. A flower sacred to Venus or Cupid, symbolic of love. "Bonnet": hat.

9. Ribbon.

1. I.e., fame is as incorporeal as mist or smoke.

2. Like Hercules, with brute force.

3. I.e., shining straight down.

4. I.e., inaccessible beauty can burn and murder.

And love that is concealed betrays⁵ poor lovers.
 His secret flame apparently⁶ was seen;
 Leander's father knew where he had been 620
 And for the same mildly rebuked his son,
 Thinking to quench the sparkles new begun.
 But love resisted, once⁷ grows passionate
 And nothing more than counsel, lovers hate.
 For as a hot, proud horse highly disdains 625
 To have his head controlled, but breaks the reins,
 Spits forth the ringled⁸ bit, and with his hooves
 Checks⁹ the submissive ground; so he that loves,
 The more he is restrained, the worse he fares.
 What is it now but mad Leander dares?¹ 630
 "O Hero, Hero!" thus he cried full oft,
 And then he got him to a rock aloft,
 Where, having spied her tower, long stared he on 't
 And prayed the narrow toiling Hellespont
 To part in twain, that he might come and go, 635
 But still the rising billows answered no.
 With that he stripped him to the ivory skin
 And crying, "Love, I come!" leapt lively in.
 Whereat the sapphire-visaged god² grew proud
 And made his capering Triton³ sound aloud; 640
 Imagining that Ganimed,⁴ displeased,
 Had left the heavens, therefore on him seized.
 Leander strived; the waves about him wound
 And pulled him to the bottom, where the ground
 Was strewed with pearl, and in low coral groves 645
 Sweet singing mermaids sported with their loves
 On heaps of heavy gold and took great pleasure
 To spurn in careless sort⁵ the shipwreck treasure;
 For here the stately azure palace stood
 Where kingly Neptune and his train abode. 650
 The lusty god embraced him, called him love,
 And swore he never should return to Jove.
 But when he knew it was not Ganimed,
 For under water he was almost dead,
 He heaved him up, and looking on his face, 655
 Beat down the bold waves with his triple mace,⁶
 Which mounted up, intending to have kissed him,
 And fell in drops like tears because they missed him.
 Leander being up, began to swim
 And, looking back, saw Neptune follow him. 660
 Whereat aghast, the poor soul gan to cry,

5. Gives away.

6. Openly.

7. At once.

8. With rings at the ends.

9. Stamps.

1. I.e., what is there now Leander dares not do?

2. Neptune, god of the sea.

3. A subordinate sea god who blew on a conch shell.

4. A beautiful boy, taken by Jove to be his cupbearer.

5. Manner.

6. The three-pronged fork carried by Neptune.

"O let me visit Hero ere I die!"

The god put Helle's bracelet⁷ on his arm
And swore the sea should never do him harm.
He clapped his plump cheeks, with his tresses played 665
And, smiling wantonly, his love bewrayed.⁸

He watched his arms, and as they opened wide,
At every stroke betwixt them he would slide
And steal a kiss, and then run out and dance
And, as he turned, cast many a lustful glance 670
And throw him gaudy toys to please his eye,
And dive into the water and there pry
Upon his breast, his thighs, and every limb,
And up again and close beside him swim
And talk of love. Leander made reply, 675

"You are deceived; I am no woman, I."
Thereat smiled Neptune and then told a tale
How that a shepherd, sitting in a vale,
Played with a boy so fair and so kind
As, for his love, both earth and heaven pined; 680
That of the cooling river durst not drink
Lest water nymphs should pull him from the brink.

And when he sported in the fragrant lawns,
Goat-footed satyrs and up-staring fawns⁹
Would steal him thence. Ere half this tale was done. 685

"Ay me!" Leander cried, "th' enamored sun
That now should shine on Thetis' glassy bower¹
Descends upon my radiant Hero's tower.
O that these tardy arms of mine were wings!" 690
And as he spake, upon the waves he springs.

Neptune was angry that he gave no ear,
And in his heart revenging malice bare.
He flung at him his mace, but as it went
He called it in, for love made him repent.

The mace returning back, his own hand hit, 695
As meaning to be venged for darting it.

When this fresh bleeding wound Leander viewed,
His color went and came, as if he rued
The grief² which Neptune felt. In gentle breasts
Relenting thoughts, remorse, and pity rests; 700

And who have hard hearts and obdurate minds
But vicious, harebrained, and illit'rate hinds?³
The god, seeing him with pity to be moved,
Thereon concluded that he was beloved.

(Love is too full of faith, too credulous, 705

7. Helle was the daughter of King Athamas of Thebes. To escape a cruel stepmother, she fled on a winged, golden-fleeced ram but fell off into the Hellespont, which was named for her. Marlowe apparently invents the detail of the bracelet.

8. Revealed.

9. Fauni, woodland spirits, who prophesied by looking up to the heavens.

1. I.e., the sea; Thetis was a sea nymph, mother of the hero Achilles.

2. Pain.

3. Rustics, boors.

With folly and false hope deluding us.)
 Wherefore Leander's fancy to surprise,⁴
 To the rich ocean for gifts he flies.
 'Tis wisdom to give much; a gift prevails
 When deep persuading oratory fails. 710
 By this⁵ Leander, being near the land,
 Cast down his weary feet and felt the sand.
 Breathless albeit he were, he rested not Till to the solitary tower he got.
 And knocked and called; at which celestial noise, 715
 The longing heart of Hero much more joys
 Than nymphs and shepherds when the timbrel rings,
 Or crooked dolphin⁶ when the sailor sings.
 She stayed not for her robes, but straight arose
 And, drunk with gladness, to the door she goes; 720
 Where, seeing a naked man, she screeched for fear
 (Such sights as this to tender maids are rare),
 And ran into the dark herself to hide.
 Rich jewels in the dark are soonest spied.
 Unto her was he led, or rather drawn 725
 By those white limbs which sparkled through the lawn.⁷
 The nearer that he came, the more she fled
 And, seeking refuge, slipped into her bed.
 Whereon Leander sitting, thus began,
 Through numbing cold, all feeble, faint, and wan: 730
 "If not for love, yet, love, for pity's sake
 Me in thy bed and maiden bosom take;
 At least vouchsafe these arms some little room
 Who, hoping to embrace thee, cheerly⁸ swum.
 This head was beat with many a churlish billow, 735
 And therefore let it rest upon thy pillow."
 Herewith affrighted Hero shrunk away
 And in her lukewarm place Leander lay;
 Whose lively heat, like fire from heaven fet,⁹
 Would animate gross clay, and higher set 740
 The drooping thoughts of base declining souls
 Than dreary Mars¹ carousing nectar bowls.
 His hands he cast upon her like a snare;
 She, overcome with shame and sallow² fear,
 Like chaste Diana when Actaeon spied her,³ 745
 Being suddenly betrayed, dived down to hide her,
 And as her silver body downward went,
 With both her hands she made the bed a tent,
 And in her own mind thought herself secure,

4. Love to capture.

5. At this time.

6. "Crooked" because of the undulating path of the dolphin in the water. The musician Arion was saved from drowning by a dolphin charmed by his music.
 "Timbrel": tambourine.

7. Fine linen or cambric.

8. Gladly.

9. Fetched.

1. God of war; "dreary": bloody.

2. Pale, yellowish.

3. Actaeon, a hunter came upon Diana bathing; she turned him into a stag, and he was killed by his own hounds.

O'ercast with dim and darksome coverture. 750
 And now she lets him whisper in her ear,
 Flatter, entreat, promise, protest, and swear;
 Yet ever as he greedily assayed
 To touch those dainties, she the Harpy⁴ played,
 And every limb did, as a soldier stout, 755
 Defend the fort and keep the foeman out.
 For though the rising ivory mount he scaled,
 Which is with azure circling lines empaled,⁵
 Much like a globe (a globe may I term this
 By which love sails to regions full of bliss), 760
 Yet there with Sisyphus⁶ he toiled in vain
 Till gentle parley did the truce obtain.
 Wherein Leander on her quivering breast,
 Breathless spoke something and sighed out the rest;
 Which so prevailed, as he, with small ado, 765
 Enclosed her in his arms and kissed her, too.
 And every kiss to her was as a charm
 And to Leander as a fresh alarm.⁷
 So that the truce was broke, and she, alas,
 Poor silly⁸ maiden, at his mercy was. 770
 Love is not full of pity, as men say,
 But deaf and cruel, where he means to prey.
 Even as a bird which in our hands we wring⁹
 Forth plungeth and oft flutters with her wing,
 She trembling strove; this strife of hers, like that 775
 Which made the world,¹ another world begat
 Of unknown joy. Treason was in her thought,
 And cunningly to yield herself she sought.
 Seeming not won, yet won she was, at length.
 (In such wars women use but half their strength.) 780
 Leander now, like Theban Hercules,
 Entered the orchard of th' Hesperides,
 Whose fruit none rightly can describe but he
 That pulls or shakes it from the golden tree.²
 And now she wished this night were never done, 785
 And sighed to think upon th' approaching sun,
 For much it grieved her that the bright daylight
 Should know the pleasure of this blessed night,
 And them like Mars and Erycine³ displayed,
 Both in each other's arms chained as they laid. 790
 Again she knew not how to frame her look
 Or speak to him who in a moment took

4. A monster, half bird, half woman, who snatches away banquets in Virgil's Aeneid and Shakespeare's Tempest.

5. Surrounded.

6. Condemned in Hades to endlessly roll a stone uphill.

7. Call to battle.

8. Innocent.

9. Hold firmly.

1. The Greek philosopher Empedocles held that creation was the result of love and strife.

2. One of Hercules's labors was to get the golden apples of the Hesperides, guarded by a dragon. Hercules was born in Thebes.

3. A name for Venus, who was caught in bed with Mars by her husband Vulcan, who cast a fine chain net over them.

That which so long so charily she kept;
 And fain by stealth away she would have crept
 And to some corner secretly have gone, 795
 Leaving Leander in the bed alone.
 But as her naked feet were whipping out,
 He on the sudden clinged her so about
 That mermaidlike unto the floor she slid:
 One half appeared, the other half was hid. 800
 Thus near the bed she blushing stood upright;
 And from her countenance behold ye might
 A kind of twilight break, which through the hair,
 As from an orient⁴ cloud, glims here and there,
 And round about the chamber this false morn 805
 Brought forth the day before the day was born.
 So Hero's ruddy cheek Hero betrayed,
 And her all naked to his sight displayed,
 Whence his admiring eyes more pleasure took
 Than Dis,⁵ on heaps of gold fixing his look. 810
 By this Apollo's golden harp began
 To sound forth music to the Ocean,
 Which watchful Hesperus⁶ no sooner heard
 But he the day's bright-bearing car prepared,
 And ran before, as harbinger of light, 815
 And with his flaring beams mocked ugly Night,
 Till she, o'ercome with anguish, shame and rage,
 Danged⁷ down to hell her loathsome carriage.
 1598

The Passionate Shepherd to His Love¹

Iambic tetrameter

Come live with me and be my love,
 And we will all the pleasures prove²
 That valleys, groves, hills, and fields,
 Woods, or steepy mountain yields.

And we will sit upon the rocks,
 Seeing the shepherds feed their flocks, 5
 By shallow rivers to whose falls
 Melodious birds sing madrigals.

And I will make thee beds of roses
 And a thousand fragrant posies, 10

4. Bright, shining; "glims": gleams.

5. Pluto, god of the underworld and of wealth.

6. The evening star; apparently Marlowe's error for Lucifer, the morning star.

7. Hurled.

1. This pastoral lyric of invitation is one of the most famous of Elizabethan songs, and a few lines from it are sung in Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor. Many poets have written replies to it, the finest of which is by that other great Elizabethan romantic, Sir Walter Raleigh.

2. Test, experience.

A cap of flowers, and a kirtle
Embroidered all with leaves of myrtle;

A gown made of the finest wool
Which from our pretty lambs we pull;
Fair lined slippers for the cold,
With buckles of the purest gold;

15

A belt of straw and ivy buds,
With coral clasps and amber studs:
And if these pleasures may thee move,
Come live with me, and be my love.

20

The shepherds' swains shall dance and sing
For thy delight each May morning:
If these delights thy mind may move,
Then live with me and be my love.

1599, 1600

Dr. Faustus Marlowe's major tragedies, Tamburlaine, The Jew of Malta, and Dr. Faustus, all portray a hero who passionately seeks power—the power of rule, the power of money, and the power of knowledge, respectively. Each of the heroes is an “overreacher,” striving beyond the bounds of human capacity, or at least the limits imposed upon human achievement.

Unlike Tamburlaine, whose aim and goal is “the sweet fruition of an earthly crown,” and Barabas, the Jew of Malta, who lusts for “infinite riches in a little room,” Faustus seeks the power that comes from knowledge, no matter at what cost that knowledge is acquired. To get this power Faustus must make (or chooses to make) a bargain with the devil. Such a situation is an old folklore motif, but it would have been taken seriously in a time when everyone believed in the reality of devils. Faustus on his part is in search of the power that comes from black magic, but the devil on his side exacts a fearful price in exchange—the eternal damnation of Faustus's soul. This, like the reality of devils, would have been taken literally by an Elizabethan audience. Faustus aspires to be more than a man—a demigod, a deity. His fall is caused by the same pride and ambition that caused the fall of the angels in heaven, and of humanity in the Garden of Eden. So to aspire is to incur inevitable defeat, but it is characteristic of Marlowe that he makes those aspirations nonetheless magnificent.

The immediate source of the play is a German narrative called, in its English translation, The History of the Damnable Life and Deserved Death of Doctor John Faustus. It contains those scenes of horseplay and low practical joking which, in the drama, contrast so markedly with the passages of grand aspiration. It is quite possible that these low scenes are the work of a collaborator, and the early records from the theater and the early editions of the play (1604 and 1616, both long after Marlowe's death) show that the true text of the play is difficult to establish. What does seem clear is that no other Elizabethan could have written the first scene (which projects the insatiable aspiring mind of the hero), the famous address to Helen of Troy, or the final scene of Faustus's last hour.

The Tragical History of the Life and Death of Doctor Faustus

Dramatis Personæ

CHORUS

DR. JOHN FAUSTUS, of the University of Wittenberg

WAGNER, his servant

GOOD ANGEL and BAD ANGEL

VALDES and CORNELIUS, magicians and friends of FAUSTUS

THREE SCHOLARS, students at the university

LUCIFER, MEPHISTOPHILIS, and BELZEBUB, devils

ROBIN and DICK, rustic clowns

THE SEVEN DEADLY SINS

POPE ADRIAN

RAYMOND, King of Hungary

BRUNO, a rival Pope, appointed by the EMPEROR

CARDINALS OF FRANCE and PADUA

ARCHBISHOP OF RHEIMS

MARTINO, FREDERICK, and BENVOLIO, gentlemen at the EMPEROR'S court

CAROLUS (CHARLES) THE FIFTH, EMPEROR

DUKE OF SAXONY

DUKE and DUCHESS OF VANHOLT

HORSE-COURSER

CARTER

HOSTESS of a tavern

OLD MAN

SPIRITS of DARIUS, ALEXANDER and his PARAMOUR, and HELEN OF TROY

ATTENDANTS, MONKS and FRIARS, SOLDIERS, PIPER, two CUPIDS

Act I

[Enter CHORUS.¹]

CHO. Not marching in the fields of Trasimene²

Where Mars did mate the warlike Carthagens,

Nor sporting in the dalliance of love

In courts of kings where state³ is overturned,

Nor in the pomp of proud audacious deeds

Intends our Muse to vaunt his heavenly verse:

Only this, gentles, we must now perform

The form of Faustus' fortunes good or bad.

And so to patient judgments we appeal

And speak for Faustus in his infancy.

Now is he born, his parents base of stock,

In Germany within a town called Rhode;⁴

1. A single actor who recited a prologue to an act or a whole play, and occasionally delivered an epilogue.

2. The battle of Lake Trasimene (217 B.C.) was one of the Carthaginian leader Hannibal's great victories. "Mate": join with.

3. Political power.

4. Roda. Wittenberg, in the next line, was the famous university where Martin Luther studied, as did Shakespeare's Hamlet and Horatio; "whereas": where.

At riper years to Wittenberg he went
 Whereas his kinsmen chiefly brought him up;
 So much he profits in divinity, 15
 The fruitful plot of scholarism graced,⁵
 That shortly he was graced with Doctor's name,
 Excelling all whose sweet delight disputes⁶
 In th' heavenly matters of theology,
 Till, swollen with cunning,⁷ of a self-conceit, 20
 His waxen wings did mount above his reach
 And melting, heavens conspired his overthrow.⁸
 For, falling to a devilish exercise
 And glutted more with learning's golden gifts,
 He surfeits upon curséd necromancy;⁹ 25
 Nothing so sweet as magic is to him,
 Which he prefers before his chiefest bliss¹—
 And this the man that in his study sits.
 [Draws the curtain² and exit.]

SCENE 1

[FAUSTUS in his study.]

FAUST. Settle thy studies, Faustus, and begin
 To sound the depth of that thou wilt profess.
 Having commenced, be a divine in show,
 Yet level³ at the end of every art
 And live and die in Aristotle's works:
 Sweet Analytics,⁴ 'tis thou hast ravished me! 5
 [Reads.]
Bene disserere est finis logicis—
 Is to dispute well logic's chiefest end?
 Affords this art no greater miracle?
 Then read no more; thou hast attained the end. 10
 A greater subject fitteth Faustus' wit:
 Bid *ὁν καὶ μὴ ὁν*⁵ farewell, Galen come,
 Seeing ubi desinit philosophus, ibi incipit medicus,⁶
 Be a physician, Faustus, heap up gold
 And be eternized for some wondrous cure. 15
 [Reads.]
*Summum bonum medicinae sanitas*⁷—
 The end of physic is our bodies' health:
 Why, Faustus, hast thou not attained that end?
 Is not thy common talk sound aphorisms?⁸

5. Graced. In line 17 "graced" refers to the Cambridge word for permission to proceed to a degree.

6. The usual academic exercises were disputations, which took the place of examinations.

7. Learning.

8. The reference is to the Greek myth of Icarus, who flew too near the sun on wings of feathers and wax made by his father Daedalus. The wax melted and he fell into the sea and was drowned.

9. Black magic.

1. The salvation of his soul.

2. A curtain to the enclosed space at the rear of the stage.

3. "Commenced": graduated, i.e., received the doctor's degree; "in show": in external appearance; "level": aim.

4. The title of a treatise on logic by Aristotle. The Latin means, "To carry on a disputation well is the end or purpose of logic."

5. "Being and not being," i.e., philosophy. Galen: the ancient authority on medicine (2nd century A.D.).

6. "Where the philosopher leaves off the physician begins."

7. "Good health is the object of medicine" (or "physic").

8. I.e., reliable medical pronouncements. "Bills": prescriptions.

Are not thy bills hung up as monuments 20
 Whereby whole cities have escaped the plague
 And thousand desperate maladies been cured?
 Yet art thou still but Faustus, and a man.
 Couldst thou make men to live eternally
 Or, being dead, raise them to life again, 25
 Then this profession were to be esteemed.
 Physic, farewell. Where is Justinian?⁹ [Reads.]
Si una eademque res legatur duobus,
*Alter rem, alter valorem rei, etc.*¹—
 A pretty case of paltry legacies! 30
Exhaereditare filium non potest pater nisi—
 Such is the subject of the Institute
 And universal body of the law.
 This study fits a mercenary drudge
 Who aims at nothing but external trash, 35
 Too servile and illiberal for me.
 When all is done, divinity is best.
 Jerome's Bible,² Faustus, view it well: [Reads.]
*Stipendium peccati mors est—*Ha! Stipendium, etc.
 The reward of sin is death? That's hard.
*Si pecasse negamus, fallimur, et nulla est in nobis veritas*³— 40
 If we say that we have no sin
 We deceive ourselves, and there's no truth in us.
 Why then belike
 We must sin and so consequently die, 45
 Aye, we must die an everlasting death.
 What doctrine call you this, Che sera, sera?⁴
 What will be, shall be? Divinity, adieu!
 These metaphysics⁵ of magicians
 And necromantic books are heavenly: 50
 Lines, circles, signs, letters, and characters—
 Aye, these are those that Faustus most desires.
 O what a world of profit and delight,
 Of power, of honor, of omnipotence,
 Is promised to the studious artisan!⁶ 55
 All things that move between the quiet⁷ poles
 Shall be at my command. Emperors and kings
 Are but obeyed in their several provinces,
 Nor can they raise the wind or rend the clouds;
 But his dominion that exceeds in this 60
 Stretcheth as far as doth the mind of man.
 A sound magician is a demigod:

9. Roman emperor and authority on law (483–565), author of the Institutes.

1. "If something is bequeathed to two persons, one shall have the thing itself, the other something of equal value." The next Latin phrase means: "A father cannot disinherit his son unless."

2. The Latin translation, or "Vulgate," of St. Jerome (ca. 340–420). The Latin

(Romans vi.23) is translated in line 40.

3. I John i.8, translated in the next two lines.

4. Translated in the first half of the next line.

5. Basic principles.

6. I.e., a master of the occult arts, such as necromancy.

7. Unmoving.

Here tire my brains to gain a deity!

Wagner!

[Enter WAGNER.]

Commend me to my dearest friends,

65

The German Valdes and Cornelius;

Request them earnestly to visit me.

WAG. I will, sir.

[Exit.]

FAUST. Their conference will be a greater help to me
Than all my labors, plod I ne'er so fast.

70

[Enter the GOOD ANGEL and the BAD ANGEL.]

G. ANG. O Faustus, lay that damned book aside

And gaze not on it, lest it tempt thy soul

And heap God's heavy wrath upon thy head.

Read, read the Scriptures! That is blasphemy.

B. ANG. Go forward, Faustus, in that famous art

75

Wherein all nature's treasury is contained:

Be thou on earth, as Jove⁸ is in the sky,

Lord and commander of these elements.

[Exeunt ANGELS.]

FAUST. How am I glutted with conceit⁹ of this!

Shall I make spirits fetch me what I please,

Resolve me of all ambiguities,

Perform what desperate enterprise I will?

Anaphora⁸⁰

- I'll have them fly to India¹ for gold,

Ransack the ocean for orient pearl,

And search all corners of the new-found world²

85

For pleasant fruits and princely delicacies;

- I'll have them read me strange philosophy

And tell the secrets of all foreign kings;

- I'll have them wall all Germany with brass

And make swift Rhine circle fair Wittenberg;

- I'll have them fill the public schools³ with silk

Wherewith the students shall be bravely clad;

- I'll levy soldiers with the coin they bring,

And chase the Prince of Parma⁴ from our land

And reign sole king of all our provinces;

Yea, stranger engines for the brunt of war

Than was the fiery keel⁵ at Antwerp's bridge

95

- I'll make my servile spirits to invent!

[Enter VALDES and CORNELIUS.]

Come, German Valdes and Cornelius,

And make me blest with your sage conference.

100

Valdes, sweet Valdes and Cornelius,

Know that your words have won me at the last

To practice magic and concealéd arts;

Grand
plans soon disputed

8. God (a common substitution in Elizabethan drama).

9. Filled with the idea.

1. "India" could mean the West Indies, America, or Ophir (in the east).

2. The western hemisphere.

3. The university lecture rooms.

4. The Duke of Parma was the Spanish

governor general of the Low Countries from 1579 to 1592.

5. A reference to the burning ship sent by the Netherlands in 1585 against the barrier on the river Scheldt which Parma had built as a part of the blockade of Antwerp.

Yet not your words only, but mine own fantasy
That will receive no object,⁶ for my head
But ruminates on necromantic skill.

105

Rejected

Philosophy is odious and obscure,
Both law and physic are for petty wits,
Divinity is basest of the three,
Unpleasant, harsh, contemptible, and vile;

110

'Tis magic, magic, that hath ravished me!
Then, gentle friends, aid me in this attempt,
And I, that have with concise syllogisms

Graveled⁷ the pastors of the German church,
And made the flowering pride of Wittenberg

115

Swarm to my problems⁸ as the infernal spirits
On sweet Musaeus when he came to hell,
Will be as cunning as Agrippa⁹ was

Whose shadows made all Europe honor him.

VALD. Faustus, these books, thy wit, and our experience
Shall make all nations to canonize us.

120

As Indian Moors¹ obey their Spanish lords

So shall the spirits of every element

Be always serviceable to us three:

Like lions shall they guard us when we please.

125

Like Almain rutters² with their horsemen's staves,

Or Lapland giants trotting by our sides;

Sometimes like women, or unwedded maids,

Shadowing³ more beauty in their airy brows

130

Than in the white breasts of the queen of love;

From Venice shall they drag huge argosies

And from America the golden fleece

That yearly stuffs old Philip's⁴ treasury,

If learned Faustus will be resolute.

FAUST. Valdes, as resolute am I in this 135

As thou to live; therefore object it not.⁵

CORN. The miracles that magic will perform
Will make thee vow to study nothing else.

He that is grounded in astrology,

Enriched with tongues, well seen⁶ in minerals,

140

Hath all the principles magic doth require.

Then doubt not, Faustus, but to be renowned

And more frequented for this mystery⁷

Than heretofore the Delphian oracle.

The spirits tell me they can dry the sea

145

And fetch the treasure of all foreign wrecks—

6. That will pay no attention to physical reality.

7. Confounded.

8. Lectures in logic and mathematics. Musaeus was a mythical singer, son of Orpheus; it was, however, the latter who charmed the denizens of hell with his music.

9. Cornelius Agrippa, German author of The Vanity and Uncertainty of Arts and Sciences, popularly supposed to have the power of calling up shades ("shadows") of the dead.

1. I.e., dark-skinned American Indians.

2. German horsemen.

3. Harboring.

4. Philip II, king of Spain.

5. I.e., don't make it a condition.

6. Expert.

7. Craft. The "Delphian oracle" was the oracle of Apollo at Delphi, much frequented in antiquity.

- Aye, all the wealth that our forefathers hid
 Within the massy⁸ entrails of the earth.
 Then tell me, Faustus, what shall we three want?
 FAUST. Nothing, Cornelius. O this cheers my soul! 150
 Come, show me some demonstrations magical
 That I may conjure in some lusty⁹ grove
 And have these joys in full possession.
 VALD. Then haste thee to some solitary grove
 And bear wise Bacon's¹⁰ and Abanus' works, 155
 The Hebrew Psalter and New Testament;
 And whatsoever else is requisite
 We will inform thee ere our conference cease.
 CORN. Valdes, first let him know the words of art,
 And then, all other ceremonies learned, 160
 Faustus may try his cunning by himself.
 VALD. First I'll instruct thee in the rudiments,
 And then wilt thou be perfecter than I.
 FAUST. Then come and dine with me, and after meat
 We'll canvass every quiddity¹ thereof; 165
 For ere I sleep I'll try what I can do:
 This night I'll conjure² though I die therefore. [Exeunt.]

SCENE 2

[Enter two SCHOLARS.]

- 1 SCH. I wonder what's become of Faustus, that was wont to make our schools ring with sic probo.³
 2 SCH. That shall we presently know; here comes his boy.⁴
 [Enter WAGNER carrying wine.]
 1 SCH. How now, sirrah; where's thy master?
 WAG. God in heaven knows. 5
 2 SCH. Why, dost not thou know then?
 WAG. Yes, I know; but that follows not.
 1 SCH. Go to, sirrah; leave your jesting and tell us where he is.
 WAG. That follows not by force of argument, which you, being licentiate,⁵ should stand upon; therefore acknowledge your 10 error and be attentive.
 2 SCH. Then you will not tell us?
 WAG. You are deceived, for I will tell you. Yet if you were not dunces you would never ask me such a question, for is he not corpus naturale, and is not that mobile?⁶ Then wherefore 15 should you ask me such a question? But that I am by nature phlegmatic,⁷ slow to wrath and prone to lechery (to love, I would say), it were not for you to come within forty foot of

8. Massive.

9. Flourishing, beautiful.

10. Roger Bacon, the medieval friar and scientist, popularly thought a magician. "Abanus" is Pietro d'Abano, 13th-century alchemist.

1. Essential feature.

2. Call up spirits.

3. "Thus I prove," a phrase in scholastic disputation.

4. Poor student earning his keep.

5. I.e., graduate students.

6. Corpus naturale et mobile (natural, movable matter) was a scholastic definition of the subject matter of physics. Wagner is here parodying the language of learning he hears around the university.

7. Dominated by the phlegm, one of the four humors of medieval medicine and psychology.

the place of execution,⁸ although I do not doubt to see you both hanged the next sessions. Thus having triumphed over you, I will set my countenance like a precisian,⁹ and begin to speak thus: Truly, my dear brethren, my master is within at dinner with Valdes and Cornelius, as this wine, if it could speak, would inform your worships; and so the Lord bless you, preserve you, and keep you, my dear brethren.

[Exit.]

1 SCH. O Faustus, then I fear that which I have long suspected,
That thou art fallen into that damnéd art
For which they two are infamous through the world.

2 SCH. Were he a stranger, not allied to me,
The danger of his soul would make me mourn.
But come, let us go and inform the Rector,¹
It may be his grave counsel may reclaim him.

1 SCH. I fear me nothing will reclaim him now.

2 SCH. Yet let us see what we can do.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE 3

[Enter FAUSTUS to conjure.]

FAUST. Now that the gloomy shadow of the night,
Longing to view Orion's drizzling look,²
Leaps from the antarctic world unto the sky
And dims the welkin³ with her pitchy breath,
Faustus, begin thine incantations
And try if devils will obey thy hest,
Seeing thou hast prayed and sacrificed to them.
Within this circle is Jehovah's name

[He draws the circle⁴ on the ground.]

Forward and backward anagrammatized,
The breviated names of holy saints,
Figures of every adjunct⁵ to the heavens
And characters of signs and erring stars,
By which the spirits are enforced to rise.
Then fear not, Faustus, but be resolute
And try the uttermost magic can perform.

[Thunder.]

Sint mihi dei Acherontis propitii! Valeat numen triplex Iehovae! Ignei aerii aquatici terreni spiritus, salvet! Orientis princeps Lucifer Belzebub, inferni ardentis monarcha, et Demogorgon, propitiamus vos, ut appareat et surgat Mephistophilis!⁶

[FAUSTUS pauses. Thunder still.]

8. I.e., the dining room.

9. A Puritan. The rest of his speech is in the style of the Puritans.

1. The head of a German university.

2. Orion appears at the beginning of winter. The phrase is a reminiscence of Virgil.

3. Sky.

4. I.e., the magic circle on the ground within which the spirits rise.

5. Heavenly body, thought to be joined to the solid firmament. "Characters of signs" are signs of the zodiac and the planets; "erring": wandering.

6. This first part of the incantation means: "May the gods of the lower regions favor me! Goodbye to the Trinity! Hail, spirits of fire, air, water, and earth! Prince of the East, Belzebub, monarch of burning hell, and Demogorgon, we pray to you that Mephistophilis may appear and rise."

Quid tu moraris?⁷ Per Iehovam, Gehennam et consecratam aquam quam nunc spargo, signumque crucis quod nunc facio, et per vota nostra, ipse nunc surgat nobis dicatus Mephistophilis!

[MEPHISTOPHILIS in the shape of a dragon rises from the earth outside the circle.]

I charge thee to return and change thy shape; 25

Thou art too ugly to attend on me.

Go, and return an old Franciscan friar;

That holy shape becomes a devil best.

[Exit MEPH.]

I see there's virtue in my heavenly words:

Who would not be proficient in this art? 30

How pliant is this Mephistophilis,

Full of obedience and humility!

Such is the force of magic and my spells.

Now, Faustus, thou art conjurer laureate

That canst command great Mephistophilis: 35

Quin redis, Mephistophilis, fratris imagine!⁸

[Re-enter MEPHISTOPHILIS like a Friar.]

MEPH. Now, Faustus, what wouldst thou have me do?

FAUST. I charge thee wait upon me whilst I live

To do whatever Faustus shall command,

Be it be make the moon drop from her sphere 40

Or the ocean to overwhelm the world.

MEPH. I am a servant to great Lucifer

And may not follow thee without his leave:

No more than he commands must we perform.

FAUST. Did not he charge thee to appear to me? 45

MEPH. No, I came now hither of my own accord.

FAUST. Did not my conjuring speeches raise thee?

Speak!

MEPH. That was the cause, but yet per accidens,⁹

For when we hear one rack¹ the name of God, 50

Abjure the Scriptures and his Saviour Christ,

We fly in hope to get his glorious soul;

Nor will we come unless he use such means

Whereby he is in danger to be damned;

Therefore the shortest cut for conjuring 55

Is stoutly to abjure the Trinity

And pray devoutly to the prince of hell.

FAUST. So I have done, and hold this principle,

There is no chief but only Belzebub

To whom Faustus doth dedicate himself.

This word "damnation" terrifies not me 60

For I confound hell in Elysium;

7. Nothing has happened, so Faustus asks, "What are you waiting for?" and continues to conjure: "By Jehovah, Gehenna, and the holy water which I now sprinkle, and the sign of the cross which I now make, and by our vows, may Mephistophilis himself now rise to serve us."

8. "Return, Mephistophilis, in the shape of a friar."

9. By the immediate, not ultimate, cause.

1. Torture (by anagrammatizing).

My ghost be with the old philosophers!²

But leaving these vain trifles of men's souls—

Tell me, what is that Lucifer thy lord?

65

MEPH. Arch-regent and commander of all spirits.

FAUST. Was not that Lucifer an angel once?

MEPH. Yes, Faustus, and most dearly loved of God.

FAUST. How comes it, then, that he is prince of devils?

70

MEPH. O, by aspiring pride and insolence,

For which God threw him from the face of heaven.

FAUST. And what are you that live with Lucifer?

MEPH. Unhappy spirits that fell with Lucifer,

Conspired against our God with Lucifer,

75

And are forever damned with Lucifer.

FAUST. Where are you damned?

MEPH. In hell.

FAUST. How comes it, then, that thou art out of hell?

MEPH. Why, this is hell, nor am I out of it:

80

Thinkst thou that I who saw the face of God

And tasted the eternal joys of heaven

Am not tormented with ten thousand hells

In being deprived of everlasting bliss?³

O Faustus, leave these frivolous demands

85

Which strike a terror to my fainting soul!

FAUST. What, is great Mephistophilis so passionate

For being deprived of the joys of heaven?

Learn thou of Faustus manly fortitude

And scorn those joys thou never shalt possess.

90

Go, bear these tidings to great Lucifer:

Seeing Faustus hath incurred eternal death

By desperate thoughts against Jove's deity,

Say he surrenders up to him his soul

So he will spare him four and twenty years,

95

Letting him live in all voluptuousness,

Having thee ever to attend on me:

To give me whatsoever I shall ask,

To tell me whatsoever I demand,

To slay mine enemies and aid my friends,

100

And always be obedient to my will.

Go, and return to mighty Lucifer,

And meet me in my study at midnight

And then resolve me of thy master's mind.⁴

MEPH. I will, Faustus.

[Exit.] 105

FAUST. Had I as many souls as there be stars

I'd give them all for Mephistophilis!

By him I'll be great emperor of the world,

And make a bridge thorough the moving air

To pass the ocean with a band of men;

110

I'll join the hills that bind the Afric shore

2. I.e., I consider the true hell to be the classical Elysium, where philosophy is discussed, not the Christian place of punishment for sinners.

3. This is the poena damni, or punishment of loss, supposed to constitute the greatest spiritual suffering.

4. Give me his decision.

More
grand plans
115

And make that country continent to Spain,
And both contributory to my crown;
The Emperor⁵ shall not live but by my leave,
Nor any potentate of Germany.
Now that I have obtained what I desire
I'll live in speculation⁶ of this art
Till Mephistophilis return again.

[Exit.]

SCENE 4

[Enter WAGNER and the CLOWN (ROBIN).⁷]

WAG. Come hither, sirrah boy.

CLOWN. Boy! O disgrace to my person! Zounds, boy in your face!

You have seen many boys with such pickadevaunts, I am sure.⁸

WAG. Sirrah, hast thou no comings in?⁹

CLOWN. Yes, and goings out too; you may see, sir.

WAG. Alas, poor slave. See how poverty jests in his nakedness: the villain's out of service, and so hungry that I know he would give his soul to the devil for a shoulder of mutton, though it were blood-raw.

CLOWN. Not so, neither; I had need to have it well-roasted, and good sauce to it, if I pay so dear, I can tell you.

WAG. Sirrah, wilt thou be my man and wait on me? And I will make thee go like Qui mihi discipulus.¹

CLOWN. What, in verse?

WAG. No, slave, in beaten silk and staves-acre.²

CLOWN. Staves-acre! that's good to kill vermin. Then, belike, if I serve you I shall be lousy.

WAG. Why, so thou shalt be, whether thou dost it or no; for, sirrah, if thou dost not presently bind thyself to me for seven years, I'll turn all the lice about thee into familiars³ and make them tear thee in pieces.

CLOWN. Nay, sir, you may save yourself a labor, for they are as familiar with me as if they paid for their meat and drink, I can tell you.

WAG. Well, sirrah, leave your jesting and take these guilders.⁴

CLOWN. Yes, marry, sir, and I thank you, too.

WAG. So, now thou art to be at an hour's warning whenever and wheresoever the devil shall fetch thee.

CLOWN. Here, take your guilders again, I'll none of 'em.

WAG. Not I, thou art pressed;⁵ prepare thyself, for I will presently raise up two devils to carry thee away. Banio! Belcher!

5. The Holy Roman Emperor.

6. Contemplation.

7. Not a court jester (as in some of Shakespeare's plays), but the older-fashioned stock character, a rustic buffoon. The name "Robin" has been interpolated by later editors of the text; all such interpolations, introduced for clarity of understanding, are indicated by the special brackets used here.

8. The point of the Clown's retort is that he is a man and wears a beard ("pickadevaunt"). "Zounds": an oath

("God's wounds").

9. Income, but the Clown then puns on the literal meaning.

1. "You who are my pupil" (the opening phrase of a poem on how students should behave, from Lily's Latin Grammar). Wagner means, "like a proper servant of a learned man."

2. A kind of delphinium used for killing vermin.

3. Familiar spirits, demons.

4. Money.

5. Impressed, i.e., hired.

CLOWN. Belcher? And Belcher come here I'll belch him. I am not afraid of a devil.

[Enter two DEVILS, and the CLOWN runs up and down crying.]

WAG. How now, sir! Will you serve me now?

CLOWN. Aye, good Wagner, take away the devil then.

WAG. Spirits, away!

[DEVILS exeunt.]

Now, sirrah, follow me.

CLOWN. I will, sir. But hark you, master, will you teach me this conjuring occupation?

WAG. Aye, sirrah, I'll teach thee to turn thyself to a dog, or a cat, or a mouse, or a rat, or anything.

CLOWN. A dog, or a cat, or a mouse, or a rat! O brave⁶ Wagner!

WAG. Villain, call me Master Wagner; and see that you walk attentively, and let your right eye be always diametrically⁷ fixed upon my left heel, that thou mayst quasi vestigiis nostris insistere.⁸

CLOWN. Well, sir, I warrant you.

[Exeunt.]

Act II

SCENE 1

[Enter FAUSTUS in his study.]

FAUST. Now, Faustus, must thou needs be damned,
And canst not be saved.

What boots⁹ it, then, to think of God or heaven?

Away with such vain fancies, and despair—

Despair in God and trust in Belzebub.

Now go not backward, no, be resolute!

Why waverest thou? O something soundeth in mine ears:

"Abjure this magic, turn to God again!"

Aye, and Faustus will turn to God again.

To God? He loves thee not;

The God thou servest is thine own appetite,

Wherein is fixed the love of Belzebub.

To him I'll build an altar and a church

And offer lukewarm blood of newborn babes.

[Enter GOOD ANGEL and BAD ANGEL.]

G. ANG. Sweet Faustus, leave that execrable art.

B. ANG. Go forward, Faustus, in that famous art.

FAUST. Contrition, prayer, repentance—what of them?

G. ANG. O they are means to bring thee unto heaven!

B. ANG. Rather illusions, fruits of lunacy,

That makes men foolish that do use them most.

G. ANG. Sweet Faustus, think of heaven and heavenly things.

B. ANG. No, Faustus, think of honor and of wealth.

[Exeunt ANGELS.]

FAUST. Of wealth!

Why, the signiory of Emden¹ shall be mine.

When Mephistophilis shall stand by me

6. Marvelous, wonderful.

7. Diametrically.

8. A pedantic way of saying "follow my footsteps."

9. Avails.

1. A wealthy German trade center.

What power can hurt me? Faustus, thou art safe;
Cast no more doubts. Come, Mephistophilis,
And bring glad tidings from great Lucifer.
Is't not midnight? Come, Mephistophilis!
*Veni, veni, Mephistophile!*²

30

[Enter MEPHISTOPHILIS.]

Now tell me what saith Lucifer, thy lord?

MEPH. That I shall wait on Faustus whilst I live,

So he will buy my service with his soul.

FAUST. Already Faustus hath hazarded that for thee.

MEPH. But, Faustus, thou must bequeath it solemnly

35

And write a deed of gift with thine own blood,

For that security craves Lucifer.

If thou deny it, I must back to hell.

FAUST. Stay, Mephistophilis, and tell me what good

Will my soul do thy lord?

MEPH. Enlarge his kingdom.

40

FAUST. Is that the reason why he tempts us thus?

MEPH. *Solamen miseris socios habuisse doloris.*³

FAUST. Why, have you any pain that tortures others?

MEPH. As great as have the human souls of men.

But tell me, Faustus, shall I have thy soul?

45

And I will be thy slave, and wait on thee,

And give thee more than thou hast wit to ask.

FAUST. Ave, Mephistophilis, I'll give it him.

MEPH. Then, Faustus, stab thine arm courageously,

50

And bind thy soul that at some certain day

Great Lucifer may claim it as his own,

And then be thou as great as Lucifer.

FAUST. Lo, Mephistophilis, for love of thee

[Stabbing his arm.]

Faustus hath cut his arm, and with his proper⁴ blood

55

Assures his soul to be great Lucifer's.

Chief lord and regent of perpetual night,

View here the blood that trickles from mine arm

And let it be propitious for my wish!

MEPH. But, Faustus,

Write it in manner of a deed of gift.

60

FAUST. Aye, so I do. [Writes.] But, Mephistophilis,

My blood congeals and I can write no more.

MEPH. I'll fetch thee fire to dissolve it straight.

[Exit.]

FAUST. What might the staying of my blood portend?

65

Is it unwilling I should write this bill?⁵

Why streams it not, that I may write afresh?

"Faustus gives to thee his soul"—ah, there it stayed.

Why shouldst thou not? Is not thy soul thine own?

Then write again: "Faustus gives to thee his soul."

[Enter MEPHISTOPHILIS with a chafer⁶ of fire.]

2. "Come, come, Mephistophilis!"

3. "Misery loves company."

4. Own.

5. Contract.

6. A portable grate.

- MEPH. See, Faustus, here is fire; set it on. 70
- FAUST. So: now the blood begins to clear again;
Now will I make an end immediately. [Writes.]
- MEPH. [aside] What will not I do to obtain his soul!
FAUST. Consummatum est?—this bill is ended;
And Faustus hath bequeathed his soul to Lucifer. 75
But what is this inscription on mine arm?
"Homo, fuge!"⁸ Whither should I fly?
If unto God, he'll throw me down to hell.
My senses are deceived; here's nothing writ.
O yes, I see it plain: even here is writ 80
"Homo, fuge!" Yet shall not Faustus fly.
- MEPH. I'll fetch him somewhat to delight his mind. [Exit.] [Re-enter MEPHISTOPHILIS with DEVILS, giving crowns and rich apparel to FAUSTUS, and dance, and then depart.]
- FAUST. What means this show?
Speak, Mephistophilis.
- MEPH. Nothing, Faustus, but to delight thy mind 85
And let thee see what magic can perform.
- FAUST. But may I raise such spirits when I please?
- MEPH. Aye, Faustus, and do greater things than these.
- FAUST. Then, Mephistophilis, receive this scroll,
A deed of gift of body and of soul; 90
But yet conditionally that thou perform
All covenant-articles between us both.
- MEPH. Faustus, I swear by hell and Lucifer
To effect all promises between us made.
- FAUST. Then hear me read it, Mephistophilis. [Reads.] 95
"On these conditions following:
First, that Faustus may be a spirit in form and substance.
Secondly, that Mephistophilis shall be his servant and at his command.
Thirdly, that Mephistophilis shall do for him, and bring him 100 whatsoever.
Fourthly, that he shall be in his chamber or house invisible.
Lastly, that he shall appear to the said John Faustus at all times, in what form or shape soever he please.
I, John Faustus of Wittenberg, Doctor, by these presents do 105 give both body and soul to Lucifer, Prince of the East, and his minister Mephistophilis, and furthermore grant unto them, that four and twenty years being expired, the articles above written inviolate, full power to fetch or carry the said John Faustus, body and soul, flesh, blood, or goods, into their habi- 110 tation wheresoever.

By me John Faustus."

MEPH. Speak, Faustus, do you deliver this as your deed?

FAUST. Aye, take it, and the devil give thee good of it.

MEPH. Now, Faustus, ask what thou wilt.

FAUST. First will I question with thee about hell. 115

7. "It is finished." A blasphemy, as Cross (see John xix.30).
these are the words of Christ on the 8. "O man, flee!"

Tell me, where is the place that men call hell?
MEPH. Under the heavens.

FAUST. Aye, but whereabout?

MEPH. Within the bowels of these elements,
Where we are tortured and remain forever. 120
Hell hath no limits, nor is circumscribed
In one self place, for where we are is hell,
And where hell is there must we ever be;
And, to be short, when all the world dissolves
And every creature shall be purified, 125
All places shall be hell that is not heaven.

FAUST. I think hell's a fable.

MEPH. Aye, think so still, till experience change thy mind.

FAUST. Why, thinkst thou that Faustus shall be damned?

MEPH. Aye, of necessity, for here's the scroll 130
In which thou hast given thy soul to Lucifer.

FAUST. Aye, and body too; but what of that?
Thinkst thou that Faustus is so fond⁹ to imagine
That after this life there is any pain?
No, these are trifles and mere old wives' tales. 135

MEPH. But I am an instance to prove the contrary,

For I tell thee I am damned and now in hell.

FAUST. Nay, and this be hell I'll willingly be damned.
What, sleeping, eating, walking, and disputing?
But leaving off this, let me have a wife, 140
The fairest maid in Germany,
For I am wanton and lascivious
And cannot live without a wife.

MEPH. I prithee, Faustus, talk not of a wife.¹

FAUST. Nay, sweet Mephistophilis, fetch me one. for I will have 145 one.

MEPH. Well, thou shalt have a wife. Sit there till I come. [Exit.]
[Re-enter MEPHISTOPHILIS with a DEVIL dressed like a woman, with fireworks.]

FAUST. What sight is this?

MEPH. Now Faustus, how dost thou like thy wife?

FAUST. Here's a hot whore indeed! No, I'll no wife. 150

MEPH. Marriage is but a ceremonial toy,
And if thou lovest me, think no more of it.
I'll cull thee out the fairest courtesans
And bring them every morning to thy bed;
She whom thine eye shall like thy heart shall have, 155
Were she as chaste as was Penelope,²
As wise as Saba, or as beautiful
As was bright Lucifer before his fall.
Hold, take this book: peruse it thoroughly.
The iterating³ of these lines brings gold, 160

9. Foolish.

1. Mephistophilis cannot produce a wife for Faustus because marriage is a sacrament.

2. The wife of Ulysses, famed for chastity and fidelity. "Saba": the Queen of Sheba.

3. Repeating.

The framing⁴ of this circle on the ground
 Brings whirlwinds, tempests, thunder, and lightning;
 Pronounce this thrice devoutly to thyself
 And men in harness⁵ shall appear to thee,
 Ready to execute what thou desirest.

FAUST. Thanks, Mephistophilis, yet fain would I have a book¹⁶⁵ wherein I might behold all spells and incantations, that I might raise up spirits when I please.

MEPH. Here they are in this book. [There turn to them.]

FAUST. Now would I have a book where I might see all characters¹⁷⁰ and planets of the heavens, that I might know their motions and dispositions.

MEPH. Here they are too. [Turn to them.]

FAUST. Nay, let me have one book more, and then I have done, wherein I might see all plants, herbs, and trees that grow upon¹⁷⁵
 the earth.

MEPH. Here they be.

FAUST. O thou art deceived!

MEPH. Tut, I warrant thee. [Turn to them.]
 [(Exeunt.)]⁶

SCENE 2

[Enter FAUSTUS in his study and MEPHISTOPHILIS.]

FAUST. When I behold the heavens then I repent
 And curse thee, wicked Mephistophilis,
 Because thou hast deprived me of those joys.

MEPH. 'Twas thine own seeking, Faustus, thank thyself.
 But thinkest thou heaven is such a glorious thing?
 I tell thee, Faustus, it is not half so fair⁵
 As thou or any man that breathes on earth.

FAUST. How provest thou that?

MEPH. 'Twas made for man; then he's more excellent.

FAUST. If heaven was made for man 'twas made for me.¹⁰
 I will renounce this magic and repent.

[Enter GOOD ANGEL and BAD ANGEL.]

G. ANG. Faustus, repent; yet God will pity thee.

B. ANG. Thou art a spirit; God cannot pity thee.

FAUST. Who buzzeth in mine ears I am a spirit?⁷

Be I a devil, yet God may pity me.

Yea, God will pity me, if I repent.¹⁵

B. ANG. Aye, but Faustus never shall repent.

[Exeunt ANGELS.]

FAUST. My heart is hardened; I cannot repent.

Scarce can I name salvation, faith, or heaven,

But fearful echoes thunder in mine ears:

"Faustus, thou are damned!" Then guns and knives,²⁰

4. Drawing.

5. Armor.

6. After this a comic scene has been lost from the text. In it, apparently the Clown, Robin, stole one of Faustus' conjuring books and left Wagner's service. He then became an hostler at an inn.

7. Evil spirit, devil.

Swords, poison, halters, and envenomed steel
 Are laid before me to dispatch myself,
 And long ere this I should have done the deed
 Had not sweet pleasure conquered deep despair. 25
 Have I not made blind Homer sing to me
 Of Alexander's love and Oenon's death,⁸
 And hath not he that built the walls of Thebes
 With ravishing sound of his melodious harp⁹
 Made music with my Mephistophilis? 30
 Why should I die, then, or basely despair?
 I am resolved Faustus shall not repent.
 Come, Mephistophilis, let us dispute again
 And reason of divine astrology.
 Speak, are there many spheres above the moon? 35
 Are all celestial bodies but one globe
 As is the substance of this centric earth?¹

MEPH. As are the elements, such are the heavens,
 Even from the moon unto the empyreal orb,
 Mutually folded in each other's spheres, 40
 And jointly move upon one axletree
 Whose termine² is termed the world's wide pole;
 Nor are the names of Saturn, Mars, or Jupiter
 Feigned, but are erring stars.

FAUST. But tell me, have they all one motion, both situ et tem- 45 pore?³

MEPH. All move from east to west in four and twenty hours upon the poles of the world, but differ in their motions upon the poles of the zodiac.⁴

FAUST. These slender questions Wagner can decide. 50
 Hath Mephistophilis no greater skill?
 Who knows not the double motion of the planets?
 That the first is finished in a natural day;
 The second thus, Saturn in thirty years, Jupiter in twelve, Mars in four, the Sun, Venus, and Mercury in a year, the Moon in 55 twenty-eight days. These are freshmen's suppositions. But tell me, hath every sphere a dominion or intelligentia?⁵

MEPH. Aye.

FAUST. How many heavens or spheres are there?

MEPH. Nine: the seven planets, the firmament, and the empyreal 60 heaven.

8. Alexander is another name for Paris, the lover of Oenone; later he deserted her and abducted Helen, causing the Trojan War. Oenone refused to heal the wounds Paris received in battle, and when he died of them she killed herself in remorse.

9. I.e., the legendary musician Amphion.

1. "Faustus asks whether all the apparently different heavenly bodies form really one globe, like the earth. Mephistophilis answers that like the elements, which are separate but combined, the heavenly bodies are separate, though their spheres are infolded, and they move on one axletree. Hence we are not in error in giving individual names to Saturn, Mars, or Jupiter; they are separate planets" (F. S. Boas). The "empyrean orb," or outermost sphere, was also called the empyrean.

2. End.

3. In position and time.

4. I.e., the common axletree on which all the spheres revolve.

5. I.e., an angel or intelligence (thought to be the source of motion in each sphere).

FAUST. But is there not coelum igneum, et crystallinum?⁶

MEPH. No, Faustus, they be but fables.

FAUST. Resolve me then in this one question: why are not conjunctions, oppositions, aspects, eclipses, all at one time, but in some years we have more, in some less? 65

MEPH. Per inequalem motum respectu totius.⁷

FAUST. Well, I am answered. Tell me, who made the world?

MEPH. I will not.

FAUST. Sweet Mephistophilis, tell me.

MEPH. Move⁸ me not, Faustus. 70

FAUST. Villain, have I not bound thee to tell me anything?

MEPH. Aye, that is not against our kingdom; this is.

Thou art damned; think thou of hell.

FAUST. Think, Faustus, upon God that made the world!

MEPH. Remember this! 75

[Exit.]

FAUST. Aye, go, accurséd spirit, to ugly hell;

'Tis thou has damned distressed Faustus' soul.

Is 't too late?

[Enter GOOD ANGEL and BAD ANGEL.]

B. ANG. Too late. 80

G. ANG. Never too late, if Faustus will repent.

B. ANG. If thou repent, devils will tear thee in pieces.

G. ANG. Repent, and they shall never raze⁹ thy skin.

[Exeunt ANGELS.]

FAUST. O Christ, my Saviour! my Saviour!

Help to save distressed Faustus' soul. 85

[Enter LUCIFER, BELZEBUB, and MEPHISTOPHILIS.]

LUC. Christ cannot save thy soul, for he is just;

There's none but I have interest in the same.

FAUST. O what art thou that lookst so terrible?

LUC. I am Lucifer,

And this is my companion prince in hell. 90

FAUST. O Faustus, they are come to fetch thy soul!

BEL. We are come to tell thee thou dost injure us.

LUC. Thou call'st on Christ, contrary to thy promise.

BEL. Thou shouldst not think on God.

LUC. Think on the devil.

BEL. And his dam too.¹⁰ 95

FAUST. Nor will I henceforth. Pardon me in this,

And Faustus vows never to look to heaven,

Never to name God or pray to him,

To burn his Scriptures, slay his ministers,

And make my spirits pull his churches down. 100

LUC. So shalt thou show thyself an obedient servant, and we will highly gratify thee for it.

BEL. Faustus, we are come from hell in person to show thee some

6. The "heaven of fire" and the "crystalline sphere," introduced by some of the old authorities to explain the precession of the equinoxes.

7. "Because of their unequal velocities within the system."

8. Anger.

9. Scratch.

10. "The devil and his dam" was a common colloquial expression.

pastime. Sit down, and thou shalt behold the Seven Deadly Sins appear to thee in their own proper shapes and likeness. 105

FAUST. That sight will be as pleasant to me as Paradise was to Adam, the first day of his creation.

LUC. Talk not of Paradise or Creation, but mark the show. Go, Mephistophilis, fetch them in. 110

[Enter the SEVEN DEADLY SINS,¹¹ led by a piper.]

Now, Faustus, question them of their names and dispositions.

FAUST. That shall I soon. What art thou, the first?

PRIDE. I am Pride. I disdain to have any parents. I am like to Ovid's flea:¹ I can creep into every corner of a wench; sometimes like a periwig I sit upon her brow; next like a necklace I hang about her neck; then like a fan of feathers I kiss her lips; and then turning myself to a wrought smock² do what I list. But fie, what a smell is here! I'll not speak another word except the ground be perfumed and covered with cloth of arras.³ 115 120

FAUST. Thou art a proud knave indeed. What art thou, the second?

COVET. I am Covetousness, begotten of an old churl in a leather bag; and, might I now obtain my wish, this house, you and all, should turn to gold, that I might lock you safe into my chest. O my sweet gold! 125

FAUST. And what art thou, the third?

ENVY. I am Envy, begotten of a chimney-sweeper and an oyster-wife. I cannot read, and therefore wish all books were burned. I am lean with seeing others eat. O that there would come a famine over all the world, that all might die, and I live alone; then thou shouldst see how fat I'd be! But must thou sit and I stand? Come down, with a vengeance! 130

FAUST. Out, envious wretch! But what art thou, the fourth?

WRATH. I am Wrath. I had neither father nor mother; I leapt out of a lion's mouth when I was scarce an hour old, and ever since have run up and down the world with these case of rapiers, wounding myself when I could get none to fight withal. I was born in hell; and look to it, for some of you shall be my father. 135 140

FAUST. And what art thou, the fifth?

GLUT. I am Gluttony. My parents are all dead, and the devil a penny they have left me but a small pension, and that buys me thirty meals a day and ten bevers⁴—a small trifle to suffice nature. I come of a royal pedigree: my father was a gammon⁵ of bacon, and my mother was a hogshead of claret wine. My 145

11. The Seven Deadly Sins are pride, avarice, gluttony, lust, sloth, envy, and anger. (They are deadly because other sins grow out of them.) They were frequently represented in medieval plays, sometimes in the rather grimly comic tone used here; in the old morality plays all the characters, not merely the sins, were abstractions.

1. A salacious medieval poem Carmen de Pulice ("The Flea") was attributed to Ovid.

2. A decorated or ornamented petticoat.

3. Arras in Flanders exported fine cloth used for tapestry hangings.

4. Snacks.

5. The lower side of pork, including the leg.

godfathers were these: Peter Pickle-herring and Martin Martlemas-beef. But my godmother, O, she was a jolly gentlewoman, and well beloved in every good town and city: her name was mistress Margery March-beer. Now, Faustus, thou hast heard all my progeny;⁶ wilt thou bid me to supper? 150

FAUST. Not I. Thou wilt eat up all my victuals.

GLUT. Then the devil choke thee!

FAUST. Choke thyself, glutton. What art thou, the sixth?

SLOTH. Heigh ho! I am Sloth. I was begotten on a sunny bank, 155 where I have lain ever since, and you have done me great injury to bring me from thence; let me be carried thither again by Gluttony and Lechery. Heigh ho! I'll not speak word more for a king's ransom.

FAUST. And what are you, mistress minx, the seventh and last? 160

LECHERY. Who, I, sir? I am one that loves an inch of raw mut-ton⁷ better than an ell of fried stockfish, and the first letter of my name begins with Lechery.

LUC. Away, to hell, away! On, piper!⁸

[Exeunt the SINS.]

FAUST. O how this sight doth delight my soul! 165

LUC. Tut, Faustus, in hell is all manner of delight.

FAUST. O might I see hell and return again safe, how happy were I then!

LUC. Faustus, thou shalt. At midnight I will send for thee. In meantime peruse this book, and view it thoroughly, and thou 170 shalt turn thyself into what shape thou wilt.

FAUST. Thanks, mighty Lucifer; this will I keep as chary⁹ as my life.

LUC. Now Faustus, farewell.

FAUST. Farewell, great Lucifer. Come, Mephistophilis. 175

[Exeunt OMNES.]

SCENE 3

[Enter the CLOWN (ROBIN).]

ROBIN. What, Dick, look to the horses there till I come again. I have gotten one of Dr. Faustus' conjuring books, and now we'll have such knavery as 't passes.

[Enter DICK.]

DICK. What, Robin, you must come away and walk the horses.

ROBIN. I walk the horses! I scorn 't, faith: I have other matters 5 in hand; let the horses walk themselves and they will. "A *per se*¹ a; t, h, e, the; o per se o; deny organ, gorgon." Keep further from me, O thou illiterate and unlearned hostler.

6. Ancestry, lineage.

7. Frequently a word of indecent meaning in Elizabethan English; here it means the penis. "Ell": 45 inches; "stockfish": dried cod.

8. The command to the piper who led the procession of the Deadly Sins onto the stage to strike up a tune for their

exit.

9. Carefully.

1. "A by itself," a method of reading the letters of the alphabet taught to children. Robin's semi-literacy is being satirized. "Deny organ, gorgon" is a parody of Faustus' invocation of Demogorgon in I.iii.

- DICK. 'Snails,² what has thou got there? a book? Why, thou canst not tell ne'er a word on 't.
- ROBIN. That thou shalt see presently. Keep out of the circle, I say, lest I send you into the ostry³ with a vengeance. 10
- DICK. That's like, faith! You had best leave your foolery, for an my master come, he'll conjure you, faith.
- ROBIN. My master conjure me! I'll tell thee what; an my master come here, I'll clap as fair a pair of horns on 's head as e'er thou sawest in thy life.⁴ 15
- DICK. Thou needst not do that, for my mistress hath done it.
- ROBIN. Aye, there be of us here have waded as deep into matters as other men, if they were disposed to talk. 20
- DICK. A plague take you! I thought you did not sneak up and down after her for nothing. But I prithee tell me in good sadness, Robin, is that a conjuring book?
- ROBIN. Do but speak what thou 't have me do, and I'll do 't. If thou 't dance naked, put off thy clothes, and I'll conjure thee about presently. Or if thou 't but to the tavern with me, I'll give thee white wine, red wine, claret wine, sack, muscadine, malmesey, and whippincrust,⁵ hold-belly-hold, and we'll not pay one penny for it. 25
- DICK. O brave! Prithee let's to it presently, for I am as dry as a dog. 30
- ROBIN. Come then, let's away. [Exeunt.]

Act III

[Enter CHORUS.]

- CHO. Learned Faustus,
To find the secrets of astronomy
Graven in the book of Jove's high firmament,
Did mount himself to scale Olympus' top.
Where sitting in a chariot burning bright 5
Drawn by the strength of yokéd dragons' necks,
He views the clouds, the planets, and the stars,
The tropics, zones, and quarters of the sky
From the bright circle of the hornéd moon
Even to the height of Primum Mobile;⁶ 10
And whirling round with this circumference
Within the concave compass of the pole,
From east to west his dragons swiftly glide
And in eight days did bring him home again.
Not long he stayed within his quiet house 15
To rest his bones after his weary toil
But new exploits do hale him out again;
And mounted then upon a dragon's back
That with his wings did part the subtle air,
He now is gone to prove cosmography⁷ 20

2. I.e., God's nails (on the Cross).

3. Hostelry, inn.

4. A wife's infidelity was supposed in legend, and in the standard Elizabethan joke, to cause her husband to grow horns.

5. Robin's pronunciation of "hippocras," a spiced wine; "hold-belly-hold": as much as we can drink.

6. The outermost sphere, the empyrean.

7. I.e., to test the accuracy of maps.

That measures coasts and kingdoms of the earth:
 And, as I guess, will first arrive at Rome
 To see the Pope and manner of his court
 And take some part of holy Peter's feast,
 The which this day is highly solemnized.

[Exit.]

25

SCENE 1

[Enter FAUSTUS and MEPHISTOPHILIS.]

FAUST. Having now, my good Mephistophilis,
 Passed with delight the stately town of Trier⁸
 Environed round with airy mountain tops,
 With walls of flint and deep-entrenchéd lakes,⁹
 Not to be won by any conquering prince;
 From Paris next coasting the realm of France,
 We saw the river Maine fall into Rhine,
 Whose banks are set with groves of fruitful vines;
 Then up to Naples, rich Campania,
 With buildings fair and gorgeous to the eye,
 Whose streets straight forth and paved with finest brick
 Quarter the town in four equivalents.
 There saw we learned Maró's¹ golden tomb,
 The way he cut, an English mile in length,
 Thorough a rock of stone in one night's space.
 From thence to Venice, Padua, and the rest,
 In midst of which a sumptuous temple² stands
 That threatens the stars with her aspiring top,
 Whose frame is paved with sundry colored stones
 And roofed aloft with curious work in gold.
 Thus hitherto hath Faustus spent his time.
 But tell me now, what resting place is this?
 Hast thou, as erst I did command,
 Conducted me within the walls of Rome?

MEPH. I have, my Faustus, and for proof thereof
 This is the goodly palace of the Pope,
 And 'cause we are no common guests
 I choose his privy chamber for our use.

FAUST. I hope his Holiness will bid us welcome.

MEPH. All's one, for we'll be bold with his venison.
 But now, my Faustus, that thou mayst perceive
 What Rome contains for to delight thine eyes,
 Know that this city stands upon seven hills
 That underprop the groundwork of the same;
 Just through the midst runs flowing Tiber's stream,
 With winding banks that cut it in two parts
 Over the which four stately bridges lean

5

10

15

20

25

30

35

8. Treves (in Prussia).

9. Moats.

1. Virgil's. In medieval legend the Roman poet Virgil was considered a magician, and a tunnel ("way") on the promontory of Posilippo at Naples, near his tomb, was accredited to his magical powers.

2. I.e., St. Mark's in Venice.

That make safe passage to each part of Rome.
 Upon the bridge called Ponte Angelo
 Erected is a castle passing strong,
 Where thou shalt see such store of ordnance
 As that the double cannons forged of brass
 Do match the number of the days contained
 Within the compass of one complete year;
 Besides the gates and high pyramides³
 That Julius Caesar brought from Africa.

40

45

FAUST. Now by the kingdoms of infernal rule,
 Of Styx, Acheron, and the fiery lake
 Of ever-burning Phlegethon,⁴ I swear
 That I do long to see the monuments
 And situation of bright-splendent Rome.
 Come, therefore, let's away.

50

MEPH. Nay, stay, my Faustus; I know you'd see the Pope
 And take some part of holy Peter's feast,
 The which in state and high solemnity
 This day is held through Rome and Italy
 In honor of the Pope's triumphant victory.

55

FAUST. Sweet Mephistophilis, thou pleasest me;
 Whilst I am here on earth let me be cloyed
 With all things that delight the heart of man.
 My four and twenty years of liberty
 I'll spend in pleasure and in dalliance,
 That Faustus' name, whilst this bright frame doth stand,
 May be admir'd through the furthest land.

60

MEPH. 'Tis well said, Faustus; come then, stand by me
 And thou shalt see them come immediately.

65

FAUST. Nay, stay, my gentle Mephistophilis,
 And grant me my request, and then I go.
 Thou knowst, within the compass of eight days
 We viewed the face of heaven, of earth, of hell;
 So high our dragons soared into the air
 That, looking down, the earth appeared to me
 No bigger than my hand in quantity.
 There did we view the kingdoms of the world,
 And what might please mine eye I there beheld.
 Then in this show let me an actor be,
 That this proud Pope may Faustus' cunning see.

70

75

MEPH. Let it be so, my Faustus, but first stay
 And view their triumphs⁵ as they pass this way,
 And then devise what best contents thy mind,
 By cunning of thine art to cross the Pope
 Or dash the pride of this solemnity,
 To make his monks and abbots stand like apes
 And point like antics⁶ at his triple crown,

80

3. Py-rdm-i-des, a singular noun, meaning an obelisk.

4. Classical names for rivers of the underworld; symbolic of hell, they are appropriate as oaths for Faustus.

5. Parades.

6. Grotesque figures.

To beat the beads about the friars' pates
 Or clap huge horns upon the cardinals' heads,
 Or any villainy thou canst devise,
 And I'll perform it, Faustus. Hark, they come!
 This day shall make thee be admired in Rome.

85

[Enter the CARDINALS and BISHOPS, some bearing crosiers, some the pillars; MONKS and FRIARS singing their procession; then the POPE and RAYMOND, King of Hungary, with BRUNO led in chains.]⁷

POPE. Cast down our footstool.

RAY. Saxon Bruno, stoop,
 Whilst on thy back his Holiness ascends
 St. Peter's chair and state pontifical.

90

BRUNO. Proud Lucifer, that state belongs to me;
 But thus I fall, to Peter, not to thee.

POPE. To me and Peter shalt thou groveling lie
 And crouch before the papal dignity.
 Sound trumpets, then, for thus St. Peter's heir
 From Bruno's back ascends St. Peter's chair.

95

[A flourish while he ascends.]

Thus as the gods creep on with feet of wool
 Long ere with iron hands they punish men,
 So shall our sleeping vengeance now arise
 And smite with death thy hated enterprise.

100

Lord Cardinals of France and Padua,
 Go forthwith to our holy consistory
 And read among the statutes decretal
 What, by the holy council held at Trent,⁸
 The sacred synod hath decreed for him
 That doth assume the papal government
 Without election and a true consent.

105

Away and bring us word with speed.

110

1 CARD. We go, my lord.

[Exeunt CARDINALS.]

POPE. Lord Raymond—

FAUST. Go, haste thee, gentle Mephistophilis,
 Follow the cardinals to the consistory,
 And as they turn their superstitious books,
 Strike them with sloth and drowsy idleness
 And make them sleep so sound that in their shapes
 Thyself and I may parley with this Pope,
 This proud confronter of the Emperor,⁹
 And in despite of all his holiness
 Restore this Bruno to his liberty

115

120

7. "Crosiers": crosses borne before prelates; "the pillars" (of silver), however, are known to have been used by only two English cardinals, Wolsey and De la Pole. "Raymond, King of Hungary" is unknown to history. "Bruno" is likewise fictitious; he is the German pretender to the papal throne over whom the Pope has just triumphed (line 57).

8. The famous council of the Catholic Church which lasted from 1545 to 1563.

9. Holy Roman Emperor. Faustus refers to the conflict between the Pope and the Emperor; the former was victorious and captured the Emperor's choice for Pope, "Saxon Bruno."

And bear him to the states of Germany.

MEPH. Faustus, I go.

FAUST. Dispatch it soon.

The Pope shall curse that Faustus came to Rome.

[Exeunt FAUSTUS and MEPHISTOPHILIS.]

BRUNO. Pope Adrian, let me have some right of law;

125

I was elected by the Emperor.

POPE. We will depose the Emperor for that deed

And curse the people that submit to him;

Both he and thou shalt stand excommunicate

And interdict from church's privilege

130

And all society of holy men.

He grows too proud in his authority,

Lifting his lofty head above the clouds,

And like a steeple overpeers the church,

But we'll pull down his haughty insolence.

135

And as Pope Alexander,¹ our progenitor,

Trod on the neck of German Frederick,

Adding this golden sentence to our praise,

That Peter's heirs should tread on emperors

And walk upon the dreadful adder's back,

140

Treading the lion and the dragon down,

And fearless spurn the killing basilisk;²

So will we quell that haughty schismatic,

And by authority apostolical

Depose him from his regal government.

145

BRUNO. Pope Julius swore to princely Sigismond,

For him and the succeeding popes of Rome,

To hold the emperors their lawful lords.

POPE. Pope Julius did abuse the church's rights,

And therefore none of his decrees can stand.

150

Is not all power on earth bestowed on us?

And therefore though we would we cannot err.

Behold this silver belt, whereto is fixed

Seven golden keys fast sealed with seven seals

In token of our sevenfold power from heaven,

155

To bind or loose, lock fast, condemn, or judge,

Resign or seal, or whatso pleaseth us.

Then he and thou and all the world shall stoop,

Or be assuréd of our dreadful curse

To light as heavy as the pains of hell.

160

[Enter FAUSTUS and MEPHISTOPHILIS like cardinals.]

MEPH. Now tell me, Faustus, are we not fitted well?

FAUST. Yes, Mephistophilis, and two such cardinals

Ne'er served a holy pope as we shall do.

But whilst they sleep within the consistory

Let us salute his reverend Fatherhood.

165

RAY. Behold, my lord, the cardinals are returned.

1. Pope Alexander III (1159–81) compelled the Emperor Frederick Barba-rossa to submit to him.

2. A mythical monster capable of killing by a look.

- POPE. Welcome, grave fathers, answer presently;³
 What have our holy council there decreed
 Concerning Bruno and the Emperor
 In quittance of their late conspiracy 170
 Against our state and papal dignity?
- FAUST. Most sacred patron of the church of Rome,
 By full consent of all the synod
 Of priests and prelates it is thus decreed:
 That Bruno and the German Emperor 175
 Be held as lollards⁴ and bold schismatics
 And proud disturbers of the church's peace.
 And if that Bruno by his own assent,
 Without enforcement of the German peers,
 Did seek to wear the triple diadem 180
 And by your death to climb St. Peter's chair,
 The statutes decretal have thus decreed:
 He shall be straight condemned of heresy
 And on a pile of fagots burned to death.
- POPE. It is enough. Here, take him to your charge 185
 And bear him straight to Ponte Angelo,
 And in the strongest tower enclose him fast.
 Tomorrow, sitting in our consistory
 With all our college of grave cardinals,
 We will determine of his life or death. 190
 Here, take his triple crown along with you
 And leave it in the church's treasury.
 Make haste again, my good lord cardinals.
 And take our blessing apostolical.
- MEPH. So, so. Was never devil thus blessed before! 195
 FAUST. Away, sweet Mephistophilis, be gone;
 The cardinals will be plagued for this anon.
 [Exeunt FAUSTUS and MEPHISTOPHILIS with BRUNO.]
- POPE. Go presently and bring a banquet forth,
 That we may solemnize St. Peter's feast
 And with Lord Raymond, King of Hungary, 200
 Drink to our late and happy victory. [Exeunt.]

SCENE 2

[The banquet is brought in, and then enter FAUSTUS and MEPHISTOPHILIS in their own shapes.]

- MEPH. Now Faustus, come prepare thyself for mirth;
 The sleepy cardinals are hard at hand
 To censure Bruno, that is posted hence
 And on a proud-paced steed as swift as thought
 Flies o'er the Alps to fruitful Germany, 5
 There to salute the woeful Emperor.
- FAUST. The Pope will curse them for their sloth today
 That slept both Bruno and his crown away.

3. Immediately.

4. Protestants, usually English followers of Wycliffe, the 14th-century religious reformer.

- But now, that Faustus may delight his mind
And by their folly make some merriment, 10
Sweet Mephistophilis, so charm me here
That I may walk invisible to all
And do whate'er I please unseen of any.
- MEPH. Faustus, thou shalt; then kneel down presently,
Whilst on thy head I lay my hand 15
And charm thee with this magic wand.
First wear this girdle, then appear
Invisible to all are here.
The planets seven, the gloomy air,
Hell, and the Furies' forkéd hair, 20
Pluto's blue fire and Hecate's⁵ tree
With magic spells so compass thee
That no eye may thy body see.
- So, Faustus, now, for all their holiness,
Do what thou wilt thou shalt not be discerned. 25
- FAUST. Thanks, Mephistophilis. Now friars, take heed
Lest Faustus make your shaven crowns to bleed.
- MEPH. Faustus, no more; see where the cardinals come.
[Enter POPE and all the lords, with KING RAYMOND and the ARCHBISHOP OF RHEIMS. Enter the two CARDINALS with a book.]
- POPE. Welcome, lord cardinals; come, sit down.
Lord Raymond, take your seat. Friars, attend, 30
And see that all things be in readiness
As best beseems this solemn festival.
- 1 CARD. First may it please your sacred holiness
To view the sentence of the reverend synod
Concerning Bruno and the Emperor. 35
- POPE. What needs this question? Did I not tell you
Tomorrow we would sit i' th' consistory
And there determine of his punishment?
You brought us word, even now, it was decreed
That Bruno and the curséd Emperor 40
Were by the holy council both condemned
For loathéd lollards and base schismatics;
Then wherefore would you have me view that book?
- 1 CARD. Your Gracc mistakes; you gave us no such charge.
- RAY. Deny it not; we all are witnesses 45
That Bruno here was late delivered you,
With his rich triple crown to be reserved
And put into the church's treasury
- BOTH CARD. By holy Paul we saw them not.
- POPE. By Peter, you shall die 50
Unless you bring them forth immediately.

5. The goddess of magic and witchcraft, whose name the Elizabethans pronounced Héc-at. She is not known to have any special "tree"; the word may be a mistake for "three," since she was often represented as a triple goddess—of heaven, earth, and hell.

Hale them to prison! Lade their limbs with gyves!⁶

False prelates, for this hateful treachery,

Cursed be your souls to hellish misery. [Exeunt CARDINALS.]

FAUST. So they are safe. Now, Faustus, to the feast;

The Pope had never such a frolic guest.

POPE. Lord Archbishop of Rheims, sit down with us.

ARCH. I thank your Holiness.

FAUST. Fall to! The devil choke you an you spare!

POPE. Who's that spoke? Friars, look about.

Lord Raymond, pray fall to. I am beholden

To the Bishop of Milan for this so rare a present.

FAUST. I thank you, sir.

[FAUSTUS snatches the meat from the POPE.]

POPE. How now! Who snatched the meat from me? Villains, why speak you not?

FRIAR. Here's nobody, if it like your Holiness.

POPE. My good Lord Archbishop, here's a most dainty dish

Was sent me from a cardinal in France.

FAUST. I'll have that, too.

[FAUSTUS snatches the dish from the POPE.]

POPE. What lollards do attend our Holiness

That we receive such great indignity?

Fetch me some wine.

FAUST. Aye, pray do, for Faustus is adry.

POPE. Lord Raymond, I drink unto your Grace.

FAUST. I pledge your Grace.

[FAUSTUS snatches the cup from the POPE.]

POPE. My wine gone, too? Ye lubbers, look about

And find the man that doth this villainy,

Or by my sanctitude you all shall die.

I pray, my lords, have patience at this troublesome banquet.

ARCH. Please your Holiness, I think it be some ghost crept out of purgatory and now is come unto your Holiness for his pardon.

POPE. It may be so;

Go then, command our priests to sing a dirge

To lay the fury of this same troublesome ghost.

Once again, my lord, fall to.

[The POPE crosses himself.]

FAUST. How now!

Must every bit be spiced with a cross?

Well, use that trick no more, I would advise you.

[The POPE crosses himself.]

Well, there's the second time; aware the third;

I give you fair warning.

[The POPE crosses himself again.]

Nay then, take that!

[FAUSTUS hits the POPE a box on the ear.]

POPE. O, I am slain! Help me, my lords!

O come and help to bear my body hence!

6. I.e., load their limbs with prisoners' shackles.

Damned be his soul forever for this deed.

[Exeunt the POPE and his train.]

MEPH. Now Faustus, what will you do now? For I can tell you 95 you'll be cursed with bell, book, and candle.⁷

FAUST. Bell, book, and candle; candle, book, and bell

Forward and backward, to curse Faustus to hell!

[Enter all the FRIARS with bell, book, and candle to sing the dirge.]

FRIAR. Come, brethren, let's about our business with good devotion. 100

[ALL sing this:]

Curséd be he that stole away his Holiness' meat from the table—*maledicat dominus!*⁸

Curséd be he that struck his Holiness a blow on the face—
maledicat dominus!

Curséd be he that took Friar Sandelo a blow on the face— 105
maledicat dominus!

Curséd be he that disturbeth our holy dirge—maledicat dominus!

Curséd be he that took away his Holiness' wine—*maledicat dominus! Et omnes sancti!*⁹ Amen. 110

[FAUSTUS and MEPHISTOPHILIS beat the FRIARS, and fling fireworks among them, and so exeunt.]

SCENE 3

[Enter CLOWN (ROBIN) and DICK with a cup.]

DICK. Sirrah Robin, we were best look that your devil can answer the stealing of this same cup, for the vintner's boy follows us at the hard heels.

ROBIN. 'Tis no matter, let him come! An he follow us I'll so con-jure him as he was never conjured in his life, I warrant him. 5
Let me see the cup.

[Enter VINTNER.]

DICK. Here 'tis. Yonder he comes. Now, Robin, now or never show thy cunning.

VINT. O, are you here? I am glad I have found you. You are a couple of fine companions! Pray, where's the cup you stole 10 from the tavern?

ROBIN. How, how? We steal a cup? Take heed what you say! We look not like cup-stealers, I can tell you.

VINT. Never deny it, for I know you have it, and I'll search you.

ROBIN. Search me? Aye, and spare not. Hold the cup, Dick! 15
Come, come; search me, search me.

VINT. Come on, sirrah, let me search you now.

DICK. Aye, aye, do; do. Hold the cup, Robin. I fear not your searching. We scorn to steal your cups, I can tell you.

VINT. Never outface me for the matter, for sure the cup is be- 20 tween you two.

7. The traditional paraphernalia for cursing and excommunication.

8. "May the Lord curse him!"

9. And all saints (also curse him).

ROBIN. Nay, there you lie. 'Tis beyond us both.

VINT. A plague take you! I thought 'twas your knavery to take it away. Come, give it me again.

ROBIN. Aye, much! When, can you tell?¹ Dick, make me a circle, and stand close at my back and stir not for thy life. Vintner, you shall have your cup anon. Say nothing, Dick. O per se O; Demogorgon, Belcher and Mephistophilis!

[Enter MEPHISTOPHILIS.]

MEPH. Monarch of hell, under whose black survey
Great potentates do kneel with awful fear,
Upon whose altars thousand souls do lie,
How am I vexéd with these villains' charms!
From Constantinople am I hither brought
Only for pleasure of these damnéd slaves. [Exit VINTNER.]

ROBIN. By Lady, sir, you have had a shrewd journey of it; will it please you to take a shoulder of mutton to supper and a tester² in your purse, and go back again?

DICK. Aye, I pray you heartily, sir; for we called you but in jest, I promise you.

MEPH. To purge the rashness of this curséd deed,
First be thou turnéd to this ugly shape:
For apish deeds transforméd to an ape.

ROBIN. O brave! an ape! I pray, sir, let me have the carrying of him about to show some tricks.

MEPH. And so thou shalt. Be thou transformed to a dog and carry him upon thy back. Away! Be gone!

ROBIN. A dog! That's excellent! Let the maids look well to their porridge pots, for I'll into the kitchen presently. Come, Dick, come.

[Exit ROBIN and DICK.]

MEPH. Now with the flames of ever-burning fire
I'll wing myself and forthwith fly amain
Unto my Faustus, to the Great Turk's court. [Exit.]

Act IV

[Enter CHORUS.]

CHO. When Faustus had with pleasure ta'en the view
Of rarest things and royal courts of kings,
He stayed his course and so returnéd home,
Where such as bear his absence but with grief,
I mean his friends and nearest companions,
Did gratulate his safety with kind words,
And in their conference of what befell
Touching his journey through the world and air,
They put forth questions of astrology
Which Faustus answered with such learned skill
As they admired and wondered at his wit.
Now is his fame spread forth in every land:

1. A common Elizabethan scornful retort.

2. Sixpence.

Amongst the rest the Emperor is one,
 Carolus the Fifth,³ at whose palace now
 Faustus is feasted 'mongst his noblemen. 15
 What there he did in trial of his art
 I leave untold, your eyes shall see performed. [Exit.]

SCENE 1

[Enter MARTINO and FREDERICK at several doors.⁴]

MART. What ho! Officers, gentlemen!
 Hie to the presence to attend the Emperor.
 Good Frederick, see the rooms be voided straight;
 His Majesty is coming to the hall.
 Go back, and see the state in readiness. 5

FRED. But where is Bruno, our elected Pope,
 That on a fury's back came post from Rome?
 Will not his Grace consort⁵ the Emperor?

MART. O yes, and with him comes the German conjurer,
 The learned Faustus, fame of Wittenberg, 10
 The wonder of the world for magic art;
 And he intends to show great Carolus
 The race of all his stout progenitors
 And bring in presence of his majesty
 The royal shapes and warlike semblances 15
 Of Alexander and his beauteous paramour.⁶

FRED. Where is Benvolio?

MART. Fast asleep, I warrant you;
 He took his rouse with stoups⁷ of Rhenish wine
 So kindly yesternight to Bruno's health 20
 That all this day the sluggard keeps his bed.

FRED. See, see; his window's ope; we'll call to him.

MART. What ho, Benvolio!

[Enter BENVOLIO above at a window, in his nightcap, buttoning.]

BENV. What a devil ail you two?

MART. Speak softly, sir, lest the devil hear you; 25
 For Faustus at the court is late arrived
 And at his heels a thousand furies wait
 To accomplish whatsoever the Doctor please.

BENV. What of this?

MART. Come, leave thy chamber first and thou shalt see 30
 This conjurer perform such rare exploits
 Before the Pope⁸ and royal Emperor
 As never yet was seen in Germany.

BENV. Has not the Pope enough of conjuring yet?
 He was upon the devil's back late enough, 35
 And if he be so far in love with him
 I would he would post home to Rome with him again.

3. I.e., Emperor Charles V (1519-56).

4. I.e., at different entrances.

5. Accompany.

6. Alexander the Great and his mistress

Thais.

7. Drank many full glasses.

8. Bruno.

FRED. Speak, wilt thou come and see this sport?

BENV. Not I.

MART. Wilt thou stand in thy window and see it, then?

40

BENV. Aye, and I fall not asleep i' th' meantime.

MART. The Emperor is at hand, who comes to see

What wonders by black spells may compassed be.

BENV. Well, go you attend the Emperor. I am content for this once to thrust my head out a window, for they say if a man be drunk overnight the devil cannot hurt him in the morning. If that be true, I have a charm in my head shall control him as well as the conjurer, I warrant you. 45

[Exit MARTINO and FREDERICK.]

SCENE 2

[A sennet.⁹ Enter CHARLES THE GERMAN EMPEROR, BRUNO, the DUKE OF SAXONY, FAUSTUS, MEPHISTOPHILIS, FRED-ERICK, MARTINO and ATTENDANTS. BENVOLIO remains at his window.]

EMP. Wonder of men, renowned magician,
Thrice-learned Faustus, welcome to our court.
This deed of thine, in setting Bruno free
From his and our professéd enemy,
Shall add more excellence unto thine art
Than if by powerful necromantic spells
Thou couldst command the world's obedience.

5

Forever be beloved of Carolus;
And if this Bruno thou hast late redeemed
In peace possess the triple diadem
And sit in Peter's chair despite of chance,
Thou shalt be famous through all Italy
And honored of the German Emperor.

10

FAUST. These gracious words, most royal Carolus,
Shall make poor Faustus to his utmost power
Both love and serve the German Emperor
And lay his life at holy Bruno's feet.
For proof whereof, if so your Grace be pleased,
The Doctor stands prepared by power of art
To cast his magic charms that shall pierce through
The ebon gates of ever-burning hell
And hale the stubborn furies from their caves
To compass whatsoe'er your Grace commands.

15

20

BENV. [aside] Blood! He speaks terribly, but for all that I do not greatly believe him. He looks as like a conjurer as the Pope to a costermonger.¹ 25

EMP. Then Faustus, as thou late didst promise us,
We would behold that famous conqueror,
Great Alexander and his paramour,
In their true shapes and state majestical,
That we may wonder at their excellence.

30

9. A trumpet signal.

1. Fruit-seller.

FAUST. Your Majesty shall see them presently.

Mephistophilis, away!

And with a solemn noise of trumpets' sound

Present before this royal Emperor

Great Alexander and his beauteous paramour.

35

MEPH. Faustus, I will.

[Exit.]

BENV. [aside] Well, master Doctor, an your devils come not away quickly, you shall have me asleep presently. Zounds, I could eat myself for anger to think I have been such an ass all this while to stand gaping after the devil's governor, and can see nothing.

40

FAUST. [aside] I'll make you feel something anon if my art fail me not.—

My lord, I must forewarn your Majesty

That when my spirits present the royal shapes

Of Alexander and his paramour,

45

Your Grace demand no questions of the King,

But in dumb silence let them come and go.

EMP. Be it as Faustus please; we are content.

BENV. [aside] Aye, Aye, and I am content, too. And thou bring

Alexander and his paramour before the Emperor, I'll be Ac-taeon² and turn myself into a stag.

50

FAUST. [aside] And I'll play Diana and send you the horns presently.

[Sennet. Enter at one door the emperor ALEXANDER, at the other DARIUS. They meet; DARIUS is thrown down; ALEXANDER kills him, takes off his crown and, offering to go out, his PARAMOUR meets him; he embraceth her and sets DARIUS' crown upon her head and, coming back, both salute the EMPEROR, who, leaving his state,³ offers to embrace them, which FAUSTUS seeing, suddenly stays him. Then trumpets cease and music sounds.]

FAUST. My gracious lord, you do forget yourself;

These are but shadows, not substantial.

55

EMP. O pardon me; my thoughts are ravished so

With sight of this renowned Emperor

That in mine arms I would have compassed him.

But Faustus, since I may not speak to them

60

To satisfy my longing thoughts at full,

Let me this tell thee: I have heard it said

That this fair lady, whilst she lived on earth,

Had on her neck a little wart or mole.

How may I prove that saying to be true?

65

FAUST. Your Majesty may boldly go and see.

EMP. Faustus, I see it plain;

And in this sight thou better pleatest me

Than if I gained another monarchy.

FAUST. Away, be gone!

[Exit SHOW.] 70

See, see, my gracious lord, what strange beast is yon, that

2. The hunter of classical legend who happened to see the goddess Diana bathing. In punishment he was changed into a stag and pursued by his own hounds.

3. Throne.

thrusts its head out at the window!

EMP. O wondrous sight! See, Duke of Saxony, two spreading horns most strangely fastened upon the head of young Benvolio.

75

SAX. What, is he asleep, or dead?

FAUST. He sleeps, my lord, but dreams not of his horns.

EMP. This sport is excellent. We'll call and wake him. What hol Benvolio!

BENV. A plague upon you! Let me sleep a while.

80

EMP. I blame thee not to sleep, much, having such a head of thine own.

SAX. Look up, Benvolio. 'Tis the Emperor calls.

BENV. The Emperor! Where? O zounds, my head!

EMP. Nay, and thy horns hold 'tis no matter for thy head, for that's armed sufficiently.

85

FAUST. Why, how now, sir knight! What, hanged by the horns? This is most horrible. Fie, fie! Pull in your head, for shame! Let not all the world wonder at you.

BENV. Zounds, Doctor, is this your villainy?

90

FAUST. O, say not so, sir. The Doctor has no skill,

No art, no cunning to present these lords

Or bring before this royal Emperor

The mighty monarch, warlike Alexander?

If Faustus do it, you are straight resolved

95

In bold Actaeon's shape to turn a stag?

And therefore, my lord, so please your Majesty,

I'll raise a kennel of hounds shall hunt him so

As all his footmanship shall scarce prevail

To keep his carcass from their bloody fangs.

100

Ho, Belimote, Argiron, Asterote!

BENV. Hold, hold! Zounds, he'll raise up a kennel of devils, I think, anon. Good my lord, entreat for me. 'Sblood, I am never able to endure these torments.

EMP. Then good master Doctor, 105

Let me entreat you to remove his horns;

He has done penance now sufficiently.

FAUST. My gracious lord, not so much for injury done to me, as to delight your Majesty with some mirth, hath Faustus justly requited this injurious knight; which, being all I desire, I am content to remove his horns.—Mephistophilis, transform him. —And hereafter, sir, look you speak well of scholars.

110

BENV. [aside] Speak well of ye! 'Sblood, and scholars be such cuckoldmakers to clap horns of honest men's heads o' this order, I'll ne'er trust smooth faces and small ruffs⁴ more. But an I be not revenged for this, would I might be turned to a gaping oyster and drink nothing but salt water!

115

EMP. Come, Faustus. While the Emperor lives,

In recompense of this thy high desert,

4. I.e., scholars, who were often smooth-shaven and did not wear the large "ruffs" (collars) of courtiers. But Faustus has a beard; see the next scene.

Thou shalt command the state of Germany
And live beloved of mighty Carolus. 120
[Exeunt OMNES.]

SCENE 3

[Enter BENVOLIO, MARTINO, FREDERICK, and SOLDIERS.]

MART. Nay, sweet Benvolio, let us sway thy thoughts
From this attempt against the conjurer.

BENV. Away! You love me not to urge me thus.

Shall I let slip so great an injury
When every servile groom jests at my wrongs 5
And in their rustic gambols proudly say,
"Benvolio's head was graced with horns today"?

O, may these eyelids never close again
Till with my sword I have that conjurer slain.
If you will aid me in this enterprise, 10
Then draw your weapons and be resolute;
If not, depart. Here will Benvolio die,
But Faustus' death shall quit⁵ my infamy.

FRED. Nay, we will stay with thee, betide what may,
And kill that Doctor if he come this way. 15

BENV. Then gentle Frederick, hie thee to the grove
And place our servants and our followers
Close in an ambush there behind the trees.
By this I know the conjurer is near;
I saw him kneel and kiss the Emperor's hand 20
And take his leave laden with rich rewards.
Then, soldiers, boldly fight. If Faustus die,
Take you the wealth, leave us the victory.

FRED. Come, soldiers, follow me unto the grove;
Who kills him shall have gold and endless love. 25

[Exit FREDERICK with the SOLDIERS.]

BENV. My head is lighter than it was by th' horns,
But yet my heart's more ponderous than my head
And pants until I see that conjurer dead.

MART. Where shall we place ourselves, Benvolio?

BENV. Here will we stay to bide the first assault. 30
O, were that damned hell-hound but in place
Thou soon shouldst see me quit my foul disgrace.

[Enter FREDERICK.]

FRED. Close, close! The hated conjurer is at hand
And all alone comes walking in his gown;
Be ready then and strike the peasant down. 35

BENV. Mine be that honor then. Now, sword, strike home!
For horns he gave I'll have his head anon.

[Enter FAUSTUS wearing a false head.]

MART. See, see, he comes.

BENV. No words; this blow ends all;
Hell take his soul, his body thus must fall.

FAUST. O! 40

5. Avenge.

FRED. Groan you, master Doctor?

BENV. Break may his heart with groans. Dear Frederick, see
Thus will I end his griefs immediately.

[Cuts off the false head.]

MART. Strike with a willing hand! His head is off.

BENV. The devil's dead; the furies now may laugh.

FRED. Was this that stern aspect, that awful frown,

Made the grim monarch of infernal spirits

Tremble and quake at his commanding charms?

MART. Was this that damnéd head whose art conspired

Benvolio's shame before the Emperor?

BENV. Aye, that's the head, and here the body lies

Justly rewarded for his villainies.

FRED. Come, let's devise how we may add more shame

To the black scandal of his hated name.

BENV. First, on his head, in quittance of my wrongs,

I'll nail huge forkéd horns and let them hang

Within the window where he yoked me first,

That all the world may see my just revenge.

MART. What use shall we put his beard to?

BENV. We'll sell it to a chimney-sweeper; it will wear out ten birchen brooms, I warrant you.

FRED. What shall his eyes do?

BENV. We'll pull out his eyes, and they shall serve for buttons to his lips to keep his tongue from catching cold.

MART. An excellent policy. And now, sirs, having divided him, what shall the body do?

[FAUSTUS rises.]

BENV. Zounds, the devil's alive again!

FRED. Give him his head, for God's sake!

FAUST. Nay, keep it. Faustus will have heads and hands,

Aye, all your hearts, to recompense this deed.

Knew you not, traitors, I was limited

For four and twenty years to breathe on earth?

And had you cut my body with your swords

Or hewed this flesh and bones as small as sand,

Yet in a minute had my spirit returned

And I had breathed a man made free from harm.

But wherefore do I dally my revenge?

Asteroth, Belimoth, Mephistophilis!

[Enter MEPHISTOPHILIS and other DEVILS.]

Go, horse these traitors on your fiery backs

And mount aloft with them as high as heaven,

Then pitch them headlong to the lowest hell.

Yet stay, the world shall see their misery,

And hell shall after plague their treachery.

Go, Belimoth, and take this caitiff⁸ hence

And hurl him in some lake of mud and dirt;

Take thou this other, drag him through the woods

Amongst the pricking thorns and sharpest briars,
 Whilst with my gentle Mephistophilis
 This traitor flies unto some steepy rock
 That rolling down may break the villain's bones
 As he intended to dismember me.

90

Fly hence, dispatch my charge immediately.

FRED. Pity us, gentle Faustus; save our lives!

FAUST. Away!

FRED. He must needs go that the devil drives.

95

[Exeunt SPIRITS with the KNIGHTS.]

[Enter the ambushed SOLDIERS.]

1 SOLD. Come, sirs, prepare yourselves in readiness;

Make haste to help these noble gentlemen;

I heard them parley with the conjurer.

2 SOLD. See where he comes; dispatch, and kill the slave!

FAUST. What's here? An ambush to betray my life?

100

Then, Faustus, try thy skill. Base peasants, stand!

For lo, these trees remove at my command

And stand as bulwarks 'twixt yourselves and me

To shield me from your hated treachery;

Yet to encounter this, your weak attempt,

105

Behold an army comes incontinent.⁷

[FAUSTUS strikes the door, and enter a DEVIL playing on a drum; after him another bearing an ensign, and divers with weapons; MEPHISTOPHILIS with fireworks. They set upon the SOLDIERS and drive them out. Exeunt.]

SCENE 4

[Enter at several doors BENVOLIO, FREDERICK, and MARTINO, their heads and faces bloody and besmeared with mud and dirt, all having horns on their heads.]

MART. What ho, Benvolio!

BENV. Here! What, Frederick, ho!

FRED. O help me, gentle friend. Where is Martino?

MART. Dear Frederick, here—

Half smothered in a lake of mud and dirt

5

Through which the furies dragged me by the heels.

FRED. Martino, see! Benvolio's horns again.

MART. O misery! How now, Benvolio!

BENV. Defend me, heaven! Shall I be haunted still?

MART. Nay, fear not, man; we have no power to kill.

10

BENV. My friends transformed thus! O hellish spite!

Your heads are all set with horns.

FRED. You hit it right;

It is your own you mean; feel on your head.

BENV. Zounds, horns again!

15

MART. Nay, chafe not, man; we are all sped.⁸

BENV. What devil attends this damned magician

That spite of spite our wrongs are doubled?

7. Immediately.

8. Don't fret, man, we are all done for.

FRED. What may we do that we may hide our shames?

BENV. If we should follow him to work revenge,

He'd join long asses' ears to those huge horns

And make us laughingstocks to all the world.

MART. What shall we then do, dear Benvolio?

BENV. I have a castle joining near these woods,

And thither we'll repair and live obscure

Till time shall alter this our brutish shapes.

Sith black disgrace hath thus eclipsed our fame,

We'll rather die with grief than live with shame.

[Exeunt OMNES.]

SCENE 5

[*Enter FAUSTUS and the HORSE-COURSER.*⁹]

HOR. I beseech your Worship, accept of these forty dollars.¹

FAUST. Friend, thou canst not buy so good a horse for so small a price. I have no great need to sell him, but if thou likest him for ten dollars more, take him, because I see thou hast a good mind to him.

HOR. I beseech you, sir, accept of this; I am a very poor man and have lost very much of late by horseflesh, and this bargain will set me up again.

FAUST. Well, I will not stand with thee; give me the money. Now, sirrah, I must tell you that you may ride him o'er hedge and ditch and spare him not; but—do you hear?—in any case ride him not into the water.

HOR. How, sir, not into the water? Why, will he not drink of all waters?

FAUST. Yes, he will drink of all waters, but ride him not into the water; o'er hedge and ditch or where thou wilt, but not into the water. Go bid the hostler deliver him unto you, and remember what I say.

HOR. I warrant you, sir. O joyful day! Now am I a made man forever.

[Exit.]

FAUST. What art thou, Faustus, but a man condemned to die?

Thy fatal time draws to a final end;

Despair doth drive distrust into my thoughts.

Confound these passions with a quiet sleep.

Tush, Christ did call the thief upon the cross;²

Then rest thee, Faustus, quiet in conceit.

[He sits to sleep in his chair.]

[Enter the HORSE-COURSER wet.]

HOR. O, what a cozening Doctor was this! I riding my horse into the water, thinking some hidden mystery had been in the horse, I had nothing under me but a little straw, and had much ado to escape drowning. Well, I'll go rouse him and make him give

9. Horse-trader, traditionally a sharp bargainer or cheat.

1. Common German coins; the word originally comes from the German Joachimsthaler.

2. In Luke xxiii.39–43 one of the two thieves crucified with Jesus is promised Paradise. "In conceit": in mind.

me my forty dollars again. Ho! sirrah Doctor, you cozening scab! Master Doctor, awake and arise, and give me my money again, for your horse is turned to a bottle³ of hay. Master Doctor—

[He pulls off his leg.]

Alas, I am undone! What shall I do? I have pulled off his leg. 35

FAUST. O help! Help! The villain hath murdered me!

HOR. Murder or not murder, now he has but one leg I'll outrun him and cast this leg into some ditch or other.

[Exit.]

FAUST. Stop him, stop him, stop him! Ha ha ha! Faustus hath his leg again, and the horse-courser a bundle of hay for his forty 40 dollars.

[Enter WAGNER.]

FAUST. How now, Wagner! What news with thee?

WAG. If it please you, the Duke of Vanholt doth earnestly entreat your company and hath sent some of his men to attend you with provision fit for your journey. 45

FAUST. The Duke of Vanholt's an honorable gentleman, and one to whom I must be no niggard of my cunning. Come, away!

[Exeunt OMNES.]

SCENE 6

[Enter ROBIN, DICK, HORSE-COURSER, and a CARTER.]

CART. Come, my masters, I'll bring you to the best beer in Europe— What ho, Hostess!—Where be these whores?⁴

[Enter HOSTESS.]

HOST. How now! What lack you? What, my old guests, welcome.

ROBIN. Sirrah Dick, dost thou know why I stand so mute?

DICK. No, Robin, why is 't?

ROBIN. I am eighteen pence on the score,⁵ but say nothing; see if she have forgotten me. 5

HOST. Who's this that stands so solemnly by himself? What, my old guest!

ROBIN. O, hostess, how do you do? I hope my score stands still. 10

HOST. Aye, there's no doubt of that, for methinks you make no haste to wipe it out.

DICK. Why, hostess, I say, fetch us some beer.

HOST. You shall presently; look up into th' hall. There, ho!

[Exit.]

DICK. Come, sirs; what shall we do now till mine hostess comes? 15

CART. Marry, sir, I'll tell you the bravest tale how a conjurer served me. You know Dr. Faustus?

HOR. Aye, a plague take him! Here's some on 's have cause to know him. Did he conjure thee too?

CART. I'll tell you how he served me. As I was going to Wittenberg t' other day, he met me and asked me what he should give me for as much hay as he could eat. Now, sir, I, thinking that a little would serve his turn, bade him take as much as he 20

3. Bundle.

inn.

4. I.e., the hostess and maids of the

5. Charged, not paid for.

would for three farthings. So he presently gave me my money and fell to eating; and, as I am a cursen⁶ man, he never left eating till he had eat up all my load of hay. 25

ALL. O monstrous; eat a whole load of hay!

ROBIN. Yes, yes; that may be, for I have heard of one that has eat a load of logs.⁷

HOR. Now, sirs, you shall hear how villainously he served me. I went to him yesterday to buy a horse of him, and he would by no means sell him under forty dollars. So, sir, because I knew him to be such a horse as would run over hedge and ditch and never tire, I gave him his money. So, when I had my horse, Dr. Faustus bade me ride him night and day and spare him no time; "But," quoth he, "in any case ride him not into the water." Now sir, I thinking the horse had had some quality that he would not have me know of, what did I but ride him into a great river, and when I came just in the midst my horse vanished away and I sat straddling upon a bottle of hay. 30 35 40

ALL. O brave Doctor!

HOR. But you shall hear how bravely I served him for it. I went me home to his house, and there I found him asleep; I kept a hallowing and whooping in his ears, but all could not wake him. I seeing that, took him by the leg and never rested pulling till I had pulled me his leg quite off, and now 'tis at home in mine hostry. 45

DICK. And has the Doctor but one leg then? That's excellent, for one of his devils turned me into the likeness of an ape's face.

CART. Some more drink, hostess!

ROBIN. Hark you, we'll into another room and drink awhile, and then we'll go seek out the Doctor. 50

[Exeunt OMNES.]

SCENE 7

[Enter the DUKE OF VANHOLT, his DUCHESS, FAUSTUS, and MEPHISTOPHILIS.]

DUKE. Thanks, master Doctor, for these pleasant sights; nor know I how sufficiently to recompense your great deserts in crecting that enchanted castle in the air, the sight whereof so delighted me as nothing in the world could please me more.

FAUST. I do think myself, my good lord, highly recompensed that it pleaseth your Grace to think but well of that which Faustus hath performed. But gracious lady, it may be that you have taken no pleasure in those sights; therefore I pray you tell me what is the thing you most desire to have; be it in the world it shall be yours. I have heard that great-bellied women do long for things that are rare and dainty. 5 10

DUCH. True, master Doctor, and since I find you so kind, I will make known unto you what my heart desires to have; and were it now summer, as it is January, a dead time of winter, I would

6. Mispronunciation of "Christian."

7. Comic expression for being drunk—to carry a jag (or load) of logs.

request no better meat than a dish of ripe grapes.

FAUST. This is but a small matter.—Go, Mephistophilis, away!—

[Exit MEPHISTOPHILIS.]

Madam, I will do more than this for your content.

[Enter MEPHISTOPHILIS again with the grapes.]

Here, now taste ye these; they should be good, for they come from a far country, I can tell you.

DUKE. This makes me wonder more than all the rest, that at this time of year, when every tree is barren of his fruit, from whence you had these ripe grapes.

FAUST. Please it your Grace, the year is divided into two circles over the whole world, so that when it is winter with us, in the contrary circle it is likewise summer with them, as in India, Saba,⁸ and such countries that lie far east, where they have fruit twice a year. From whence, by means of a swift spirit that I have, I had these grapes brought as you see.

DUCH. And trust me they are the sweetest grapes that e'er I tasted.

[The CLOWNS bounce⁹ at the gate within.]

DUKE. What rude disturbers have we at the gate?

Go pacify their fury, set it ope,

And then demand of them what they would have.

[They knock again and call out to talk with FAUSTUS.]

A SERVANT. Why, how now, masters, what a coil¹ is there!

What is the reason you disturb the Duke?

DICK. We have no reason for it, therefore a fig² for him!

SERV. Why, saucy varlets! Dare you be so bold?

HOR. I hope, sir, we have wit enough to be more bold than welcome.

SERV. It appears so; Pray be bold elsewhere

And trouble not the Duke.

DUKE. What would they have?

SERV. They all cry out to speak with Dr. Faustus.

CART. Aye, and we will speak with him.

DUKE. Will you, sir? Commit³ the rascals!

DICK. Commit with us? He were as good commit with his father as commit with us.

FAUST. I do beseech your Grace, let them come in;

They are good subject for a merriment.

DUKE. Do as thou wilt, Faustus; I give thee leave.

FAUST. I thank your Grace.

[Enter ROBIN, DICK, CARTER, and HORSE-COURSER.]

Why, how now, my good friends?

'Faith you are too outrageous; but come near,

I have procured your pardons. Welcome all!

ROBIN. Nay, sir, we will be welcome for our money, and we will pay for what we take. What ho! Give 's half a dozen of beer here, and be hanged.

8. Sheba.

9. Bang.

1. Disturbance.

2. An obscene gesture, implying contempt.

3. Put in jail. Dick puns on its other meaning ("commit adultery"), from the Ten Commandments.

FAUST. Nay, hark you, can you tell me where you are? ⁴

CART. Aye, marry, can I; we are under heaven.

SERV. Aye, but, sir saucebox, know you in what place?

HOR. Aye, aye, the house is good enough to drink in. Zounds, fill us some beer, or we'll break all the barrels in the house and ⁶⁰
dash out all your brains with your bottles.

FAUST. Be not so furious; come, you shall have beer.

My lord, beseech you give me leave awhile;

I'll gage my credit 'twill content your Grace.

DUKE. With all my heart, kind Doctor, please thyself; ⁶⁵

Our servants and our court's at thy command.

FAUST. I humbly thank your Grace. Then fetch some beer.

HOR. Aye, marry, there spake a doctor indeed; and, faith, I'll drink a health to thy wooden leg for that word.

FAUST. My wooden leg! What dost thou mean by that? ⁷⁰

CART. Ha ha ha, dost hear him, Dick? He has forgot his leg.

HOR. Aye, he does not stand much upon that.

FAUST. No, faith, not much upon a wooden leg.

CART. Good lord, that flesh and blood should be so frail with your worship! Do you not remember a horse-courser you sold ⁷⁵ a horse to?

FAUST. Yes, I remember I sold one a horse.

CART. And do you remember you bid he should not ride him into the water?

FAUST. Yes, I do very well remember that. ⁸⁰

CART. And do you remember nothing of your leg?

FAUST. No, in good sooth.

CART. Then I pray remember your courtesy.

FAUST. I thank you, sir.

CART. 'Tis not so much worth. I pray you tell me one thing. ⁸⁵

FAUST. What's that?

CART. Be both of your legs bedfellows every night together?

FAUST. Wouldst thou make a colossus⁵ of me, that thou askest me such questions?

CART. No, truly, sir, I would make nothing of you, but I would ⁹⁰
fain know that.

[Enter HOSTESS with drink.]

FAUST. Then I assure thee certainly they are.

CART. I thank you; I am fully satisfied.

FAUST. But wherefore dost thou ask?

CART. For nothing, sir; but methinks you should have a wooden ⁹⁵ bedfellow to one of 'em.

HOR. Why, do you hear, sir, did not I pull off one of your legs when you were asleep?

FAUST. But I have it again now I am awake; look you here, sir.

ALL. O horrible! Had the doctor three legs? ¹⁰⁰

CART. Do you remember, sir, how you cozened me and eat up my load of—

4. At the end of IV.6, the clowns thought they were stepping into another room, but Faustus has had them transported to the court of the Duke of Vanholt.

5. The huge statue which stood at the entrance to the harbor at Rhodes; boats sailed between its legs, and Dr. Faustus is suggesting that the clowns are making his legs as important.

[FAUSTUS charms him dumb.]

DICK. Do you remember how you made me wear an ape's—

HOR. You whoreson conjuring scab, do you remember how you cozened me of a ho— 105

ROBIN. Ha' you forgotten me? You think to carry it away with your hey-pass and your re-pass;⁶ do you remember the dog's fa—

[Exeunt CLOWNS.]

HOST. Who pays for the ale? Hear you, master Doctor, now you have sent away my guests, I pray who shall pay me for my 110
a—

[Exit HOSTESS.]

DUCH. My lord,

We are much beholding to this learned man.

DUKE. So are we, madam, which we will recompense

With all the love and kindness that we may;

His artful sport drives all sad thoughts away. [Exeunt.] 115

Act V

SCENE 1

[Thunder and lightning. Enter DEVILS with covered dishes; MEPHISTOPHILIS leads them into FAUSTUS' study. Then
enter WAGNER.]

WAG. I think my master means to die shortly;

He has made his will and given me his wealth,
His house, his goods, and store of golden plate,
Besides two thousand ducats ready coined.

And yet I wonder, for if death were nigh
He would not banquet and carouse and swill 5

Amongst the students as even now he doth,

Who are at supper with such belly-cheer

As Wagner ne'er beheld in all his life.

See where they come; belike the feast is ended. [Exit.] 10

[Enter FAUSTUS and MEPHISTOPHILIS with two or three SCHOLARS.]

1 SCH. Master Doctor Faustus, since our conference about fair ladies, which was the beautifulest in all the world, we have determined with ourselves that Helen of Greece was the ad-mirablest lady that ever lived. Therefore, master Doctor, if you will do us that favor as to let us see that peerless dame of 15
Greece whom all the world admires for majesty, we should think ourselves much beholding unto you.

FAUST. Gentlemen,

For that I know your friendship is unfeigned,

And Faustus' custom is not to deny

The just requests of those that wish him well,

You shall behold that peerless dame of Greece, 20

No otherways for pomp and majesty

6. Traditional exclamations of a conjurer.

Than when Paris crossed the seas with her
And brought the spoils to rich Dardania.⁷
Be silent, then; for danger is in words.

25

[Music sounds. MEPHISTOPHILIS brings in HELEN; she passeth over the stage.]

2 SCH. Too simple is my wit to tell her praise
Whom all the world admires for majesty.

3 SCH. No marvel though the angry Greeks pursued
With ten years' war the rape of such a queen
Whose heavenly beauty passeth all compare.

30

1 SCH. Since we have seen the pride of Nature's works
And only paragon of excellence,
Let us depart, and for this glorious deed
Happy and blest be Faustus evermore.

35

FAUST. Gentlemen, farewell; the same I wish to you.

[Exeunt SCHOLARS.]

[Enter an OLD MAN.]

OLD MAN. O gentle Faustus, leave this damned art,
This magic, that will charm thy soul to hell
And quit thee care⁸ thee of salvation.

Though thou hast now offended like a man,
Do not persever in it like a devil.

40

Yet, yet, thou hast an amiable soul

If sin by custom grow not into nature;

Then, Faustus, will repentance come too late;

Then thou art banished from the sight of heaven.

45

No mortal can express the pains of hell.

It may be this my exhortation

Seems harsh and all unpleasant; let it not;

For, gentle sor, I speak it not in wrath

Or envy of thee, but in tender love

50

And pity of thy future misery,

And so have hope that this my kind rebuke,

Checking thy body, may amend thy soul.

FAUST. Where art thou, Faustus? Wretch, what hast thou done?

Damned art thou, Faustus, damned! Despair and die.

55

[MEPHISTOPHILIS gives him a dagger.]

Hell claim this right, and with a roaring voice

Says, "Faustus, come; thine hour is almost come!"

And Faustus now will come to do thee right.

OLD MAN. O stay, good Faustus, stay thy desperate steps!

I see an angel hovers o'er thy head

60

And with a vial full of precious grace

Offers to pour the same into thy soul:

Then call for mercy and avoid despair.

FAUST. Ah my sweet friend, I feel thy words

To comfort my distressed soul.

65

Leave me a while to ponder on my sins.

OLD MAN. Faustus, I leave thee, but with grief of heart,

Fearing the ruin of thy hapless soul.

[Exit.]

7. Troy.

8. Deprive.

- FAUST. Accurséd Faustus, where is mercy now?
 I do repent and yet I do despair: 70
 Hell strives with grace for conquest in my breast.
 What shall I do to shun the snarcs of death?
- MEPH. Thou traitor, Faustus, I arrest thy soul
 For disobedience to my sovereign lord.
 Revolt, or I'll in piecemeal tear thy flesh. 75
- FAUST. I do repent I e'er offended him.
 Sweet Mephistophilis, entreat thy lord
 To pardon my unjust presumption,
 And with my blood again I will confirm
 The former vow I made to Lucifer. 80
- MEPH. Do it then, Faustus, with unfeignéd heart
 Lest greater danger do attend thy drift.
- FAUST. Torment, sweet friend, that base and aged man
 That durst dissuade me from thy Lucifer,
 With greatest torments that our hell affords. 85
- MEPH. His faith is great; I cannot touch his soul;
 But what I may afflict his body with
 I will attempt, which is but little worth.
- FAUST. One thing, good servant, let me crave of thee
 To glut the longing of my heart's desire: 90
 That I might have unto my paramour
 That heavenly Helen which I saw of late,
 Whose sweet embracings may extinguish clear
 These thoughts that do dissuade me from my vow,
 And keep mine oath I made to Lucifer. 95
- MEPH. This, or what else my Faustus shall desire
 Shall be performed in twinkling of an eye.
 [Enter HELEN again, passing over between two CUPIDS.]
- FAUST. Was this the face that launched a thousand ships
 And burnt the topless⁹ towers of Ilium?
 Sweet Helen, make me immortal with a kiss. 100
 Her lips suck forth my soul—see where it flies!
 Come, Helen, come, give me my soul again.
 Here will I dwell, for heaven is in these lips
 And all is dross that is not Helena.
 [Enter OLD MAN and stands watching FAUSTUS.]
 I will be Paris, and for love of thee 105
 Instead of Troy shall Wittenberg be sacked,
 And I will combat with weak Menelaus
 And wear thy colors on my pluméd crest;
 Yea, I will wound Achilles in the heel
 And then return to Helen for a kiss. 110
 O thou art fairer than the evening air
 Clad in the beauty of a thousand stars!
 Brighter art thou than flaming Jupiter
 When he appeared to hapless Semele,¹⁰

9. So high they seemed to have no tops.

10. A Theban girl, loved by Jupiter and destroyed by the fire of his lightning when he appeared to her in his full splendor.

More lovely than the monarch of the sky
 In wanton Arethusa's azured arms,¹
 And none but thou shalt be my paramour!

[Exeunt ALL except the OLD MAN.]

OLD MAN. Accurséd Faustus, miserable man,
 That from thy soul exclud'st the grace of heaven
 And fliest the throne of his tribunal seat.

[Enter the DEVILS to torment him.]

Satan begins to sift me with his pride.²
 As in this furnace God shall try my faith,
 My faith, vile hell, shall triumph over thee!
 Ambitious fiends, see how the heavens smiles
 At your repulse, and laughs your state to scorn.
 Hence, hell! for hence I fly unto my God.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE 2

[Thunder. Enter LUCIFER, BELZEBUB, and MEPHISTOPHILIS.]

LUC. Thus from infernal Dis³ do we ascend
 To view the subjects of our monarchy,
 Those souls which sin seals the black sons of hell.
 'Mong which as chief, Faustus, we come to thee,
 Bringing with us lasting damnation
 To wait upon thy soul; the time is come
 Which makes it forfeit.

MEPH. And this gloomy night
 Here in this room will wretched Faustus be.

BEL. And here we'll stay

To mark him how he doth demean himself.

MEPH. How should he but with desperate lunacy?

Fond worldling, now his heart-blood dries with grief,
 His conscience kills it, and his laboring brain
 Begets a world of idle fantasies
 To overreach the devil, but all in vain.
 His store of pleasure must be sauced with pain.
 He and his servant Wagner are at hand;
 Both come from drawing Faustus' latest will.
 See where they come!

[Enter FAUSTUS and WAGNER.]

FAUST. Say, Wagner, thou has perused my will;
 How dost thou like it?

WAG.

Sir, so wondrous well
 As in all humble duty I do yield
 My life and lasting service for your love.

[Enter the SCHOLARS.]

FAUST. Gramercies, Wagner.—Welcome, gentlemen.

1 SCH. Now, worthy Faustus, methinks your looks are changed.

1. Arethusa was the nymph of a fountain, as well as the fountain itself; no classical myth, however, records her love affair with Jupiter, the "monarch of the sky."

2. I.e., to test me with his strength.

3. The underworld.

FAUST. Ah, gentlemen!

2 SCH. What ails Faustus?

FAUST. Ah, my sweet chamber-fellow, had I lived with thee, then had I lived still, but now must die eternally. Look, sirs! Comes he not? Comes he not?

1 SCH. O my dear Faustus, what imports this fear?

2 SCH. Is all our pleasure turned to melancholy?

3 SCH. He is not well with being over-solitary.

2 SCH. If it be so, we'll have physicians, and Faustus shall be cured.

3 SCH. 'Tis but a surfeit,⁴ sir; fear nothing.

FAUST. A surfeit of deadly sin that hath damned both body and soul.

2 SCH. Yet, Faustus, look up to heaven: remember God's mercies are infinite.

FAUST. But Faustus' offense can ne'er be pardoned; the Serpent that tempted Eve may be saved, but not Faustus. Ah, gentlemen, hear me with patience, and tremble not at my speeches.
Though my heart pants and quivers to remember that I have been a student here these thirty years, O would I had never seen Wittenberg, never read book! And what wonders I have done all Germany can witness, yea all the world, for which Faustus hath lost both Germany and the world, yea heaven itself—heaven the seat of God, the throne of the blessed, the kingdom of joy, and must remain in hell forever, hell, ah hell, forever!
Sweet friends, what shall become of Faustus, being in hell forever?

3 SCH. Yet, Faustus, call on God.

FAUST. On God, whom Faustus hath abjured? on God, whom Faustus hath blasphemed? Ah, my God, I would weep, but the devil draws in my tears! Gush forth, blood, instead of tears, yea life and soul! O he stays my tongue; I would lift up my hands but, see, they hold 'em, they hold 'em!

ALL. Who, Faustus?

FAUST. Why, Lucifer and Mephistophilis.

Ah, gentlemen, I gave them my soul for my cunning.

ALL. God forbid!

FAUST. God forbade it indeed, but Faustus hath done it: for vain pleasure of four and twenty years hath Faustus lost eternal joy and felicity. I writ them a bill with mine own blood; the date is expired, this is the time, and he will fetch me.

1 SCH. Why did not Faustus tell us of this before, that divines might have prayed for thee?

FAUST. Oft have I thought to have done so, but the devil threatened to tear me in pieces if I named God, to fetch both body and soul if I once gave ear to divinity; and now 'tis too late.
Gentlemen, away, lest you perish with me!

2 SCH. O what may we do to save Faustus?

FAUST. Talk not of me, but save yourselves and depart.

4. Indigestion; the effects of overindulgence.

- 3 SCH. God will strengthen me: I will stay with Faustus. 75
 1 SCH. Tempt not God, sweet friend, but let us into the next room, and there pray for him.
 FAUST. Aye, pray for me, pray for me! And what noise soever ye hear, come not unto me, for nothing can rescue me.
 2 SCH. Pray thou, and we will pray that God may have mercy 80 upon thee.
 FAUST. Gentlemen, farewell. If I live till morning I'll visit you; if not, Faustus is gone to hell.
 ALL. Faustus, farewell. [Exeunt SCHOLARS.]
 MEPH. Aye, Faustus, now thou hast no hope of heaven; 85 Therefore despair, think only upon hell, For that must be thy mansion, there to dwell.
 FAUST. O thou bewitching fiend, 'twas thy temptation Hath robbed me of eternal happiness.
 MEPH. I do confess it, Faustus, and rejoice. 90 'Twas I, that when thou wert i' the way to heaven Damned up thy passage; when thou tookest the book To view the scriptures, then I turned the leaves And led thine eye.
 What, weepst thou? 'tis too late. Despair, farewell! 95 Fools that will laugh on earth must weep in hell. [Exit.]
 [Enter the GOOD ANGEL and the BAD ANGEL at several doors.]
 C. ANG. Ah Faustus, if thou hadst given ear to me, Innumerable joys had followed thee, But thou didst love the world.
 B. ANG. Gave ear to me And now must taste hell's pains perpetually. 100
 C. ANG. O what will all thy riches, pleasures, pomps Avail thee now?
 B. ANG. Nothing but vex thee more, To want in hell, that had on earth such store.
 [Music while the throne descends.⁵]
 C. ANG. O, thou hast lost celestial happiness, Pleasures unspeakable, bliss without end. 105 Hadst thou affected sweet divinity Hell or the devil had had no power on thee. Hadst thou kept on that way, Faustus, behold In what resplendent glory thou hadst sit In yonder throne, like those bright shining saints, 110 And triumphed over hell; that hast thou lost. And now, poor soul, must thy good angel leave thee; The jaws of hell are open to receive thee.
 [Exit. Hell is discovered.]
 B. ANG. Now Faustus, let thine eyes with horror stare Into that vast perpetual torture-house. 115 There are the furies, tossing damnéd souls

5. A throne suspended by ropes descended to the stage near the end of many Elizabethan plays and was an expected theatrical display. Here the throne clearly symbolizes heaven, as the next speech shows.

On burning forks; their bodies boil in lead.
 There are live quarters⁶ broiling on the coals
 That ne'er can die; this ever-burning chair
 Is for o'ertortured souls to rest them in; 120
 These that are fed with sops of flaming fire
 Were gluttons and loved only delicates
 And laughed to see the poor starve at their gates.
 But yet all these are nothing; thou shalt see
 Ten thousand tortures that more horrid be. 125

FAUST. O, I have seen enough to torture me.

B. ANG. Nay, thou must feel them, taste the smart of all;
 He that loves pleasure must for pleasure fall.
 And so I leave thee, Faustus, till anon;
 Then wilt thou tumble in confusion.⁷ 130

[Exit. The clock strikes eleven.]

FAUST. Ah, Faustus,

Now hast thou but one bare hour to live
 And then thou must be damned perpetually!
 Stand still, you ever-moving spheres of heaven,
 That time may cease and midnight never come; 135
 Fair Nature's eye, rise, rise again, and make Perpetual day; or let this hour be but
 A year, a month, a week, a natural day,
 That Faustus may repent and save his soul!
 O lente lente currite noctis equi.⁸ 140

The stars move still, time runs, the clock will strike,
 The devil will come, and Faustus must be damned.
 O, I'll leap up to my God! Who pulls me down?
 See, see, where Christ's blood streams in the firmament!—
 One drop would save my soul—half a drop! ah, my Christ! 145
 Rend not my heart for naming of my Christ;
 Yet will I call on him—O, spare me, Lucifer!
 Where is it now? 'Tis gone; and see where God
 Stretcheth out his arm and bends his ireful brows.
 Mountains and hills, come, come and fall on me
 And hide me from the heavy wrath of God, 150
 No, no?

Then will I headlong run into the earth:
 Earth, gape! O no, it will not harbor me.
 You stars that reigned at my nativity,
 Whose influence hath allotted death and hell, 155
 Now draw up Faustus like a foggy mist
 Into the entails of yon laboring cloud
 That when you vomit forth into the air,
 My limbs may issue from your smoky mouths,
 So that my soul may but ascend to heaven.⁹ 160

[The watch strikes.]

Ah, half the hour is past; 'twill all be past anon.

6. Bodies.

7. Destruction, perdition.

8. "Slowly, slowly run, O horses of the night," adapted from a line in Ovid's Amores.

9. Faustus begs his natal stars to draw him up into the cloud, where his body may be compacted into a thunderstone and fall to earth, so that his soul, thus purified, may ascend to heaven.

O God,

If thou wilt not have mercy on my soul,
Yet for Christ's sake whose blood hath ransomed me

165

Impose some end to my incessant pain:

Let Faustus live in hell a thousand years,

A hundred thousand, and at last be saved!

O, no end is limited to damnéd souls!

Why wert thou not a creature wanting soul?

170

Or why is this immortal that thou hast?

Ah, Pythagoras' *metempsychosis*¹⁰—were that true,

This soul should fly from me, and I be changed

Unto some brutish beast. All beasts are happy,

For when they die

175

Their souls are soon dissolved in elements,

But mine must live still¹ to be plagued in hell.

Cursed be the parents that engendered me!

No, Faustus, curse thyself, curse Lucifer

That hath deprived thee of the joys of heaven.

180

[The clock strikes twelve.]

It strikes, it strikes! Now, body, turn to air

Or Lucifer will bear thee quick² to hell!

[Thunder and lightning.]

O soul, be changed to little water drops

And fall into the ocean, ne'er be found.

My God, my God, look not so fierce on me!

185

[Enter DEVILS.]

Adders and serpents, let me breathe awhile!

Ugly hell, gape not—come not, Lucifer—

I'll burn my books—ah, Mephistophilis!

[Exeunt DEVILS with FAUSTUS.]

SCENE 3

[Enter the SCHOLARS.]

- 1 SCH. Come, gentlemen, let us go visit Faustus,
For such a dreadful night was never seen
Since first the world's creation did begin,
Such fearful shrieks and cries were never heard.
Pray heaven the Doctor have escaped the danger.

5

- 2 SCH. O, help us heaven! See, here are Faustus' limbs
All torn asunder by the hand of death.

- 3 SCH. The devils whom Faustus served have torn him thus;
For 'twixt the hours of twelve and one, methought
I heard him shriek and call aloud for help.
At which self³ time the house seemed all on fire
With dreadful horror of these damnéd fiends.

10

- 2 SCH. Well, gentlemen, though Faustus' end be such
As every Christian heart laments to think on,
Yet for he was a scholar once admired

15

10. Pythagoras' doctrine of the transmigration of souls.

2. Alive.

3. Same, exact.

1. Always.

For wondrous knowledge in our German schools,
 We'll give his mangled limbs due burial;
 And all the students, clothed in mourning black,
 Shall wait upon his heavy⁴ funeral. [Exeunt.]

[Enter CHORUS.]

CHO. Cut is the branch that might have grown full straight, 20
 And burnéd is Apollo's laurel bough⁵
 That sometime grew within this learned man.
 Faustus is gone: regard his hellish fall,
 Whose fiendful fortune may exhort the wise
 Only to wonder at⁶ unlawful things 25
 Whose deepness doth entice such forward wits
 To practice more than heavenly power permits. [Exit.]

1604, 1616

4. Tragic, sorrowful.

5. Laurel is a symbol of wisdom and learning; Apollo was the god of divination, one of whose shrines was the oracle at Delphi. The image, though it sounds classical, is really Marlowe's. 6. I.e., to be content with observing with awe. "Fiendful fortune": devilish fate.

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE

(1564-1616)

ca. 1588-92: In London as actor and playwright.

ca. 1592-98: Devotes himself mainly to chronicle histories and comedies.

ca. 1601-9: Period of the great tragedies and romantic comedies.

ca. 1610: Retires to Stratford.

William Shakespeare was born in Stratford-on-Avon in April (probably April 23), 1564. His father was a citizen of some prominence who became an alderman and bailiff, but who later suffered financial reverses. Shakespeare presumably attended the Stratford grammar school, where he could have acquired a respectable knowledge of Latin, but he did not proceed to Oxford or Cambridge. There are legends about Shakespeare's youth but no documented facts. The first record we have of his life after his christening is that of his marriage in 1582 to Anne Hathaway. A daughter was born to the young Shakespeares in 1583 and twins, a boy and a girl, in 1585. We possess no information about his activities for the next seven years, but by 1592 he was in London as an actor and apparently well-known as a playwright, for Robert Greene refers to him resentfully in A Groatsworth of Wit as "an upstart crow, beautified with our feathers," who, "being an absolute Johannes Factotum, is in his own conceit the only Shake-scene in a country."

At this time, there were several companies of actors in London and in the provinces. What connection Shakespeare had with one or more of them before 1592 is conjectural, but we do know of his long and fruitful connection with the most successful troupe, the Lord Chamberlain's Men, who later, when James I came to the throne, became the King's Men. Shakespeare not only acted with this company, but eventually became a leading shareholder and the principal playwright. The company included some of the most famous actors of the day, such as Richard Burbage, who no doubt created the roles of Hamlet, Lear, and Othello, and Will Kempe and Robert Armin, who acted Shakespeare's clowns and fools. In 1599 the Chamberlain's Men built and occupied that best known of Elizabethan theaters, the Globe.

Shakespeare did not, in his early years, confine himself to the theater. In 1593 he published a mythological-erotic poem, Venus and Adonis, dedicated to the Earl of Southampton; in the next year he dedicated a "graver labor," The Rape of Lucrece, to the same noble patron. By 1597 Shakespeare had so prospered that he was able to purchase New Place, a handsome house in Stratford; he could now call himself a gentleman, as his father had been granted a coat of arms in the previous year.

Our first record of the playwright's actual work occurs in Francis Meres' Palladis Tamia: Wit's Treasury (1598), in which Meres compared English poets with the ancients; of Shakespeare he says, "As Plautus and Seneca are accounted the best for Comedy and Tragedy among the Latins, so Shakespeare among the English is the most excellent in both kinds for the stage." He goes on to list Richard II, Richard III, Henry IV, King John, Titus Andronicus, and Romeo and Juliet for tragedy and Two Gentlemen of Verona, The Comedy of Errors, A Midsummer Night's Dream, The Merchant of Venice, Love's Labor's Lost, and the unknown (or perhaps retitled) Love's Labor's Won as comedy. All of the plays Meres lists as tragedy (except for Romeo and Juliet and the very early Titus Andronicus) we would call chronicle history plays, a popular kind of drama based upon history books like Raphael Holinshed's Chronicle and presenting dramatically the events in the reigns of various English kings. About the turn of the century Shakespeare wrote his great romantic comedies, As You Like It, Twelfth Night, and Much Ado About Nothing, and his concluding history play in the Prince Hal series, Henry V. The next decade was the period of the great tragedies: Hamlet, Macbeth, Othello, King Lear, and Antony and Cleopatra.

About 1610 Shakespeare apparently retired to Stratford, though he continued to write, both by himself (The Tempest) and in collaboration (Henry VIII). This is the period of the "romances" or "tragicomedies," which include, besides The Tempest, Cymbeline and The Winter's Tale. Aside from his two early nondramatic poems, Shakespeare devoted his genius primarily to the stage. Meres mentioned in 1598, however, that he was known for "his sugared sonnets among his private friends"; the sonnets were published in 1609, apparently without his authorization. He contributed the strange and beautiful poem, The Phoenix and the Turtle, to an anthology in 1601.

The plays contain some of the finest songs ever written. They are of various types: the aubade, or morning song, the gay pastoral invitation, love songs of various kinds, the ballad sung by wandering minstrels, and the funeral dirge. They illustrate many sides of Shakespeare's genius—his incomparable lyric gift, his ready humor, and his marvelous sensitivity to the sights and sounds of English life, especially the life of the country.

The sonnets are Shakespeare's contribution to a popular vogue, but his cycle is quite unlike the other sonnet sequences of his day. Shakespeare's cycle suggests a story, though the details are vague, and there is doubt even whether the sonnets as published in 1609 are in the correct order. Certain motifs are clear: a series celebrating the beauty of a young man and urging him to marry; some sonnets to a lady; some sonnets (like 144) about a strange triangle of love involving two men and a woman; sonnets on the destructive power of time and the permanence of poetry; sonnets about a rival poet; and incidental sonnets of moral insight, like 129 and 146. The biographical background of the sonnets has aroused much speculation, but very little of it is convincing. The poems themselves are what is important. Though the vocabulary is often simple, the metaphorical style of the sonnets is rich. "Shall I compare thee to a summer's day" is a question which might lead to a very ordinary conceit; instead it introduces a profound meditation on time, change, and beauty.

The structure of the sonnet frequently reinforces the power of the metaphors; each quatrain in 73 develops an image of lateness, of approaching extinction—of a season, of a day, and of a fire, but they also apply to a life. The three quatrains may be equally and successively at work preparing for the conclusion in the couplet, or the first eight lines may contain a catalogue and the last six turn in quite a different direction, as in sonnet 29. The rhetorical strategy of the sonnets is also worth careful attention. Some begin with a purported reminiscence; some are imperative; others make an almost proverbial statement, then elaborate it. The imagery comes from a wide variety of sources: gardening, navigation, law, farming, business, pictorial art, astrology, domestic affairs. The moods are also not confined to what the Renaissance thought were those of the despairing Petrarchan lover; they include delight, pride, melancholy, shame, disgust, fear. It is evident that the poet of the sonnets is also the author of the great plays.

When Shakespeare died, in Stratford in 1616, no collected edition of his plays had been published. Some of them had been printed in separate editions ("quartos") without his editorial supervision, sometimes from his manuscripts, sometimes from playhouse prompt books, sometimes from pirated texts secured by shorthand reports of a performance or from reconstruction from memory by an actor or spectator.

In 1623, two members of Shakespeare's company, John Heminges and Henry Condell, published the great collection of all the plays they considered authentic; it is called the First Folio. They printed the best texts they had, according to their lights. The Folio contains an epistle "to the great variety of readers" which urges us to read Shakespeare again and again; if we do not like him, say Heminges and Condell, it is evident that we do not understand him. Another preliminary document in the First Folio is a poem by Shakespeare's great rival, critic, and opposite, Ben Jonson. In it he asserts the superiority of Shakespeare not only to other English playwrights but to the Greek and Latin masters. Jonson first states what has come to be a universal opinion:

Triumph, my Britain, thou hast one to show
To whom all scenes of Europe homage owe.
He was not of an age, but for all time!

SONGS FROM THE PLAYS

When Daisies Pied¹

lambic quadrimeter?

SPRING

When daisies pied and violets blue A
 And ladysmocks all silver-white B
 And cuckoobuds of yellow hue A
 Do paint the meadows with delight, B
 The cuckoo then, on every tree, C
 Mocks married men; ² for thus sings he, C
 Cuckoo; A onomatopoeia
 Cuckoo, cuckoo: Oh word of fear, D
 Unpleasing to a married ear! D

When shepherds pipe on oaten straws,³ A
 And merry larks are plowmen's clocks, B
 When turtles tread,⁴ and rooks, and daws, A
 And maidens bleach their summer smocks, B
 The cuckoo then, on every tree, C
 Mocks married men; for thus sings he, C
 Cuckoo; D
 Cuckoo, cuckoo: Oh word of fear, E
 Unpleasing to a married ear! E

WINTER

When icicles hang by the wall
 And Dick the shepherd blows his nail ⁵
 And Tom bears logs into the hall,
 And milk comes frozen home in pail,
 When blood is nipped and ways be foul,
 Then nightly sings the staring owl,
 Tu-who; 25
 Tu-whit, tu-who: a merry note,
 While greasy Joan doth keel⁶ the pot.
 When all aloud the wind doth blow,
 And coughing drowns the parson's saw,⁷
 And birds sit brooding in the snow, 30
 And Marian's nose looks red and raw,
 When roasted crabs⁸ hiss in the bowl,
 Then nightly sings the staring owl,
 Tu-who;
 Tu-whit, tu-who: a merry note 35
 While greasy Joan doth keel the pot.

1. This song concludes Love's Labour's Lost (1594-95), one of Shakespeare's earliest comedies. Announced as a "Dialogue * * * in praise of the Owl and the Cuckoo," it provides a lyric commentary on the bittersweet mood that dominates the play's last scene. "Pied": variegated.

2. The cuckoo's song—"Cuckoo!"—is taken to mean "Cuckold!"

3. The reed pipes played by shepherds.
4. Turtledoves mate. The "larks" are "plowmen's clocks" because they sing at sunrise.

5. Warms his fingers by blowing on them.

6. Stir, to prevent boiling over.

7. Wise saying.

8. Crabapples.

Tell Me Where Is Fancy Bred⁹

Tell me where is fancy bred, A
Or in the heart or in the head? A
How begot, how nourished? A
Reply, reply. C
It is engendered in the eyes, C
With gazing fed; and fancy dies C
In the cradle where it lies. E
Let us all ring fancy's knell: D
I'll begin it—Ding, dong, bell. D
Ding, dong, bell. D

5

10

Sigh No More, Ladies¹

Sigh no more, ladies, sigh no more, A
Men were deceivers ever; B
One foot in sea, and one on shore, A
To one thing constant never. B
Then sigh not so, E
But let them go, C
And be you blithe and bonny, D
Converting all your sounds of woe C
Into Hey nonny, nonny. D

5

10

Sing no more ditties, sing no mo
Of dumps² so dull and heavy;
The fraud of men was ever so,
Since summer first was leavy.
Then sigh not so,
But let them go,
And be you blithe and bonny,
Converting all your sounds of woe
Into Hey nonny, nonny.

15

Under the Greenwood Tree³

Under the greenwood tree
Who loves to lie with me,

9. The Merchant of Venice (1596–97) III.ii.63 ff.; sung while Bassanio is trying to choose between the caskets of gold, silver, and lead—one of which contains the token that will enable him to gain Portia as his wife. The song is perhaps intended to help Bassanio's choice: notice the number of words that rhyme with "lead." "Fancy" is a superficial love or liking for something attractive.

1. Much Ado About Nothing (1598–99) II.iii.64 ff.

2. Sad songs.

3. As You Like It (1599–1600) II.v.1 ff.; this song provides a comment on the happy existence of the banished Duke and his followers in the Forest of Arden, where life is "more sweet / Than that of painted pomp."

And turn his merry note
 Unto the sweet bird's throat,⁴
 Come hither, come hither, come hither: 5
 Here shall he see
 No enemy
 But winter and rough weather.
 Who doth ambition shun
 And loves to live i' the sun, 10
 Seeking the food he eats,
 And pleased with what he gets,
 Come hither, come hither, come hither:
 Here shall he see
 No enemy 15
 But winter and rough weather.

Blow, Blow, Thou Winter Wind⁵

Blow, blow, thou winter wind,
 Thou art not so unkind personification
 As man's ingratitude;
 Thy tooth is not so keen, person
 Because thou art not seen, 5
 Although thy breath be rude, person.
 Heigh-ho! sing, heigh-ho! unto the green holly:
 Most friendship is feigning, most loving mere folly:
 Then, heigh-ho, the holly!
 This life is most jolly. 10
 Freeze, freeze, thou bitter sky,
 That dost not bite so nigh
 As benefits forgot:
 Though thou the waters warp,⁶
 Thy sting is not so sharp 15
 As friend remembered not.
 Heigh-ho! sing, etc.

Oh Mistress Mine⁷

Oh mistress mine! where are you roaming?
 Oh! stay and hear; your true love's coming,
 That can sing both high and low.
 Trip no further, pretty sweeting;
 Journeys end in lovers meeting, 5
 Every wise man's son doth know.
 What is love? 'tis not hereafter;
 Present mirth hath present laughter;
 What's to come is still unsure:

4. I.e., improvise his song in harmony with the bird's.

5. Also from As You Like It II.vii. 174 ff. The contrast here between nature and man's willful behavior is one of the continuing themes of the play.

6. I.e., roughen by freezing.

7. Twelfth Night (1601-2) II.iii.40 ff.

In delay there lies no plenty;
Then come kiss me, sweet and twenty,
Youth's a stuff will not endure. 10

Take, Oh, Take Those Lips Away⁸
Take, Oh, take those lips away,
That so sweetly were forsworn;
And those eyes, the break of day, -
Lights that do mislead the morn:
But my kisses bring again, bring again; 5
Seals of love, but sealed in vain, sealed in vain.

Fear No More the Heat o' the Sun⁹
Fear no more the heat o' the sun,
Nor the furious winter's rages;
Thou thy worldly task hast done,
Home art gone, and ta'en thy wages:
Golden lads and girls all must, 5
As ¹ chimney-sweepers, come to dust.
Fear no more the frown o' the great;
Thou art past the tyrant's stroke;
Care no more to clothe and eat;
To thee the reed is as the oak: 10
The scepter, learning, physic, must
All follow this, and come to dust.
Fear no more the lightning flash,
Nor the all-dreaded thunder stone;²
Fear not slander, censure rash; 15
Thou hast finished joy and moan:
All lovers young, all lovers must
Consign to thee, and come to dust.
No exorciser harm thee!
Nor no witchcraft charm thee! 20
Ghost unlaid forbear thee!
Nothing ill come near thee!
Quiet consummation have;
And renown'd be thy grave!

When Daffodils Begin to Peer³
When daffodils begin to peer,
With heigh! the doxy⁴ over the dale,

8. Measure for Measure (1604) IV.i. 1 ff.; Mariana's desolation at being jilted by her lover Angelo is poignantly conveyed in this song, which is sung at her first entrance.

9. A lament for the supposedly dead Imogen, sung in Cymbeline IV.ii.258 ff. 1. Like.

2. The sound of thunder was commonly thought to be caused by the falling of stones or meteorites.

3. The Winter's Tale (1610-11) IV. iii.1 ff. Autolycus, ballad-singer, peddler, and rogue, makes his entrance singing this song, which not only effectively establishes his character but also helps to move the play from the wintry mood of the earlier scenes to the spring mood of the later scenes. 4. Girl or mistress (thieves' slang).

Why, then comes in the sweet o' the year;
For the red blood reigns in the winter's pale.⁵

The white sheet bleaching on the hedge,⁶ 5
With heigh! the sweet birds, Oh, how they sing!
Doth set my pugging⁷ tooth on edge;
For a quart of ale is a dish for a king.

The lark, that tirra-lirra chants,
With heigh! with heigh! the thrush and the jay, 10
Are summer songs for me and my aunts,⁸
While we lie tumbling in the hay.

Full Fathom Five⁹

Full fathom five thy father lies;
Of his bones are coral made;
Those are pearls that were his eyes:
Nothing of him that doth fade,
But doth suffer a sea change 5
Into something rich and strange.
Sea nymphs hourly ring his knell:
Ding-dong.
Hark! now I hear them—Ding-dong, bell.

Where the Bee Sucks, There Suck I¹⁰

Where the bee sucks, there suck I:
In a cowslip's bell I lie;
There I couch when owls do cry.
On the bat's back I do fly
After summer merrily. 5
Merrily, merrily shall I live now
Under the blossom that hangs on the bough.

Sonnets

Translating vs. Art

Look in thy glass, and tell the face thou viewest A
Now is the time that face should form another, B
Whose fresh repair if now thou not renewest, X

5. A pun on (1) a territory over which one has jurisdiction (2) lacking in color.

6. Laundry, dried or bleached on hedges, was sometimes stolen by passing vagabonds like Autolycus.

7. Thieving.

8. Girls or mistresses.

9. The Tempest (1611–12) I.ii.396 ff. Ariel, the airy spirit of the enchanted isle, sings this song to Ferdinand, prince of Naples. Ferdinand wonders at it: "The ditty does remember my drowned father. / This is no mortal business, nor no sound / That the earth owes [owns]."

10. Also from The Tempest V.i.88 ff.: Ariel is happily anticipating the freedom of his future life.

Thou dost beguile the world, unless some mother.
For where is she so fair whose unear'd¹ womb
Disdains the tillage of thy husbandry?
Or who is he so fond² will be the tomb
Of his self-love, to stop posterity?
Thou art thy mother's glass,³ and she in thee
Calls back the lovely April of her prime;
So thou through windows of the golden age shalt see,
Despite of wrinkles, this thy golden time.
But if thou live rememb'rd not to be,
Die single, and thine image dies with thee.

1609

12

When I do count the clock that tells the time
And see the brave⁴ day sunk in hideous night,
When I behold the violet past prime
And sable curls all silver'd o'er with white,
When lofty trees I see barren of leaves,
Which erst⁵ from heat did canopy the herd,
And summer's green all girded up in sheaves
Borne on the bier with white and bristly beard—
Then of thy beauty do I question make
That thou among the wastes of time must go, glo.
Since sweets and beauties do themselves forsake
And die as fast as they see others grow,
And nothing 'gainst Time's scythe can make defense
Save breed,⁶ to brave him when he takes thee hence.

A B A
 B C D E
 5 C D E D E
 F E F G
 10 F E F G

1609

15

When I consider every thing that grows
Holds¹ in perfection but a little moment;
That this huge stage ^{world} presenteth naught but shows ^{lives}
Whereon the stars in secret influence comment;²
When I perceive that men as plants increase, ^{simile}
Cheeréd and checked³ even by the selfsame sky, ^{metonymy}
Vaunt⁴ in their youthful sap, at height decrease,
And wear their brave state out of memory;⁵
Then the conceit⁶ of this inconstant stay
Sets you most rich in youth before my sight,
Where wasteful Time debateth⁷ with Decay
To change your day of youth to sullied⁸ night,

5
IC

- | | |
|--------------------------------------|--------------------------------------|
| 1. Unplowed. | ances (2) performances. |
| 2. Foolish. | 3. Encouraged and reproached or |
| 3. Mirror. | stopped. |
| 4. Splendid. | 4. Exult, display themselves. |
| 5. Formerly. | 5. Wear their showy splendor out and |
| 6. Offspring; "to brave": to defy. | are forgotten. |
| 1. Remains. | 6. Conception. |
| 2. The stars in an occult way affect | 7. Discusses. |
| human actions; "shows": (1) appear- | 8. Soiled, blackened. |

And all in war with Time for love of you,
As he takes from you, I ingraft⁹ you new.

1609

18 Hyperbole thru poem

Shall I compare thee to a summer's day?
Thou art more lovely and more temperate:
Rough winds do shake the darling buds of May,
And summer's lease hath all too short a date:
Sometime too hot the eye of heaven shines sun personification 5
And often is his gold complexion dimmed;
And every fair from fair sometimes declines,
By chance or nature's changing course untrimmed;¹
But thy eternal summer shall not fade,
Nor lose possession of that fair thou ow'st;² 10
Nor shall death brag thou wander'st in his shade,
When in eternal lines to time thou grow'st:³
So long as men can breathe, or eyes can see,
So long lives this, and this gives life to thee.⁴

1609

29

When, in disgrace¹ with fortune and men's eyes,
I all alone bewep my outcast state,
And trouble deaf heaven with my bootless² cries,
And look upon myself, and curse my fate,
Wishing me like to one more rich in hope, 5
Featured like him, like him with friends possessed,
Desiring this man's art and that man's scope,
With what I most enjoy contented least;
Yet in these thoughts myself almost despising,
Haply I think on thee—and then my state,³ 10
Like to the lark at break of day arising
From sullen earth, sings hymns at heaven's gate;
For thy sweet love rememb'ed such wealth brings
That then I scorn to change my state with kings.⁴

1609

30

When to the sessions⁵ of sweet silent thought
I summon up remembrance of things past,
I sigh the lack of many a thing I sought,
And with old woes new wail⁶ my dear time's waste:

9. Renew by grafting, implant beauty again (by my verse).

1. Stripped of gay apparel.

2. Ownest.

3. When in [this] immortal poetry you become even with time.

4. The boast of immortality for one's verse was a Renaissance convention and goes back to the classics. It implies, not egotism on the part of the poet, but a faith in the permanence of poetry.

1. Out of favor.

2. Futile.

3. Condition, state of mind; but in line 14 there is a pun on "state" meaning chair of state, throne.

4. This sonnet and the next are companion pieces, one dealing with present troubles, the other with those past.

5.ittings of court; "summon up" (line 2) continues the metaphor.

6. Bewail anew.

Then can I drown an eye, unused to flow, 5
 For precious friends hid in death's dateless⁷ night,
 And weep afresh love's long since canceled woe,
 And moan the expense⁸ of many a vanished sight:
 Then can I grieve at grievances foregone,⁹
 And heavily from woe to woe tell o'er 10
 The sad account of fore-bemoaned moan,
 Which I new pay as if not paid before.
 But if the while I think on thee, dear friend,
 All losses are restored and sorrows end.

1609

55

Not marble, nor the gilded monuments
 Of princes, shall outlive this powerful rhyme;
 But you shall shine more bright in these contents
 Than unswept stone, besmeared with sluttish time.¹
 When wasteful war shall statues overturn, 5
 And broils root out the work of masonry,
 Nor Mars his² sword nor war's quick fire shall burn
 The living record of your memory.
 'Gainst death and all-oblivious enmity³
 Shall you pace forth; your praise shall still find room 10
 Even in the eyes of all posterity
 That wear this world out to the ending doom.⁴
 So, till the judgment that yourself arise,
 You live in this, and dwell in lovers' eyes.

1609

60

Like as the waves make towards the pebbled shore,
 So do our minutes hasten to their end;
 Each changing place with that which goes before,
 In sequent toil all forwards do contend.¹
 Nativity, once in the main² of light, 5
 Crawls to maturity, wherewith being crowned,
 Crooked cclipses 'gainst his glory fight,
 And time that gave doth now his gift confound.
 Time doth transfix the flourish³ set on youth
 And delves the parallels in beauty's brow, 10
 Feeds on the rarities of nature's truth,
 And nothing stands but for his scythe to mow.
 And yet to times in hope⁴ my verse shall stand,
 Praising thy worth, despite his cruel hand.

1609

7. Endless.

8. Loss.

9. Old subjects for grief. "Tell": count.

1. I.e., than in a stone tomb or effigy which time wears away and covers with dust.

2. Mars's.

3. The enmity of oblivion, of being forgotten.

4. Judgment Day. The next line is paraphrased, "Until you rise from the dead on Judgment Day."

1. Toiling and following each other, the waves struggle to press forward.

2. Broad expanse.

3. Remove the embellishment. "Delves the parallels": digs the parallel furrows (wrinkles). To "flourish" is also to blossom.

4. Future times.

71

No longer mourn for me when I am dead
Than you shall hear the surly sullen bell ⁵
Give warning to the world that I am fled polyptoton From this vile world, with vilest worms to dwell:

polyptoton Nay, if you read this line, remember not
The hand that writ it; for I love you so, metonymy Synecdoche
That I in your sweet thoughts would be forgot,
If thinking on me then should make you woe.
Oh, if, I say, you look upon this verse
When I perhaps compounded am with clay, ¹⁰
Do not so much as my poor name rehearse,
But let your love even with my life decay; metonymy personification
Lest the wise world should look into your moan,
And mock you with me after I am gone.

1609

73

That time of year thou mayst in me behold
When yellow leaves, or none, or few, do hang Upon those boughs which shake against the cold,
Bare ruined choirs, where late the sweet birds sang
In me thou see'st the twilight of such day
As after sunset fadeth in the west;

Which by and by black night doth take away,
Death's second self that seals up all in rest. sleep?
In me thou see'st the glowing of such fire,
That on the ashes of his youth doth lie,
As the deathbed whereon it must expire,
Consumed with that which it was nourished by. ⁵ Metaphor life-fire
This thou perceiv'st, which makes thy love more strong,
To love that well which thou must leave ere long.

1609

74

But be contented; when that fell⁷ arrest
Without all bail shall carry me away,
My life hath in this line⁸ some interest,
Which for memorial still⁹ with thee shall stay.
When thou reviewest this, thou dost review
The very part was¹ consecrate to thee.
The earth can have but earth, which is his due;
My spirit is thine, the better part of me.
So then thou hast but lost the dregs of life,
The prey of worms, my body being dead,
The coward conquest of a wretch's knife,² ¹⁰

5. The bell was tolled to announce the death of a member of the parish—one stroke for each year of his life.

6. Choked by the ashes of that which once nourished its flame.

7. Cruel. Hamlet says, "this fell sergeant Death is strict in his arrest"

(V.ii.337-38).

8. I.e., poetry; "interest": share, participation.

9. Always.

1. I.e., which was.

2. Death's weapon (like Time's scythe).

Too base of thee to be rememberéd.
 The worth of that is that which it contains.³
 And that is this, and this with thee remains.

1609

87

Farewell: thou art too dear⁴ for my possessing,
 And like enough thou know'st thy estimate.⁵
 The charter⁶ of thy worth gives thee releasing;
 My bonds in thee are all determinate.⁷
 For how do I hold thee but by thy granting,
 And for that riches where is my deserving?
 The cause of this fair gift in me is wanting,
 And so my patent⁸ back again is swerving.
 Thy self thou gav'st, thy own worth then not knowing,
 Or me, to whom thou gav'st it, else mistaking;
 So thy great gift, upon misprision⁹ growing,
 Comes home again, on better judgment making.
 Thus have I had thee as a dream doth flatter,
 In sleep a king, but waking no such matter.

5

10

1609

94

They that have power to hurt and will do none,
 That do not do the thing they most do show,¹
 Who, moving others, are themselves as stone,
 Unmovéd, cold, and to temptation slow;
 They rightly do inherit heaven's graces
 And husband nature's riches from expense;²
 They are the lords and owners of their faces,
 Others but stewards of their excellence.
 The summer's flower is to the summer sweet,
 Though to itself it only live and die,
 But if that flower with base infection meet,
 The basest weed outbraves³ his dignity:
 For sweetest things turn sourest by their deeds;
 Lilies that fester smell far worse than weeds.⁴

5

10

1609

97

How like a winter hath my absence been
 From thee, the pleasure of the fleeting year!
 What freezings have I felt, what dark days seen!
 What old December's bareness everywhere!
 And yet this time removed was summer's time,
 The teeming autumn big with rich increase,

5

3. I.e., the only value of the body is that it contains the spirit.

4. Expensive, beloved.

5. Value.

6. Deed, contract for property.

7. Expired.

8. Title.

9. Mistake, oversight.

1. Seem to do.

2. I.e., they do not squander nature's gifts.

3. Surpasses. Gerard's Herbal (1597) says "the lilies of the field outbraved him."

4. This line appears in Edward III (II. i.451), an apocryphal Shakespearean play licensed December 1, 1595.

Bearing the wanton burthen of the prime,⁵
 Like widowed wombs after their lords' decease;
 Yet this abundant issue seemed to me
 But hope of orphans and unfathered fruit;
 For summer and his pleasures wait on thee,
 And, thou away, the very birds are mute;
 Or, if they sing, 'tis with so dull a cheer⁶
 That leaves look pale, dreading the winter's near.

10

1609

98

From you have I been absent in the spring,
 When proud-pied⁷ April, dressed in all his trim,
 Hath put a spirit of youth in everything,
 That heavy Saturn⁸ laughed and leaped with him.
 Yet nor the lays of birds, nor the sweet smell
 Of different flowers in odor and in hue,
 Could make me any summer's story tell,
 Or from their proud lap pluck them where they grew;
 Nor did I wonder at⁹ the lily's white,
 Nor praise the deep vermilion in the rose;
 They were but sweet, but figures of delight,
 Drawn after you, you pattern of all those.
 Yet seemed it winter still, and, you away,
 As with your shadow I with these did play.

5

10

1609

106

When in the chronicle of wasted¹ time
 I see descriptions of the fairest wights,²
 And beauty making beautiful old rhyme
 In praise of ladies dead and lovely knights,
 Then, in the blazon³ of sweet beauty's best,
 Of hand, of foot, of lip, of eye, of brow,
 I see their antique pen would have expressed
 Even such a beauty as you master now.
 So all their praises are but prophecies
 Of this our time, all you prefiguring;
 And, for they looked but with divining eyes,⁴
 They had not skill enough your worth to sing:
 For we, which now behold these present days,
 Have eyes to wonder, but lack tongues to praise.

5

10

1609

107

Not mine own fears, nor the prophetic soul
 Of the wide world dreaming on things to come,⁵

5. Spring, which has engendered the lavish crop ("wanton burthen") that autumn is now left to bear.

6. Disposition.

7. Magnificent in many colors.

8. God of melancholy.

9. Admire.

1. Past.

2. Persons.

3. Display.

4. Because ("for") they were able only ("but") to foresee prophetically.

5. This sonnet refers to contemporary events and the prophecies, common in Elizabethan almanacs, of disaster.

Can yet the lease of my true love control,
 Supposed as forfeit to a confined doom.⁶
 The mortal moon hath her eclipse endured,
 And the sad augurs mock their own presage;⁷
 Incertainties now crown themselves assured,
 And peace⁸ proclaims olives of endless age.
 Now with the drops of this most balmy time
 My love looks fresh, and death to me subscribes,⁹
 Since, spite of him, I'll live in this poor rhyme,
 While he insults o'er dull and speechless tribes:
 And thou in this shalt find thy monument,
 When tyrants' crests and tombs of brass are spent.¹

1609

116

Let me not to the marriage of true minds
 Admit impediments.² Love is not love
 Which alters when it alteration finds,
 Or bends with the remover to remove:
 Oh, no! it is an ever-fixed mark,³
 That looks on tempests and is never shaken;
 It is the star to every wandering bark,
 Whose worth's unknown, although his height⁴ be taken.
 Love's not Time's fool,⁵ though rosy lips and cheeks
 Within his⁶ bending sickle's compass come;
 Love alters not with his brief hours and weeks,
 But bears it out even to the edge of doom.⁷
 If this be error and upon me proved,
 I never writ, nor no man ever loved.

1609

124

If my dear love were but the child of state,¹
 It might for Fortune's bastard be unfathered,²
 As subject to Time's love, or to Time's hate:
 Weeds among weeds, or flowers with flowers gathered.³
 No, it was builded far from accident;⁴
 It suffers not in smiling pomp, nor falls

5

6. I.e., can yet put an end to my love, which I thought doomed to early forfeiture.

7. The "mortal moon" is Queen Elizabeth; her "eclipse" is probably her climacteric year, her 63rd (thought significant because the product of two "significant" numbers, 7 and 9), which ended in September, 1596. The sober astrologers ("sad augurs") now ridicule their own predictions ("presage") of catastrophe, since they turned out to be false.

8. Probably an agreement between Henry IV of France and Elizabeth.

9. Submits.

1. Wasted away.

2. From the Marriage Service: "If any of you know cause or just impediment why these persons should not be joined together * * *"

3. Sea-mark (cf. "landmark").

4. The star's value is not known, though the star's "height" (altitude) may be known and used for practical investigation.

5. I.e., slave or victim.

6. I.e., Time's (as also in line 11).

7. Brink of the Last Judgment.

1. I.e., if my intense love were based merely upon (1) circumstance (2) high rank.

2. I.e., have no parent but Fortune (hence be subject to chance and time).

3. I.e., worthless or precious as chance dictates.

4. I.e., far away from chance events.

Under the blow of thralléd discontent
 Whereto th' inviting time our fashion calls;⁵
 It fears not Policy,⁶ that heretic,
 Which works on leases of short-numb'red hours,
 But all alone stands hugely politic,⁷
 That it nor grows with heat nor drowns with show'rs.⁸
 To this I witness call the fools of Time,⁹
 Which die for goodness who have lived for crime.¹

10

1609

128

How oft when thou, my music, music play'st
 Upon that blesséd wood² whose motion sounds
 With thy sweet fingers when thou gently sway'st³
 The wiry concord that mine ear confounds,⁴
 Do I envy those jacks⁵ that nimble leap
 To kiss the tender inward of thy hand,
 Whilst my poor lips, which should that harvest reap,
 At the wood's boldness by thee blushing stand.
 To be so tickled they would change their state
 And situation⁶ with those dancing chips,
 O'er whom thy fingers walk with gentle gait,
 Making dead wood more blessed than living lips.
 Since saucy jacks⁷ so happy are in this,
 Give them thy fingers, me thy lips to kiss.

5

10

1609

129

Th' expense of spirit in a waste of shame
 Is lust in action;¹ and till action, lust
 Is perjured, murderous, bloody, full of blame,
 Savage, extreme, rude, cruel, not to trust;
 Enjoyed no sooner but despised straight:
 Past reason hunted; and no sooner had,
 Past reason hated, as a swallowed bait,
 On purpose laid to make the taker mad:
 Mad in pursuit, and in possession so;
 Had, having, and in quest to have, extreme;
 A bliss in proof² and proved, a very woe;

5

10

5. I.e., the blows of fortune which make one a slave to grief, a melancholy mood now very much the fashion.

6. Expediency or material self-interest.

7. Spectacularly prudent.

8. I.e., so that it is not affected by changing climate. "Show'rs": down-pours.

9. Victims or playthings of Time. Cf. Sonnet 116, line 9, and 1 Henry IV V.v.81.

1. I.e., who are so inconstant that they undergo a deathbed conversion (calling them as witnesses is ironic).

2. Keys of the spinet or virginal.

3. Governest.

4. The harmony from the strings which overcomes my ear with delight.

5. I.e., keys (actually, "jacks" are the plectra which pluck the strings when activated by the keys).

6. Physical location; "state": place in the order of things.

7. With a quibble on the sense "impatient fellows."

1. The word order here is inverted and slightly obscures the meaning. Lust, when put into action, expends "spirit" (life, vitality) in a "waste" (desert, with a possible pun on "waist," also) of shame.

2. A bliss during the experience.

Before, a joy proposed; behind, a dream.
 All this the world well knows; yet none knows well
 To shun the heaven that leads men to this hell.

1609

130

My mistress' eyes are nothing like the sun;³
 Coral is far more red than her lips' red;
 If snow be white, why then her breasts are dun;
 If hairs be wires, black wires grow on her head.
 I have seen roses damasked,⁴ red and white,
 But no such roses see I in her cheeks;
 And in some perfumes is there more delight
 Than in the breath that from my mistress reeks.
 I love to hear her speak, yet well I know
 That music hath a far more pleasing sound;
 I grant I never saw a goddess go;⁵
 My mistress, when she walks, treads on the ground.
 And yet, by heaven, I think my love as rare⁶
 As any she belied⁷ with false compare.

1609

135

Whoever hath her wish, thou hast thy Will,¹
 And Will to boot, and Will in overplus;
 More than enough am I that vex thee still,
 To thy sweet will making addition thus.
 Wilt thou, whose will is large and spacious,
 Not once vouchsafe to hide my will in thine?
 Shall will in others seem right gracious,
 And in my will no fair acceptance shine?
 The sea, all water, yet receives rain still,
 And in abundance addeth to his store;²
 So thou being rich in Will add to thy Will
 One will of mine to make thy large Will more.
 Let no unkind, no fair beseechers kill;³
 Think all but one, and me in that one Will.

1609

138

When my love swears that she is made of truth,
 I do believe her, though I know she lies,
 That she might think me some untutored youth,
 Unlearned in the world's false subtleties.
 Thus vainly thinking that she thinks me young,

5

